
JOANNES GILL S.T.P.

AN # EXPOSITION
OF THE
New Teſtament,
IN THREE VOLUMES:

IN WHICH
The Senſe of the SACRED TEXT is given;
Doctrinal and Practical TRUTHS are ſet in a plain and eaſy Light,
DIFFICULT PLACES EXPLAINED,
SEEMING CONTRADICTIONS RECONCILED;
AND
Whatever is Material in the VARIOUS READINGS, and the ſeveral
ORIENTAL VERSIONS, is obſerved.
THE
Whole illuſtrated with NOTES taken from the moſt ancient JEWISH WRITINGS.

VOL. I.

By JOHN GILL.

LONDON:
Printed for the AUTHOR;
And Sold by AARON WARD, at the King's-Arms in Little-Britain.
M.DCC.XLVI.

BRITISH MUSEUM

THE # PREFACE.

THE ſacred books, of which the following work is an expoſition, are of equal authority with the oracles of God, the writings of the Old Teſtament; being as they, divinely inſpired; and are profitable to the ſame ends and purpoſes, of doctrine, reproof, correction, and inſtruction in righteouſneſs: they contain things of the greateſt moment and importance, to the ſpiritual and eternal welfare of men, to the honour and intereſt of the great Redeemer, and to the glory of God; and therefore ſhould be moſt carefully peruſed, moſt diligently ſearched into, and as much as in us lies, ſhould be ſtudiouſly, diſtinctly, and rightly explained, and which is attempted in this performance.

The four Evangeliſts, have recorded every thing material, relating to the great author and inſtitutor of the Chriſtian religion, the ſum and ſubſtance of the Goſpel, our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: they give us an account of his harbinger and forerunner, John the Baptiſt; of his parents, his wonderful conception and birth, with ſeveral amazing circumſtances belonging thereunto; they deſcribe his qualifications for his important office, his mien and deportment, his dreſs and diet, his conduct and converſation, his preaching and baptiſm, his ſucceſs and his followers, his impriſonment and death; and point at ſeveral prophecies as fulfilled in him: but above all, they are chiefly concerned with Chriſt himſelf; they declare him to be the Son of God, and the Son of man; they ſhew his deſcent as man, to be from the kings of Judah, and from the ancient patriarchs Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob; yea, they trace it to the firſt man Adam; they tell us who his real mother, and ſuppoſed father were; of what family they were, and where they lived; what their characters, worldly circumſtances, and buſineſs of life; they ſpeak of his miraculous conception, through the power of the Holy Ghoſt, and of the time and place of his birth; and of what went before, or followed after, neceſſary to be known; they record ſome things done in his infancy, and childhood; they give us an account of his baptiſm, and of his entrance on his publick miniſtry; they have written down his ſermons to his diſciples, and the multitude; his ſeveral diſcourſes with the Jews, chief prieſts, Scribes, Phariſees, and Sadducees; his parables, proverbial ſayings, and pithy ſentences; they make mention of various ſurprizing miracles wrought by him, which were proofs of his deity, divine miſſion, and Meſſiahſhip; they inform us of the names and number of his apoſtles, whom he ſent forth to preach in his name; and they relate his fatiguing journeys which he took, to do good to the bodies and ſouls of men, by healing diſeaſes, and preaching the Goſpel; as alſo the temptations of ſatan he was exerciſed with, in the wilderneſs; the reproaches and inſults of men, he endured; his ſufferings and death, with all the circumſtances attending it; and likewiſe his reſurrection from the dead, and aſcenſion to heaven: and the whole is a compleat hiſtory of the life of Chriſt, for what one Evangeliſt omits, another relates; and all is done with the utmoſt impartiality, ſimplicity, and truth; and there is an entire harmony and agreement between the ſacred hiſtorians; for though there are ſome things, in which at firſt ſight they may ſeem to contradict each other, theſe will admit of a fair reconciliation, and which is obſerved in the following expoſition.

That divine hiſtory called, the Acts of the Apoſtles, is a narrative of what was done by them, after our Lord's aſcenſion to heaven, in purſuance of the commiſſion and inſtructions which he had given them. This book informs us, how that the Apoſtles, by the orders of Chriſt, waited at Jeruſalem until the day of Pentecoſt, when they were filled with the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit; particularly with the gift of ſpeaking with divers tongues, whereby they were qualified to preach the Goſpel to people of all languages, guages, for which they had received a commiſſion from Chriſt: here we are told what ſucceſs they met with at Jeruſalem, where, according to the expreſs command of Chriſt, they began to preach; what numbers of converts were made, and what a famous church was there raiſed; and how, that after the death of Stephen a perſecution aroſe, by which havock was made of the church, and many that had miniſterial gifts, were ſcattered abroad, and went every where preaching the word; but at firſt to the Jews only, by which means churches were alſo raiſed in other parts of Judea, and in Samaria, and Galilee, and likewiſe in Syria and Phœnicia, and in other places. Particularly this book gives an account of the travels of the Apoſtle Paul in the Gentile world; of his miniſtry, and the ſucceſs of it among them; of the miracles wrought by him; of his ſermons, diſcourſes, and diſputations; of the ſpeeches he made before kings and councils, before the Jewiſh Sanhedrim, and the Roman governours; of the many hardſhips he endured, and the many dangers he was expoſed unto; and of his great ſervice and uſefulneſs, in promoting the Goſpel and intereſt of Chriſt: in ſhort, this book acquaints us with the progreſs of the Goſpel, both in Judea, and among the Gentiles; with the firſt planting of Goſpel churches, and the eſtabliſhment of Chriſtianity in the world; with the time when, the manner in which, the means whereby, all this was done; and is a wonderful diſplay of the wiſdom, power, and goodneſs of God; and muſt be read with pleaſure and profit, by all thoſe that love the Lord Jeſus Chriſt in ſincerity and truth.

The Epiſtles, written by ſeveral Apoſtles to the churches, which were planted by them, or to particular perſons they were concerned with, are of the utmoſt conſequence: theſe contain all things in them, relating to faith and practice; here the doctrines of the Goſpel, are ſet in a clear and diſtinct light; the ſeveral duties of religion to be performed, whether perſonal or relative, whether to be done in publick or in private, in the world or in the church, in the cloſet or in the family, are exhorted to, and preſſed upon the beſt of motives, with the ſtrongeſt arguments, from right principles, and to right ends and purpoſes; every thing belonging to the nature and conſtitution of a Goſpel church, to the rule and government of it, to its officers, its order and diſcipline, is to be collected from hence: for whatever is written in them, was written, not only for the uſe of the then churches, and the miniſters and members of them, but for the uſe of the churches of Chriſt, in all ages of time; in them are milk for babes, and meat for ſtrong men; and rules are laid down, inſtructive to ſocieties, and particular perſons; and which are uſeful in moral and civil, as well as in chriſtian life; or which ſerve to regulate and influence the outward life and converſation, as well as direct and encourage to the exerciſe of ſpiritual graces, and to an obſervance of evangelical ordinances.

The book of the Revelation of the Apoſtle John, with which the canon of ſcripture is cloſed, is a prophetic hiſtory of what ſhould befal the churches of Chriſt; and of the moſt remarkable things that ſhould come to paſs in the world, eſpecially in the Roman empire, from the reſurrection of Chriſt, unto the end of the world; ſo that theſe ſacred books, put them all together, are an account of things from the firſt, to the ſecond coming of Chriſt; and ſhew, what has been, and will be done in the world; and what the followers of Chriſt are to believe and do, and what they muſt expect will be accompliſhed in the world, in the churches, and in them; until he ſhall appear, who is the author of their religion, the object of their faith, hope, and love; and whoſe coming they ſincerely deſire, and heartily wiſh and pray for.

Now to have a true knowledge, and right underſtanding of books of ſo much concern as theſe are, muſt be deſirable to all, who have a juſt value for them, and eſteem of them; but who is ſufficient for theſe things? It is certain, that the Holy Spirit, who has dictated the ſacred ſcriptures, and inſpired holy men of God to write them, is the beſt interpreter of them; and he does lead and guide his people, more or leſs, into the truths contained in them; his aſſiſtance is therefore in the firſt place to be implored, and without it, nothing of this kind is to be attempted: to compare ſpiritual things with ſpiritual, or in other words, to compare ſcripture with itſelf; the more obſcure and difficult parts of it, with thoſe that are more plain and clear, muſt be of conſiderable ſervice, for the better underſtanding them: and to obſerve the analogy of faith, the agreement of truth with itſelf, and of one truth with another; the form of ſound words, the ſummary of Goſpel truths, to be collected out of the ſacred writings, with which the ſenſe of every paſſage muſt agree, is of exceeding great uſe in this affair; to which may be added, the gracious experience that the man of God has in himſelf, of the truth, power, influence, and weight of the word of God upon his own ſoul; for next to the ſcriptures themſelves, in general, it ſhould be conſidered, whether ſuch an interpretation of a particular paſſage, is agreeable to the common experience of the ſaints, and to a man's own: a competent knowledge of the languages, in which the ſcriptures are written, cannot fail of being very helpful in the ſtudy of them, in many inſtances; and indeed, all arts and ſciences, liberal or mechanical, yea, every thing within the compaſs of knowledge, natural, moral, and civil, contribute more or leſs unto, and aſſiſt in the underſtanding of the books of the New Teſtament; and among the many helps, and ſeveral means which ſhould be, and are made uſe of for ſuch a purpoſe, knowledge of the affairs of the Jews, of their rites and ceremonies, of their laws, uſages, cuſtoms, and traditions, as they were in and about the times of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, is not the moſt inconſiderable; which will appear, if it be obſerved,

That our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, whoſe life is written by the four Evangeliſts, was a Jew himſelf; he was born of Jewiſh parents, in the land of Judea; he was brought up in the Jewiſh religion; he conformed to their laws, rites, and cuſtoms, throughout the whole of his life, which were lawful to conform unto; he was ſent to the people of the Jews, as a prophet, and to them only; to them he delivered his ſermons, with them he frequently diſcourſed, and among them he wrought his miracles; in ſhort, among them he lived and died: now it can't be thought, but that he ſhould ſpeak in the dialect of that nation, ſhould expreſs himſelf in words and phraſes, which were in common uſe; and refer to various things, and allude to rites and cuſtoms in practice among them; wherefore the knowledge of their phraſeology, or way of ſpeaking, of their uſages and cuſtoms, muſt be of ſingular uſe, for the underſtanding of many things ſaid by Chriſt, which are recorded in the four Evangeliſts: let it alſo be further obſerved,

That all the Apoſtles of Chriſt, and all the writers of the New Teſtament, were Jews; they were educated in the Jewiſh religion; they preached to the Jews only, in the times of Chriſt; and firſt to them, after their commiſſion was enlarged, to preach to the Gentiles; and the firſt churches even among the Gentiles, greatly conſiſted of Jews, to whom the Epiſtles were written, as the Epiſtles themſelves ſhew: now can it be imagined, but that notwithſtanding divine inſpiration, and though they wrote in the Greek language, they would retain the idioms and forms of ſpeech, to which they had been uſed; and that they would allude to rites and cuſtoms, they had been obſervant of, and the people alſo to whom they wrote? had the books of the New Teſtament been written by Engliſhmen, though inſpired by the Holy Ghoſt, doubtleſs there would have appeared many Angliciſms in them, as it is notorious enough there are in them abundance of Hebraiſms; and that they would have referred to the rites and cuſtoms of their own nation, as theſe have done: wherefore the knowledge of the Jewiſh language and cuſtoms, muſt be of ſervice for the better underſtanding of various things, to be met with in the writings of theſe men: to which may be added,

That Judaiſm properly ſo called, as it was a peculiar religion, and diſtinct from Chriſtianity, though not contrary to it, was in being, and in full force, in Chriſt's time, though near its end, and was aboliſhed in the times of the Apoſtles, and Chriſtianity was eſtabliſhed by them: now it is not reaſonable to believe, that an affair of this nature ſhould be tranſacted, that there ſhould be an abrogation of Jewiſh rites and ceremonies, and a ſetting up of Goſpel ordinances, which were to continue to the end of time, that in the diſputes with the Jews upon this ſubject, and the account that is given of this matter, there ſhould be no references and expreſſions, which the knowledge of Jewiſh affairs can give us light into.

Being convinced by theſe conſiderations many years ago, I ſet about the reading of the moſt ancient writings of the Jews, I could come at, in order to ſatisfy myſelf of the truth of theſe things, and the better to underſtand the New Teſtament; and though this has been attended with great difficulty, fatigue, and labour, and may have hindered the purſuit of other uſeful ſtudies, I cannot ſay I repent of it. The method I took at firſt, and which I all along followed, was to write down in an Adverſaria, or note-book, what occurred in reading, which I thought might be of any ſervice, to give light to any paſſage in the New Teſtament, and which I put againſt that paſſage: in a courſe of time this book began to ſwell, which put me on thoughts of making theſe notes publick; which I ſometimes inclined to do in one way, and ſometimes in another; but at length determined to do with them I have done, in the following work: the writings I have chiefly read with this view, are the Targums, or Chaldee paraphraſes of the Old Teſtament; the Miſnah, or the Jews oral law; the two Talmuds, Jeruſalem and Babylonian; the Rabbot, or myſtical expoſitions of the ancient doctors of the Jewiſh ſynagogue; the book of

Zohar, with others of a later date, and leſs note; and ſince I have made ſo much uſe of theſe writings in the following expoſition, eſpecially in the firſt volume, I think myſelf obliged to give my readers ſome account of them, ſhewing their antiquity and uſefulneſs, and ſhall begin with,

The TARGUMS, or Chaldee paraphraſes, theſe being the moſt ancient writings the Jews have: it is certain there were Targums, before the compoſition of the Talmud, and even of the Miſnah, ſince there is expreſs mention made of them in both [a]; and it is no leſs certain, that they were in being and uſe, in the times of Chriſt and his Apoſtles. The text in Iſa. lxi. 1. as read by our Lord in the ſynagogue of Nazareth, Luke iv. 18. better agrees with the Chaldee paraphraſe of it, than with the Hebrew text, or the Septuagint verſion; and it is a clear caſe, and which was doing great honour to the Targum on Pſal. xxii. 1. that Chriſt expreſſed himſelf when he hung upon the croſs, not in the Hebrew words of the text, but in the Chaldee paraphraſe of it; ſaying, Eli, Eli, lama Sabachthani; not Azabthani, as in the Hebrew text, but Sabachthani, which is the word uſed in the Targum we now have; and it is very likely the Apoſtle Paul had the names of the Egyptian magicians Jannes and Jambres, out of the ancient paraphraſes; ſince theſe are mentioned in the Targum of Jonathan, on Exod. i. 15. and vii. 11. and on Numb. xxii. 21. The word Targum ſignifies an interpretation, or expoſition of any book, or the tranſlation of one language into another; and the Targums are tranſlations of the Hebrew text, into the Chaldee language, with an explanation of it; for they are not bare literal verſions, though that of Onkelos is pretty much ſo; but they alſo expound the text, and explain the ſenſe: the riſe and original of theſe paraphraſes, is generally thought to have been the corruption of the Hebrew language, in the Babyloniſh captivity; where the Jews having diſuſed, greatly forgot their mother tongue; wherefore upon their return to their own land, it became neceſſary, that men ſkilful both in the Hebrew and Chaldee languages, ſhould explain to the common people in the Chaldee tongue, the ſcriptures, which were read to them every ſabbath-day in Hebrew, in order to their underſtanding them with profit; and this practice, both of reading the ſcriptures every ſabbath-day, and which James ſays was of old time, Acts xv. 21. and of interpreting them in the Chaldee language, is ſaid by Maimonides [b], to be from the times of Ezra: and ſo the Jews in the Talmuds [c], explain thoſe words in Neh. viii. 8. So they read in the book, in the law of God, this is the ſcripture; diſtinctly, this is the Targum; and gave the ſenſe, theſe are the verſes; in the Jeruſalem Talmud, it is, theſe are the accents; and cauſed them to underſtand the reading, this is the diſtinction of the accents; in the above Talmud it is, this is the Maſoreth; though it may be this practice might not obtain quite ſo ſoon, but rather ſome time before the coming of Chriſt; for the Syrians being mixed with the Jews after the times of Antiochus Epiphanes, their language began to be corrupted, and the Syriac dialect prevailed; and ſtill more ſo, when Judea came to be reduced into the form of a Roman province, and was reckoned to Syria, and was ſubject to the governours of Syria; by which means the Syro-chaldean language became the common dialect of the Jews, and was ſo in Chriſt's time; which made thoſe Targums, or Chaldee paraphraſes neceſſary: and by all accounts it appears, to have been the cuſtom in the ſynagogue, for the reader to read a verſe in the Hebrew tongue, and then for the interpreter to render it in Chaldee; and this he did from his own judgment, viva voce, and without book [d]: for though he might write for his own uſe, and for the private uſe of others, which might be the original of written paraphraſes; yet it does not appear that there were any committed to writing for publick uſe, until thoſe of Jonathan ben Uzziel, and Onkelos were compoſed, of which it will be neceſſary to give a particular account.

JONATHAN BEN UZZIEL, was a ſcholar of Hillell the elder; Hillell 'tis ſaid [e], had fourſcore ſcholars, and the greateſt of them was Jonathan ben Uzziel: this Hillell was prince, or preſident of the Sanhedrim, a hundred years before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem [f], and ſo thirty years before the birth of Chriſt; it was at the beginning of the reign of Herod [g], about three years after he began to reign, that he entered upon his preſidentſhip [h], and he governed Iſrael forty years [i]. This his ſcholar wrote a paraphraſe upon the prophets, as is agreed on all hands. The Jews extol it as a divine work, and ſay that the ſubſtance and doctrine of it, were handed down to him from the inſpired prophets Zechariah, Haggai, and Malachi; they ſpeak even of miraculous operations performed, whilſt it was compoſing [k], and that even angels themſelves pay a regard to it: now though theſe are extravagant flights of theirs, yet by how much the greater is the authority of this work with them, by ſo much the greater is its uſe to refute them, when it can be made uſe of for that purpoſe, and in favour of Chriſtianity, as it often may.

---

[a] Miſn. Megilla, c. 4. §. 10. T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 115. 1. Megilla, fol. 3. 1. & Kidduſhin, fol. 13. 1. & 49. 1. Sanhedrin, fol. 94. 2.
[b] Hilchot Tephilla, c. 12. §. 10.
[c] T. Bab. Nedarim, fol. 37. 2. Megilla, fol. 3. 1. & T. Hieroſ. Megilla, fol. 74. 4.
[d] Maimon. Hilchot Tephilla, c. 12. §. 10, 11.
[e] T. Bab. Succa, fol. 28. 1. & Bava Bathra, fol. 134. 1.
[f] Juchaſin, fol. 19. 2. Tzemach David, par. 1. fol. 24. 2.
[g] Juchaſin ib.
[h] Shalſhelet Hakabala, fol. 18. 1.
[i] Juchaſin, fol. 19. 1.
[k] T. Bab. Megilla, fol. 3. 1. Bava Bathra, fol. 134. 1.

This is the only paraphraſe which is generally allowed to be written by him. The Jews ſay [l], that he attempted to write one upon the Hagiographa, but was forbidden by a voice from heaven, becauſe therein was the end of the Meſſiah, or the time of his coming. There is a paraphraſe upon the law which bears his name, but it is generally thought to be falſly aſcribed to him, becauſe of its ſtile, the traditional ſenſes of ſcripture which are in it, and other things which it is obſerved, ſhew it to be of a later date than the true Jonathan. Yet there are ſome, both Jewiſh [m] and Chriſtian [n] writers, that do affirm that he did write a Targum upon the law: and indeed it ſeems ſtrange, as Elias Levita [o] obſerves, might be objected, that he ſhould write a paraphraſe upon the prophets, and not begin with the law; and it is certain, that the traditional ſenſe of ſcripture obtained in his time; and the Talmudiſts may as well be thought to borrow from him, as that paraphraſt from them; and as to the main thing objected to, that there is mention made in it of the ſix orders of the Miſnah, and therefore muſt be of a later date than that, it may be obſerved, that Hillell, the maſter of Jonathan, firſt reduced the ſubſtance of the traditions of the elders into ſuch an order, as will be ſeen hereafter; and as for exotic words, and names of places of a more modern date, they may be interpolations ſince: the ſtile, I confeſs, is with me the greateſt objection; however, ſeeing it is not agreed upon, I ſhall not inſiſt upon its being his. I go on to conſider the paraphraſe of ONKELOS, its antiquity and authority. This writer ſeems to be cotemporary with Jonathan ben Uzziel: it is affirmed, that they ſaw each other [p]. Onkelos, according to what is ſaid of him, was a diſciple of Hillell, as well as Jonathan; for it is aſſerted [q], that Hillell and Shammai would not teach him one word of the law until he was circumciſed; and he is frequently called Onkelos the proſelyte, and is ſaid to be proſelyted in their days [r]; and, by what is reported of him, he lived to the times of R. Gamaliel, the maſter of the Apoſtle Paul, who died about eighteen years before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem: for it is ſaid [s], that when R. Gamaliel died, Onkelos the proſelyte burned as much goods at his funeral, for the honour of him, as amounted to ſeventy Tyrian pounds of ſilver. His paraphraſe, which is only upon the five books of Moſes, is, for the moſt part, a ſtrict verſion of the Pentateuch into Chaldee, and is rather a mere tranſlation than a paraphraſe. It is written in a very clean ſtile, and neareſt to the Bible, which have made ſome think, that it is the oldeſt paraphraſe extant: and even Dr. Owen [t], who expreſſes himſelf with a great deal of warmth againſt ſome other paraphraſes, yet ſays of this, that "it keeps cloſe "to the text, for the moſt part, rendering the words in the ſenſe of the Holy Ghoſt; nor "does he purpoſely wander into old wives fables, as is uſual with all the reſt: led by "which reaſon alone, adds he, I conjecture, that this paraphraſt lived before the de"ſtruction of the city." His Targum is in great eſteem with the Jews, as appears from its being inſerted after the text of Moſes, verſe for verſe, in the ancient manuſcripts of the Pentateuch, and is in continual uſe with them. Elias Levita ſays [u], we are obliged, every week, to read a ſection (of the law) twice, once in the ſcripture, and once in the Targum of Onkelos. Indeed, they too much magnify this verſion, and make it equal with the ſacred ſcripture; the ſenſe of it they repreſent as traditionally handed down from mount Sinai, which being delivered from one to another, he received it from the mouth of R. Eliezer and R. Jeſhua [w]; and they ſay, that when he added any thing, it was not from his own judgment, but was given him from Sinai [x]; and, as before obſerved concerning Jonathan's paraphraſe, the greater the authority of this verſion is with them, the more preſſing it is upon them, when it is uſed with advantage againſt them.

There are other paraphraſes of leſs authority, and of an uncertain age, which notwithſtanding have their uſefulneſs. The Jeruſalem Targum contains only fragments upon the Pentateuch, upon here and there a verſe, written in a very coarſe and different ſtile. The paraphraſes of the five books, Eſther, Eccleſiaſtes, Solomon's Song, Ruth, and the Lamentations, and of the Hagiographa, the books of the Pſalms, Job, and Proverbs, commonly aſcribed to R. Joſe the blind, it is not known by the Jews, Elias Levita ſays [y], who are the authors of them. Until of late years there were no Targums upon the two books of Chronicles made public: theſe were firſt publiſhed by Beckius in the years 1680, 1683, with notes upon them; and in the year 1715, David Wilkins publiſhed another edition of them from a Cambridge manuſcript. Some have thought that the author of theſe was Jonathan ben Uzziel [z]. The general uſe of theſe paraphraſes is to aſſiſt in the explication of words of difficult interpretation, and eſpecially ſuch as are but once uſed in the Bible; and for the confirming the ſenſe of many paſſages reſpecting the Meſſiah, and are uſeful in many controverſies, eſpecially with the Jews, Papiſts, and Socinians. That worthy and learned prelate, biſhop Kidder [a], expreſſes his ſenſe and judgment of them in the following manner: "I muſt own, that I have from my youth had a mighty veneration for "the Chaldee paraphraſts, and think them, next to the ſacred text, one of the choiceſt "treaſures the learned Chriſtians do enjoy: they are of marvellous uſe to us in our diſ-"putes againſt the Jews, not to ſay Socinians alſo. It is no hard matter to ſhew the "various and vaſt uſefulneſs and advantages, which we may receive by them; but this "would require a treatiſe by itſelf. I have always thought that we were obliged to bleſs "God for ſuch a treaſure." I proceed

---

[l] T. Bab. ib. [m] R. Menachem apud Eliam Levitam in Prefat. Methurgeman. & Shalſhalet Hakabala, fol. 20. 1. Aſarias in Meor Enaim, c. 9. fol. 50. 2. [n] Galatin. de Arcan. Cathol. ver. l. 1. c. 3. Helvicus de Paraphr. Chald. c. 2. Schickard. Jus Regium, c. 1. p. 20. [o] Prefat. Methurgeman. [p] Shalſhalet Hakabala, fol. 19. 2. Tzemach David, par. 1. fol. 28. 2. [q] Zohar in Lev. fol. 30. 2. [r] Zohar in Gen. fol. 28. 4. Tzemach David ib. [s] T. Bab. Avoda Zara, fol. 11. 1. [t] Theologoumena, p. 425. [u] Prefat. Methurg. [w] T. Bab. Megilla, fol. 3. 1. [x] Gloſſ. in T. Bab. Kidduſhin, fol. 49. 1. [y] Prefat. Methurgeman.

To give an account of the Talmuds, both Jeruſalem and Babylonian. The word Talmud ſignifies doctrine; and the work, ſo called, contains in it the ſum and ſubſtance of the doctrine of the law, according to the Jews: it conſiſts of two parts, the Miſnah and Gemara; the former is the text, the latter is made up of the diſputations and deciſions of the doctors upon it. I begin with

The MISNAH, which may be rendered Deuteroſis, or Deuteronomy, a ſecondary or repeated law; for the Jews ſuppoſe, that the law was repeated to Moſes, and an explanation of it given, which they call the oral law. The book that bears this name was compoſed by R. Judah, called the ſaint, who lived in the times of Antoninus the Roman emperor: he flouriſhed, according to Buxtorf [b], Anno Chriſti 150. It is ſaid, by the Jews [c], to be compiled one hundred and twenty years after the deſtruction of the temple: the occaſion of it was this; R. Judah obſerving that the Jews were in a ſtate of exile, and were ſcattered among the nations, and fearing leſt the traditional law, which had been handed down from their fathers, ſhould be entirely loſt in proceſs of time, collected together as much of it as he could himſelf; and wrote to the Jews, in all parts, to ſend to him what they could recollect they had received from their anceſtors; or had by them in papers and ſchedules; which being communicated to him, he put together, and being finiſhed, it was at once received by the Jews, as the pandect, or body of their civil and canon law. But now, though this body of laws was compiled, and put together in this form and order, it muſt not be thought that this was the riſe and date of the traditions, or laws themſelves, any more than the body of laws collected in Juſtinian's time out of writers that were three hundred years before, can be imagined to be of no earlier date than his times. It is a clear caſe, that the materials of the Miſnah were in being before the compilation of it by this Rabbin; yea, that many of the traditions were written before for private uſe, and which was allowed. Maimonides [d] ſays, that "from the days "of Moſes our maſter, unto R. Judah, there was nothing compoſed which was taught "publickly, concerning the oral law; but in every age the head of the Sanhedrim, or "a prophet that was in that generation, might write for himſelf a memorial of the things "he heard from his maſter; and he taught them publickly by word of mouth, and "ſo every one wrote for himſelf." To which agrees what another writer ſays [e], "before R. Judah, no book was written concerning the oral law; but this before was the "law and cuſtom in Iſrael, the wiſe men received one from another, and taught the "Miſnah by word of mouth, as it was delivered; but the ſcholars made marks to their "traditions, and wrote them, leſt they ſhould forget them; but they hid them, and "called them, מגלת סתרים, the volume of ſecrets." And it is eaſy to trace theſe traditions of which the Miſnah conſiſts, from the times of the compiler of it, up to the times of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, and beyond them. Egeſippus, a writer of the ſecond century, and who was a converted Jew, is ſaid, by Euſebius [f], to make mention of ſeveral things which he had from the unwritten traditions of the Jews: and the ſame [g] writer obſerves of Joſephus, who lived in the firſt century, before and after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, that being an Hebrew of the Hebrews, he very accurately related ſome things out of the Jewiſh Deuteroſis, or Miſnah, or rather their Miſnic Baraita, or exotic doctrine.

---

[z] S. Clark apud Caſtell. Lex. Polyglott. col. 2613. Vid. Beckii Not. in Targ. 1 Chron. ii. 54.

[a] Preface to the 3d Part of his Demonſtration of the Meſſiah, p. 12. Ed. fol.

[b] Recenſio Oper. Talmud, p. 229.

[c] Ganz Tzemach David, par. 1. fol. 30. 2. Shalſhalet Hakabala, fol. 23. 2

[d] Prefat. ad Yad Chazaka.

[e] R. Joſhua Hallevi Halichot Olam, c. 1. p. 12, 13.

[f] Hiſt. Eccleſ. l. 4. c. 22.

[g] Demonſtrat. Evang. l. 6. p. 291.

trine. And ſome learned men[h], as Bochartus, Van Dale, and Hudſon, have been of opinion, that the Hebrew books Joſephus ſpeaks of, not only deſign the ſacred ſcriptures, but Rabbinical writings extant in his time. At the time Veſpaſian deſtroyed Jeruſalem, and burnt the houſes of it, there were in it, 'tis ſaid, four hundred and eighty ſynagogues, and in every one were a library and a ſchool; the library was for reading, or for the ſcripture, and the ſchool for the Miſnah[i]; and in one of theſe ſchools the Apoſtle Paul was brought up at the feet of Gamaliel; where he was taught the Miſnah, the law of the fathers, and became exceedingly zealous of their traditions, Acts xxii. 3. Gal. i. 14. and ſome have thought, that the parchments he left at Troas, 2 Tim. iv. 13. were of the ſame kind with the ſchedules, or volumes of ſecrets, in which the ſcholars of the wiſe men wrote the traditions they received from their maſters: and certain it is, that the traditions of the elders were in being in the times of Chriſt, which were riſen to a conſiderable bulk, which he takes notice of, and of which the Scribes and Phariſees were very tenacious, Matt. xv. 2—6. Mark vii. 3—13. Before the times of Chriſt lived Hillell and Shammai, the heads of the Miſnic ſchools, and who oppoſed each other in the ſenſe of the traditions, and added new ones. Jerom[k] ſays of them, “ Sammai and Hillell aroſe in Judea not “ long before the Lord was born; the firſt of which may be interpreted a deſtroyer, and “ the other prophane; becauſe by their traditions, and δευτερωσεις, Miſnic doctrines, they “ deſtroyed and defiled the precepts of the law.” And though theſe traditions were not committed to writing, ſo as to be publickly read, yet they were reduced into a compendium, and ranged into an order under certain heads, viva voce. Before the days of Hillell, 'tis ſaid[l], “ they read ſix hundred orders of the Miſnah, from the times of Moſes, “ on whom be peace, unto the ſons of Bethira; but Hillell put them into ſix orders by “ word of mouth, which comprehended the law henceforwards, that ſo it might not be “ forgotten; and this was done at the beginning of the reign of Herod.” And in ſuch a diviſion, and order, is the written Miſnah compiled. Long before theſe men were the ſects of the Phariſees and Sadducees in being; the latter had their name from Sadock, a diſciple of Antigonus, a man of Socho; which Antigonus was the ſucceſſor of Simeon the juſt, the laſt of Ezra's great ſynagogue, who lived in the times of Alexander the great: theſe, among other things, denied the oral law, or Miſnah, rejected the traditions, and profeſſed to adhere to the ſcripture only, and therefore were called Karaites, or Scripturarians.[m] This diviſion was made in the times of the Maccabees, or Haſmoneans; ſo that it ſeems manifeſt, that before this ſect aroſe the traditionary ſenſe of ſcripture, and the law, generally obtained. And it may well be concluded, that the foundation of traditions was laid quickly after the times of Ezra, and the return of the Jews from the Babyloniſh captivity, which, by degrees, came to a conſiderable bulk before the times of Chriſt. The Jews indeed date their oral law from mount Sinai, and even prefer it to the written law, and ſay very extravagant things in favour of it; and even a very grave writer[n] of theirs obſerves, concerning the Miſnah, that “ the brevity of its words, the elegance of its compoſition, its beautiful order, the manner of handling things, with the diviſion of it, if a “ man looks upon them in a true light, muſt own, that fleſh and blood could never compoſe any thing like it, but by divine aſſiſtance.” However, this muſt be ſaid, that it is a work of ſingular advantage and uſefulneſs; by which we learn what were the ancient uſages and cuſtoms of that people, what the traditions of the elders the ſcriptures ſpeak of, what are agreeable to the word of God, and what not: and, as the learned Wagenſeil[o] obſerves, “ in the whole of it no blaſphemy is to be found, nothing in oppoſition to Chriſtians, even no fable, yea, nor any thing that is very foreign from reaſon: it contains only “ the mere traditions of the fathers, and is the body of the Jewiſh law, which formerly was “ not written:” and, for my own part, I am obliged to ſay, that no one book in the world, excepting the holy ſcriptures, has been of that uſe and ſervice to me, as this has been, together with the following.

The TALMUD, or Gemara, is the commentary on the Miſnic text, and conſiſts of the diſputations and decrees of the doctors concerning the ſenſe of the traditions, and is two-fold; the one is called the Jeruſalem Talmud, and the other the Babylonian Talmud.

The Jeruſalem Talmud is ſo called, either from the place where, or from the dialect in which it was written, or from the Jews in the land of Iſrael, for the ſake of whom it was compoſed. The author of it was R. Jochanan, preſident of a ſchool in the land of Iſrael, with the help of two of the diſciples of R. Judah, Raf and Samuel; and it was finiſhed about the year 230[p]: but being written in a coarſe ſtile, and nothing near ſo pure and clean as the Miſnah, and abounding with exotic words, was not had in great eſteem by the Jews. Jerom[q] ſeems to have reſpect to this when he ſays, "how many are the traditions "of the Phariſees, which to this day they call Deuteroſies, or Miſnic laws? and how many "doting fables I cannot turn over? neither will the bulk of the book admit of it;" ſince there is nothing of the fabulous kind in the Miſnah, nor is the bulk of that book large; not ſo large as a Bible, and is ſometimes publiſhed in almoſt as ſmall a compaſs as one of our Teſtaments; tho' indeed there is not much that can be called fable in the Jeruſalem Talmud.

---

[h] Vid. Hudſoni Notas in Joſeph. Antiqu. l. 9. c. 10. §. 2.
[i] T. Hieroſ. Megilla, fol. 73. 4. & Cetubot, fol. 35. 3.
[k] Comment. in Iſaiam, l. 3. Tom. V. fol. 17. I.
[l] Juchaſin, fol. 19. 2. Shalſhelet Hakabala, fol. 18. 1.
[m] Maimon. in Miſn. Abot, c. 1. §. 3. Ganz Tzemach David, par. 1. fol. 20. 2.
[n] R. Sangari, Sepher Coſri, par. 3. §. 67. p. 247, 248. Ed. Buxtorf.
[o] Prefat. ad Tela Ignea, p. 57.

The Babylonian Talmud was written for the ſake of the Jews in Babylon, and other parts, the former not meeting with general acceptance; this was not the work of a ſingle man, but of many ſucceſſively, who were employed for the ſpace of two or three hundred years in collecting the diſputations, deciſions, and ſenſe of the ancient doctors, about the civil and canon laws of the Jews: this was begun by R. Aſe, purſued by Maremar, and at length finiſhed by R. Avina, about the year of Chriſt 500[r]. There were 311 years between the Miſnah, and this, according to the computation of ſome[s]. This work does not contain the ſenſe of the compilers of it, or of the Rabbins in their age, but the deciſions of the ancient doctors, even of Hillell and Shammai, and others who were before the times of Chriſt. For, as the learned Buxtorf[t] well obſerves, tho' the Talmudic work was collected into one body ſome hundreds of years after Chriſt; yet the matter of it was diſputed in the famous ſchools of Babylon, Sora, Nahardea, and Pombeditha, and written down in books, partly before Chriſt, and partly in the time of Chriſt, and a little after. It is generally received by the Jews, and is of wonderful uſe in various reſpects. Says the learned Braunius[u], "tho' it is a work merely human, and not delivered by God, as "the Jews raſhly imagine; yet nevertheleſs, if ever any book was written beſides the ſacred ſcriptures, of great uſe, not only for the better underſtanding of tongues, eſpecially "the Hebrew and Chaldee, by which God has manifeſted ſalvation to us in his word, but "in order to ſearch out the antiquity, and the more hidden learning of the Chaldeans, Syrians, "Egyptians, and other people, their manners, rites, and cuſtoms, and all the myſteries both "of the Jewiſh religion and polity, and eſpecially thoſe things which make for a clearer ex- "poſition of the Old and New Teſtament, that, beyond all doubt, is the Talmudic work." And a little after he adds, "what ſlothfulneſs is that? what perverſeneſs? what ignorance? "to neglect, contemn, and even ſend to hell the Talmudic work; a work moſt ancient, which "is compoſed for this end only, that poſterity might have an expoſition of the law and "prophets? what is the Miſnah elſe but a continued expoſition of the law of Moſes, di-"geſted into certain books? what is the whole Talmudic work, but a moſt rich treaſure of "Jewiſh antiquities, rites, manners, and all myſteries, both of polity and religion, from the "times of Alexander the great, at leaſt, to the ſixth century, after the birth of Chriſt?" Of the ſame opinion was the learned Wagenſeil[w]; "we are are not afraid, ſays he, likewiſe to "defend this, that in the Gemara, as well as in the Miſnah, are many profitable things; nor can "any kind of learning be mentioned, which out of that may not be helped and adorned.— "Eſpecially the Talmud ſerves to illuſtrate the holy ſcriptures, and is of ſo great uſe truly "to underſtand the words, laws, manners, and inſtitutions of the Jews mentioned in them, "that there is no book in the world which can be of more ſervice that way."

MAIMONIDES, as he is commonly called, or R. Moſes ben Maimon, has abridged the whole Talmud, Miſnah, and Gemara, in a work of his which is called Yad Chazaka; which is written in pure Hebrew, in a clean, neat, and eaſy language, clear of that crabbed and rugged ſtile, in which the Gemara eſpecially is written; and free of all the knotty queſtions, and objections, and intricate diſputes of the doctors, and of every thing which has the appearance of fable: the whole contains nothing but the traditions of the Jews, their rites, cuſtoms, and uſages, civil and religious, digeſted in the beſt order and manner; and is the beſt ſyſtem of their civil and canon law that is extant: it is juſtly an admired work, and of excellent uſe. The Jews have a common ſaying concerning him, "from Moſes to Moſes "there is none like this Moſes." Of what ſervice this performance of his is for the better underſtanding the laws of Moſes, may be ſeen in thoſe extracts which our learned countryman, Mr. Ainſworth, has made out of it in his excellent commentaries upon the Pentateuch. And now, tho' this work was compiled about the beginning of the thirteenth century, yet inaſmuch as it is only a compendium of the Miſnah and Talmud, and a collection of the various traditions of the elders, and of the civil and canon law of the Jews in ages paſt, it is to be conſidered, as to the matter and ſubſtance of it, as of equal antiquity with the Miſnic and Talmudic writings; and he is as good a voucher for the ancient rites and uſages of the Jews, as can well be deſired, and whoſe fidelity is to be depended upon, as well as his judgment. In the laſt edition of the Talmud, his work is referred to in almoſt every page.

---

[p] Ganz Tzemach David, par. 1. fol. 31. 2.

[q] Epiſt. Algaſiæ, qu. 10. fol. 55. I. tom. III.

[r] Ganz Tzemach David, par. 1. fol. 33. 1, 2. & 34. 1. Buxtorf. Rab. Biblioth. p. 425.

[s] Kabala R. Abraham ben David apud Ganz. ib. fol. 34. 1.

[t] Gram. Chald. & Syr. p. 402, 403.

[u] Selecta Sacra, l. 5. Exercitat. 2. §. 26, 27. p. 611, 612.

[w] Prefat. ad Tela Ignea, p. 63, 64, 65, 68. Vid. Confutat. Carmin. Lipman. p. 581.

The RABBOT, are ancient commentaries on the five books of Moſes, and upon five others, viz. Solomon's Song, Ruth, Lamentations, Eccleſiaſtes, and Eſther; and are written, partly in an hiſtorical, and partly in an allegorical and myſtical way. The author of them was Rabba bar Nachmoni, who lived about the year of Chriſt 300 [x]; or rather he may be ſaid to be a compiler of them, for he does not give his own ſenſe and interpretation of ſcripture, but collects together the explanations of the doctors, that had lived in preceding ages: for as a Jewiſh [y] chronologer obſerves, “though he was the head of “the univerſity at Pombeditha in Babylon, yet he gathered and collected together, all the “myſtical explications of the land of Iſrael, (i. e. of the doctors that had lived there) “and wrote them in order.” And ſo Jarchi [z] calls the firſt part of this work, an hiſtorical and myſtical interpretation of the land of Iſrael, i. e. of the Rabbins in it; ſo that this work, as to the antiquity of it, anſwers at leaſt to the three firſt ages of Chriſtianity.

The book of ZOHAR, is a Cabaliſtic commentary upon the Pentateuch; it is generally aſcribed to R. Simeon ben Jochai, as the author of it, who was a diſciple of R. Akiba, who died about fifty years after the deſtruction of the temple, and about the year of Chriſt 120 [a]; though ſome ſay he only began it, and his diſciples finiſhed it [b], which will make no very conſiderable difference in the antiquity of it; others affirm [c], that he wrote nothing of it, nor his ſon, but their diſciples diſciples wrote it, about ſixty years after his death; but then, as another writer who obſerves the ſame ſays [d], they compoſed it as they received it from him; ſo that the ſubſtance of it was his, being communicated by him, or his ſon, unto them; but by the ſtile of it, which is even and uniform, it does not ſeem to be the work of different perſons; and be it wrote by whomſoever, it is a collection, not only of the diſcourſes of R. Simeon, and his ſon Eleazar, and of their cotemporaries, but of the Jewiſh doctors, that lived in Paleſtine, both before and after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; it is of great fame and authority with the Jews, and is agreed on by them, that whatever in it does not diſagree with the Talmud, and what is not explained in the Talmud, and is explained there, ſhould be received as authentic [e]: and it is worthy of notice what the Jews remark, that there is no mention made of the Talmud throughout the book; from whence they conclude, that it muſt be written before it; and certain it is, that the ſtile of it does not at all ſavour of novelty, but ſeems to be as near to the ſtile uſed in the times of Chriſt, as any thing extant; but whether it is ſo ancient as they ſuppoſe, I will not ſay; yet evident it is, that in abundance of inſtances, there is a very great likeneſs in it, with the phraſeology of the New Teſtament. The editors of the Sultzbach edition of it, gave their readers reaſon to expect, there would be publiſhed by them in a ſhort time, Zohariſtic Paralleliſms, on the New Teſtament; whether ever ſuch a work was publiſhed, I know not; if it has been, I have not had the happineſs to have ſeen it, which might have been helpful to me in this work: to which may be added, that there are interſperſed in it ſeveral ancient treatiſes, or extracts out of them, or fragments of them; particularly the ancient book of Bahir, ſaid to be the moſt ancient of all the Rabbinical books; the author of it was R. Nechunia ben Kanah, who lived under the ſecond temple, before the deſtruction of it, 30 or 40 years before Chriſt, and was cotemporary with Jonathan the paraphraſt [f]: this ſame Rabbi, whom Grotius [g] calls Nehumias, is ſaid by him to be fifty years before Chriſt; and who reports that he ſhould ſay, that the time of the Meſſiah ſignified by Daniel, could not be deferred longer than thoſe fifty years. There are other writers of a later date, which are made uſe of by me, though ſparingly; as, Jarchi, Aben Ezra, Kimchi, R. Abraham Seba, and others; ſome learned men affect to ſmile, when ſuch are referred to, with reſpect to the uſe of a phraſe or a cuſtom, for the illuſtration of any part of ſcripture; but there will be no reaſon to indulge the ſneer, when it is conſidered, that there is very little difference in the cuſtoms and uſages of the Jews, in one age from another; they are a people tenacious of their rites and ceremonies; and beſides, the ſame book of traditions is the rule of their conduct now, which was in ages paſt; and it may be obſerved, that ſuch of their writers who are moſt converſant with their ancient books, frequently uſe words and phraſes peculiar to them.

The general objection to Talmudic and Rabbinical writings is, that they are ſtuffed with fables, idle tales, impertinencies, and fooleries; and nothing is more common, than to

---

[x] Buxtorf. Rab. Biblioth: p. 326. [y] Ganz Tzemach David, par. 1. fol. 32. 2. [z] Comment. in Gen. xlvii. 2. [a] Buxtorf. de Abbreviat. p. 190. [b] Ganz Tzemach David, par. 1. fol. 30 1. [c] Shalſhelet Hakabala, fol. 23. 1. [d] Juchaſin, fol. 42. 1. [e] Ib. [f] Buxtorf. Rab. Biblioth. p. 319, 320. Juchaſin, fol. 63. 2. [g] De Veritat. Relig. Chriſt. l. 5. §. 14.

repreſent the Rabbins as a ſett of romantic and fabulous writers, as fooliſh, ſtupid, and dotards; and this is plentifully done for the moſt part, by ſuch who have never read them. That there are no fables in the Talmud, and other Jewiſh writings, I will not ſay; there were Jewiſh fables in the Apoſtle's time, Tit. i. 14. and if they can be thought to be the ſame as in the Talmud, it is a proof of the antiquity of it, as to that part of the things contained in it: however, I will venture to ſay, that many, if not moſt of the things that are reckoned fables, are not ſtrictly ſuch; but have ſomething ſignificantly ſolid and inſtructive in them. Mythology, or delivering things divine, moral, philoſophical, and hiſtorical, by way of fable, was much in uſe in the Eaſtern nations, and very early obtained, and particularly among the Jews; Jotham's fable of the trees, of the olive-tree, fig-tree, vine, and bramble, diſcourſing together, is a very known one, and a flagrant inſtance of what is ſuggeſted; and from them, the Greeks and Romans received their Mythic way of ſpeaking and writing; Pythagoras, and other philoſophers, learnt from them, or the Egyptians, or both, the way of communicating their ſecrets by ſymbols, and enigma's. The fables of Æſop, which introduce birds and beaſts ſpeaking, are notorious to every one, and whom I greatly ſuſpect to be a Jew [h], and his fables Jewiſh ones; or if not, his way of writing ſeems to be taken from them: theſe, if conſidered only in their literal ſenſe, muſt be ridiculous and abſurd; and ſome have been ſo ſimple and fooliſh, as to underſtand them in no other way; and have fancied there was a time, when beaſts and birds could ſpeak; and have been confirmed in it, by the ſcriptural inſtance of Balaam's aſs: but when a man is maſter of the morals of them, he perceives there's ſomething ſolid and inſtructive in them, and that they are the fruit and produce of a fine invention, and an ingenious mind. Many things, hiſtorical, moral, and civil, and others in natural philoſophy, and even as ſome think in chymiſtry, are delivered in fables by Ovid, in his Metamorphoſes; and why ſhould not the Jewiſh writers, be thought to take ſuch a method; partly by theſe pleaſant and artificial ſtories, to allure the more ſimple to reading, and partly to exerciſe the ingenious, in the ſearch of the hidden things of wiſdom and knowledge, as well as to relieve and recreate their minds, in hard and difficult ſtudies? And this is not my own private ſenſe, but the ſenſe, as of Jewiſh writers of the beſt note [i], ſo of many Chriſtian writers, as Galatinus [k], Fagius [l], Dilherrus [m], Selden [n], Wulferus [o], Muhlius [p], Vorſtius [q], Gaffarellus [r], Buxtorf [s], and others. I will not undertake to be an Oedipus, to unriddle the mythology of the Jews; but I'll ſingle out one or two inſtances, which appear, at firſt ſight, to be moſt monſtrous and abſurd, and attempt their explanation. They tell us [t] of the firſt man Adam, that when he was created, his ſtature was ſo high, that he reached from heaven to earth; that his body was ſo large, that it extended from one end of the earth to the other; or, as elſewhere ſaid [u], he looked from one end of the world to the other; and that when he rebelled againſt God, he laid his hand upon him, and leſſened him, and ſo reduced him to the bulk and ſize that men are generally of: but now, who are moſt to be laughed at, the authors of this fable, or thoſe who take it in the literal ſenſe, and laugh at them? Can any man in his ſenſes think, that any man, or ſett of men, could deviſe and tell ſuch a ſtory as this, in hopes of meeting with credit among any rational creatures? The ſenſe of the fable is, that the power of man at his firſt creation reached to all things under the heavens, and upon the earth; that he had dominion over the fowls of the air, the beaſts of the field, and the fiſhes in the ſea; and that his knowledge was extended to all creatures and things in the univerſe; but that when he ſinned againſt God, his authority over the creatures was weakened, and his knowledge leſſened: and ſo, in a few words, it repreſents the ſtate of man in innocence, his fall, and the ſad effects of it. Again, it is a very common thing with them to ſpeak of a feaſt that God will make for the righteous in the world to come; againſt which time the Leviathan is ſalted, and when a large ox, the Behemoth of Job will be ſerved up, and a fowl of an incredible ſize will be a part of the entertainment, and a deſart of the moſt delightful fruits of the garden of Eden will be ſet, and wine will be drank, which has been kept in the grape from the ſix days of the creation [w]. Now, tho' there might be ſome perſons who took all this in the groſs and literal ſenſe, as I have obſerved in the note on Luke xiv. 15. yet they ſadly miſtook the ſenſe of the authors of it; for as Gaffarellus obſerves [x], “ what madneſs is it to imagine, that God ſhould ſalt up this dragon, or whale, called Leviathan, and that it ſhould “ afterwards be kept till the laſt day, to make a feaſt for thoſe that ſhall then have no

---

[h] Vid. Wolf. Heb. Biblioth. Vol. I. p. 135.

[i] R. Iſaac Sangari in Sepher Coſri, par. 3. p. 253, 254. Maimon. in Miſn. Sanhedrin, c. 11. §. 1.

[k] De Arcan. Cath. ver. l. 1. c. 7.

[l] In Pirke Abot, c. 3. §. 16.

[m] In Atrio Ling. S. p. 89. apud Wagenſeil. Prefat. ad Tela Ignea, p. 61.

[n] Prolegomena de Succeſſ. ad Leg. Ebr.

[o] Theriaca Judaica, p. 369, &c.

[p] Prefat. ad Coccei Sanhedrin.

[q] Prefat. ad Pirke Eliezer.

[r] Unheard of Curioſities, par. 1. c. 2.

[s] Epiſt. Dedicat. ad Lex. Talmud.

[t] T. Bab. Chagiga, fol. 12. 1. & Sanhedrin, fol. 38. 2.

[u] Shirhaſhirim Rabba, fol. 28. 3.

[w] See my notes on the Targum on Cant. viii. 2.

[x] Curioſities, ib. [illegible]

“ more need to eat? And what excellent entertainment ſhould God beſtow upon his “ children, when their chear ſhould only be the fleſh of a poudered dragon? This were “ one of the groſſeſt fooleries that could be, were there no other doctrine couched under “ this tradition, than what the bare letter affords; and who can poſſibly imagine the “ Jews to be a people ſo void of ſenſe, as ſimply to believe this, without looking after “ any other meaning of the thing?” However, they muſt be very ſtupid that ſo did believe. Fagius[y] directs to another ſenſe of this fable; “ by the feaſt, ſays he, under- “ ſtand, that chief and everlaſting happineſs, which the righteous ſhall enjoy in the world “ to come; then truly they ſhall eat and devour that Leviathan, that is, ſatan, when they “ ſhall ſee him with all his miniſters, thruſt into hell.” And to this agrees the ſenſe which Menaſſeb ben Iſrael[z] gives of the ſame: “ by theſe and the like, ſays he, are ſig- “ nified the ſpiritual delight, pleaſure, and joy of ſouls, which they ſhall be poſſeſſed of “ in that ſtate; for as here, wine uſually delights and exhilarates the minds of men, “ ſo likewiſe that ſpiritual ſtate ſhall fill the raiſed ones, with all joy everlaſting; but of “ theſe allegories of the Rabbins, and of the Talmud, adds he, my purpoſe is to treat elſe- “ where and ſeparately, in a ſingular tract;” but whether he ever publiſhed any thing of that kind, I do not know: and Maimonides[a] ſome hundred years before him declared, that he ſhould compoſe a treatiſe to explain every thing of this kind in the Talmud, and other writings; ſhewing, what were to be taken literally, and what parabolically; but this work, I ſuppoſe, was never finiſhed; or however, never ſaw the light: and who alſo obſerves[b], that the readers of ſuch writings, may be divided into three claſſes; the one ſort conſiſts of ſuch, who underſtand all things in a literal ſenſe, and believe them, though ever ſo abſurd, irrational, and impoſſible; which ſect he repreſents as miſerable and fooliſh, and to be pitied; the other is, of ſuch who alſo take things in the literal ſenſe, but reproach the wiſe men, and laugh at them for them; this claſs he makes to be more ſtupid than the former; and the third ſort is of them, and who are few, that conſider the internal ſenſe of things, and underſtand them in an enigmatical and parabolical way: and ſince therefore the Jews themſelves affirm, that theſe things which have the appearance of fable, are not to be underſtood in a literal, but in an allegorical ſenſe, it is an abuſe of them, and doing them a real injury, to interpret them otherwiſe: and as it would not be adviſeable for any man to repeat one of Æſop's fables, unleſs he is maſter of the moral of it, that ſo he may inſtruct by it; and eſpecially to do it for the ſake of diverſion and laughter, unleſs he has a child upon his knee to amuſe; ſo neither is it adviſeable to relate a Jewiſh fable, merely to laugh at it; let ſuch conſider, at whoſe expence the laugh is; it would be much more becoming them, to endeavour to ſearch out the hiſtory, divinity, morality, or philoſophy of them, if they can, of themſelves; or read thoſe books directed to in the margin[c], with others which are written for that purpoſe; out of the laſt of which, the learned David Millius has produced an explication of two or three very remarkable fables, in the Talmud[d].

The Jewiſh writers are commonly ſet in a very odious light, as a parcel of ignorant and ſenſeleſs men, as devoid of common judgment and underſtanding: it is certain, their anceſtors were not ſuch, they excelled all other people in wiſdom and knowledge, as it is reaſonable to conclude they ſhould; ſince they had a peculiar revelation from God, and were directed by him in things natural, civil, and religious; and as they had the advantage above all mankind in the knowledge and worſhip of God, ſo in polity, morality, and natural philoſophy; all the wiſdom of the heathens, was derived from them; letters, hiſtory, arts and ſciences, literal and mechanic, owe their riſe or improvement to them. Pythagoras, Plato, and Ariſtotle, borrowed their beſt things from them; of which learned men may be convinced, by what Joſephus, Clemens Alexandrinus, Juſtin Martyr, Euſebius Cæſarienſis, and others, who were maſters both of Hebrew and heathen philoſophy, have obſerved; and the Engliſh reader may be ſatisfied of the truth of this, by reading Gale's court of the Gentiles: what men were there ever in any nation under the ſun, to be compared with Abraham, Moſes, Solomon, and Daniel? and even after the Babyloniſh captivity, and when they were greatly ſunk and degenerated, between that and the times of Chriſt, there were writers of conſiderable note among them, in divinity, morality, and hiſtory; as the books of the Wiſdom of Solomon, Eccleſiaſticus, the Maccabees ſhew; which though apocryphal, and not of divine inſpiration, have many things very valuable and uſeful in them, and are thought proper to be bound up with our bibles, and read by the common people. Joſephus and Philo the Jew, who wrote about the time of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, are in great credit with learned men; though the former has his miſtakes, and many things of the mythic or fabulous kind; and the other, is a writer in the allegorical way; it may be the reaſon why theſe are had in eſteem, and not the Miſnic and Talmudic writers is, becauſe they wrote in Greek, and are more eaſily underſtood than the latter, whoſe language is difficult, and their ſtile crabbed and rugged: and ſince I have mentioned theſe two writers, I cannot but declare my opinion, that ſuch who make it their ſtudy to illuſtrate the New Teſtament with Greek authors, would do well to compare the Greek of theſe two writers, and alſo that of the Septuagint, with the New Teſtament; ſince their writings were neareſt the times of the New Teſtament writers, and they were Jews, as they were: but to proceed, though ſince the rejection of the Meſſiah and his Goſpel, the Jews are given up to a judicial blindneſs and hardneſs, yet it is only in thoſe things which relate thereunto; they are not deprived of their common ſenſe and reaſon; and many of them ſince, have been famous for their knowledge and learning, particularly in phyſic and aſtronomy; and ſome of them have made a very great figure in the courts of princes, and have been made uſe of in forming and executing political ſchemes. Menaſſeh ben Iſrael, who lived in the laſt century, was a man of conſiderable reading and learning, and held a correſpondence with many learned men among the Chriſtians of his day; and by his writings, appears to be well verſed in divinity, and in ancient and modern philoſophy: and though learning in all its parts, and even Talmudic learning itſelf, is now much neglected by that people, as one of their Rabbins here in London, complained to me ſome years ago, yet do we find that they want capacity? that they are men void of common ſenſe and underſtanding? do we not find them acute enough in their trade and commerce among us? what reaſon is there for this general calumny? are not they able to give an account of their own nation, their rites, cuſtoms, and uſages?

---

[y] In loco ſupra citato.

[z] De Reſurrectione Mortuorum, l. 2. c. 19. p. 225.

[a] In Miſn. Sanhedrin ut ſupra. Vid. Pocock. Porta Moſis, p. 162.

[b] Ib. p. 144—147.

[c] Caphtor Uperah, Beer Haggolah, Deraſh Moſeh, Leb haarjeh, Ammudeah Shibgnah, Ollelot Ephraim.

[d] Prefat. ad Catalecta Rabbinica.

But be they as fabulous and as fooliſh, as unfaithful and wicked, as they can be ſaid, or thought to be, do they exceed the heathen writers, poets, hiſtorians, and philoſophers in ſuch a character? who were not only all of them idolaters, but many of them very profane perſons; whoſe writings are ſtuffed with lies, lewdneſs, and all manner of wickedneſs; yet many learned men have employed their time in the ſtudy of them, and have taken many things from them, for the illuſtration of the ſacred text; and how have they rejoiced, as if they had found a great ſpoil, when they have lighted upon any thing, that has ſerved to explain a word or phraſe in the New Teſtament, or ſettle and eſtabliſh the ſenſe of one; or could obſerve any uſage, rite, or ceremony among the heathens, to which it has been thought there might be an alluſion in it; though it has been, as Braunius obſerves[e], in a Gentile Ariſtotle or Epicurus; in an impure Ariſtophanes, Martial, Lucian, Catullus, Petronius, thoſe miniſters of wickedneſs; or in a lying Homer, Heſiod, and Ovid, thoſe makers of fables, and others of the ſame ſtamp: for my part, I do not object to ſuch a method of illuſtrating ſcripture; I am of opinion, that all kind of learning contributes to the knowledge of the ſcripture, and all ſhould be employed that way, and be ſubſervient to it: Eraſmus and Beza formerly, and of late Elſner, Bos, Wolfius, and Raphelius, have done much this way, to great profit and advantage. I don't diſlike the illuſtration of the paſſage in Rev. ii. 17. concerning the white ſtone, and new name in it, by thoſe lines of Ovid,

Mos erat antiquis niveis atriſque lapillis
His damnare reos, illis abſolvere culpa.

Though they are taken out of the Fables of his Metamorphoſes: all that I inſiſt upon is, that Jewiſh writers ſhould ſtand at leaſt upon an equal foot with Heathen ones, in things relating to their own language, rites, and cuſtoms; and this is no unreaſonable demand; and in it I have a very learned [f] ancient writer on my ſide: "The things of the Hebrews are to be taken from themſelves, and not elſewhere; as we learn the things of the Phœnicians from the Phœnicians; and the things of the Egyptians from the Egyptians; as alſo the things of the Grecians from thoſe that are moſt famous among them; and the things of Philoſophers from the Philoſophers, and not from thoſe who are unſkilful in philoſophy: ſo I reckon it muſt follow, ſays he, that the things of the Hebrews muſt be taken from their writings, and not elſewhere." And indeed it ſhould ſeem as if theſe ought to have the preference to Heathen writers; ſince they profeſs the worſhip of the one, true, and living God, believe a divine revelation, receive the books of the Old Teſtament, which many of their commentators have wrote, in many things, well upon; who when they write well, as it is confeſſed, none do better. And eſpecially, they ought ſurely to be regarded and credited, when what they ſay agrees with the New Teſtament, and ſerves to illuſtrate and confirm it; of which kind are the things produced in the following Expoſition.

Theſe men are indeed enemies to the Goſpel of Chriſt, but fas eſt & ab hoſte doceri; and the conceſſions of an enemy may be made uſe of to great advantage againſt him, and for the confirmation of truth: beſides, the people of the Jews are to be converted in the latter

---

[e] Selecta Sacra, l. 5. Exerc. 2. §. 27. p. 611, 612.

[f] Euſeb. Evangel. prepar. l. 7. c. 8. p. 306.

latter day, and it is worth our while to be at pains to convince them of their errors, to urge their ancient writings againſt them, and in favour of Chriſtianity, to retort their own arguments upon them, to recommend the reading of the New Teſtament unto them, by ſhewing the argreement of its ſtile with their writings, and by proving facts in it out of them, and ſo remove their prejudices againſt it; but if nothing of this kind can be hoped for from ſuch a method of proceeding, ſurely it muſt be of uſe to us Chriſtians. Is it of no moment and importance to the cauſe of Chriſtianity, that the Jews themſelves allow that there was ſuch a perſon as Jeſus of Nazareth, about the time he is ſaid to live; that the names of his parents were Joſeph and Mary; that he was born in Bethlehem of Judah; that he was for ſome time in Egypt; that he preached very much in Galilee; that he wrote miracles, cleanſed lepers, &c. that he rode to Jeruſalem on an aſs, and was put to death by the Jews at the time of the paſſover? All which, with other things related by them, agree with the evangelic hiſtory, and confirm it: they own there was ſuch a perſon as John the Baptiſt, who adminiſtered baptiſm in thoſe times; they give us the names of ſeveral of the diſciples of Chriſt, whom they allow to have had the gift of healing diſeaſes. Is it of no uſe to us, nor any ſatisfaction to our minds, to obſerve from the Jews themſelves, that there were ſuch traditions among them the New Teſtament ſpeaks of, and condemns? and that we are able, not only to ſhew in the groſs that there were ſuch things as the traditions of the elders, but that we can produce the particular ones our Lord mentions, and ſuch cuſtoms and uſages as are referred to by him and his Apoſtles? beſides, are there not many, not only words and phraſes, but things, which would have been morally impoſſible to underſtand in an ordinary way, without the aſſiſtance of Jewiſh learning? What could we have known of their ſynagogues, and ſynagogue-worſhip? of the ſeveral ſects of religion among them? of their Sanhedrim, and other courts of judicature? of their ſcourging with forty ſtripes ſave one? of their phylacteries? of being uncircumciſed after circumciſion? of a ſabbath-day's journey, with a multitude of other things, as will appear by the following expoſition? Upon ſuch conſiderations as theſe many great men have declared their ſenſe of the great uſefulneſs of Jewiſh writings for the underſtanding of the New Teſtament: and that it may appear I am not alone in my ſentiments on this head, I ſhall produce the teſtimonies of ſeveral of them.

Our countryman Mr. Hugh Broughton, a man of great knowledge in the languages, and eſpecially in the Eaſtern languages, thus expreſſes himſelf: "The ſpeech of the New
" Teſtament, in every part, doth ſhew clearly that God is the author of it, inſomuch that
" the Jews might know by the ſtile that it came from heaven: in it we ſhall find the
" phraſe, firſt, of the common Greek writers, ſecondly, of the ſeventy-two interpreters,
" thirdly, of the Talmudicks, and fourthly, words made by the Apoſtles.——There is
" no other way to make Chriſtians ready in the Bible, but by handling the Goſpel by
" Talmudicks, to whoſe tenor of ſtudy all the New Teſtament's ſtile is bent.———The " New Teſtament, ſpeaking to Jews, is applied to their manner of ſpeech, and plain,
" to a Talmudic, where it is hardeſt to us. The holy Spirit uſeth the unlearned Jews—
" in Scribes learning, in writing for Scribes, to paſs them in their Talmudical ſcience;
" every part of the New Teſtament ſheweth this to Talmudicks; and St. Paul, in ſchool-
" education, heard Gamaliel their doctor, and frameth all that Epiſtle which he wrote to
" them to meet with their Talmudicks [g]." And the Evangeliſt Matthew, he calls the Talmudick of Talmudiſts.

The learned Buxtorf [h] ſays of the Talmud, that there are in it many things of great moment, to illuſtrate in a very remarkable manner, an infinite number of places in the New Teſtament, as to words, phraſes, and hiſtory.

Cocceius [i], ſpeaking of the traditions of the Jews, has theſe words: "theſe are of uſe
" either to the fuller underſtanding of the law of Moſes, as ritual, judicial, and moral; or
" for the illuſtration of foreign laws; or to give light into the hiſtories of Jewiſh affairs;
" or which is greateſt of all, for the confirmation of the evangelic hiſtory; where much
" mention is made of Jewiſh cuſtoms, laws, and traditions.——the knowledge of the " Talmud, and of Talmudic writings, affords very remarkable light for the illuſtration of the " New Teſtament.——Seeing that language was in uſe in the age of Chriſt, and his
" Apoſtles, which is with the Talmudiſts; and they ſpoke in no other, as is evident by " clear arguments and teſtimonies of learned men: the comparing of that language with
" the phraſeology of the New Teſtament, muſt needs contribute much for the illuſtration
" of it. Verily, if any one would but try to tranſlate places into Hebrew, he will find
" that in many, Talmudic words and phraſes are nearer than Bible ones."

---

[g] Works, Tom. II. p. 416, 422, 693, 707.

[h] Epiſt. Dedicat. ad Lex. Talmud.

[i] Prefat. ad Sanhedrin & Maccot.

Rhenferdius[k] begins a very learned diſſertation of his after this manner: "Seeing all they deſerve praiſe among Chriſtians, who being furniſhed with various ſorts of learning, employ their thoughts and cares for the illuſtration of the ſacred ſcripture, I know none that better deſerve it than thoſe, who being ſkilled in the Hebrew language and laws, from thence, as from its proper ſeat, borrow and hold forth light to the hiſtory and phraſeology of the New Teſtament. Greece has much, Rome alſo, formerly miſtreſs of the nations, has much; which being neglected, or not rightly enough underſtood, in vain you labour to underſtand the New Teſtament; yet as much as that is, which indeed is great, it is but as a drop from the ocean, in compariſon of thoſe things which the monuments of the Hebrews pour in for the ſame uſe, not by buſhels, and meaſures of three buſhels, but by whole barns full."

Muhlius[l], in an apology of his for the ſtudy of the Talmud, delivers himſelf in the following manner: "The Talmudic writings are of great moment for the underſtanding of the ſacred ſcripture; for in the verſions of the holy Bible, how many faults and errors are there ariſing from ignorance of things in the Talmud? Such an ignorant interpreter eaſily ſlips, and alſo leads others by the ſame precipices. What will he do in the Old Teſtament, where all things are full of Talmudic argument? What in the New? where indeed the context is Greek, the words, I confeſs, are Greek, and the types are Greek, but the ſtile is plainly Jewiſh, and full of Talmudic ſavour; ſo that the Talmudic volumes may ſeem like a verbal commentary upon the New Teſtament, which no one will deny but he that is determined to maintain an hypotheſis." And after giving many inſtances in the New Teſtament, ſhewing and proving what he had aſſerted, he further adds; without the reſolution and ſolid explanation of the Talmudiſts, theſe things would remain entirely inexplicable, and be only known to ſuch who have learned them from the Miſnic and Talmudic fountains: and hence it is, that the moſt learned men who know this full well, have employed their chief ſtudies this way, that from Talmudic and Rabbinical writings they might moſt happily illuſtrate the books of the New Teſtament; and then particularly mentions Druſius, Grotius, Capellus, Cartwright, and Lightfoot.

Surenhuſius[m] relates, what by experience he had found to be true, how that in his younger days he applied himſelf to the reading of Greek authors for the better underſtanding of the New Teſtament; but did not receive that advantage from them he expected, the ſtile and language not agreeing, by reaſon of the diſtance between the writers of the New Teſtament, and them: and he goes on to inform his readers, how when he came to engage in Hebrew ſtudies, they not only led him in a right way to the underſtanding of the Old Teſtament, but beyond his expectation gave him no ſmall light into the more difficult paſſages of the New Teſtament; and for which, when he rightly conſidered the thing, he found there was good reaſon, ſince the writers of it were Hebrews, who had had an Hebrew maſter, whoſe doctrine they had heard both in the ancient Hebrew language uſed in Bible exercitations among the doctors, and in the Syriac dialect, then common in converſation, and in ſermons to the unlearned.

Wagenſeil[n], I have before obſerved, affirms, that there is no book in the world, that can be of that ſervice for the illuſtration of the holy ſcriptures, as the Talmud; and adds, "that the inſtitutions (or traditions) which are mentioned in the Talmud, did certainly of old obtain among the Jews, the authority of the New Teſtament openly convinces us; in which many of them are found, in the moſt expreſs words; wherefore John Lightfoot an Engliſhman, a man well verſed in Hebrew literature, performed a laudable work, in explaining the four Evangeliſts; when out of the Talmud chiefly, he ſtudied to bring light to the ſacred writers, and to illuſtrate ſome of the more obſcure ſayings in them: that laborious work I highly value, for the whole is filled with deep learning, and furniſhes out many things, of which no interpreter ever thought, nor could think of, without ſkill in the Talmud: would to God he had lived, to handle all the ſacred books in the ſame manner; but ſeeing death has prevented it, it would be a deſireable thing, if another, by the way ſhowed him, would endeavour to go on with it to the end; who would certainly gain great favour and thanks, among all thoſe that have a juſt value for ſuch things." More teſtimonies of this kind might have been produced, but theſe may ſuffice; nor ſhould I have mentioned theſe, but to ſhow that I am not ſingular in my opinion and ſentiments, concerning the manner of explaining paſſages in the New Teſtament, out of Jewiſh writings; and that this is not a raſh ſtart and ſally of mine, which ſome, who are utter ſtrangers to theſe things, might have imagined, but is what has been thought of, [k] Diſſert. 1. de decem otioſis Synagog. Theſ. 1. p. 1, 2.

---

[l] Prefat. Apologet. pro ſtudio Thalmudico ad Coccei Titul. Sanhedrin & Maccot.

[m] Prefat. ad Miſnam.

[n] Prefat. ad Tela Ignea, p. 65, 66.

well weighed, conſidered, and approved of by men of the greateſt figure, and with whom I am not be named.

What ſome learned men on the other ſide of the queſtion have affirmed, is monſtrous and ſhocking, that whatever the Jews have delivered in their Miſnah and Gemara, all the wiſdom of the ancient Hebrews, the traditions of the elders, whatever they have in them concerning their antiquities, rites, and cuſtoms, eſpecially thoſe which give any light to the New Teſtament, are taken from the New Teſtament itſelf, from the ſayings of Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, from the fathers, and from chriſtian apoſtates; and that Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, have no reſpect to the rites, manners, and cuſtoms of the Jews, in uſe before their time; and therefore nothing can be learned out of the Talmud to expound places in the New Teſtament. Braunius[p] has given a full anſwer to all this with a great deal of ſpirit and juſt reaſoning. I fret at my heart, ſays he, to ſee men, meaning particularly Voſſius and Owen, otherwiſe well verſed in Greek and Latin authors, teach things ſo abſurd and manifeſtly falſe, with ſo much boldneſs; and they muſt pardon me, if I ſay with ſo much ignorance, for I ſay the truth: whoever has but juſt dipped into the Miſnah and Gemara, and other ancient books, will at once obſerve, that they that aſſert ſuch things, are moſt ignorant of Jewiſh antiquity, and have never read the above writings; and have only took ſome things, and theſe often both bad and falſe, out of the obſervations of others. He rightly takes notice of the Jews implacable hatred of Chriſt, his apoſtles, and the fathers of the Chriſtian church, who had their writings in the utmoſt abhorrence and deteſtation, and would never borrow any thing from them. He obſerves, that this is as ridiculous as to ſuggeſt, that the Greek and Roman writers, took out of the New Teſtament, what they ſay concerning Cæſar Auguſtus, Cyrenius, Pontius Pilate, and other things which relate to the Roman hiſtory; that it is equally as great a piece of madneſs, to imagine that the Jews took what they have written concerning the rites and cuſtoms of their own nation, out of the New Teſtament, as it would be to ſuppoſe that the Heathen writers have taken from thence what they ſay concerning the Olympic games, and other cuſtoms alluded to by the Apoſtles. He expoſes, in a very juſt manner, the folly of ſuch an aſſertion, by obſerving that the Jews, according to it, would have known nothing of ſynagogues in Judea; nor ever thought of phylacteries, and the enlarging the borders of their garments; of paying tithes of mint, aniſe, cummin, and other herbs; of a ſabbath-day's journey; of drawing on the foreſkin after circumciſion; and of the law of ſcourging with forty ſtripes, ſave one; nor perhaps would they have ſworn by heaven and earth, by Jeruſalem, by the temple, and by their head, or have made uſe of pipers and mourners at funerals, or forbid the plucking ears of corn on the ſabbath-day, except they had met with theſe things in our New Teſtament; all which would be monſtrouſly ridiculous to ſuppoſe; and yet no more ſo than what theſe writers ſuggeſt.

Some may think I have made too much uſe of Jewiſh authorities in the following expoſition; my concern is, that I have made no more uſe of them; and that my reading and obſervations have not furniſhed me with more materials of this kind, which I am very well ſatisfied, might be obtained from them; for which reaſon I ſhould have choſe to have deferred the publication of it, hoping I might be able, by ſuch means, to give further light to ſome paſſages of ſcripture; and only the importunity of my friends, and the conſideration of the uncertainty of life, have prevailed upon me to let it go into the world as it is. I have uſed all diligence, both from my own reading, and from the obſervations of others, to make it as perfect in this way as I could; and from none have I had ſo much help and aſſiſtance as from the great Dr. Lightfoot, who has broke the ice for me, and pointed out the way in which I ſhould proceed, as Wagenſeil obſerves. On conſulting my Adverſaria, and comparing my notes with what the doctor has obſerved, I found ſome things taken notice of which he has publiſhed: and indeed, it can hardly be thought it ſhould be otherwiſe in reading the ſame writings, and with the ſame view; but I have not thought proper to drop them on that account, but have rather choſe to make uſe of others produced by him, unobſerved by me, in order to make this work as complete as I could, and which lovers of Hebrew learning will thank me for; tho' the reader will not be able to obſerve ſcarce any thing but what is either corrected, improved, or confirmed. And as for thoſe who may not have a taſte for theſe things, I hope they will find without them a ſatisfactory expoſition of the ſacred text; and I may further obſerve, that citations of this ſort will not appear ſo frequently and largely in the other parts of the work, as in the firſt volume. It is very poſſible, that my fondneſs for this kind of literature may have betrayed me into ſome weakneſſes, which I hope will be overlooked. And no doubt but there are miſtakes made by me in this ſort of learning itſelf, which men of candour and ingenuity, eſpecially ſuch who know the difficulty and intricacy of ſuch ſtudies, will not bear hard upon me for, but gently correct. Some of my readers may be offended with ſome things they may meet with in the citations out of Jewiſh writings, not being uſed to ſuch reading; and this is an infelicity that attends teſtimonies produced out of both Heatheniſh and Jewiſh authors, that there is often ſomething not pleaſing and grateful to Chriſtian ears; I have, as much as I could, pared off what might not be ſo agreeable; but ſometimes it has been neceſſary to recite more than is eligible, in order to finiſh the ſentence, and complete the ſenſe; and the reader ſhould obſerve, that he is no further to regard the citation, than as it concerns that for which it is made, the phraſeology, hiſtory, rite, or cuſtom referred unto.

---

[p] Selecta ſacra, l. 5. Exercitat. 2. p. 617, 621---626.

As for the Oriental verſions I have chiefly made uſe of in this work, they are thoſe that are publiſhed in the London Polyglott Bible; and I have, for the moſt part, followed the tranſlations of them in it, chuſing rather that my readers ſhould truſt to the labours of thoſe learned men concerned in that work, than to that little knowledge and ſkill I have in thoſe languages. The various readings of the text I have not entered into a critical examination of; I have only ſelected ſome of the moſt material ones, which differ moſt from the commonly received reading, or agree with the Vulgate Latin and Eaſtern verſions, or furniſh out an uſeful obſervation. Nor need the reader be uneaſy, leſt the authority of the ſcripture ſhould be weakened, and become doubtful by theſe different readings: for as a learned man of our own nation has obſerved[a], "it is an invincible "reaſon for the ſcriptures part, that other eſcapes ſhould be ſo purpoſely and infinitely let "paſs, and yet no ſaving or ſubſtantial part at all ſcarce moved out of its place. To ſay "the truth, theſe varieties of readings in a few bye-places do the ſame office to the main "ſcripture, as the variations of the compaſs to the whole magnet of the earth; the mari-"ner knows ſo much the better for theſe how to ſteer his courſe."

I have nothing more to obſerve, only that I have here and there taken notice of the more material objections of the Jews to the writings of the New Teſtament, and have given a ſhort anſwer to them; and the rather, as they may partly ſerve to remove their prejudices againſt them, and partly to confirm Chriſtians in them; ſo likewiſe to obviate the exceptions of deiſts, who join with them in them, and make uſe of the ſame, and improve them to the ſame purpoſe.

As to my religious principles from which I am denominated by men, they are pretty much known in the world by the writings I have already publiſhed, and my notes on the ſeveral parts of ſcripture will be found to correſpond with them. I have ſtudied conſiſtency with truth, and with myſelf; and I hope nothing will appear contradictory to the form of ſound words, and the analogy of faith, or be yea and nay, but harmonious, uniform, and all of a-piece.

And now I do, in the moſt ſincere and grateful manner, give thanks to God for that meaſure of health and ſtrength of body, and for all the gifts and graces of his Spirit afforded me, by which I have been enabled to go through this arduous work thus far, and would be depending upon him for freſh ſupplies of grace and ſtrength for the publication of the whole. I moſt freely acknowledge, that all I have of nature, literature, and grace, I have from him, from whom every good and perfect gift comes; I have nothing but what I have received; nor would I glory as though I had received it not: and if I have wrote any thing contrary to the divine perfections, or what may reflect any diſhonour on the dear name of Jeſus, or be any way injurious to the truth, as it is in him, or be detrimental to the intereſt of pure and undefiled religion, I do moſt humbly intreat forgiveneſs at the hands of God: I am ſure I have not wrote any thing of this kind knowingly, and on purpoſe. To conclude, I do moſt earneſtly deſire and implore the bleſſing of God upon theſe labours of mine, that they might be uſeful to many in reading them, that their minds may be enlightened, their faith may be eſtabliſhed, their knowledge of divine things may be increaſed, and God may be glorified.

---

[a] J. Gregory's Preface to his Works.

A

LIST of the SUBSCRIBERS.

A

MR. Abraham Allchurch
Mr. William Ambroſe
The Rev. Mr. William Anderſon, 2 Setts
Mr. Joſhua Andrews
Mr. Richard Angel
Mr. Jeremiah Armiger, Apothecary
Mrs. Mehetable Aſh
Mr. Humphry Atherton
Mr. John Atkins, 2 Setts
The Rev. Mr. James Atkinſon, of Horſely
Mr. John Attewel
Mr. Francis Attwood, of Eaton Socon, Bedfordſhire
Mr. Valentine Auſten, of Canterbury
Mr. Robert Auſtin, of Bow
The Rev. Mr. John Auther, of Waltham-Abbey
Mr. Samuel Ayers

B

Mrs. Anne Bacon
Mr. Jonathan Baneſter, of Little Aſhley, Leiceſterſhire
Mrs. Elizabeth Banks, of Portſmouth
Mr. Robert Barlow, of Boſton, Merchant
Mr. Samuel Barlow, of Norton Cuckney, Nottinghamſhire
Mr. Edward Barnes
Mr. John Barnes
Mr. James Barnet
Mr. John Barrow
Mr. George Baſkerville, Attorney
Mr. Eli Batteril, of Welford, Leiceſterſhire
Mr. George Bayley
Mr. William Bayley
Mrs. Mary Bayley
Mr. William Bayley
Mr. Francis Beck
Mrs. Anne Bedford
The Rev. Mr. Benjamin Beddome, of Bourton on the Water
Mr. John Bellamy, of Brigſtock, Northamptonſhire
The Rev. Mr. William Bentley
Mr. Samuel Bentley, of Bromſgrove, Worceſterſhire
Mr. William Bentley, of Sheepſhead, Leiceſterſhire
Mr. Jacob Berry, Merchant
Mr. Abraham Bettſworth
Mr. Robert Bicknill, of Curry Mallet
Mr. Richard Bigg
Mr. Samuel Birt, Bookſeller in London
Mr. Benjamin Blackden, 3 Setts
Mr. Samuel Blackman, Bookſeller in Reading
Capt. Matthew Blake
Mr. Felix Bloom
Mr. Major Bloomer
Mr. Luke Blunt, of Greenwich
The Rev. Mr. Samuel Blyth, of Langham, Eſſex
Mr. William Bodycott
Mr. John Bolton, of Portſmouth
The Rev. Mr. William Bond, of Lutterworth
Mr. Richard Booth, of Chatham
Mr. James Booth, near Bradford, Yorkſhire
Mr. Edward Bradford, of Wallingford
Mr. Thomas Bradley, of Chatham
Mrs. Brain, of Briſtol
The Rev. George Braithwaite, A. M.
Miſs Lucy Brapple
Mrs. Abigail Brewer, of Briſtol
Mr. Humphry Bright
Mrs. Elizabeth Bright
The Rev. Mr. John Brine
Mr. Thomas Britton
Mr. Francis Brookhurſt
Mr. Ebenezer Brown, of Briſtol
Mr. Stephen Bruce, of Wolverſtone, Suffolk
Mr. Joſhua Bryant
Mr. Martin Bryſon, Bookſeller in Newcaſtle upon Tyne
Mr. Frederick Bull
Mrs. Bull, of Briſtol
Mr. Thomas Bully, of Deptford
The Rev. Mr. Thomas Bunker, of Thorn, Bedfordſhire
Mr. Samuel Burch
Mr. Richard Burcher
Mr. Richard Burnham
Mr. Francis Burrell, of Norwich
Mr. Joſeph Burt, Apothecary
Mr. John Butler
Mr. John Button, Maſter of a Boarding-School at Hertford

C

Mr. Joſiah Cannon, of Huſley, Hants
Mr. John Cape
Mr. Joſeph Carroll
The Rev. Mr. Joſeph Caſberd, Miniſter of St. Thomas, Southwark, Rector of Woodmanſtone, Surry, and Prebendary of Briſtol
Mr. John Caſſon
Mr. Thomas Catmore
Mr. William Chamberlain, of Beccles
The Rev. Mr. John Channon, of Lyme, Dorſet
Mr. Thomas Chatteriſs, of Oundle
Mr. Jeremiah Chiddock
The Rev. Mr. William Chriſtian, of Markfield, Leiceſterſhire
The Church at Cirenceſter
Mr. John Clare

Mr. John Clarke, Bookſeller in St. Paul's Church-Yard
Mr. John Clarke, Bookſeller at the Royal-Exchange
Mr. Zechariah Clarke, 2 Setts
Mr. John Clarke, of Denton
Mr. Clay, Bookſeller of Daventry
The Rev. Mr. Henry Clayton, of Sallendine Nook, Yorkſhire
Mrs. Mildred Clyfton, of Birmingham
Mr. George Coe
Mr. John Cole
Mr. William Coles
Mr. John Coles, of Luton, Bedfordſhire
Mr. Joſeph Collet, of Hempſtead
Mr. Francis Collins
The Rev. Mr. John Conder, of Cambridge
The Rev. Mr. Edward Cook, of Perſhore
Mr. Richard Cook, of Wolverſtone, Suffolk
Mrs. Cook, of Northampton
Mr. John Cook, of Cheſham, Bucks
Mr. Thomas Cooke
The Rev. Mr. Richard Coulthred, of Hawkſhead-Hill, Lancaſhire
Mr. John Cox, of Briſtol, Brewer
Mr. Caleb Cox, of Great Miſſenden
Mr. Thomas Cox
Mr. James Cox
The Rev. Mr. Thomas Craner, of Blunham, Bedfordſhire
Mr. Humphry Craner, of Coventry
Mr. William Cranke
Mr. Thomas Croazdell, of Chatham
Mr. John Cully, of Worſtead, Norfolk
Mr. James Cundy

D

Mr. Peter Davenport, 2 Setts
Mr. John Davenport
Mr. William Davey, jun. of Brandford
Mr. James Davies, of Pontpool
The Rev. Mr. Henry Davis, of Northampton
The Rev. Mr. Thomas Davis, of Fairford
Mr. Thomas Davis, of Northampton
Mr. Lewis Davis
Mr. Job Davis
Mr. Matthew Davis
Mr. James Davies
The Rev. Mr. Clendon Daukes
The Rev. Mr. Robert Day
Mr. Thomas Day, of Northampton
The Rev. Mr. Moſes Deacon, of Walgrave, Northamptonſhire
Mr. Ezekiel Delight, of Norwich
Mr. Timothy Deniſon
The Rev. Mr. Samuel Dew
Mr. Thomas Dickman
Mr. Benjamin Dod, Bookſeller in London
The Rev. Mr. Robert Dorſet, of Hadnam, Bucks
Mr. Southwell Downes
Mr. William Drew, of Tetbury
Mr. Jonathan Dring
Mrs. Elizabeth Dring
Mr. Joſeph Drywood, of Chatham
Mr. Thomas Dudifield
Mr. Benjamin Dudifield
Mr. Thomas Dutton

E

Mr. Jonathan Eade
Mr. John Eaton, of Kettring, Northamptonſhire
Mr. Samuel Eaton
Mr. Eleazar Edwards, ſen. Merchant
Mr. Timothy Edwards
Mr. James Edwards, Bookſeller in Pontpool
Mr. Benjamin Edwards, Ditto, Writing-Maſter
Mr. Thomas Edwards
Mr. Charlot Elder, of Carlton-Road
Mr. John Elton
Mr. David Eſpenet, of Rye, Suſſex
The Rev. Mr. Hugh Evans, of Briſtol
The Rev. Mr. David Evans, of Hook-Norton
Mr. John Evans
Mr. William Everard
Mr. Triſtram Ewan
Mr. Chriſtopher Ewer

F

The Rev. Mr. James Fall, of Watford
Mrs. Hannah Farrall
Mr. Farrour, Bookſeller in Boſton
Mr. David Field
Mr. Roger Fiſher, of Leverpool
Mr. William Fiſher
Mr. Jabez Fiſher
Mr. James Fiſher
Mr. Henry Fitzar
Mr. Henry Fletcher, of Coventry
The Rev. Mr. Thomas Flower
Mr. Thomas Flutter
The Rev. Mr. Bernard Foſkett, of Briſtol
Mr. Anthony Foſter
The Rev. Mr. Robert Fowler, Vicar of Waltham-Abbey
Mr. Charles Fox, Apothecary
Mr. John Frampton, of Briſtol
Mrs. Joyce Francis, of Deptford
Mr. Daniel Freem, of Alderton-Grove, Glouceſterſhire
Mr. William Freeman, Cirenceſter
Mr. Joſeph Freeman, Ditto
Mr. Samuel Freeman
Mr. Joſeph Freeman
The Rev. Mr. Benjamin Fuller, of the Devizes
Mr. Benjamin Fuller, Brewer
Mr. James Fuller, of Norwich
Mr. John Fuller, of London, Bookbinder, 5 Setts

G

Mr. Leonard Gander
Mr. Gardiner, Bookſeller in London
Mrs. Mary Gardiner
Mr. Thomas Garfatt, of Weekly, Northamptonſhire
Mr. John Garratt, of Wellingborough, Ditto
Mr. Joſeph George, of Croſcombe
Mr. John German
Mr. James Gifford
Mr. John Gilham, of Smarden, Kent
Mr. Robert Gliſſon, of Yeovil, Somerſetſhire
Mr. Goadby
Mrs. Elizabeth Godſel
Mr. Thomas Gorton
Mr. William Gowing, of Beccles, Suffolk
Mr. John Gowing, of Earſham
Mr. Benjamin Gowley
Mr. William Grace
Mr. Theophilus Green
Mr. Joſeph Green, of Hull, Merchant
The Rev. Mr. George Green, of Aſhford, Kent
Mr. Joſeph Green, of Lyme, ditto
Mr Joſeph Gregory
Mr. Edward Grice, of St. Oſeth, Eſſex
Mr. Owen Griffith

Mr. John Griffith, of Pontpool
Mr. Samuel Groombridge, of Chatham
Mr. Thomas Gurney

H

Mr. William Hacket, of Kimcote, in Leiceſterſhire
The Rev. Mr. Thomas Haffenden, of Smarden, Kent, 2 Setts
Mr. Jenkin Hague, of Biddenden, Ditto
Mr. Daniel Haines, of Bromſgrove
Mrs. Elizabeth Haley
The Rev. Mr. John Halford
Mr. Francis Hall, 2 Setts
The Rev. Mr. William Hall, of Raunce, in Northamptonſhire
Mr. Samuel Hall, of Kettring, Ditto
Mr. Samuel Hall, of Hull
Mr. John Hamman
Mr. Benjamin Hamp, of Warwick
Mr. Joſhua Hancock, of Hampton, Glouceſterſhire
Mr. Daniel Hanks
Mr. James Hanks, of Malmeſbury
The Rev. Mr. Iſaac Hann, of Strickland, Dorſet
Mrs. Elizabeth Hanſon, of Henley upon Thames
Mr. Samuel Harden, of Smarden, Kent
Mr. James Hare, of Wolverſtone, Suffolk
The Rev. Mr. Miles Harries, of Pontpool
Mr. Caleb Harries
Mr. Morgan Harries
Mr. William Harris, ſen.
Mr. William Harris, jun.
Mr. Joſeph Harris
Mr. Michael Harriſon
Mr. John Hart
Mr. Benjamin Haſlewood
Mrs. Elizabeth Hathorne
Mr. John Hatterſley
Mr. Chriſtopher Havelock, of Waltham-Abby
Mr. Bernard Hawkins
Mrs. Sarah Hawkins, of Wingfield, Bedfordſhire
The Rev. Mr. John Haydon, of Horſly, Glouceſterſhire
Mr. Joſhua Hayes, of Leverpool, Writing-maſter
Mr. Thomas Hayes, of Watford
Mr. Joſeph Heaton, Attorney
The Church at Hempſtely, in the Biſhoprick of Durham
Mr. John Hews, of Eveſham, Worceſterſhire
Mr. Thomas Hickman, of Hull, Merchant
Mr. Samuel Hickman
Mr. Samuel Hide, of Chalford, Glouceſterſhire
Mr. John Hilder, of Wicken, Cambridgeſhire
Capt. Thomas Hill
Mr. Henry Hill
The Rev. Mr. William Hiller, of Malmeſbury
Mr. Joſeph Hiller
Mrs. Jane Hiller
Mrs. Mary Hinman, of Birmingham
Mr. John Hird, near Bradford, Yorkſhire
Mrs. Mary Hird, Ditto
Mr. William Hiſcox
Mr. Charles Hitch, Bookſeller in London
Mr. James Hodges, Bookſeller in London
Mr. Joſeph Holding
Mr. Thomas Honiborn
Mr. Stephen Hooker, of Smarden, Kent
Mr. Moſes Hooper
Mr. Edward Horne, of Eveſham, Worceſterſh.
Mr. Daniel Howard, of Portſmouth
Mr. John Hubbard, of Blunham, Bedfordſhire
Mr. Joſeph Hudſon, of Upton, Worceſterſhire
Alexander Hume, Eſq; Member of Parliament for the Borough of Southwark
Mr. Robert Humphries, of Upton, Worceſterſhire
Mr. William Humphry, of Cheſham, Bucks
Mr. Benjamin Hunt, of Norwich
Capt. Samuel Hunter, of Leverpool
Mr. John Hurſt, Attorney
Mr. John Hutton
Mr. John Hyde, 3 Setts

I

The Rev. Mr. Alvarey Jackſon, of Barnoldſwick, Yorkſhire
Mrs. Mary Jarrett
Mr. John Ibrooke, of Leoſtoff
Mr. Benjamin Jeckel, of Langley
Mr. Abraham Jeneſter
Mr. Evan Jenkins
Mr. John Jepſon, of Sheffield
Mr. Robert Inger
The Rev. Mr. Richard Inſtance, of Abingdon, Eſſex
Mr. Abraham Johns
The Rev. Mr. John Johnſon, of Leverpool
Mr. John Johnſon, of Kingſthorp, Northamptonſhire
Mr. William Johnſon, of Freſhingfield
The Rev. Mr. Jones, of Exon
Mr. David Jones
Mr. Joſhua Jones, of Pontpool
Mr. Griffith Jones
Mrs. Elizabeth Jones
Mr. Thomas Jones
Mr. Weldon Jones
Mr. Samuel Jones
Mr. Robert Jorden, of Culm-ſtock
The Rev. Mr. Iron, of Stony-Stratford
Mr. Joſeph Jubber, of Portſmouth

K

Mr. Wood Kentiſh
Mr. Thomas Kenward
Mrs. Anna Kenyon, near Bradford, Yorkſhire
The Rev. Mr. James Kettleby, of Bewdley
Mr. John Kimpton
The Rev. Mr. William King
Mr. Joſeph Kitchin, 2 Setts
Meſſieurs John and Paul Knapton, Bookſellers in London
Mr. James Knott, of Sandy, Bedfordſhire
Mr. Thomas Knott, of Foulkſtone

L

The Rev. Mr. John Lacey, of Portſmouth
Mr. Abraham Lacey
Mr. William Lambert
Mr. James Lambert, near Bradford, Yorkſhire
Mr. James Langton
Mr. John Lateward
Mr. Jonas Lawrence
Mr. Bayley Lawrence
Mr. John Leach, of Rumſey
Mr. William Leppard
Mr. Joſhua Lewelin
Mr. John Liveſley, of Leverpool
Mr. Richard Livett, of Willington, Bedfordſhire
Mr. Caleb Lodge

The Rev. Mr. James Lomax, of Collingham, Lincolnſhire
Meſſieurs Longman and Shewel, Bookſellers in London
Mr. Joſeph Lowther
Mr. John Luckcock, of Kimbolton, Huntingtonſh.
Mr. Edward Ludlow
Mr. Benjamin Lyon
Mr. Ambroſe Lyon
Mr. Joſhua Lyons

M

Mr. Richard Manning, of Collumſtock, Devon
Mr. John Manypenny
Mr. John March
Mr. John Marſhal, for the Church at Chatham
Mr. John Marſhal, near Bradford, Yorkſhire
Mr. Jeremiah Marſhal, ditto
Mr. Joſiah Marſhal, ditto
Mr. Abraham Marſhal, ditto
Mr. William Marſhal, ditto
The Rev. Mr. Samuel Marſom, of Luton, Bedfordſhire
Mr. Jeremiah Maſcol
Mr. Benjamin Maſſen, of Coventry
Mr. Joſeph Maſon, near Briſtol
Mr. Nathaniel Maſon
Mr. Thomas Maſters, of Rye, Suſſex
Mr. John Matthews
Mr. James Matthews
The Rev. Mr. John Mercer, of Newport, in the Iſle of Wight
Mr. Benjamin Mercer, of Stone, Kent
Mrs. Mercer, of Maidſtone, ditto
Capt. John Metcalf, of Stockton, Durham
Mr. Samuel Metcalf, near Cockermouth, Cumberland
Mr. John Millard, of Havant
The Rev. Mr. John Mitchel, of Bridlington
Mr. David Mitchel, near Bradford, Yorkſhire
Mr. John Moon, of Eaton Socon, Bedfordſhire
Mr. Atkins Moor
Mr. Philip Morgan
Mr. Stephen Morgan
Mr. Samuel Morin, of Stratford
The Rev. Mr. James Morley, of Nottingham
Mrs. Mary Morris
Mr. Samuel Morris, of Worceſter
Mr. Peleg Morris
Mr. Thomas Moſs
Mr. Robert Mun, of Watford, 2 Setts
Mr. Edward Munday
Mr. Roger Munſey, of Colcheſter

N

The Rev. Mr. John Needham William Nelſon, Gent.
Mr. Thomas Nevil, of Abington, Eſſex
Mr. Samuel Newham, of Nottingham
The Church at Newport, in the Iſle of Wight
Mr. Charles Norris

O

The Right Honourable Arthur Onſlow, Eſq; Speaker of the Honourable Houſe of Commons
Mr. William Odell
Mr. John Oſborn, Bookſeller, in London
Mr. John Oſwald, ditto
Mr. Nathanael Overbury, of Tetbury, 2 Setts
Mr. John Overbury of Aulceſter, in Warwickſhire, 2 Setts
The Rev. Mr. Walter Overſtow, of Oundle, in Northamptonſhire
Mr. Nicholas Overton
The Rev. Mr. John Oulton, of Lempſter
Mr. James Owen

P

Mr. Thomas Paine, of Witterſham, Kent
Mr. John Painter
The Rev. Mr. Joſeph Palmer, of Bilderſtone, Suffolk
The Rev. Mr. Thomas Palmer, of Hull
Mr. John Palmer, of Olney, Bucks
Mr. William Parker, of Beccles
Mr. Robert Parſons
Mr. Jacob Pattiſon, of Witham, Eſſex
Mr. Richard Peacock, of Dedham, ditto, 2 Setts
Mr. Joſeph Pearce
Mr. Joſeph Pell, of Chatham
Mr. Samuel Perryman
Mr. William Perryman, of Briſtol
Mr. Benjamin Pewtreſs, 2 Setts
Mr. Peyto, of Ryegate, Attorney
Mr. William Philips
Mr. Richard Philips
Mr. Samuel Pickering, of Waltham-Abbey
The Rev. Mr. William Plummer, of Griddleton, in Wilts, 2 Setts
Mr. Henry Pluritt, near Bradford, Yorkſhire
Mr. Thomas Pope, of Cheltenham, Glouceſt.
Mr. Powis, of Greenwich
Mr. Joſeph Pratt, of King's Langley
Mr. John Price
Mr. William Price
Mr. Benjamin Price
Mrs. Elizabeth Prior
Mr. Robert Prudom, of Exon
Mr. Henry Pulley

R

Mr. Francis Randal
Mr. John Ravens, of Blunham, Bedfordſhire
Mr. Charles Ray, of Bedford
Mrs. ——— Reeſe
Mr. John Reeve, of Cheſham, Bucks
Henry Rhomſey, Gent.
Mr. Thomas Ribright
Mr. Richard Rice
Mr. William Richards
Mr. William Richards, of Pulham, Norfolk
Mr. Richard Richards
Mr. William Richardſon
The Rev. Mr. Edward Ridgway
Mr. James Roberts
Mr. William Robinſon
Mr. John Robinſon, Bookſeller, in Southwark
Mr. Joſeph Robinſon, of Oulton, near Carliſle
Mr. Stephen Rochel
Mr. Robert Rogers
Mr. Charles Rogers, of Pontpool, ſen.
Mr. Charles Rogers, ditto, jun.
Mr. Samuel Rogerſon
Mr. Daniel Rolfe
Mr. Samuel Rootſey, of Colcheſter
Mr. Anthony Roper, of Bengworth, Worceſterſh.
Mr. John Rothery
Mr. Jonathan Roughley
Mr. William Rueven, of Chatham

Mr. Thomas Ruſſell, of Tenterden, in Kent
Mr. John Ruſſell
The Rev. Mr. Ralph Ruſton, of Broughton, near Cockermouth, in Cumberland

S

Mr. William Sadler, of Birmingham
Mr. Joſeph Sage, of Wolverſtone, Suffolk
Mr. Joſeph Salway, of Deptford
Mr. John Samſon
The Rev. Mr. Samuel Sanderſon, of Bedford
Mr. Edward Sawyer, of Staplehurſt, in Kent
Mr. Thomas Scofield
Mr. Henry Scofield
Mr. William Scott
Mr. John Scott
Mr. Thomas Scott
Mr. John Scott, of Norwich
Mrs. Martha Seacome, of Leverpool
The Rev. Mr. John Sedgefield, of Tottlebank, Lancaſhire, 2 Setts
Benjamin Seward, of Eveſham, Eſq;
Mr. Peter Sharp
Mr. Henry Sharp
Mr. Thomas Shelborn
Mr. William Shephard, of Mendham
Mr. John Short, of Worſtead, Norfolk
Mr. William Shrigley, of Fulbourne, Cambridgeſhire
Mr. Martin Silverſide
The Rev. Mr. Edward Simmons, of Beccles
The Rev. Mr. George Simſon, of Cambridge
Mr. Jeremiah Siſon, of Chatham
Mr. John Sitch, of Perſhore, Worceſterſhire
Mr. John Skipworth
The Rev. Mr. Hugh Smith, of St. Albans
Mr. Thomas Smith, of Canterbury
Mr. William Smith, of Hempſtead
Mr. John Smith, 2 Setts
Mr. James Smith
Mr. John Sparkes, near Rickmanſworth, Hertfordſhire
Mr. Thomas Sparry, near Upton, Worceſterſh.
Mr. John Sperry, of Blunham
Mr. Richard Spooner
Mr. Iſaac Spurrier
Mr. Jonathan Spurrier
Mr. Samuel Spyvee, of Hull
Mr. George Stace, of Sandhurſt, in Kent
Mr. Edward Standen, ditto
Mr. William Stanley, of Pool
Mrs. Mary Stark, of Norwich
The Rev. Mr. John Stearne, ditto
The Rev. Mr. Joſeph Stennett, ſen.
The Rev. Mr. Joſeph Stennett, jun. of Coate, in Oxfordſhire
Mr. James Steventon
Mr. John Steventon, of Cambridge
Mr. Stiff, of Daventry
Mr. Samuel Stinton
Mr. John Stock, Apothecary
Mr. Samuel Stockel
Mrs. Abigail Stockwell
Mr. Thomas Stratton
Mr. James Streater, of Waltham-Abbey
Mr. Samuel Strickland
Mr. John Sutherland
Mr. Edward Sutton, of Beeſtone, Bedfordſhire
Mr. David Swaine, of Rye, Suſſex
Mr. William Swannel, of Watford
Mr. Nathanael Sykes, near Bradford, Yorkſhire

T

Mr. John Tady, Apothecary
Mr. Nicholas Tanner, of Rocheſter
Mr. Edmund Taylor
The Rev. Mr. Henry Terry, of Tiverton
The Rev. Mr. Richard Thomas, of Stone Slack, near Hallifax
Mr. Evan Thomas
Mr. Timothy Thomas
Mr. Griffith Thomas
The Rev. Mr. Joſiah Thompſon
Mr. Samuel Thompſon, of Waltham-Abbey
The Rev. Mr. Richard Tipping, of Wooton Underidge
Mr. Edward Tomkins
Mr. Benjamin Tomkins
Mr. Richard Tomkins
Mr. William Tonge, Maſter of a Boarding-School at Enfield
The Rev. Mr. Edmund Townſend
The Rev. Mr. Edward Trivet, of Worſtead, Norfolk
Richard Tunnard, of Frampton, in Lincolnſhire, Eſq;
Robert Turner, Eſq;
The Rev. Mr. Daniel Turner, of Reading
Mr. James Tyrrel, 2 Setts

V

The Rev. Mr. Benjamin Vaughan, of Cheſham, Bucks
Mr. Henry Venner
Mr. William Vernon
Mr. William Unſworth
Mr. William Unwin
The Rev. Mr. John Voyſey, of Lymington
Mr. William Upfold
Mr. Joſeph Uſher, of Blunham, Bedfordſhire

W

The Rev. Mr. Roger Walker
Mr. Richard Walldron, of Worceſter
The Rev. Mr. Benjamin Wallin
Mr. William Wallis, of Kettring, Northamptonſhire
Mr. Joſeph Wallis, ditto
Mr. John Walter, of Rye, in Suſſex
Mr. Thomas Wanſtal, of Aſhford, in Kent
Mr. Robert Ward
Mr. Jonathan Warne
Mr. George Warren
Mr. John Waterhouſe, of Perſhore, Worceſterſhire
Mr. Henry Watkins
Thomas Watſon, Eſq; 10 Setts
Mr. William Watts, of Norwich
Mr. William Wayte, of Malmeſbury
Mr. John Waymouth, of Exon
Mr. Thomas Weaver
Mr. Philip Welch
Mr. Richard Weſt, of Wiſbeach
Mr. John Weſt, of All Saints
Mr. Thomas Weſton
Mr. Thomas Whaley, of Braſſey-Green, Cheſhire
Mr. John Wheeler
Mr. Jeffery Whitaker, School-maſter at Bratton
Mr. Richard White
Mr. Samuel White, of Portſmouth
Mr. Caleb Whitehorn, ditto

The Rev. Mr. Daniel Whitewood, of Portſmouth
Capt. Edward Whitewood
Mr. William Whitford, of Eveſham, Worceſterſhire
Mr. Samuel Whitford
Mr. James Whittmee, of Peterborough
Mr. Barnaby Wilcox
Mrs. Anna Wilcox
Mr. William Wildman
Mr. Thomas Wildman
Mr. John Wilford, Orange-merchant
Mr. Samuel Wilford, ditto
Mrs. Wilkin, of Soham, Cambridgeſhire
Mr. John Wilkinſon
Mr. Nicholas Williams
Mr. Stephen Williams
Mr. John Williams
Mrs. —— Williams
The Rev. Mr. Samuel Wilſon
Mr. Samuel Wilſon, of Deptford
Mr. William Wilſon, near Bradford, Yorkſhire
Mr. William Winch, of St. Albans
Capt. Samuel Wood
Mr. Seymore Wood
The Rev. Mr. Thomas Woodman, of Warwick
Mrs. Mary Wodnett
Mr. Richard Woodward
Mr. Daniel Wright, of Beccles

Y

Mr. George Yearnold, of Bromſgrove, in Worceſterſhire
Mr. Potter Yearnold, ditto
Mr. Thomas Yeoman, of Northampton

* * *

AN # EXPOSITION
OF THE
New Teſtament.

---

The Goſpel according to St. MATTHEW.

THE ſubject of this book, and indeed of all the writings of the New Teſtament, is The Goſpel. The Greek word Ευαγγελιον ſignifies a joyful meſſage, good news, glad tidings of good things; ſuch as Chriſt was anointed to preach, the Angels brought to the ſhepherds, and the Evangeliſts, Apoſtles, and Miniſters of Chriſt publiſhed to the world. Iſa. lxi. 1. and lii. 7. Luke ii. 10. And ſuch is the account given by this inſpired writer, of the incarnation, life, actions, miniſtry, miracles, ſufferings and death of Jeſus Chriſt; whereby peace and reconciliation, pardon and righteouſneſs, atonement and redemption, life and ſalvation are obtained for loſt, periſhing ſinners. The Jews, to whom the meſſage of grace was firſt ſent, and among whom the Goſpel was firſt preached, having deſpiſed and rejected it; they and their poſterity, in alluſion to the word Evangelion, moſt wickedly and blaſphemouſly call the whole New Teſtament, און גליון or עון גליון Aven Gilion [a], a revelation or volume of iniquity and vanity; but bleſſed are the people that know the joyful ſound, Pſal. lxxxix. 15.

The writer of this Goſpel, Matthew, who alſo was called Levi in Luke v. 27. was by occupation a publican, or tax-gatherer, and was in his employ when Chriſt called him by his grace. He was one of the twelve Apoſtles ſent forth by Chriſt to preach the Goſpel of the kingdom, Matth. x. 3. and was honoured to be the firſt of the writers of the New Teſtament, and to be the firſt publiſher therein of the good news of the incarnate Saviour; and was a wonderful inſtance of the rich and ſovereign grace of God. Though he was employed in collecting the Roman tax, yet he was of Jewiſh extract; as appears from his being called the ſon of Alpheus, Mark ii. 14. and from his name Matthew Levi; for as the latter, ſo the former is an Hebrew name. The Jews ſay [b] one of the diſciples of Jeſus was called מתאי, Matthai or Matthew: his name ſignifies a gift or given; he was one of thoſe the Father had given to Chriſt, and was kept by him, when the ſon of perdition was loſt, John xvii. 6, 9, 11, 12.

It may not be improper to enquire in what language this Goſpel was written. The ancient Chriſtian writers were generally of opinion, that Matthew wrote it in Hebrew; Papias and [c] Pantænus were of this mind, as alſo Irenæus [d], Origen [e], Euſebius [f], Athanaſius [g], Epiphanius [h], and Jerom [i]; and it is aſſerted in the titles of the Arabic and Perſic verſions, and at the end of the Syriac verſion of this Goſpel, that it was written in that language; and this opinion is eſpouſed by Grotius and Hammond, though juſtly exploded by others; for what has been publiſhed by Munſter, Mercer, Hutter and Robertſon, are tranſlations, made by themſelves or others, and of no antiquity: and ſince Hebrew and Syriac words are interpreted in this Goſpel, ſee chap. i. 23. and xxvii. 33, 46. which would not have been done, had it been written in either language; and ſince Matthew generally follows the Septuagint verſion in the paſſages cited by him out of the Old Teſtament; and ſince the Hebrew language was not generally known at that time to the common people, only to the learned; for the law and the prophets, when read in the ſynagogues in that language, required an interpreter; and ſince the Greek tongue was the language more commonly ſpoken, and the reſt of the Evangeliſts wrote in Greek, and the Goſpel was deſigned for the Gentiles as well as the Jews; it is moſt reaſonable to conclude that this Goſpel alſo was wrote in Greek; whereby that ancient prophecy was fulfilled, at leaſt in part, God ſhall enlarge or perſuade Japheth, and he ſhall dwell in the tents of Shem, Gen. ix. 27. the Goſpel being publiſhed in the language of Japheth, the Greek language, which the Jews, the poſterity of Shem, now underſtood; agreeable to which the Talmudic writers interpret the prophecy; ſays [k] Bar Kaphra, mentioning the above words, “They ſhall ſpeak בלשונו של יפת in the language of Japheth, in the tents of Shem;” or, “the words of the law ſhall be ſpoken in the language of Japheth, in the midſt of the tents of Shem [l].” R. Jochanan [m] explains them thus: “דבריו של יפת the words of Japheth ſhall be in the tents of Shem; and ſays R. Chiya ben Aba, the ſenſe of it is, The beauty of Japheth ſhall be in the tents of Shem.” Which the gloſs interprets thus: “The beauty of Japheth is the language of Javan, or the Greek language, which language is more beautiful than that of any other of the ſons of Japheth.” The time when this Goſpel was written is ſaid [n] by ſome to be in the eighth or ninth, by others, in the fifteenth year after the aſcenſion of Chriſt, when the Evangeliſt had received the extraordinary gifts of the ſpirit, among which was the gift of tongues; and when the promiſe of Chriſt had been made good to him, John xiv. 26.

---

[a] T. Bab Sabbat. fol. 116. 1. Vet. Nizzachon. p. 15, 39, 87, 94, 137, 186. Ed. Wagenſeil.

[b] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 43. 1.

[c] Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccl. l. 3. c. 39. p. 113. Vid. ib. l. 5. c. 8. p. 172. c. 10. p. 175. & l. 6. c. 25. p. 226.

[d] Adv. Hæreſ. l. 3. c. 1.

[e] In Matt. Tom. 1. p. 203. Ed. Huet.

[f] Eccl. Hiſt. l. 3. cap. 24. p. 95.

[g] Synopſ. ſacr. Script. p. 154. Vol. 2.

[h] Contra Hæreſ. l. 1. Hær. 29 & 30.

[i] Catalog. Script. Eccleſ. fol. 90. Tom. 1. ad Hedib. fol. 46. Tom. 3.

CHAP. I.

Ver. 1. THE book of the generation of Jeſus Chriſt, &c.] This is the genuine title of the book, which was put to it by the Evangeliſt himſelf; for the former ſeems to be done by another hand. This book is an account, not of the divine, but human generation of Chriſt; and not merely of his birth, which lies in a very little compaſs; nor of his genealogy, which is contained in this chapter; but alſo of his whole life and actions, of what was ſaid, done, and ſuffer'd by him. It is an Hebrew way of ſpeaking, much like that in Gen. v. 1. and which the Septuagint render by the ſame phraſe as here; and as that was the book of the generation of the firſt Adam, this is the book of the generation of the ſecond Adam. The Jews call their blaſphemous hiſtory of the life of Jeſus, ספר תולדות ישו, The book of the generations of Jeſus [o].

This account of Chriſt begins with the name of the Meſſiah, well known to the Jews, the ſon of David; not only to the Scribes and Phariſees, the more learned part of the nation, but to the common people, even to perſons of the meaneſt rank and figure among them. See Matt. ix. 27. and xii. 23. and xxii. 42. Nothing is more common in the Jewiſh writings, than for בן דוד the ſon of David to ſtand alone for the Meſſiah; it would be endleſs to cite or refer to all the teſtimonies of this kind; only take the following [p], “R. Jochanan ſays, in the generation in which בן דוד the ſon of David comes, the diſciples of the wiſe-men ſhall be leſſened, and the reſt, their eyes ſhall fail with grief and ſorrow, and many calamities and ſevere decrees ſhall be renewed; when the firſt viſitation is gone, a ſecond will haſten to come. It is a tradition of the Rabbins (about) the week (of years) in which בן דוד the ſon of David comes, that in the firſt year this ſcripture will be fulfilled, Amos iv. 5. I will rain upon one city, &c. in the ſecond, arrows of famine will be ſent forth; in the third there will be a great famine, and men, women and children, holy men and men of buſineſs will die, and the law will be forgotten by thoſe who learn it; in the fourth there will be plenty and not plenty; in the fifth there will be great plenty, and they ſhall eat and drink and rejoice, and the law ſhall return to them that learn it; in the ſixth there will be voices (or thunders;) in the ſeventh there will be wars; and in the going out of the ſeventh בן דוד the ſon of David comes. The tradition of R. Judah ſays, In the generation in which בן דוד the ſon of David comes, the houſe of the congregation (the ſchool or ſynagogue) ſhall become a brothel-houſe, Galilee ſhall be deſtroyed, and Gabalene ſhall become deſolate; and the men of Gabul (or the border) ſhall go about from city to city, and ſhall find no mercy; and the wiſdom of the ſcribes ſhall ſtink; and they that are afraid to ſin ſhall be deſpiſed; and the face of that generation ſhall be as the face of a dog, and truth ſhall fail, as it is ſaid, Iſa. lix. 15.—The tradition of R. Neborai ſays, In the generation in which בן דוד the ſon of David comes, young men ſhall make aſhamed the faces of old men, and old men ſhall ſtand before young men, the daughter ſhall riſe up againſt her mother, and the daughter-in-law againſt her mother-in-law; nor will a ſon reverence his father. The tradition of R. Nehemiah ſays, In the generation in which בן דוד the ſon of David comes, impudence will increaſe, and the honourable will deal wickedly, and the whole kingdom will return to the opinion of the Sadducees, and there will be no reproof.——'Tis a tradition of the Rabbins, that בן דוד the ſon of David will not come, until traiterous practices are increaſed, or the diſciples are leſſened, or until the ſmalleſt piece of money fails from the purſe, or until redemption is deſpaired of.” In which paſſage, beſides the proof for which it is cited, may be obſerved, how exactly the deſcription of the age of the Meſſiah, as given by the Jews themſelves, agrees with the generation in which Jeſus the true Meſſiah came; who as he was promiſed to David, and it was expected he ſhould deſcend from him, ſo he did according to the fleſh; God raiſed him up of his ſeed, Rom. i. 3. Acts xiii. 23. it follows, The ſon of Abraham. Abraham was the firſt to whom a particular promiſe was made, that the Meſſiah ſhould ſpring from, Gen. xxii. 18. The firſt promiſe in Gen. iii. 15. only ſignified that he ſhould be the ſeed of the woman; and it would have been ſufficient for the fulfilment of it, if he had been born of any woman, in whatſoever nation, tribe, or family; but by the promiſe made to Abraham he was to deſcend from him, as Jeſus did; who took upon him the ſeed of Abraham, Heb. ii. 16. or aſſumed an human nature which ſprung from him, and is therefore truly the ſon of Abraham. The reaſon why Chriſt is firſt called the ſon of David, and then the ſon of Abraham, is partly becauſe the former was a more known name of the Meſſiah; and partly that the tranſition to the genealogy of Chriſt might be more eaſy and natural, beginning with Abraham, whom the Jews call [q] ראש היחס the head of the genealogy, and the root and foundation of it, as Matthew here makes him to be; wherefore a Jew can't be diſpleaſed with the Evangeliſt for beginning the genealogy of our Lord at Abraham.

---

[k] T. Hieroſ. Megilla, fol. 71. 2.

[l] Bereſhit. Rabba, §. 36. fol. 32. 1.

[m] T. Bab. Megilla, fol. 9. 2.

[n] Vid. Fabricii Biblioth. Græc. l. 4. c. 5. §. 2. p. 127. & Valeſ. not. in Euſeb. Eccl. Hiſt. p. 52.

[o] Apud Wagenſeil. Tela Ignea.

[p] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 97. 1. Shir Haſhirim Rabba, fol. 11. 4.

Ver. 2. Abraham begat Iſaac, &c.] The deſcent of Chriſt from Abraham is in the line of Iſaac; Abraham begat Iſhmael before Iſaac, and others after him, but they are not mentioned; becauſe the Meſſiah was not to ſpring from any of them, but from Iſaac, of whom it is ſaid, in Iſaac ſhall thy ſeed be called, Gen. xxi. 12. and who, as he was a progenitor, ſo an eminent type of Chriſt; being Abraham's only beloved ſon; and particularly in the binding, ſacrifice and deliverance of him. Iſaac begat Jacob. The genealogy of Chriſt proceeds from Iſaac, in the line of Jacob. Iſaac begat Eſau as well as Jacob, and they two were twins, but one was loved, and the other hated; wherefore no mention is made of Eſau, he had no concern in the Meſſiah, nor was he to ſpring from him, but from Jacob, or Iſrael, by whoſe name he is ſometimes called, Iſ. xlix. 3. Jacob begat Judas and his brethren. The lineage of Chriſt is carried on from Jacob in the line of Judah; the reaſon of which is, becauſe it was particularly propheſied that the Meſſiah, Shiloh, the prince and chief ruler, ſhould be of him, Gen. xlix. 10. 1 Chron. v. 2. And it is evident beyond all contradiction, that our Lord ſprung from his tribe, Heb. vii. 14. The reaſon why the brethren of Judah, who were eleven in number, are mentioned, when the brethren of Iſaac and Jacob are not, is, becauſe tho' the Meſſiah did not ſpring from them, yet the promiſe of him was made to the twelve tribes, who all expected him, and to whom he was ſent, and came. Theſe made but one body of men, and therefore, though the Meſſiah came from the tribe of Judah, yet he is ſaid to be of them all, Rom. ix. 4, 5.

Ver. 3. And Judas begat Phares and Zara of Thamar, &c.] The genealogical account of Chriſt goes on from Judah in the line of Phares, with whom Zara is mentioned; not becauſe they were twins, for ſo were Jacob and Eſau, and yet the latter is taken no notice of; but it may be becauſe of what happened at their birth, ſee Gen. xxxviii. 28, 29, 30. But the line of the Meſſiah was in Phares, and very rightly is he put in the genealogy of Chriſt, the Jews themſelves being witneſſes; who expreſsly ſay, that "the Meſſiah comes from him." Theſe two are ſaid to be begotten of Thamar, daughter-in-law to Judah; who, though ſhe was a Canaanitiſh woman, has the honour to be named in the genealogy of Chriſt, who came to ſave Gentiles as well as Jews: nor can the Jews reproach our Evangeliſt for putting her into the account; ſince they themſelves frequently acknowledge that the Meſſiah was to ſpring from her: they ſay, [r] "there "are two women from whom come David the king, "and Solomon, and the king Meſſiah; and theſe "two are Thamar and Ruth." Jonathan Ben Uzziel on Gen. xxxviii. 6. ſays, that Thamar was the daughter of Shem the great. And Phares begat Eſrom; called Hezron, Ruth iv. 18. where the ſame phraſe is uſed as here. He had another ſon called Hamul, 1 Chron. ii. 5. but the account proceeds from Phares, in the line of Eſrom. And Eſrom begat Aram; called Ram in Ruth iv. 18. where the ſame way of ſpeaking is uſed as here. Eſrom alſo beſides him begat Jerahmeel, Chelubai, or Caleb, and Segub, 1 Chron. ii. 9, 21. but theſe are not in the line. Elihu, who converſed with Job, is ſaid to be of the kindred of Ram, Job xxxii. 2. whether the ſame with Ram or Aram, may be enquired.

Ver. 4. And Aram begat Aminadab, &c.] Which, with what follows in this verſe, exactly agrees with the genealogical account in Ruth iv. 19, 20.

Ver. 5. And Salmon begat Booz of Rachab, &c.] That Salmon begat Booz, is affirmed in Ruth iv. 21. but it is not there ſaid, nor any where elſe in the Old Teſtament, as here, that he begat him of Rahab, that is, of Rahab the harlot. This the Evangeliſt had from tradition, or from the Jewiſh records. That the Meſſiah was to ſpring from Boaz is aſſerted by the Jewiſh writers [s]; and they alſo own that Rahab was married to a prince in Iſrael, which ſome ſay [t] was Joſhua: they pretend that ſhe was ten years of age when the Iſraelites came out of Egypt; that ſhe played the harlot all the forty years they were in the wilderneſs, and was married to Joſhua upon the deſtruction of Jericho. To excuſe this marriage with a Canaanitiſh woman, they tell us, ſhe was not of the ſeven nations with whom marriage was forbid; and moreover, that ſhe became a proſelyte when the ſpies were received by her: they own that ſome very great perſons of their nation ſprung from her, as Jeremiah, Maaſeiah, Hanameel, Shallum, Baruch, Ezekiel, Neriah, Seraiah, and Huldah the propheteſs. The truth of the matter is, ſhe became the wife of Salmon, or Salma, as he is called, 1 Chron. ii. 11. And in the Targum on Ruth iv. 20. is ſaid to be of Bethlehem; he was the ſon of Nahſhon or Naaſſon, a famous prince in Judah, and the head and captain of the tribe, Numb. i. 7. and ii. 3. and vii. 12, 17. and x. 14. And from Rahab ſprung the Meſſiah, another inſtance of a Gentile in the genealogy of Chriſt; and a third follows. And Booz begat Obed of Ruth; who was a Moabiteſs. It is a notion that generally obtains among the Jews [u], that ſhe was the daughter of Eglon, grandſon of Balak, king of Moab; and it is often taken notice of by them [w], that the king Meſſiah ſhould deſcend from her; and alſo other perſons of note, as David, Hezekiah, Joſiah, Hananiah, Miſhael, Azariah, and Daniel; wherefore the mentioning of her in this genealogy, can't be ſaid by them to be impertinent. And Obed begat Jeſſe. Jeſſe is thought to be, not the immediate ſon of Obed, but to be of the fourth generation from him; though no others are mentioned between them in Ruth, any more than here. A Jewiſh writer obſerves [x], that "the wiſe men of the Gentiles ſay, "that there were other generations between them; "perhaps, ſays he, they have taken this from the "wiſe men of Iſrael, and ſo it is thought." Now notwithſtanding this, Jeſſe may be ſaid to be begotten by Obed, as Hezekiah's poſterity, who were carried captive into Babylon, are ſaid to be begotten by him, Iſ. xxxix. 7. though they were a remove of ſeveral generations from him. However, Jeſſe is rightly put among the progenitors of Chriſt, ſince the Meſſiah was to be a rod of his ſtem, and the branch of his roots, and is called the root of Jeſſe, Iſ. xi. 1, 10. which words are interpreted of the Meſſiah by many of the Jewiſh writers[y]; and to this day the Jews pray for him in their ſynagogues under the name of בן ישי, the ſon of Jeſſe[z].

---

[q] Juchaſin, fol. 8. 1, Tzeror-Hammor, fol. 29. 3. and 154. 4. [r] Shemot Rabba, §. 30. fol. 131. 4. Caphtor, fol. 122. 1. [s] Zohar. in Gen. fol. 105. 4. Gloſſ. in T. Bab. Maccot. fol. 23. 2. Tzeror Hammor, fol. 49. 2. Zohar in Gen. fol. 63. 3. [t] T. Bab. Megilla, fol. 14. 2. Juchaſin, fol. 10. 1. Shalſhelet Hakabala, fol. 7. 2. Abarb. Kimchi & Laniado in Joſh. 6. 25. & Moſes Kotſenſis Mitzvot Torah. pr. neg. 112. [u] Targ. in Ruth i. 4. T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 105. 2. Horayot, fol. 10. 2. Nazir. fol. 23. 2. Sota, fol. 47. 1. Zohar in Deut. fol. 109. 2. Shalſhelet Hakabala, fol. 8. 1. [w] Targ. in Ruth iii. 15. T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol 93. 7. Midraſh Ruth, fol 34. 4. Zohar in Gen. fol. 72. 1. Tzeror Hammor, fol. 20. 4. & 123. 4. & 132. 4. [x] Juchaſin, fol. 10. 2.

Ver. 6. And Jeſſe begat David the king, &c.] The deſcent of the Meſſiah runs in the line of David, the youngeſt of Jeſſe's ſons, who was deſpiſed by his brethren, and over-looked and neglected by his father; but God choſe him, and anointed him to be king, and ſet him on the throne of Iſrael; hence he is called David the king; as alſo becauſe he was the firſt king that was of the tribe of Judah, and in the genealogy of Chriſt, and was an eminent type of the king Meſſiah, who is ſometimes called by the ſame name, Ezek. xxxiv. 24. and xxxvii. 24, 25. Hoſ. iii. 5. and who was to be his ſon, as Jeſus is, and alſo right heir to his throne and kingdom. And David the king begat Solomon of her that had been the wife of Urias; which was Bathſhebah, though not named; either becauſe ſhe was well known, or becauſe of the ſin ſhe had been guilty of, which would eaſily be revived by mentioning her name: our tranſlators have rightly ſupplied, that had been, and not as the Vulgate Latin, which ſupplies it, that was the wife of Urias; for Solomon was begotten of her, not while ſhe was the wife of Uriah, but when ſhe was the wife of David.

Ver. 7. And Solomon begat Roboam, &c.] Called Rehoboam, 1 Kings xi. 43. of Naamah an Ammoniteſs, 1 Kings xiv. 21, 31. And Roboam begat Abia, ſometimes called Abijam, 1 Kings xiv. 31. ſometimes Abijah, 2 Chron. xii. 16. and ſometimes, as here, Abia, 1 Chron. iii. 10. Him Rehoboam begat of Maachah, the daughter of Abiſhalom, 1 Kings xv. 2. called Michaiah, the daughter of Uriel, 2 Chron. xiii. 2. Maachah and Michaiah being the ſame name; or elſe ſhe went by two names, as her father did. And Abia begat Aſa, who was a good king; his mother's name is the ſame with the name of his father's mother; and perhaps it is not his proper mother, but his grandmother who is meant in 1 Kings xv. 10. He is wrongly called Aſaph in the Perſic and Ethiopic verſions, and in one copy.

Ver. 8. And Aſa begat Joſaphat, &c.] Called Jehoſhaphat, 1 Kings xv. 24. whom Aſa begat of Azubah, the daughter of Shilhi, 1 Kings xxii. 42. He alſo was a very good prince. And Joſaphat begat Joram; called Jehoram, 1 Kings xxii. 50. to whom his father gave the kingdom, becauſe he was the firſt-born, 2 Chron. xxi. 3. And Joram begat Ozias; called Uzziah, 2 Chron. xxvi. 1. and Azariah, 2 Kings xv. 1. He was not the immediate ſon of Joram; there were three kings between them, Ahaziah, Joaſh, and Amaziah, which are here omitted; either becauſe of the curſe denounced on Ahab's family, into which Joram married, whoſe idolatry was puniſhed to the third or four generation; or becauſe theſe were princes of no good character; or becauſe their names were not in the Jewiſh regiſters. Nor does this omiſſion at all affect the deſign of the Evangeliſt, which is to ſhew that Jeſus, the true Meſſiah, is of the houſe of David; nor ought the Jews to complain of it, as they do[a]; ſince ſuch omiſſions are to be met with in the Old Teſtament, particularly in Ezra vii. 2. where ſix generations are omitted at once; and which is taken notice of by one of their own genealogical writers, whoſe words are theſe[b]; "we ſee in the genealogy of Ezra that he hath ſkipped over ſeven generations (perhaps it ſhould be ו ſix and not ז ſeven, ſince ſix are only omitted) from Ahitub to Ahitub." Nor is it any objection that Joram is ſaid to beget Ozias, which he may be ſaid to do in the like ſenſe, as has been before obſerved of Hezekiah, Iſ. xxxix. 7.

Ver. 9. And Ozias begat Joatham, &c.] Called Jotham, 2 Kings xv. 7. him Ozias begat of Jeruſhah, the daughter of Zadok, 2 Kings xv. 33. And Joatham begat Achaz, or Ahaz, 2 Kings xv. 38. to him the ſign was given, and the famous prophecy of the Meſſiah, Iſ. vii. 14. And Achaz begat Ezekias, or Hezekiah, 2 Kings xvi. 20. him Ahaz begat of Abi, the daughter of Zachariah, 2 Kings xviii. 2. He was a very religious king, and had that ſingular favour from God to have fifteen years added to his days, Iſ. xxxviii. 5.

Ver. 10. And Ezekias begat Manaſſes, &c.] Or Manaſſeh, 2 Kings xx. 21. him Hezekiah begat of Hephzibah, 2 Kings xxi. 1. He was very remarkable both for his ſins, and for his humiliation on account of them. And Manaſſes begat Amon, of Meſhullameth, the daughter of Haruz of Jotbah, 2 Kings xxi. 19. He was a very wicked prince. And Amon begat Joſias, or Joſiah of Jedidah, the daughter of Adaiah of Boſcath, 2 Kings xxii. 1. He was a very pious king, and was propheſied of by name ſome hundreds of years before he was born, 1 Kings xiii. 2.

Ver. 11. And Joſias begat Jechonias, &c.] This Jechonias is the ſame with Jehoiakim, the ſon of Joſias, called ſo by Pharoah-necho, when he made him king, whoſe name before was Eliakim, 2 Kings xxiii. 34. him Joſias begat of Zebudah, the daughter of Pedaiah of Rumah, ver. 36. and his brethren. Theſe were Johanan, Zedekiah, and Shallum. Two of them were kings, one reigned before him, viz. Shallum, who is called Jehoahaz, 2 Kings xxiii. 30. compared with Jer. xxii. 11, 12. the other, viz. Zedekiah, called before Mattaniah, reigned after his ſon Jehoiakim: theſe being both kings, is the reaſon why his brethren are mentioned; as well as to diſtinguiſh him from Jechonias in the next verſe; who does not appear to have had any brethren: theſe were about the time they were carried away to Babylon, which is not to be connected with the word begat; for Joſiah did not beget Jechoniah and his brethren at that time, for he had been dead ſome years before; nor with Jechonias, for he never was carried away into Babylon, but died in Judea, and ſlept with his fathers, 2 Kings xxiv. 6. but with the phraſe his brethren; and may be rendered thus, ſuppoſing τοὺς underſtood, which were at, or about the carrying away to Babylon, or the Babyloniſh captivity.

Ver. 12. And after they were brought to Babylon, &c.] Not Jechonias, but the father of Jechonias, and the Jews. Jechonias begat Salathiel. Not Jechonias mentioned in the former verſe, but his ſon, called Jehoiachim, 2 Kings xxiv. 6, 8. and Coniah, Jer. xxii. 24, 28. both which are rendered Jechonias by the Septuagint in 2 Chron. xxxvi. 8. Jer. xxii. 24. and he is ſo called, 1 Chron. iii. 16. Abulpharagius[c] calls him Junachir, and ſays he is the ſame who in Matthew is called Juchonia; and he aſſerts him to be the father of Daniel the Prophet. But here a conſiderable difficulty ariſes, how he can be ſaid to beget Salathiel, called Shealtiel, Hagg. i. 1. when he was pronounced childleſs, Jer. xxii. 30. To remove which, it may be obſerved, that the ſentence pronounced may be conſidered with this tacit condition or proviſo, if he repented not. Now the Jews have a tradition [d], that he did repent in priſon, upon which the ſentence was revoked; but there is no need to ſuppoſe this, though it is not an unreaſonable ſuppoſition; for the ſentence does not imply that he ſhould have no children, but rather that he ſhould, as will appear upon reading the whole; thus ſaith the Lord, write ye this man childleſs, a man that ſhall not proſper in his days; for no man of his ſeed ſhall proſper, ſitting on the throne of David, and ruling any more in Judah. Beſides, the Hebrew word ערירי, rendered childleſs, comes from ערה, which ſignifies to make naked or bare; and ſo denotes not only ſuch as have no children, or are bereft of them, but ſuch as are by any providence ſtripp'd of the bleſſings of life, and are left bare, deſtitute, and unhappy, as Jechonias and his poſterity were: however, the Jews have no reaſon to find fault with our Evangeliſt, ſince Salathiel is expreſsly called Jechonias's ſon, 1 Chron. iii. 17. either he was his proper natural ſon, or, to uſe their way of ſpeaking, בן מלכות, the ſon of the kingdom [e]; that is, his heir and ſucceſſor in the kingdom, as ſome have thought; ſince it looks as if he was the ſon of Neri, Luke iii. 37. though the chronicle of Jedidæus of Alexandria [f], or Philo the Jew, ſays, that Jechonias was called Neri, becauſe Ner, or the lamp of David ſhined in him, which had been almoſt extinguiſhed. And Salathiel begat Zorobabel. This account perfectly agrees with many paſſages in the Old Teſtament, where Zorobabel is called the ſon of Shealtiel or Salathiel, Ezra iii. 2. and v. 2. Neh. xii. 1. Hagg. i. 1, 12, 14. and ii. 2, 23. which is ſufficient to juſtify the Evangeliſt in this aſſertion. There is indeed a difficulty which as much preſſes the Jews as the Chriſtians; and that is, that Zorobabel is reckoned as the ſon of Pedaiah, 1 Chron. iii. 19. for the ſolution of which a noted Jewiſh commentator [g] obſerves, that "in Haggai, Zachariah and Ezra, Zorobabel is called the ſon of Shealtiel, becauſe he was his ſon's ſon; for Pedaiah was the ſon of Shealtiel, and Zorobabel the ſon of Pedaiah; and don't you obſerve, adds he, that in many places childrens children are mentioned as children." No doubt there are many inſtances of this; but to me it ſeems that Pedaiah was not the ſon of Shealtiel, but his brother, 1 Chron. iii. 17, 18. And I greatly ſuſpect that Shealtiel had no children of his own, ſince none are mentioned; and that he adopted his brother Pedaiah's ſon Zorobabel, and made him his heir and ſucceſſor in the government of Judah. However, it is certain, as a genealogical writer [h] among the Jews obſerves, that he was of the ſon's ſons of Jechonias, king of Judah, from whom our Evangeliſt makes him to deſcend.

---

[y] Targum, Aben Ezra & Kimchi in loc. & Zohar in Exod. fol. 71. 1.

[z] Seder Tephillot, fol. 278. 1. & 285. 2. Ed. Baſil. T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 29. 1.

[a] R. Iſaac Chizzuk Emunah, par. 2. p. 390.

[b] Juchaſin, fol. 10. 2.

[c] Hiſt. Dynaſt. p. 45. Vid. Hieron. Comment. in Dan. i. fol. 264. B.

Ver. 13. And Zorobabel begat Abiud, &c.] The children of Zorobabel are ſaid in 1 Chron. iii. 19, 20. to be Meſhullam, and Hananiah, and Shelomith their ſiſter, but no mention is made of Abiud: he ſeems to be the ſame with Meſhullam the eldeſt ſon, who might have two names; nor is this unlikely, ſince it was uſual, eſpecially about the time of the Babyloniſh captivity, for men to have more names than one, as may be obſerved in Daniel and others, Dan. i. 7. where they went by one, and in Judea by another. And Abiud begat Eliakim, &c. From hence to the 16th verſe the genealogy is carried down to Joſeph, the huſband of Mary; which account muſt be taken from the genealogical tables of the Jews, to which recourſe might be had, and with which it agrees; or otherwiſe the Jews would have cavilled at it; but I don't find any objections made by them to it. That there were genealogical books or tables kept by the Jews is certain, from the following inſtances [i]; "Simeon ben Azzai ſays, I found in Jeruſalem, מגלת יוחסין, a volume of genealogies, and there was written in it, &c." Again [k], ſays R. Levi, "they found a volume of genealogies in Jeruſalem, and there was written in it that Hillell came from David; Ben Jatzaph from Aſaph; Ben Tzitzith Hacceſeth from Abner; Ben Cobeſin from Ahab; Ben Calba Shebuah from Caleb; R. Jannai from Eli; R. Chayah Rabba from the children of Shephatiah, the ſon of Abital; R. Joſe be Rabbi Chelphetha from the children of Jonadab, the ſon of Rechab; and R. Nehemiah from Nehemiah the Tirſhathite." Once more [l], ſays R. Chana bar Chanina, "when the holy bleſſed God cauſes his Shechinah to dwell, he does not cauſe it to dwell but upon families, מיוחסות, which are genealogized in Iſrael." Now if Matthew's account had not been true, it might eaſily have been refuted by theſe records. The author of the old [m] Nizzachon takes notice of the cloſe of this genealogy, but finds no fault with it; only that it is carried down to Joſeph, and not to Mary; which may be accounted for by a rule of their own [n], משפחת אם אינה קרויה משפחת, the mother's family is not called a family, whereas the father's is. It is very remarkable that the Jewiſh Targum [o] traces the deſcent of the Meſſiah from the family of David in the line of Zorobabel, as Matthew does; and reckons the ſame number of generations, wanting one, from Zorobabel to the Meſſiah, as the Evangeliſt does, from Zorobabel to Jeſus: according to Matthew, the genealogy ſtands thus, Zorobabel, Abiud, Eliakim, Azor, Sadoc, Achim, Eliud, Eleazar, Matthan, Jacob, Joſeph, Jeſus; and according to the Targum the order is this, "Zorobabel, Hananiah, Jeſaiah, Rephaiah, Arnon, Obadiah, Shecaniah, Shemaiah, Neariah, Elioenai, Anani; this is the king Meſſiah, who is to be revealed." The difference of names may be accounted for by their having two names, as before obſerved. This is a full proof, that, according to the Jews own account, and expectation, the Meſſiah muſt be come many years and ages ago.

Ver. 16. And Jacob begat Joſeph, &c.] According to an old tradition mentioned by [p] Epiphanius, this Jacob, the father of Joſeph, was named Panther, and which name perhaps is originally Jewiſh; and it may be obſerved, that Joſeph is ſometimes called by the Jewiſh writers Pandera [q], and Jeſus בן פנדירא, the ſon of Pandira [r]. It has created ſome difficulty with interpreters, that Jacob ſhould be here ſaid to beget Joſeph, when Joſeph in Luke is ſaid to be the ſon of Eli. Some have thought Joſeph's father had two names, one was Jacob, and the other Eli; others take them to be two different perſons, and ſuppoſe that Joſeph was the natural ſon of the one, and the legal ſon of the other, either by marriage, or by adoption, or by the law of the brother's wife, Deut. xxv. 5, 6. But the truth of the matter is, that not Joſeph, but Jeſus, is by Luke called the ſon of Eli, as will be made to appear in its proper place. Joſeph, who is here called the huſband of Mary, becauſe he not only eſpouſed her, but upon the advice and encouragement of the Angel, took her to be his wife, was, as is evident by this genealogy, of the houſe and lineage of David; though a mean and obſcure perſon, and by trade a carpenter. Mary, which is the ſame name with Miriam in Hebrew, was a poor virgin that dwelt at Nazareth, a city of Galilee; yet alſo of the family of David, and belonged to the city of Bethlehem; of whom was born Jeſus who is called Chriſt, or Meſſiah; being that illuſtrious perſon, who was ſpoken of by the Prophets of the Old Teſtament under that name, and whom the Jews expected. We may learn from hence, what a low condition the family of David was in, when the true Meſſiah came; according to ancient prophecy, it was like a ſtump of a tree, or like to a tree cut down to the root, Iſa. xi. 1. and Chriſt who ſprung from it was like a root out of a dry ground, Iſa. liii. 2. From the whole of this genealogy it appears, that Jeſus was of the ſeed of Abraham, of the tribe of Judah, and of the family of David; whereby ſeveral ancient prophecies have their accompliſhment, and therefore he ought to be acknowledged as the true Meſſiah: and alſo that he was of the blood royal, and had his deſcent from the kings of Judah, and was heir apparent to the throne and kingdom of his father David. The Talmudic Jews own that Jeſus, or Jeſu, as they call him, was put to death becauſe he [s] קרוב למלכות היה was nigh to the kingdom, or nearly related to it. Yea, even in that malicious book [t] they have written of his life, they repreſent him as akin to queen Helena, who they ſay, on that account, would have ſaved his life. And this was ſo clear a point, and their fore-fathers were ſo thoroughly convinced of this matter, that they would have took him by force and made him a king, John vi. 15. but his kingdom was to be of another kind, a ſpiritual, and not a temporal one.

---

[d] Kimchi in 1 Chron. iii. 17. & in Jer. xxii. 30.
[e] Ib. in 1 Chron. iii. 15.
[f] Apud Vorſt. Obſerv. in Ganz. Chronolog. p. 310.
[g] Kimchi in 1 Chron. iii. 19. & in Hagg. i. 1.
[h] Juchaſin, fol. 13. 1.
[i] T. Bab. Yebamot, fol. 49. 2.
[k] T. Hieroſ. Taanith, fol. 68. 1. B. Rabba, §. 98. fol. 85. 3.
[l] T. Bab. Kidduſhin, fol. 70. 2.
[m] P. 186.
[n] T. Bab. Yebamot, fol. 54. 2. Bava Bathra, fol. 109. 2 & 110. 2. Bereſhit Rabba, fol. 6. 1. Juchaſin, fol. 55. 2.
[o] In 1 Chron. iii. 24. Vid. Beckii Not. in ib. p. 56, 57.
[p] Contra Hæreſ. l. 3. Hæreſ. 78.
[q] Toldos Jeſu, p. 3.
[r] T. Hieroſ. Avoda Zara, fol. 40. 4. T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 14. 2. & Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 81. 1.

Ver. 17. So all the generations from Abraham, &c.] The Evangeliſt having traced the genealogy of Chriſt from Abraham, which he divides into three parts, becauſe of the threefold ſtate of the Jews, firſt under Patriarchs, Prophets and Judges, next under Kings, and then under Princes and Prieſts, gives the ſum of each part under its diſtinct head: ſo all the generations, that is, the degrees of generation, or the perſons generated from Abraham to David, both being included, are fourteen generations; as there were, and no more, and are as follow, Abraham, Iſaac, Jacob, Judah, Phares, Eſrom, Aram, Amminadab, Naaſſon, Salmon, Boaz, Obed, Jeſſe, David. And from David until the carrying away into Babylon are fourteen generations. Here David who cloſed the the firſt diviſion muſt be excluded this, and it muſt be obſerved, that the Evangeliſt does not ſay as before, that all the generations from David to the captivity were fourteen, for there were ſeventeen, three kings being omitted by him at once; but, the generations he thought fit to mention, in order to reduce them to a like number as before, and which were ſufficient for his purpoſe, were fourteen; and may be reckoned in this order, Solomon, Roboam, Abia, Aſa, Joſaphat, Joram, Ozias, Joatham, Achaz, Ezekias, Manaſſes, Amon, Joſias, Jechonias, or Jeboiachim. And from the carrying away into Babylon unto Chriſt are fourteen generations. This muſt be underſtood as before; for there might be more generations in this interval, but theſe were enough to anſwer the deſign of the Evangeliſt; and which he thought proper to mention, and may be numbered in this manner; Jechonias, or Jeboiachim, Salathiel, Zorobabel, Abiud, Eliakim, Azor, Sadoc, Achim, Eliud, Eleazar, Matthan, Jacob, Joſeph, Chriſt. This way of reckoning by generations was uſed by other nations as well as the Jews [u], particularly the Grecians; ſo [w] Pauſanias ſays, "from Tharypus to Pyrrhus the ſon of Achilles, "ϖεντε ανδρων ϗ δεκα εισι γενεαι, were fifteen generations of men." And Herodotus [x] ſpeaking of thoſe who had reigned in Babylon, ſays, among them were two women, one whoſe name was Semiramis, who reigned before the other γενεῃσι ϖεντε, five generations; many other inſtances of the like kind might be given.

Ver. 18. Now the birth of Jeſus Chriſt, &c.] The Evangeliſt having finiſhed the genealogy of Chriſt, proceeds to give an account of his birth, which includes both his conception and bringing forth; and which he ſays was on this wiſe, οὕτως, ſo, after this manner, and which was very wonderful and aſtoniſhing; when as, γαρ, for his mother Mary was found with child, not of man, no, not of Joſeph her huſband; for Chriſt had no real father as man, Joſeph was only, as was ſuppoſed, his father; but of the Holy Ghoſt, according to Luke i. 35. The Holy Ghoſt ſhall come upon thee, &c. and this was done that the human nature of Chriſt might be clear of original pollution; that ſo being the immediate produce of the Holy Ghoſt and without ſin, it might be fit for union with the Son of God, and for the office of Mediator he had undertook: When Mary is ſaid to be found with child, the meaning is, it appeared by evident ſigns, it was obſerved by Joſeph particularly, who might know not only that ſhe was with child, but with child of the Holy Ghoſt, by converſation with her, who might relate to him what paſſed between the Angel and her, Luke i. 28, 36. though it looks as if as yet he did not know this, or at leaſt was not fully ſatisfied about it; ſince he had a mind to have put her away, before he was aſſured of the truth of it, by the appearance of an Angel to him. Now Mary's being with child, and its being known, were facts, at the time when ſhe was eſpouſed to Joſeph, and thereby the outward credit both of Mary and Jeſus were ſecured; for had this appeared before the eſpouſals, the Jews would have fixed a brand of infamy on them both; and both the eſpouſals and her being found with child, were before they came together; that is, before they cohabited together as man and wife, before he brought her home to his own houſe and bed. The eſpouſals were before they thus came together. It was uſual with the Jews firſt to eſpouſe or betroth, and then to marry, or rather conſummate the marriage, by bringing the woman home to her huſband's houſe, between which there was ſome ſpace of time. The account and manner of betrothing is given by Maimonides [y] in the following words. "Before the "giving of the law, if a man met a woman in the "ſtreet, if he would, he might take her, and bring "her into his houſe and marry her between him and "herſelf, and ſhe became his wife; but when the "law was given, the Iſraelites were commanded, "that if a man would take a woman he ſhould obtain her before witneſſes, and after that ſhe ſhould "be his wife, according to Deut. xxii. 13. and theſe "takings are an affirmative command of the law, "and are called קידושין או אירוסין eſpouſals or betrothings in every place; and a woman who is "obtained in ſuch a way is called מקודשת או מאורסת "eſpouſed or betrothed; and when a woman is obtained, and becomes מקודשת eſpouſed, although "ſhe is not yet נבעלה married, nor has entered into "her

---

[s] T. Bab. Sanhed. fol. 43. 1.

[t] Toldos Jeſu p. 10.

[u] Vid. Pirke Abot. c. 5. §. 2.

[w] Attica ſive l. 1. c. 10. p. 19.

[x] Clio. l. 1. c. 184. p. 74.

[y] Hilchot. Iſhot. c. 1. §. 1, 2, 3.

“her huſband's houſe, yet ſhe is a man's wife.” And ſuch a diſtinction between a married woman and a betrothed virgin, which was Mary's caſe, may be obſerved in Deut. xxii. 22, 23. moreover, her being found or appearing to be with child, was before they came together; which 'tis likely, as Dr. Lightfoot[z] obſerves, was about three months from her conception, when ſhe was returned from her Couſin Eliſabeth. 'Tis probable that as ſoon as ſhe was eſpouſed to Joſeph, or quickly after, ſhe went and paid her viſit to Eliſabeth, with whom ſhe ſtaid about three months, and then returned home, Luke i. 56. Upon her return home, ſhe appears to be with child, with which ſhe had gone three months, a proper time for the diſcovery of ſuch a matter, Gen. xxxviii. 24. and which is aſſigned by the Jewiſh doctors for this purpoſe. In the Miſna[a] ſuch a caſe as this is put, “If two men ſhould eſpouſe two women, and “at the time of their entrance into the bride-cham-“ber, the one ſhould be taken for the other —— “they ſeparate them for three months, becauſe they “may prove with child;” that is, as Bartenora obſerves upon it, “they ſeparate them that they “may not return to their huſbands; and that if they “ſhould be with child, they may diſtinguiſh between “a legitimate or an illegitimate offspring; and that “the children which they may bring forth may not “be aſcribed to the wrong perſons.” Now Mary being gone three months from the time of her eſpouſals to Joſeph, and he and ſhe not being yet come together, it was a clear caſe, that the child ſhe was gone three months with, was none of his; hence it follows,

Ver. 19. Then Joſeph her huſband, &c.] To whom ſhe had been betrothed, and who was her huſband, and ſhe his wife according to the Jewiſh law, Deut. xxii. 23, 24. though not yet come together, being a juſt man, obſervant of the law of God, particularly that which reſpected adultery, being wholly good and chaſte, like the Patriarch of the ſame name; a character juſt the reverſe of that which the Jews give him, in their ſcandalous[b] book of the life of Jeſus; where, in the moſt malicious manner, they repreſent him as an unchaſte and an unrighteous perſon: and not willing to make her a publick example, or to deliver her, i. e. to the civil magiſtrate, according to Munſter's Hebrew edition. The Greek word ſignifies to puniſh by way of example to others, to deter them from ſinning; and with the antient it[c] denoted the greateſt and ſevereſt puniſhment. Here it means either bringing her before the civil magiſtrate, in order to her being puniſhed according to the law in Deut. xxii. 23, 24. which requires the perſon to be brought out to the gate of the city and ſtoned with ſtones, which was making a publick example indeed; or divorcing her in a very publick manner, and thereby expoſe her to open ſhame and diſgrace. To prevent which, he being tender and compaſſionate, though ſtrictly juſt and good, was minded to put her away privily; he deliberately conſulted and determined within himſelf to diſmiſs her, or put her away by giving her a bill of divorce, in a very private manner; which was ſometimes done by putting it into the woman's hand or boſom, ſee Deut. xxiv. 1. In Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel it is rendered, it was in his heart to forſake her privately.

Ver. 20. But while he thought on theſe things, &c.] While he was revolving them in his mind, conſidering what was moſt fit and proper to be done, whether to diſmiſs her publickly or privately; while he was conſulting within himſelf the glory of God, the peace of his own conſcience, and the credit of Mary, behold the Angel of the Lord appeared to him in a dream; probably the ſame Angel which appeared to Zacharias, and brought him tidings that his wife ſhould have a ſon, and who alſo appeared to Mary, and acquainted her that ſhe ſhould conceive, and bring forth the Meſſiah, whoſe name was Gabriel, Luke i. 11, 19, 36. If we'll believe the Jews, this Angel muſt be Gabriel, ſince he is the Angel who they ſay[d] דממנא על חלמא is appointed over dreams; for he appeared to Joſeph in a dream, which is one of the ways and methods in which the Lord, or an Angel of his, has appeared to the ſaints formerly, and has anſwered them, ſee Gen. xxxi. 11. 1 King. iii. 5. 1 Sam. xxviii. 6, 15. and is reckoned by the Jews[e] one of the degrees or kinds of prophecy: and ſo the Angel here not only encourages Joſeph to take to him his wife, ſaying Joſeph, thou ſon of David; which is ſaid partly to atteſt his being of the houſe and lineage of David; and partly to raiſe his expectations and confirm his faith, that his wife ſhould bring forth the promiſed ſon of David; and chiefly to engage his attention to what he was about to ſay, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife; don't be afraid either that thou ſhalt offend the Lord, or bring any reproach or ſcandal upon thyſelf, as if thou didſt connive at an adultreſs; but as ſhe is thine eſpouſed wife, ſolemnly betrothed to thee, take her home to thyſelf, live with her as thy wife, and openly avow her as ſuch. To which he is encouraged by the following reaſon or argument, for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghoſt; ſhe has not been guilty of any criminal converſation with men; this conception of her's is of the Holy Ghoſt, and entirely owing to his coming upon her, and overſhadowing her in a wonderful and miraculous manner. I ſay, the Angel not only encourages Joſeph after this manner, but delivers ſomething to him by way of prophecy, in the following verſe.

Ver. 21. And ſhe ſhall bring forth a ſon, and they ſhall call his name Jeſus.] For though ſhe was with child, it could not be known any otherwiſe than by prediction or divine revelation, that ſhe ſhould have a ſon, whoſe name ſhould be called Jeſus; a name of the ſame ſignification with Joſhua and Hoſea, and may be interpreted a Saviour, Act. xiii. 23. for the word ישוע Jeſus, comes from ישע which ſignifies to ſave. And to this agrees the reaſon of the name given by the Angel, for he ſhall ſave his people from their ſins. The ſalvation here aſcribed to him, and for which he is every way fit, being God as well as man, and which he is the ſole author of, is to be underſtood, not of a temporal, but of a ſpiritual and everlaſting ſalvation; ſuch as was propheſied of, Iſa. xlv. 17. and which old Jacob had in his view, when he ſaid, I have waited for thy ſalvation, O Lord, Gen. xlix. 18. which by the Jewiſh[f] Targumiſt is paraphraſed thus. “Jacob ſaid when he “ſaw Gideon the ſon of Joaſh, and Samſon the ſon of “Manoah, that they would riſe up to be ſaviours, “not for the ſalvation of Gideon do I wait, nor for “the ſalvation of Samſon do I look, for their ſal-“vation is פורקן דשעתא a temporary ſalvation; “but for thy ſalvation, O Lord, do I wait and “look, for thy ſalvation is פורקן עלמין an everlaſting “ſalvation: or (according to another copy) but for “the ſalvation of Meſſiah the ſon of David, who ſhall “ſave the children of Iſrael, and bring them out of “captivity, for thy ſalvation my ſoul waiteth.”

---

[z] In loc.

[a] Yebamot c. 3. ſ. 10.

[b] Toldos Jeſu, p. 3.

[c] A. Gellii Noct. Attic. l. 6. c. 14.

[d] Zohar. in Gen. fol. 103. 3.

[e] Ib. & Maimon. Yeſode Hattorah. c. 7. l. 13.

[f] Targum Jon. Ben Uzziel in loc.

By his people whom he is ſaid to ſave are meant, not all mankind, though they are his by creation and preſervation, yet they are not, nor will they be all ſaved by him ſpiritually and eternally; nor alſo the people of the Jews, for though they were his nation, his kinſmen, and ſo his own people according to the fleſh, yet they were not all ſaved by him; many of them died in their ſins, and in the diſbelief of him as the Meſſiah: but by them are meant all the elect of God, whether Jews or Gentiles, who were given to him by his Father, as a peculiar people, and who are made willing in the day of his power upon them, to be ſaved by him in his own way. And theſe he ſaves from their ſins, from all their ſins, original and actual; from ſecret and open ſins; from ſins of heart, lip and life; from ſins of omiſſion and commiſſion; from all that is in ſin, and follows upon it; from the guilt, puniſhment, and damning power of it, by his ſufferings and death; and from the tyrannical government of it by his Spirit and grace; and will at laſt ſave them from the being of it, though not in this life, yet hereafter, in the other world, when they ſhall be without ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing.

Ver. 22. Now all this was done, &c.] Theſe are not the words of the Angel, but of the Evangeliſt; obſerving that Mary's being with child of the Holy Ghoſt, and her conception in ſuch an extraordinary manner, whilſt a pure virgin, before ſhe and Joſeph came together, who though eſpouſed to him, was untouched by him, were all brought about in this way, and with ſuch circumſtances, that it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken of the Lord by the Prophet; that is, the Prophet Iſaiah, and ſo ſome copies read. The paſſage referred to is in Iſa. vii. 14. what is there ſpoken was by divine inſpiration; it was ſpoken of the Lord by the Prophet; the Spirit of the Lord ſpake by him. Prophets and holy men formerly, ſpake as they were moved by the Holy Ghoſt; ſo that what they ſaid, is to be looked upon as the word of God. Now between the prophecy of Iſaiah referred to, and the fact here recorded by the Evangeliſt, is an entire agreement: the prophecy ſhews the will, counſel, and determination of God about this matter; the accompliſhment of it, the faithfulneſs and veracity of God in his word; the prediction declares that the thing would be, and the thing itſelf was done, that what was ſpoken might be fulfilled; not merely by way of accommodation, or in a typical and myſtical, but in a ſtrict, proper and literal ſenſe.

Ver. 23. Behold, a virgin ſhall be with child, &c.] Theſe words are rightly applied to the virgin Mary and her ſon Jeſus, for of no other can they be underſtood; not of Ahaz's wife and his ſon Hezekiah, who was already born, and muſt be eleven or twelve years of age when theſe words were ſpoken; nor of any other ſon of Ahaz by her or any other perſon, ſince no other was Lord of Judea; nor of the wife of Iſaiah, and any ſon of his, who never had any that was king of Judah. The prophecy is introduced here as in Iſaiah, with a behold! not only to raiſe and fix the attention, but to denote that it was ſomething wonderful and extraordinary which was about to be related; and is therefore called אות a ſign, wonder, or miracle; which lay not, as ſome Jewiſh writers [g] affirm in this, that the perſon ſpoken of was unfit for conception at the time of the prophecy, ſince no ſuch thing is intimated; or in this, that it ſhould be a ſon and not a daughter [h], which is foretold; for the wonder lies not in the truth of the prediction, but in the extraordinarineſs of the thing predicted; much leſs in this [i], that the child ſhould eat butter and honey as ſoon as born; ſince nothing is more natural and common with new-born infants, than to take in any ſort of liquids which are ſweet and pleaſant. But the ſign or wonder lay in this, that a virgin ſhould conceive or be with child; for the Evangeliſt is to be juſtified in rendering עלמה by παρθενος, a virgin; by the Septuagint having ſo rendered it ſome hundreds of years before him, by the ſenſe of the word, which comes from עלם, and which ſignifies to hide or cover; virgins being ſuch who are unknown to, and not uncovered by men, and in the Eaſtern countries were kept recluſe from the company and converſation of men; and by the uſe of the word in all other places, Gen. xxiv. 43. Exod. ii. 8. Pſal. lxviii. 25. Cant. i. 3. and vi. 8. Prov. xxx. 19. The laſt of theſe texts the Jews triumph in, as making for them, and againſt us, but without any reaſon; ſince it does not appear that the maid and the adulterous woman are one and the ſame perſon; and if they were, the vitiated woman might be called a maid or virgin, according to her own account of herſelf, or in the eſteem of others who knew her not, or as antecedent to her defilement; ſee Deut. xxii. 28. Beſides, could this be underſtood of any young woman married or unmarried, that had known a man, it would be no wonder, no ſurprizing thing that ſhe ſhould conceive or be with child, and bring forth a ſon. 'Tis added, and they ſhall call his name Emmanuel. The difference between Iſaiah and Matthew is very inconſiderable, it being in the one thou ſhalt call, that is, thou virgin ſhalt call him by this name; and in the other they ſhall call, that is, Joſeph, Mary, and others; for beſides, that ſome copies read the text in Matthew καλεσεις, thou ſhalt call, the words both in the one and the other may be rendered impersonally, and ſhall be called; and the meaning is, not that he ſhould be commonly known and called by ſuch a name, any more than by any; or all of thoſe mentioned in Iſa. ix. 6. but only that he ſhould be ſo, which is a frequent uſe of the word; or he ſhould be that, and ſo accounted by others, which anſwers to the ſignification of this name, which the Evangeliſt ſays, being interpreted is God with us: for it is a compound word of אל God and עמנו with us, and well agrees with Jeſus, who is God in our nature, the word that was made fleſh and dwelt among us, John i. 14. and is the one and only Mediator between God and us, 1 Tim. ii. 5 [k]. So the Septuagint interpret the word in Iſa. viii. 8.

Ver. 24. Then Joſeph being raiſed from ſleep, &c.] That is, being awaked out of ſleep, τȣ υπνȣ, that ſleep, into which he either naturally fell, whilſt he was meditating on the affair of Mary's being with child; or rather into which he was caſt by the Lord, on purpoſe that he might have a revelation of the will of God to him in a dream; and riſing up from his bed or place where he was, immediately and without any delay, did as the Angel of the Lord had bidden him; firmly believing that it was a meſſenger of God that was ſent to him, and that this matter was of the Lord. Wherefore he took unto him his wife, that is, he publickly married her, whom he had before eſpouſed, took her to his houſe, or continued her there, lived with her as his wife, and owned her to be ſuch, and henceforwards had no more thoughts of putting her away.

Ver. 25. And knew her not, &c.] Or but he knew her not, και anſwering to the Hebrew ו; that is, had no carnal knowledge of her, or copulation with her, though his wife. The words are an euphemiſm, or a modeſt way of expreſſing the conjugal act, and is a very ancient one, ſee Gen. iv. 1. and what has been uſed in all nations and languages. And this conduct of his was neceſſary, till ſhe had brought forth her firſt-born; that it might be manifeſt not only that ſhe conceived, being a virgin, but alſo that ſhe brought forth being a virgin: for both are ſignified in the prophecy before related, a virgin ſhall conceive and bring forth a ſon; which is all one as if it had been ſaid, a virgin ſhall conceive, and a virgin ſhall bring forth a ſon. The firſt-born is that which firſt opens the womb of its mother, whether any follows after or no, Exod. xiii. 12, 13. Numb. iii. 12. Chriſt is called Mary's firſt-born, becauſe ſhe had none before him, whether ſhe had any after him or not; for her perpetual virginity ſeems to be no neceſſary article of faith: for when 'tis ſaid, Joſeph knew her not till ſhe had brought forth, the meaning is certain that he knew her not before. But whether he afterwards did or not, is not ſo manifeſt, nor is it a matter of any great importance; the word until may be ſo underſtood as referring to the time preceding, that the contrary cannot be affirmed of the time following, 2 Sam. vi. 23. Matt. xxiii. 20. and which may be the caſe here, and is indeed generally underſtood ſo; and it alſo may be conſidered as only expreſſive of the intermediate time, as in Matt. v. 26. Acts xxvii. 33. as Beza obſerves. Chriſt was her firſt-born as he was man, and the firſt-born of God, or his firſt and only begotten, as the ſon of God. 'Tis further obſerved, that ſhe called his name Jeſus, as was foretold to her, or ordered her by the Angel, Luke i. 31. and to Joſeph, Matt. i. 21.

---

[g] Jarchi. in Iſa. vii. 14.

[h] Gaon. in Aben Ezra, in ib.

[i] Kimchi & Aben Ezra in ib. R. Iſaac Chizuk, Emun. p. 1. c. 21.

[k] See more of this in a book of mine, called The prophecies of the Old Teſtament concerning the Meſſiah, literally fulfilled in Jeſus, ch. 5. p. 92, 93. &c.

CHAP. II.

Ver. 1. NOW when Jeſus was born, &c.] Several things are here related reſpecting the birth of Chriſt, as the place where he was born, in Bethlehem of Judea; ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from another Bethlehem in the tribe of Zabulon, Joſh. xix. 15. Here Chriſt was to be born according to a prophecy hereafter mentioned, and accordingly the Jews expected he would be born here, Matt. ii. 4, 5, 6. Joh. vii. 41, 42. and ſo Jeſus was born here, Luke ii. 4, 5, 6, 7. and this the Jews themſelves acknowledge; "Such a year, ſays a noted [l] chronologer of theirs, Jeſus of Nazareth was born in "Bethlehem Juda, which is a parſa and an half, i. e. "ſix miles from Jeruſalem." Benjamin [m] Tudelenſis ſays it is two parſa's, i. e. eight miles from it; and according to Juſtin Martyr [n] it was thirty-five furlongs diſtant from it. Yea even they own this, that Jeſus was born there, in that vile and blaſphemous book [o] of theirs, written on purpoſe to defame him; nay, even the ancient Jews have owned that the Meſſiah is already born, and that he was born at Bethlehem; as appears from their Talmud [p], where we meet with ſuch a paſſage. "It happened to a certain Jew, "that as he was plowing, one of his oxen bellowed, "a certain Arabian paſſed by and heard it; who "ſaid, O Jew, Jew, looſe thy oxen, and looſe "thy plow-ſhare, for lo, the houſe of the ſanctuary is deſtroyed: it bellowed a ſecond time; "he ſaid unto him, O Jew, Jew, bind thy oxen, "and bind thy plow-ſhare, for lo, יליד מלכא משיחא "the king Meſſiah is born. He ſaid to him, what "is his name? Menachem (the comforter;) he "aſked again, what is his father's name? Hezekiah; once more he ſays, from whence is he? "He replies מן בירת מלכא ביתלחם יהודה from "the palace of the king of Bethlehem Judah; he "went and ſold his oxen and his plow-ſhares, and "became a ſeller of ſwadling clothes for infants; and "he went from city to city till he came to that city, "(Bethlehem), and all the women bought of him, "but the mother of Menachem bought nothing." Afterwards they tell you, he was ſnatched away by winds and tempeſts. This ſtory is told in much the ſame manner in another [q] of their writings. Bethlehem ſignifies the houſe of bread, and in it was born, as an ancient writer [r] obſerves, the bread which comes down from heaven: and it may alſo ſignify the houſe of fleſh, and to it the alluſion may be in 2 Tim. iii. 16. God manifeſt in the fleſh. The time of Chriſt's birth is here expreſſed, in the days of Herod the king. This was Herod the great, the firſt of that name: the Jewiſh chronologer [s] gives an account of him in the following manner. "Herod the firſt, called Herod the Aſcalonite, was the ſon of Antipater, a "friend of king Hyrcanus, and his deputy; him "the ſenate of Rome made king in the room of "Hyrcanus his maſter. This Herod whilſt he was "a ſervant of king Hyrcanus (ſo in the [t] Talmud "Herod is ſaid to be עבדא דבית חשמונא a ſervant "of the family of the Aſmonaeans) king Hyrcanus "ſaved from death, to which he was ſentenced by "the ſanhedrim of Shammai; that they might not "ſlay him for the murder of one Hezekiah, as is "related by Joſephus, l. 6. c. 44. and Herod took "to him for wife Miriam, the daughter of Alexander the ſon of Ariſtobulus, who was the daughter's "daughter of king Hyrcanus." This writer tacitly owns afterwards [u], that Jeſus was born in the days of this king; for he ſays, that in the days of Hillell and Shammai (who lived in thoſe times) there was one of their diſciples, who was called R. Joſhua Ben Perachiah, and he was, adds he, רבו הנוצרי the maſter of the Nazarene, or of Jeſus of Nazareth. Herod reigned, as this ſame author obſerves, thirty-ſeven years; and according to Dr. Lightfoot's calculation, Chriſt was born in the thirty-fifth year of his reign, and in the thirty-firſt of Auguſtus Cæſar, and in the year of the world three thouſand nine hundred and twenty-eight, and in the month Tiſri, which anſwers to part of our September, about the feaſt of tabernacles; which indeed was typical of Chriſt's incarnation, and then it may reaſonably be thought that the word was made fleſh, and ἐσκήνωσεν tabernacled among us, Joh. i. 14. Another circumſtance relating to the birth of Chriſt is, that when Jeſus was born——behold, there came wiſe men from the Eaſt to Jeruſalem; theſe wiſe men in the Greek text are called Μάγοι Magi, a word which is always uſed in a bad ſenſe in the ſacred writings; hence they are thought by ſome to be magicians, ſorcerers, wizards, ſuch as Simon Magus, Acts viii. 9. and Elymas, ch. xiii. 8. and ſo the Jewiſh writers [w] interpret the word מגוש a wizard, an enchanter, a blaſphemer of God, and one that entices others to idolatry; and in the

---

[l] R. David Ganz. Zemach David, pars 2, fol. 14. 2.
[m] Itinerarium p. 48.
[n] Apolog. 2. p. 75.
[o] Toldos p. 7.
[p] Hieroſ. Beracot. fol. 5. 1.
[q] Echa Rabbati fol. 50. 1.
[r] Hieron, Epitaph. Paulæ. fol. 59. E. Tom. 1.
[s] R. David Ganz. Zemach David, pars 1. fol. 24. 1.
[t] T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 3. 2. Juchaſin. fol. 17. 1. & 18. 1. & Seder Olam Zuta, p. 111.
[u] Ib. col. 2.
[w] T. Bab. Sabbat. fol. 75. 1. Gloſſ. in ib. & Sota, fol. 22. 1. & Sanhedrim fol. 39. 1.

Hebrew Goſpel of Munſter theſe men are called מכשפים wizards. Some have thought this to be their national name. Epiphanius [x] ſuppoſes that theſe men were of the poſterity of Abraham by Keturah, who inhabited a country in ſome part of Arabia, called Magodia: but could this be thought to be the name of their country, one might rather be induced to ſuppoſe that they were of the Μαγοι Magi, a nation of the Medes mentioned by Herodotus [y]; ſince both the name and country better agree with theſe perſons; but the word ſeems to be rather a name of character and office, and to deſign the wiſe men, and Prieſts of the Perſians. An Eaſtern [z] writer ſays the word is of Perſic original, and is compounded of two words Mije Guſh, which ſignifies a man with ſhort ears; for ſuch was the firſt founder of the ſect, and from whom they were ſo called. But in the Arabic Perſic Nomenclator [a] it is rendered a worſhipper of fire, and ſuch the Perſian prieſts were; and to this agrees what Apuleius [b] ſays that Magus, in the Perſian language is the ſame as prieſt with us: and Xenophon [c] ſays, that the Magi were firſt appointed by Cyrus, to ſing hymns to the gods, as ſoon as it was day, and to ſacrifice to them. The account given of them by Porphiry [d] is, that "among the Perſians they that were wiſe concerning "God, and worſhipped him, were called Μαγοι "Magi, for ſo Magus ſignifies in their country dia-"lect; and ſo auguſt and venerable were this ſort "of men accounted with the Perſians, that Darius, "the ſon of Hyſtaſpis, ordered this, among other "things, to be inſcribed on his monument, that he "was the maſter of the Magi." From whence we may learn in ſome meaſure who theſe men were, and why the word is by our tranſlators rendered wiſe men; ſince the Magi, as Cicero [e] ſays, were reckoned a ſort of wiſe men, and doctors among the Perſians; who further obſerves, that no man could be a king of the Perſians, before he underſtood the diſcipline and knowledge of the Magi: and the wiſdom of the Perſian Magi, as Ælianus [f] writes, among other things, lay in foretelling things to come. Theſe came from the eaſt, not from Chaldea, as ſome have thought, led hereunto by the multitude of aſtrologers, magicians, and ſoothſayers, which were among that people; ſee Dan. ii. 2, 10, 27. and iv. 7. for Chaldea was not eaſt, but north of Judea, as appears from Gen. i. 14, 15. and iv. 6. and vi. 22. and x. 21. and xxv. 9. Others have thought they came from Arabia, and particularly Sheba, induced hereunto by Pſal. lxxii. 10, 15. But though ſome part of Arabia lay eaſt, yet Sheba was ſouth of the land of Iſrael, as is evident from the queen of that place being called the queen of the ſouth, Matt. xii. 42. The more generally received opinion ſeems to be righteſt, that they came from Perſia, which, as it lies eaſt of Judea, ſo was famous for this ſort of men, and beſides the name, as has been ſeen, is of Perſic original. The place whither they came was Jeruſalem, the metropolis of Judea, where they might ſuppoſe the king of the Jews was born, or where, at leaſt, they might perſuade themſelves they ſhould hear of him; ſince here Herod the king lived, to whom it ſeems they applied themſelves in the firſt place. The time of their coming was, when Jeſus was born; not as ſoon as he was born, or on the thirteenth day after his birth, the ſixth of January, as it ſtands in our Calendar; or within the forty days before Mary's Purification; ſince this ſpace of time does not ſeem to be ſufficient for ſo long a journey, and which muſt require a conſiderable preparation for it; nor is it probable if they came ſo ſoon as this, that after ſuch a ſtir at Jeruſalem, after Herod's diligent ſearch and enquiry concerning this matter, and his wrath and anger at being diſappointed and deluded by the wiſemen, that Joſeph and Mary ſhould ſo ſoon bring the child into the temple, where it was declared to be the Meſſiah by Simeon and Anna. Beſides, immediately after the departure of the wiſe men, Joſeph with his wife and child were ordered into Egypt, which could not be done before Mary's Purification. But rather this their coming was near upon two years after the birth of Chriſt; ſince it is afterwards obſerved, that Herod ſent and ſlew all the children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the coaſts thereof, from two years old and under, according to the time which he had diligently enquired of the wiſe men, ver. 16. This was the opinion of Epiphanius [g] formerly, and is embraced by Dr. Lightfoot [h], to whom I refer the reader for further proof of this matter.

Ver. 2. Saying, where is he that is born king of the Jews? &c.] Theſe words were ſpoken to the Jews, or rather to Herod the king, or his miniſters and courtiers, or to each of them, as the wiſe men had the opportunity of ſpeaking to them; who make no ſcruple of his being born, of this they were fully aſſured; nor did they in the leaſt heſitate about his being king of the Jews, who was born, but only enquire where he was, in what city, town, village, houſe, or family. The reaſon of their aſking this queſtion is, for we have ſeen his ſtar in the eaſt. By, the ſtar they ſaw, ſome underſtand an angel, which is not likely. The learned Lightfoot [i] is of opinion that it was the light or glory of the Lord, which ſhone about the ſhepherds, when the angel brought them the news of Chriſt's birth, and which at ſo great a diſtance appeared as a ſtar to theſe wiſe men; others, that it was a comet, ſuch as has been thought to portend the birth or death of ſome illuſtrious perſon: but it ſeems to be properly a ſtar, a new and an unuſual one, ſuch as had never been ſeen, nor obſerved before; and is called his ſtar, the ſtar of the king born, becauſe it appeared on his account, and was the ſign of his birth, who is the root and offſpring of David, and the bright and morning-ſtar, Rev. xxii. 16. This they ſaw in the eaſt; not in the eaſtern part of the heavens, but they ſaw it when they were in the eaſt, that is, in their own country; and according to the beſt obſervations they were able to make, it was in that part of the heavens right over the land of Judea; from whence they concluded, that the king of the Jews was born: but the queſtion is how they ſhould hereby know and be aſſured that ſuch a perſon was born? to this it may be replied, that there is a prophecy of Balaam's, which is thus expreſſed, there ſhall come a ſtar out of Jacob, and a ſcepter ſhall riſe out of Iſrael, Numb. xxiv. 17. which is owned by ſome Jewiſh writers [k] to be a prophecy of the Meſſiah; tho' the ſtar there mentioned is conſidered by them as one of the Meſſiah's titles; hence one who ſet up himſelf, and for a while was by ſome received as the Meſſiah, was called by them בר כוכבא the ſon of a ſtar; but when he was diſcovered to be an impoſtor, they called him בר כוזיבא the ſon of a lye: but I rather take it to be a ſign of the Meſſiah's ſiah's coming, and the meaning is, when a ſtar ſhall דרך walk or ſteer its courſe from Jacob, or above, or over the land of Iſrael; then a ſcepter, or ſcepter-bearer, that is, a king, ſhall riſe out of Iſrael. Now this prophecy of Balaam, who lived in the eaſt, might be traditionally handed down to this time, and be well known by theſe men; and who, obſerving ſuch a ſtar appear over the land of Judea, might conclude that now the ſcepter-bearer or king was born [l]. Beſides, Zerduſht or Zoroaſtres, the author of the ſect of the Magi or wiſe men, and who appears to be a Jew by birth, and to be acquainted with the writings of the Old Teſtament, and with this prophecy, ſpoke of the birth of Chriſt to his followers; and told them when he ſhould be born, a ſtar would appear, and ſhine in the day, and ordered them to go where that directed, and offer gifts, and worſhip him. An Eaſtern writer, who affirms [m] what I have now mentioned, relates [n] the following ſpeech as ſpoke by the wiſe men to Herod, when in converſation with him, about this matter; "A certain perſon, ſay they, of "great note with us, in a book which he compoſed, "warned us in it, mentioning theſe things; a child "that ſhall deſcend from heaven, will be born in "Paleſtine, whom the greateſt part of the world "ſhall ſerve, and the ſign of his appearance ſhall "be this; ye ſhall ſee a ſtrange ſtar, which ſhall "direct you where he is; when ye ſhall ſee this, "take gold, myrrh and frankincenſe, and go and "offer them to him, and worſhip him, and then "return, leſt a great calamity befall you. Now "the ſtar has appeared unto us, and we are come "to perform what was commanded us." If this be true, we are not at a loſs how they come by their knowledge, nor for a reaſon of their conduct. That the Jews have expected that a ſtar ſhould appear at the time of the Meſſiah's coming, is certain, from ſome paſſages in a Book of theirs of great value and eſteem among them, in which are the following things; in one place it is ſaid [o] "The king Meſſiah ſhall be re-"vealed in the land of Galilee, and lo a ſtar in the eaſt "ſhall ſwallow up ſeven ſtars in the north, and a flame "of red fire ſhall be in the firmament ſix days;" and in another place, [p] "When the Meſſiah ſhall be "revealed, there ſhall riſe up in the eaſt a certain "ſtar, flaming with all ſorts of colours—and all men "ſhall ſee it": once more 'tis affirmed as a tradition [q] that, "The holy bleſſed God hath determined "to build Jeruſalem, and to make a certain (fixed) "ſtar appear ſparkling with ſeven blazing tails ſhin-"ing from it in the midſt of the firmament—and "then ſhall the king Meſſiah be revealed in all the "world." Now this expectation of the appearing of ſuch a ſtar at the coming of the Meſſiah takes its riſe from, and is founded upon the above-mentioned prophecy. It is ſaid [r] that Seth the ſon of Adam gave out a prophecy, that a ſtar ſhould appear at the birth of the Meſſiah; and that a ſtar did appear at the birth of Chriſt is certain from the teſtimony of the Evangeliſt, and ſeems to have ſome confirmation from the writings of the Heathens themſelves. Some have thought that the ſtar which Virgil ſpeaks of, and calls [s] Cæſaris Aſtrum, Cæſar's ſtar, is this very ſtar, which he in complaiſance to that Monarch aſcribes to him. Pliny [t] makes mention "of a bright comet with a ſilver beard, "which was ſo refulgent that it could ſcarce be "look'd upon, ſhewing in itſelf the effigies of God in human form." If the teſtimony of Chalcidius a Platonic philoſopher, taken notice of by many learned men, is genuine, and he not a chriſtian, [u] it is much to the purpoſe, and is as follows; "There is alſo a "more venerable and ſacred hiſtory, which ſpeaks "of the riſing of a certain unuſual ſtar; not fore-"telling diſeaſes and deaths, but the deſcent of a "venerable God, born for the ſake of human con-"verſation, and the affairs of mortals; which ſtar "truly, when the wiſe men of the Chaldeans ſaw in "their journey by night, and being very expert in "the conſideration of celeſtial things, are ſaid to en-"quire after the birth of the new deity, and having "found the infant majeſty, to worſhip him, and pay "their vows worthy of ſuch a God." The end propoſed by them in taking ſuch a journey is expreſſed, and are come to worſhip him; that is, either to pay adoration to him as God, of which they might be convinced by the extraordinary appearance of the ſtar, or be aſſured of by divine revelation; or rather to give him civil homage and reſpect, as an illuſtrious perſon, as being king of the Jews.

---

[x] Contr. Hæreſ. l. 3. hæreſ. 30. [y] Clio ſive l. 1. c. 101. [z] Alfiruzabadius in Pocock. Specim. Hiſt. Arab. p. 146. [a] In Ibid. [b] Apolog. p. 204. [c] Cyro Pædia, l. 8. §. 6. [d] De Abſtinentia, l. 4. §. 16. [e] De Divinatione, l. 1. [f] Hiſt. Var. l. 2. c. 17. [g] Contr. Hæreſ. l. 1. Hæreſ. 30. and l. 2. Hæreſ. 51. [h] Harmony, Vol. I. p. 205, 432, &c. [i] Harmony, p. 205, 437, 438, Vol. I. Hor. Heb. p. 109. Vol. II. [k] Targum Onk. Jon. & Aben Ezra in loc. Zohar, in Exod. fol. 4. 1. Abarbinel Maſhmia Jeſhua, fol. 4. 3. Tzeror Hamor, fol. 126. 3.

Ver. 3. When Herod the king had heard theſe things, &c.] That is, the report made by the wiſe men of the appearance of an unuſual ſtar, and of the birth of the king of the Jews, which they affirmed with all certainty, without any heſitation, he was troubled, and all Jeruſalem with him. Herod was troubled, his mind was diſturbed and made uneaſy, fearing he ſhould be depoſed, and loſe his kingdom, to which he knew he had no juſt right and claim, being a foreigner; and all Jeruſalem, i. e. all the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, who heard of this, were alſo troubled, and ſhewed a concern at it with him; either feignedly, as knowing his jealouſy, ſuſpicion and cruelty; or in reality, becauſe of tumults, commotions and wars, they might fear would ariſe upon this, having loſt the true notion of the Meſſiah, as a ſpiritual king, ſaviour and redeemer. And hereby was fulfilled, in part, the famous prophecy in Gen. xlix. 10. according to the ſenſe of one [w] of the Targumiſts on it, who paraphraſes it after this manner; "Kings and go-"vernors ſhall not ceaſe from the houſe of Judah, "nor ſcribes, who teach the law, from his ſeed, "until the time that the king Meſſiah, the leaſt of "his ſons, comes, and becauſe of him, יתימסון עממיא, "the people ſhall melt;" that is, they ſhall be diſtreſſed and troubled, their hearts ſhall melt like wax within them; which was their preſent caſe, though perhaps the paraphraſt may deſign the Gentiles.

Ver. 4. And when he had gathered all the chief prieſts, &c.] Here we have an account of Herod's conduct at this juncture; he calls a council, aſſembles the ſanhedrim, gathers together the more learned perſons in the city to conſult with them upon this matter, the chief prieſts; all of which he gathered together, and which ſeem to be many; and were not only the then preſent high-prieſt and his ſubſtitutes, but all the principal perſons of the prieſthood, who were choſen from the reſt, into the great ſanhedrim, or council: and by the ſcribes of the people are meant a ſort of letter learned men, whoſe buſineſs it was to keep and write out copies of the law, and other things, for the people; they were the fathers of the traditions, and interpreters of the law to them; and therefore are called the ſcribes of the people; as well alſo, becauſe they were choſen from among the people, from any other tribe, and not from the tribe of Levi, from whom the prieſts were; ſo that one ſeems to deſign the clergy, and the other the laity, in this aſſembly. The Septuagint render שוטרים, the officers of the people, by this ſame word the ſcribes, and ſcribes of the people, in Numb. xi. 16. Deut. xx. 5, 8, 9. Joſh. i. 10. and iii. 2. and viii. 33. and xxiii. 2. and xxiv. 1. The learned Dr. Lightfoot [x] conjectures, that the perſons of note, who were preſent at this time, were Hillell the preſident of the council, Shammai the vice-preſident, the ſons of Betira, Judah and Joſhua, Bava ben Buta, Jonathan ben Uzziel, the Chaldee paraphraſt, and Simeon the ſon of Hillell. He demanded of them, or aſked them with authority, as the chief captain did, Acts xxi. 33. where Chriſt, ὁ Χριςος, the Chriſt, the Meſſiah ſhould be born; that is, where was the place of his birth as fixed in their prophecies, where, accordingly they believed and expected he would be born. Herod's pretence, no doubt, in putting this queſtion was, that he might be able to ſatisfy the wiſe men of the Eaſt about this matter; tho' the true reaſon within himſelf was, that he might know where this new-born king was, in order to deſtroy him.

---

[l] See my book of the Prophecies of the Meſſiah, c. 7. p. 119, &c.
[m] Abulpharag. Hiſt. Dynaſt. p. 54.
[n] Ib. p. 70.
[o] Zohar. in Gen. fol. 74. 3.
[p] Ib. in Exod. fol. 3, 3, 4.
[q] Ib. in Numb. fol. 85. 4. and 86. 1.
[r] Vid. Wolf. Bibl. Heb. p. 1156.
[s] Eclog. 9. v. 47.
[t] Nat. Hiſt. l. 2. c. 25.
[u] Vid. Fabricii Bibliothec. Latin. p. 142—146.
[w] Jonathan ben Uzziel in loc.

Ver. 5. And they ſaid unto him, &c.] They anſwer without any heſitation, it being a generally received notion, and a thing well known among them, in Bethlehem of Judea; and give their reaſon for it; for thus it is written by the prophet, that is, the prophet Micah, in whoſe prophecy, ch. v. 2. it ſtands, and is as follows:

Ver. 6. And thou Bethlehem in the land of Juda, &c.] This prophecy, which the chief prieſts and ſcribes produced, as pointing at the place of Chriſt's birth, is owned by both ancient and later Jews [y] to be a prophecy of the Meſſiah. The difference between Micah and Matthew are eaſily reconciled. Bethlehem is called by Micah, Bethlehem Ephratah, and by Matthew, Bethlehem in the land of Juda, and both were one and the ſame place. Bethlehem Ephratah was in the land of Juda, as appears from the prophecy of Micah itſelf, from Ruth i. 2. and the Septuagint verſion of Joſh. xv. 60. and is deſcribed in this manner by Matthew, partly to diſtinguiſh it from another Bethlehem in the land of Zabulun, Joſh. xix. 15. and partly becauſe its other name Ephratah was now diſuſed, and ſo unknown to Herod, who was unacquainted with the books and propheſies of the Old Teſtament. Micah ſays this place was little among the thouſands of Judah. Matthew ſays, not the leaſt. But in this is no apparent contradiction, it might be little and yet not the leaſt; beſides, it might be little and not little, or not the leaſt in different reſpects, and at different times; it might be little, mean, and contemptible as to worldly ſplendor, riches, number of inhabitants, pompous buildings, &c. and yet not be little or mean, when conſidered as the place of the birth of many great perſons, ſuch as Booz, Jeſſe, David, &c. and eſpecially Chriſt. It might be little in Micah's time, and yet not in Matthew's; eſpecially ſince it had received a conſiderable additional honour by Chriſt's being born there. Moreover, the words in Micah may be rendered, by way of interrogation, art thou little, or the leaſt? To which the anſwer in Matthew is, no, thou art not the leaſt, &c. or elſe the word דבר may be underſtood, and the text be tranſlated thus; it is a ſmall thing that thou art among the thouſands of Judah, for out of thee, &c. a great honour ſhall be conferr'd on thee, the Meſſiah ſhall ſpring from thee. Again, what Micah calls thouſands, are in Matthew called princes; the reaſon of this is, becauſe the tribes of Iſrael were divided into thouſands, and every thouſand had its prince; ſo that tho' here is a difference in words, yet none in ſenſe. What Micah ſtiles a ruler in Iſrael, Matthew expreſſes by a governor that ſhall rule or feed my people Iſrael; but in this there is no contradiction. Add to all this, that it ſhould be obſerved, that the Evangeliſt is not giving a verſion of his own, but of the chief prieſts and ſcribes; and therefore was it ever ſo faulty, they, and not he, muſt be chargeable with it; for he has acted the part of a faithful hiſtorian in giving it in the words in which they cited it [z].

Ver. 7. Then Herod, when he had privately called the wiſe men, &c.] As ſoon as he had got the intelligence of the place of the Meſſiah's birth, he called, or ordered the wiſe men to be brought into his preſence, and that in a very private manner; leſt the Jews, who knew his hypocriſy and deceit, ſhould perceive his views, and enter into his deſigns, and ſo give the wiſe men ſome inſtructions, which would be prejudicial to the ſcheme he was forming in his own mind to deſtroy the young king; and having called them to him, he enquired of them diligently what time the ſtar appeared. He took a good deal of pains in examining them, he ſifted them, and enquired of them with much accuracy, and exactneſs, the preciſe time of the ſtar's appearing to them, how long ago it was when it was firſt obſerved by them; that hereby he might exactly know the age of Chriſt, and the better execute the bloody deſign he had formed, ſhould the wiſe men diſappoint him; and the better detect an impoſtor, ſhould another afterwards ariſe, and ſet up himſelf for the king of the Jews.

Ver. 8. And he ſent them to Bethlehem, &c.] Having got out of them all that he could, and was for his purpoſe, he informs them of the place where they might find the perſon they came to enquire after, according to the account of it which the chief prieſts and ſcribes had given him; and then ſends them away to Bethlehem, where Chriſt, according to prophecy, was to be born, and now was born. It may ſeem ſtrange that neither any of the Jews, nor Herod, or any of his miniſters and courtiers, ſhould go along with theſe men to Bethlehem; ſince it was but a little way off, not above five or ſix miles from Jeruſalem; and ſince the birth of ſuch a perſon was no trivial thing, but an affair of great concern and importance. The Jews might not care to go, leſt Herod ſhould ſuſpect that they were going to revolt from him, and ſet up this new-born king againſt him; and it might be a piece of policy in Herod and his courtiers not to accompany them, for they might imagine, that the parents of the child would be jealous and afraid of them, and would therefore conceal it, when they would be in no fear of ſtrangers: and no doubt but the wiſe providence of God overruled and directed this matter, that ſo the young child Jeſus might be preſerved from the bloody deſigns of this tyrant; who often takes the wiſe in their own craftineſs, and carries the counſel of the froward headlong. When he diſmiſſed them, he gave them this charge and theſe orders, go and ſearch diligently for the young child; go to Bethlehem the place of his birth, I have told you of, and there enquire and ſearch in every houſe and family, omit none till you have found him; and when ye have found him bring me word again; give me a particular account of him, who are his parents, and where he dwells, that I may come and worſhip him alſo; for they had declared, that the reaſon of their coming was to worſhip ſhip him; this he ſaid hypocritically, in order to hide and cover his bloody intentions.

---

[x] Vol. II. p. 111. [y] Targum Jon. Jarchi, Aben Ezra, Kimchi & Abendana in loc. Abarbinel Maſhmia Jeſhua, fol. 62 2. R. Iſaac Chizuk Emuna, p. 279. [z] See my book of the prophecies of the Meſſiah, &c. ch. 6. p. 104—116.

Ver. 9. When they had heard the king, &c.] With great care and attention, what he had told them of the birth-place of the young child; the ſtrict charge he had given them to ſearch diligently for him, and then return to him with an account of the whole affair; and his expreſſions of reſpect to the new-born prince, which they took to be ſaid in great ſincerity, they departed; took their leave of Herod and his court, and ſet forward on their journey from Jeruſalem to Bethlehem: and lo, to their great ſurprize and joy, the ſtar, which they ſaw in the eaſt, then appeared; for, it ſeems, it had for ſome time diſappeared: It looks as if it had been only ſeen at the time of Chriſt's birth, and when they were in their own country; for both here, and in ver. 2. they are only ſaid to have ſeen it in the eaſt, that is, when they were in the eaſt country; ſo that it ſeems from that time they had had no ſight of it, not while they were on their journey, nor at Jeruſalem; nor was it neceſſary they ſhould. When they ſaw it in their own country, according to their beſt obſervation, it was over the land of Judea, and they were perſuaded of it, that it was a certain ſign that the king of the Jews was born: they therefore determine upon and prepare for a journey to Jeruſalem, the metropolis of the nation, and where the king kept his court, to enquire for him; nor needed they the guidance of the ſtar to direct them to a place ſo well known; but being in queſt of him in an obſcure place, and without any guide, this ſtar appears to them; and, which is ſomething very extraordinary, went before them, till it came, and ſtood over, where the young child was. This ſtar had a motion, kept pace with them, and was a guide unto them, till it and they came to the place where Chriſt was; and then it ſtood directly over the houſe, ſo that they had no need to enquire of any perſon for him. It is certain from hence, that this ſtar was indeed a very unuſual one; its being ſeen in the day-time, its motion and ſtanding ſtill, its ſituation, which muſt be very low, and its uſe to point out the very houſe where Chriſt was, ſhew it to be ſo; but though it was an unuſual appearance, it ſhould not be thought incredible. [a] Varro relates, that "from the time Æneas went from Troy, " he ſaw the ſtar Venus in the day-time, day after " day, till he came to the field of Laurentum, where " he ſaw it no more, by which he knew that thoſe " lands were fatal." The appearing of this ſtar, and then its diſappearing for a time, agree, in ſome meaſure, with the account the Jews give of the ſtar which they expect will be ſeen at the coming of the Meſſiah; for they [b] ſay, "after ſeven days that ſtar " ſhall be hid, and the Meſſiah ſhall be hid for " twelve months—when he ſhall deſcend, the pillar " of fire ſhall be ſeen as before, in ſight, and after- " wards the Meſſiah ſhall be revealed, and many " people ſhall be gathered to him."

Ver. 10. When they ſaw the ſtar, &c.] Which by its appearance, ſize, brightneſs, &c. they knew to be the ſame with that which they had ſeen, when in their own country; they rejoiced with exceeding great joy; a pleonaſm or a redundancy of expreſſion frequently uſed by the Hebrews, ſee Jon. iv. 6. and the Septuagint there; ſetting forth the rapture, the exceſs of joy they were in upon the ſight of the ſtar. Very probably before this, their hearts were ſad, their countenances dejected, and they greatly diſcouraged, having taken ſo great a journey, and as yet to ſo little purpoſe. They had been at Jeruſalem, where they expected to have found him that was born king of the Jews; they had been at court, and converſed with men of the greateſt figure and intelligence, and could get no tidings of him; people of all ranks and degrees ſeemed to be troubled at the account they brought; no body cared to go along with them to Bethlehem: all theſe circumſtances no doubt were diſcouraging to them; but as ſoon as they ſaw the ſtar their ſpirits revived, joy filled their hearts, chearfulneſs appeared in their countenances; and they purſued their journey with inexpreſſible delight, till they came to the place, where the illuſtrious perſon was, they were ſeeking after.

Ver. 11. And when they were come into the houſe, &c.] Which they entered without making any enquiry, being fully aſſured by the ſtar's ſtanding right over it, that this was the houſe, and here was the king of the Jews, whom they were come to worſhip; and having entered in they ſaw; ſome copies read ευρον, they found the young child, with Mary his mother; in her lap, or arms, or in the houſe with her, for by this time he might go alone. Joſeph perhaps was not at home, but about his buſineſs; and which might be ſo ordered by the providence of God, that ſo theſe men might only ſee the mother of Chriſt, who had no real father as man; who, had they ſeen Joſeph, might have took him to be his proper father. Upon the ſight of the young child, they fell down on their knees or faces to the ground, agreeable to the cuſtom of their country, and worſhipped him as a king; giving him the ſame civil honour and reſpect, as they were wont to do to their own kings and princes; which cuſtom began with Cyrus: for ſo Xenophon [c] ſays, that "when the people ſaw " him, παντες προσεκυνησαν, they all worſhipped him; " either becauſe ſome were ordered to begin this " cuſtom; or elſe being amazed at the apparatus; " or becauſe he ſeemed to appear ſo great and beau- " tiful; for before that time none of the Perſians " worſhipped Cyrus." And when they had opened their treaſures, that is, their purſes, bags or boxes, in which they put thoſe things they brought with them neceſſary for their journey; they preſented, or offered to him gifts, gold, frankincenſe and myrrh; ſuch things as they had; it being uſual, not only with the Perſians, but other eaſtern nations, to make preſents to kings and great perſons, when they made any addreſſes to them; which generally, among other things, conſiſted of gold, ſpices, myrrh, and the like, ſee Gen. xliii. 11. 1 Kings x. 2. Pſ. lxxii. 10—15. Which laſt paſſage referred to, being a prophecy of the Meſſiah, has been thought by ſome now to have had its accompliſhment, together with Iſ. lx. 6. where frankincenſe as well as gold is mentioned, they ſhall bring gold and incenſe, or frankincenſe; upon which a noted Jewiſh writer [d] obſerves, that gold and frankincenſe ſhall be brought privately as a preſent to the king Meſſiah. According to the Ethiopians, theſe wiſe men were three, whoſe names they give us; the name of him that offered the gold, was Annoſon; he that offered the frankincenſe, was Allytar; and he that offered the myrrh, Kyſſad [e]. The Papiſts call them the three kings of Colen, and ſay they lie buried in that place.

Ver. 12. Being warned of God in a dream, &c.] It is likely they made a ſhort ſtay at Bethlehem, might lodge there a night; at leaſt laid themſelves down a while to take ſome refreſhment in ſleep, after they had paid their reſpects to him that was born king of the Jews, and performed the whole buſineſs they came about; when in a dream they received a divine oracle, were admoniſhed and counſelled by God, that they ſhould not return to Herod; which would have been going back again, and out of their way; there being a nearer one from Bethlehem to their own country, than to go by Jeruſalem, tho' Herod had charged them to return to him. Whether they had promiſed him they would, is not certain; it is probable they might; however, they thought it moſt adviſeable to hearken to the divine oracle; wherefore, they departed into their own country another way. What became of theſe perſons afterwards, and whether they were ſpiritually and ſavingly enlightened into the knowledge of Chriſt; what a report they made of him when they came into their own country, and the ſucceſs thereof, we have no account of, either in ſacred or profane hiſtory.

---

[a] Apud Servium in Virgil. Æneid. l. 1. p. 471. Ed. Baſil. 1586.

[b] Zohar in Exod. fol. 3, 4. & 71. 1.

[c] Cyropædeia, l. 8. § 23.

[d] R. David Kimchi.

[e] Ludolph. Lex. Ethiop. p. 539, 542, 543.

Ver. 13. And when they were departed, &c.] That is immediately, or as ſoon as they were gone, or in a very little time after, probably the ſame night, behold, the Angel of the Lord appeareth to Joſeph in a dream; it is very likely the ſame angel who appeared to him in ſuch ſort, ch. i. 20. ſaying ariſe, awake out of ſleep, and riſe from thy bed directly, and take the young child and his mother. The angel does not ſay take thy wife and ſon; for though Mary was properly his wife, yet Chriſt was not properly his ſon. The child is alſo mentioned before the mother, not only becauſe of his divine nature and office, in reſpect to which he was her God and Saviour; but becauſe it was the preſervation of the child that was chiefly regarded, and for which the providence of God was particularly concerned: wherefore Joſeph is ordered to take them in proper carriages, and flee into Egypt, which was near to Judea, and ſo a fit place to flee to; for a long and tedious journey would not have been ſuitable to the mother and her young child. Moreover, Egypt was out of Herod's juriſdiction; here he could not come at them, or have any power over them; beſides, hereby a prophecy after mentioned was to have its accompliſhment. Hence it appears to be lawful to flee from danger, from tyrants and perſecutors, when the providence of God opens a way for eſcape. The angel goes on with his charge, and be thou there until I bring thee word; continue there, don't remove elſewhere, or return back, till I ſpeak with thee, or order and command thee otherwiſe; and gives the reaſon for his appearing to him in ſuch a manner, and giving ſuch a charge; for Herod will ſeek the young child to deſtroy him: no leſs a perſon than Herod the king, a bloody-minded man, revengeful, deſperate, and reſolute in whatſoever he undertakes, will ſeek, diligently ſearch and enquire for, not his parents, Joſeph and Mary, who might have been ſafe, but the young child, who was born king of the Jews, and which gave him a great deal of uneaſineſs; and that not to worſhip him, as he told the wiſe men, but to deſtroy him, to take away his life; to prevent which the angel was ſent with this charge to Joſeph: for tho' he was born to die for the ſins of his people, his time was not yet come; he was to grow up to years of maturity, he was to be a preacher of the Goſpel, to do many miracles, and at laſt to lay down his life of himſelf, voluntarily, and not to be taken away from him without his knowledge and will.

Ver. 14. When he aroſe, he took the young child and his mother, &c.] That is, as ſoon as he awoke out of ſleep, and roſe from his bed, he did as he was commanded, he prepared for his journey; and very opportunely had the wiſe men preſented their gifts; the gold they brought ſerved to defray the expence of this journey, and which no doubt was ſo ordered by divine providence for this purpoſe. Joſeph was very punctual and expeditious in obeying the command of God; he took the young child and his mother, by night, the very ſelf-ſame night in which he had this notice; and which ſeaſon was the moſt fitting to depart in for ſecrecy, and moſt commodious and agreeable to travel in, in thoſe hot countries: hence it appears very manifeſt, that the coming of the wiſe men, and the departure of Joſeph with Mary and Jeſus into Egypt, could not be within a fortnight after the birth of Chriſt, nor any time before Mary's purification; ſince ſuch a journey muſt have been very improper and unſuitable, at any time within that period; but rather Jeſus muſt be about two years of age, whether ſomething under, or over, it matters not, when Joſeph with him departed into Egypt: what part of Egypt he went into is not certain. The Jews ſay that Jeſus went to Alexandria in Egypt, and which is probable enough; ſince this was a place greatly reſorted to at this time by Jews, and where proviſion was made for their ſuſtenance; tho' they greatly miſtake the perſon with whom he went; for they ſay [f] that R. Joſhua ben Perachiah, whom they pretend was his maſter, went to Alexandria in Egypt, and Jeſus with him. However, this is an acknowledgment of the truth of this part of Chriſt's hiſtory, that he was in Egypt; as alſo when they blaſphemouſly and maliciouſly ſay [g], did not Ben Stada, by whom they mean Jeſus, bring enchantments or magic, כשפים ממצרים, out of Egypt, in a cutting in the fleſh? To which wicked accuſation Arnobius ſeems to refer [h], when he ſays, "perhaps we may meet with many other of theſe "reproachful and childiſh ſayings; as that he was a "magician, that he performed all theſe things by "ſecret arts, and that he ſtole ſtrange ſciences, and "the names of mighty angels, out of the temples "of the Egyptians."

Ver. 15. And was there until the death of Herod, &c.] Which was in a very ſhort time; for Euſebius [i] ſays, that immediately, in a very little time after the ſlaughter of the children at Bethlehem, the divine vengeance inflicted diſeaſes on him, which quickly brought him to his end; ſo that, according to the learned Dr. Lightfoot [k], Jeſus was not above three or four months in Egypt. Now all this was brought about, that it might be fulfilled; not by way of accommodation of phraſes to a like event; or by way of type, which has a freſh completion in the antitype; or as a proverbial ſentence which might be adapted to any remarkable deliverance out of hardſhip, miſery and deſtruction; but literally, properly, and in the obvious ſenſe thereof; which was ſpoken of the Lord by the prophet, not Balaam, in Numb. xxiii. 22. or xxiv. 8. but Hoſea, in ch. xi. 1. when Iſrael was a child, then I loved him, and called my ſon out of Egypt: the meaning of which paſſage is, either in connexion with the laſt clauſe of the foregoing chapter thus; in a morning ſhall the king of Iſrael be cut off, כי נער, becauſe Iſrael is a child, a rebellious and diſobedient one, acting a very weak and wicked part; yet I have loved him, or do love him, and have called, or will call, (the paſt tenſe for the future, frequent in the Hebrew language, eſpecially in the prophetic writings) my ſon out of Egypt; who will be obliged to retire there for ſome time; I'll make him king, ſet him upon the throne, who ſhall execute juſtice, and reign for ever and ever; or thus, becauſe Iſrael is a child,

---

[f] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 107. 2. Cabala R. Abraham. Juchaſin, fol. 16. 2.

[g] T. Hieroſ. Sabbat, fol. 13. 1. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 104. 2.

[h] Adv. Gentes, l. 1. p. 36.

[i] Hiſt. Eccl. l. 1. c. 8. p. 25, 26.

[k] Harmony of the New Teſtament, p. 6.

child, helpleſs and imprudent, and I love him, tho' he is ſo, therefore I will call, or I have determined to call my ſon out of Egypt; who thro' a tyrant's rage and malice will be obliged to abide there a while; yet I'll bring him from thence into the land of Judea, where he ſhall live and help my ſervant, παιδὸς, [l] child Iſrael; ſhall inſtruct him in his duty, teach him the doctrines of the Goſpel; and at laſt, by his ſufferings and death, procure for him the pardon of all his tranſgreſſions; of which there is a particular enumeration in ver. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. This is the natural and unconſtrained ſenſe of theſe words, which juſtifies the Evangeliſt in his citation and application of them to Chriſt's going to Egypt, and his return from thence, as I have elſewhere [m] ſhewn.

Ver. 16. Then Herod, when he ſaw that he was mocked, &c.] Herod, having waited a proper time for the return of the wiſe men, and they not coming, concluded he was tricked by them; though, no doubt, when they promiſed to return, and bring him word how things were, they ſeriouſly meant and deſigned a performance; but having met with a divine oracle, which ordered them another way, they thought it moſt adviſeable to obey God rather than man. Upon this, Herod was exceeding wroth; partly at the uſage he met with from the wiſe men, who, according to his apprehenſion, had put a trick upon him; and chiefly becauſe his ſcheme was broke, which was by them to come at the knowledge and ſight of the young child, and privately diſpatch him: and now he might fear, which increaſed his wrath, that the child would eſcape his hands, and in time be ſet up for king, to the prejudice of him and his family; wherefore, to prevent this, if poſſible, he ſent forth his officers and ſoldiers, of his own will, without any ſhew of law or juſtice, acting herein as an abſolute and tyrannical prince, and ſlew all the children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the coaſts thereof, from two years old and under. A moſt cruel and barbarous action, and agrees with the character given of him, that he was in the beginning of his reign, and it ſeems too in the latter end of it, איש דמים ומרמה, a bloody and deceitful man [n]: he ſlew, or ordered to be ſlain, children, infants who had done him no injury, nor were capable of doing any, and whoſe parents alſo had not diſobliged him; he ſlew the infants at Bethlehem, becauſe this was the place of the Meſſiah's birth, the knowledge of which he had got from the chief prieſts and ſcribes; he ſlew all of them, that there might be no poſſibility of the young child's eſcaping; and leſt it ſhould by any means eſcape to a neighbouring town or village, he ſlew all the children in all the coaſts thereof, in all the territories of Bethlehem, in all the towns and villages around it, as many as were from two years old and under: for of ſuch an age he ſuppoſed the new-born king to be; he knew he muſt be near that age, but could not exceed it, according to the time which he had diligently enquired of the wiſe men; of the appearing of the ſtar to them, and when they concluded this great and famous prince was born. This cruel murder of the infants ſeems to be hinted at by Joſephus [o], where he ſays, that many ſlaughters followed the prediction of a new king; and is more manifeſtly referr'd to by Macrobius, a Heathen author, tho' the ſtory is mixed and confounded with other things; who reports [p], that "when Auguſtus heard, "that among the children under two years of age, "whom Herod king of the Jews ordered to be ſlain "in Syria, that his ſon was alſo killed, ſaid, it was "better to be Herod's hog than his ſon." Killing of infants as ſoon as born, or while in their cradles, is by the Jews aſcribed to one Lilith, which, R. Elias [q] ſays, is the name of a devil, which kills children; and indeed ſuch an action is truly a diabolical one.

Ver. 17, 18. Then was fulfilled that which was ſpoken, &c.] By the ſlaughter of the infants at Bethlehem, was literally accompliſhed, what had been predicted by Jeremy the prophet, in ch. xxxi. 15. in Rama was there a voice heard, &c. That this prophecy belongs not to the Babyloniſh captivity, but the times of the Meſſiah, appears from the whole context; which manifeſtly ſpeaks of the miraculous conception of Chriſt, of the bleſſings of his kingdom to be enjoyed by his people, and of the new covenant to be made with them, as I have ſhewn in another place [r]. Rama was not in Arabia, as Juſtin Martyr ſays [s], but a town in the tribe of Benjamin, Joſh. xviii. 25. and very near to Bethlehem in the tribe of Juda: between theſe two places, and near to both of them, was the grave of Rachel, Gen. xxxiv. 19. for which reaſon, and alſo, becauſe Rama belonged to Benjamin, a ſon of hers, and where, no doubt, many children were deſtroyed in this maſſacre, as well as at Bethlehem, Rachel is introduced in the prophecy perſonating the ſorrowful mothers of thoſe parts, weeping for their children; whoſe diſtreſs and grief are ſignified by ſeveral words, lamentation, weeping, and great mourning, to expreſs the exceſſiveneſs thereof, for they would not be comforted; they refuſed to hear any thing that might be ſuggeſted to them for their relief, becauſe their children were not, i. e. were dead, were not in the land of the living, and no more to be enjoyed by them in this world. I can't forbear tranſcribing a remark made by a noted Jew [t] upon that paſſage in Gen. xxxv. 20. And Jacob ſet a pillar upon her grave; to ſhew, ſays he, that Jacob ſaw that this thing was of the Lord, and that it would be an help to her children, as it is written, a voice was heard in Rama, &c. wherefore he ſet a pillar upon her; and to ſhew that the affair of her grave, that this היתה לעתיד, belonged to the time to come, he ſays, that is the pillar of Rachel's grave unto this day; he means, יום הגאולה, the day of redemption. And Rachel, in the paſſage of Jeremy, the Jews [u] themſelves own, means the congregation of Iſrael.

Ver. 19. But when Herod was dead, &c.] Who died, as before obſerved, a few months after this tragedy was acted; and, according to the [w] Jewiſh writers, on the ſeventh day of the month Ciſleu, and which anſwers to the twenty-fifth of our November; and was afterwards obſerved as a day of rejoicing by the Jews. The account which Joſephus [x], and from him Euſebius [y], give of his miſerable death, is as follows; a burning fever ſeized him, with an intolerable itching all over his body, and continual pains of the cholick; his feet ſwelled with a dropſy; he had an inflamation in the lower part of his belly; a putrefaction in his privy parts, which bred worms; a frequency and difficulty of breathing, and convulſions in all his members; he had a voracious appetite, a ſtinking breath, and his inteſtines abounded with ulcers; when he found that all means made uſe of were ineffectual, and that he muſt die, he attempted to lay violent hands upon himſelf, but was prevented, and ſoon after expired in a very miſerable manner.

---

[l] Luke i. 54. [m] Prophecies of the Meſſiah, &c. p. 123, &c. [n] Ganz. Tzemach David, par. 1. fol. 25. 1. [o] Antiq. l. 17. c 3. [p] Saturnal, l. 2. c 4. [q] Methurgeman in voce לילית. Vid. Buxtorf. Lexicon Rab. in eadem voce & Synagog. Jud. c. 4. p. 80. [r] Prophecies of the Meſſiah, &c. p. 126, &c. [s] Dialog. cum Tryph. p. 304. [t] R. Abraham Seba Tzeror Hammor, fol. 47. 1. [u] Zohar in Exod. fol 13. 1. & in Lev. fol. 8. 4. [w] Megillah Taanith apud Van Till. de anno, &c. Chriſt. Nat. p. 122. [x] De Bello Judaic. l. 1. c. 33. § 5. 7. & Antiq. l. 17. c. 9. [y] Eccl. Hiſt. l. 1. c. 8. p. 25, 26.

Now ſome time after his death, behold an angel of the Lord appeareth in a dream to Joſeph in Egypt. It may be the ſame angel who appeared in the ſame manner, and ordered him to go into Egypt, with the young child and his mother; and who now brings him news of the death of Herod, and bids him return to the land of Iſrael; which ſhews the watchful providence of God, and the uſeful miniſtry of angels, concerned in the preſervation of the infant Jeſus.

Ver. 20. Saying, ariſe, and take the young child and his mother, &c.] Joſeph ſtrictly obſerved and obeyed the divine command of the angel, who had ordered him to continue in Egypt, till he brought him word what he ſhould do, and where he ſhould go: here he was with Mary and Jeſus, when the angel bid him ariſe, and take them with him, and go into the land of Iſrael. He does not bid him go to Bethlehem, or Nazareth, or any particular place, but the land of Iſrael, where he might go even into any part of it, without fear; and gives this reaſon for it, for they are dead which ſought the young child's life; meaning either Herod only, the plural number being put for the ſingular; or including Antipater his ſon with him, who might be equally concerned in ſeeking the life of Chriſt; ſince he was next heir, and whom Herod [z] ordered to be ſlain about five days before his death; or elſe deſigning with him many of the executioners of the infants at Bethlehem, and thereabout; who might have been, as well as he, miſerable inſtances of divine vengeance, for their concern in that barbarous tragedy.

Ver. 21. And he aroſe and took the young child and his mother, &c.] He exactly conformed in every circumſtance to the orders given him, with reſpect to the perſons he took, the place he went to, and the expeditiouſneſs of doing it; and is an example of ready and chearful obedience to the commands of God, worthy of imitation. We may learn from hence, as well as from ſome other inſtances already met with, a reaſon among others, why, though Mary was a virgin, and even if ſhe was to continue ſo, yet ſhe muſt be eſpouſed to Joſeph as her huſband; that ſhe might have one to take care of her and her young child, and be a means, under God, of preſerving, protecting, and providing for them.

Ver. 22. But when he heard that Archelaus, &c.] This Archelaus was a ſon of Herod the great by Malthace a Samaritan, and was appointed by him for his ſucceſſor a little before his death, and was upon it declared king by the populace, the ſoldiers, and thoſe that were in power; all which is affirmed by Joſephus [a], and confirms the account given by the Evangeliſt; with whoſe account agrees what the Jewiſh chronologer ſays [b], that “Archelaus the ſecond king of the family of Herod, reigned after his father's death: and a little after he ſays, Cæſar Auguſtus cauſed Archelaus to reign תחת אביו הורדוס in the room of Herod his father;” which is the very phraſe uſed by Matthew. Now this man was like his father, a very cruel wicked man; and, as the above chronologer ſays [c], he ordered his troops, and ſlew at the feaſt of the paſſover, in the temple of the Lord, nine thouſand perſons: though perhaps Joſephus's account is trueſt, who ſays [d], that he ſent in his whole army upon the people, who had raiſed a ſedition, and ſlew, whilſt they were ſacrificing, about three thouſand; and this happened at the beginning of his reign, and indeed before he had ſcarce mounted the throne. And now the news of this might have reached the ears of Joſeph, and be the reaſon why he was afraid to go thither, into Judea, where Archelaus reigned. Notwithſtanding being warned of God in a dream, who never failed to adviſe him when in difficulty and diſtreſs, he did not go back again to Egypt, but turned aſide into the parts of Galilee; where Herod Antipas, another of Herod's ſons, was tetrarch or governor; who was a milder perſon, and not ſo cruel and tyrannical as Archelaus: beſides, Galilee was an obſcure place, where, Joſeph might reaſonably think, he ſhould live with Mary and Jeſus unobſerved, and free from danger.

Ver. 23. And he came and dwelt in a city called Nazareth, &c.] Which was a city of Galilee, and where Joſeph and Mary had both dwelt before, Luke i. 26. and ii. 4. here they came and fixed their habitation, that it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by the prophet. This affair of going into Galilee, and ſettling at Nazareth, was brought about with this view, to accompliſh what had been foretold by the prophets, or prophet, the plural number being uſed for the ſingular, as in John vi. 45. Acts xiii. 40. And indeed it is ſo rendered here in the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions; and deſigns the prophet Iſaiah, and reſpects that prophecy of his in ch. xi. 1. and there ſhall come forth a rod out of the ſtem of Jeſſe, and נצר, a branch ſhall grow out of his roots; a prophecy owned by the Jews [e] themſelves to belong to the Meſſiah, and which was now fulfilled in Jeſus; who as he was deſcended from Jeſſe's family, ſo by dwelling at Nazareth, he would appear to be, and would be called a Nazarene, or Netzer, the branch; being an inhabitant of Natzareth, or Netzer, ſo called from the multitude of plants and trees that grew there. “A Nazarene, as David de Pomis ſays [f], “is one that is born in the city Netzer, which is ſaid to be in the land of Galilee, three days journey diſtant from Jeruſalem.” Now tho' Chriſt was not born, yet becauſe he dwelt at Nazareth, and was educated there; hence the Jews frequently call him ישוע הנוצרי, Jeſus the Nazarene [g]; and ſometimes only הנוצרי, the Nazarene [h]. They alſo deſign him by בן נצר, Ben Netzer [i], of whom they ſay a great many evil things: and that Chriſt is often called Jeſus of Nazareth, or the Nazarene, and his followers Nazarenes, from the place of his habitation, is known to every one. One of Chriſt's diſciples is called Netzer in the Talmud [k], and made to plead for his life, becauſe his name ſignified a branch, according to Iſ. xi. 1. Surenhuſius obſerves [l], that the form לקיום מה שנאמר, to fulfil what is ſaid, uſed by the Talmudiſts, and which he takes to be the ſame with this here, is uſed by them, when they alledge not the very words of Moſes, or the prophets, but their ſenſe, which is deduced as a certain axiom from them; and thinks it is applicable to the preſent caſe.

---

[z] Joſeph. de Bello Judaico, l. 1. c. 33. §. 8, 9.
[a] Ib. c. 28. §. 7. & c. 33. §. 1. & l. 2. c. 1. §. 1.
[b] Ganz. Tzemach David, par. 1. fol. 25. 1.
[c] Ib.
[d] De Bello Jud. l. 2. c. 1. §. 5.
[e] Targum, Jarchi, Aben Ezra & Kimchi in loc.
[f] Lexic. Heb. fol. 141. 2.
[g] T. Bab. Avoda Zara, fol. 17. 1. Ganz. par. 2. fol. 14. 2. Abarbinel in Dan. fol. 44. 1.
[h] Ganz. par. 1. fol. 24. 2.
[i] T. Bab. Cetuboth, fol. 51. 2. & Gloſſ. in ib. Bereſhith Rabba, fol. 67. 2. Abarbinel in Dan. fol. 44. 1.
[k] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 43. 1.
[l] Biblos Katallages, p. 2, 3, 4, 197, &c.

CHAP.

CHAP. III.

Ver. 1. I*N thoſe days came John the Baptiſt*, &c.] The Evangeliſt having given an account of the genealogy and birth of Chriſt; of the coming of the wiſe men from the eaſt to him; of his preſervation from Herod's bloody deſign againſt him, when all the infants at Bethlehem were ſlain; of the flight of Joſeph with Mary and Jeſus into Egypt, and of their return from thence, and ſettlement in Nazareth, where Chriſt continued till near the time of his baptiſm, and entrance on his public miniſtry; proceeds to give a brief relation of John, the harbinger and forerunner of Chriſt, and the adminiſtrator of baptiſm to him: and he deſcribes him by his name John, in Hebrew יוחנן, Jochanan, which ſignifies gracious, or the grace of the Lord, or the Lord has given grace; which agrees with him, both as a good man, on whom the Lord had beſtowed much grace, and as a preacher, whoſe buſineſs it was to publiſh the grace of God in Chriſt, Luke xvi. 16. This name was given him by an angel before his conception, and by his parents at his birth, contrary to the mind of their relations and neighbours, Luke i. 13—60, 63. He is called by ſome of the Jewiſh writers [m], John the high-prieſt; his father Zacharias was a prieſt of the courſe of Abia, and he might ſucceed him therein, and be the head of that courſe, and for that reaſon be called a high or chief prieſt; as we find ſuch were called, who were the principal among the prieſts, as were thoſe who were choſen into the ſanhedrim, or were the heads of theſe courſes; and therefore we read of many chief prieſts, Matt. ii. 4. From his being the firſt adminiſtrator of the ordinance of baptiſm, he is called John the Baptiſt; and this was a well-known title and character of him. Joſephus [n] calls him John, who is ſurnamed ὁ Βαπτιστὴς, the Baptiſt; and Ben Gorion having ſpoken of him, ſays [o], this is that John who עשה טבילה, made, inſtituted, or practiſed baptiſm; and which, by the way, ſhews that this was not in uſe among the Jews before, but that John was the firſt practiſer this way. He is deſcribed by his work and office as a preacher, he came or was preaching the doctrines of repentance and baptiſm; he publiſhed and declared that the kingdom of the Meſſiah was at hand, that he would quickly be revealed; and exhorted the people to believe on him, which ſhould come after him. The place where he preached, is mentioned, in the Wilderneſs of Judea; not that he preached to trees and to the wild beaſts of the deſert; for the wilderneſs of Judea was an habitable place, and had in it many cities, towns, and villages, in which we muſt ſuppoſe John came preaching, at leaſt to perſons which came out from thence. There were in Joſhua's time ſix cities in this wilderneſs, namely Betharabah, Middin, and Secacab, and Nibſhan, and the city of Salt, and Engedi, Joſh. xv. 61, 62. Mention is made in the Talmud [p] of this wilderneſs of Judea, as diſtinct from the land of Iſrael, when the doctors ſay, that “ they don't bring up ſmall “ cattle in the land of Iſrael, but they bring them “ up במדבר שביהודה, in the wilderneſs which in “ Judea.” The Jews have an obſervation [q] of many things coming from the wilderneſs; “ the “ law, they ſay, came from the wilderneſs; the ta“ bernacle from the wilderneſs; the ſanhedrim from “ the wilderneſs; the prieſthood from the wilder“ neſs; the office of the Levites from the wilder“ neſs; the kingdom from the wilderneſs; and all “ the good gifts which God gave to Iſrael were “ from the wilderneſs.” So John came preaching here, and Chriſt was tempted here. The time of his appearance and preaching was in thoſe days; not when Chriſt was newly born; or when the wiſe men paid their adoration to him; or when Herod ſlew the infants; or when he was juſt dead, and Archelaus reigned in his room; or when Chriſt firſt went to Nazareth; though it was whilſt he dwelt there as a private perſon; but when John was about thirty years of age, and Chriſt was near unto it, Luke iii. 23. an age in which eccleſiaſtical perſons entered into ſervice, Numb. iv. 3. It was indeed, as Luke ſays, ch. iii. 1. in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Cæſar; Pontius Pilate being governor of Judea; and Herod being tetrarch of Galilee; and his brother Philip tetrarch of Iturea, and of the region of Trachonitis; and Lyſanias, the tetrarch of Abilene; Annas and Caiaphas being the high-prieſts.

Ver. 2. And ſaying, repent ye, &c.] The Doctrine which John preached was the doctrine of repentance; which may be underſtood either of amendment of life and manners; for the ſtate of the Jews was then very corrupt, all ſorts of men were grown very wicked; and though there was a generation among them, who were righteous in their own eyes, and needed no repentance; yet John calls upon them all, without any diſtinction, to repent; and hereby tacitly ſtrikes at the doctrine of juſtification by works, which they had embraced, to which the doctrine of repentance is directly oppoſite: or rather, this is meant, as the word here uſed ſignifies, of a change of mind, and principles. The Jews had imbibed many bad notions. The Phariſees held the traditions of the elders, and the doctrine of juſtification by the works of the law; and the Sadducees denied the reſurrection of the dead; and it was a prevailing opinion among them all, and ſeems to be what is particularly ſtruck at by John, that the Meſſiah would be a temporal king, and ſet up an earthly kingdom in this world. Wherefore he exhorts them to change their minds, to relinquiſh this notion; aſſuring them, that though he would be a king, and would have a kingdom, which was near at hand, yet it would be an heavenly, and not an earthly one. Hence the manner in which John enforces his doctrine, or the reaſon and argument he uſes to prevail upon them to regard it, is by ſaying, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand: by which is meant not the kingdom of glory to be expected in another world; or the kingdom of grace, that is, internal grace, which only believers are partakers of in this; but the kingdom of the Meſſiah, which was at hand, juſt ready to appear, when he would be made manifeſt in Iſrael, and enter upon his work and office: 'tis the goſpel diſpenſation which was about to take place, and is ſo called; becauſe of the wiſe and orderly management of it under Chriſt, the king and head of his church, by the miniſtration of the word, and adminiſtration of ordinances; whereby, as means, ſpiritual and internal grace would be communicated to many, in whoſe hearts it would reign and make them meet for the kingdom of glory; and becauſe the whole œconomy of the goſpel, the doctrines and ordinances of it are from heaven. This phraſe, the kingdom of heaven, is often to be met with in Jewiſh writings; and ſometimes it ſtands oppoſed to the kingdom of the earth [r]; by it is often meant the worſhip, ſervice, fear, and love of God, and faith in him: thus in one of their books [s] having mentioned thoſe words, ſerve the Lord with fear; it is aſked, what means this phraſe, with fear? 'Tis anſwered, the ſame as it is written, the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wiſdom; and this is מלכות שמים the kingdom of heaven. And elſewhere they [t] aſk, what is the kingdom of heaven? To which is anſwered, the Lord our God is one Lord. Yea, the Lord God himſelf is ſo called [u], and ſometimes the ſanctuary; and ſometimes they intend by it the times of the Meſſiah, as the Baptiſt here does; for ſo they paraphraſe [w] thoſe words, "the time of the "ſinging of birds, or of pruning is come; the time "for Iſrael to be redeemed is come; the time for "the uncircumciſion to be cut off is come; the "time that the kingdom of the Cuthites (Samari- "tans or Heathens) ſhall be conſumed is come; "and the time של מלכות שמים שתגלה that the "kingdom of heaven ſhall be revealed is come, as it "is written, and the Lord ſhall be king over all the "earth." Very pertinently does John make uſe of this argument to engage to repentance; ſince there can't be a greater motive to it, whether it regards ſorrow for ſin, and confeſſion of it, or a change of principles and practice, than the grace of God through Chriſt, which is exhibited in the Goſpel diſpenſation: and very appoſitely does he urge repentance previous to the kingdom of heaven; becauſe without that, there can be no true and cordial embracing or entering into the Goſpel diſpenſation, or kingdom of heaven; that is, no real and hearty receiving the doctrines, and ſubmitting to the ordinances of it. Nor ought the Jews above all people to object to John's method of preaching; ſince they make repentance abſolutely neceſſary to the revelation of the Meſſiah and his kingdom, and redemption by him; for they ſay [x] in ſo many words, that "if Iſrael do not repent, they will "never be redeemed; but as ſoon as they repent, "they will be redeemed; yea, if they repent but "one day, immediately the ſon of David will "come."

---

[m] Ganz. Tzemach David, par. 1. fol. 25. 2. Chronicon Regum, fol. 54. 4. [n] Antiq. l. 18. c. 7. [o] L. 5. c. 45.
[p] T. Bab. Bava Kama, fol. 79. 2. [q] Shirhaſhirim Rabba, fol. 13. 3.

Ver. 3. For this is he that was ſpoken of, &c.] Theſe are not the words of the Baptiſt himſelf, as in John i. 23. but of the Evangeliſt, who cites and applies to John a paſſage in the Prophet Iſaiah, in ch. xl. 3. and that very pertinently, ſince that chapter is a prophecy of the Meſſiah. The conſolations ſpoken of in ver. 1, 2. were to be in the days of the king Meſſiah, as a writer of note [y] among the Jews obſerves. The Meſſiah is more expreſly propheſied of in ver. 9, 10, 11. as one that ſhould appear to the joy of his people, and come with a ſtrong hand, vigorouſly proſecute his deſigns, faithfully perform his work, and then receive his reward; he is ſpoken of under the character of a ſhepherd, who would tenderly diſcharge the ſeveral parts of his office as ſuch, which character is frequently given to the Meſſiah in the Old Teſtament: now the perſon ſpoken of in ver. 3. was to be his harbinger to go before him, proclaim and make ready for his coming; and what is ſaid of him agrees entirely with John the Baptiſt, as the character given of him, the voice of one crying, βοῶντος, lowing like an ox; which expreſſes the auſterity of the man, the roughneſs of his voice, the ſeverity of his language; that he called aloud and ſpoke out, openly, publickly, and freely; and that he delivered himſelf in preaching with a great deal of zeal and fervency. The place, where he preached was, in the wilderneſs, that is, of Judea, where he is ſaid before, in ver. 1. to come preaching. The doctrine he preached was, prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths ſtraight, which is beſt explained by what is ſaid before, in ver. 2. repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. The Lord whom ye have ſought, the Meſſiah whom you have expected, is juſt coming, he will quickly appear; prepare to meet him by repentance, and receive him by faith, relinquiſh your former notions and principles, correct your errors, and amend your lives, remove all out of the way which may be offenſive to him. The alluſion is to a great perſonage being about to make his publick appearance or entrance; when a harbinger goes before him, orders the way to be cleared, all impediments to be removed, and every thing got ready for the reception of him.

Ver. 4. The ſame John had his raiment, &c.] The Evangeliſt goes on to deſcribe this excellent perſon, the forerunner of our Lord, by his raiment; the ſame John of whom Iſaiah propheſied, and who came preaching the doctrine in the place and manner before expreſſed, had his raiment of camel's hair; not of camel's hair ſoftened and dreſſed, which the Talmudiſts [z] call צמר גמלים camel's wool; of which wool of camels and of hares, the Jews ſay [a] the coats were made, with which God cloathed Adam and Eve; and which being ſpun to a thread, and wove, and made a garment of, they call [b] חמילה, and we camblet; for this would have been too fine and ſoft for John to wear, which is denied of him, Matt. xi. 8. but either of a camel's ſkin with the hair on it, ſuch was the rough garment, or garment of hair, the Prophets uſed to wear, Zech. xiii. 4. or of camel's hair not ſoftened but undreſſed; and ſo was very coarſe and rough, and which was ſuitable to the auſterity of his life, and the roughneſs of his miniſtry. And it is to be obſerved he appeared in the ſame dreſs as Elijah or Elias did, 2 Kings i. 8. in whoſe ſpirit and power he came, and whoſe name he bore, Luke i. 17. Matt. xi. 14. And a leathern girdle about his loins; and ſuch an one alſo Elijah was girt with, 2 Kings i. 8. and which added to the roughneſs of his garment, though it ſhews he was prepared and in a readineſs to do the work he was ſent about. And his meat was locuſts and wild honey; by the locuſts ſome have thought are meant a ſort of fiſh called crabs, which John found upon the banks of Jordan, and lived upon; others, that a ſort of wild fruit, or the tops of trees and plants he found in the wilderneſs and fed on, are deſigned; but the truth is, theſe were a ſort of creatures called locuſts, and which by the ceremonial law were lawful to be eaten, ſee Lev. xi. 22. The Miſnic doctors [c] deſcribe ſuch as are fit to be eaten after this manner; "all that have "four feet and four wings, and whoſe thighs and "wings cover the greateſt part of their body, and "whoſe name is חגב a locuſt." For it ſeems they muſt not only have theſe marks and ſigns, but muſt be ſo called, or by a word in any other language which anſwers to it, as the commentators [d] on this paſſage obſerve; and very frequently do theſe writers ſpeak [e] of locuſts that are clean, and may be eaten. Maimonides [f] reckons up eight ſorts of them, which might be eaten according to the law. Beſides, theſe were eaten by people of other nations, particularly the Ethiopians [g], Parthians [h], and Lybians [i]. And wild honey: this was honey of bees, which were not kept at home, but ſuch as were in the woods and fields; of this ſort was that which Jonathan found, and eat of, 1 Sam. xiv. 25, 26, 27. now the honey of bees might be eat, according to the Jewiſh laws [k], though bees themſelves might not.

---

[r] Bereſhit Rabba, fol. 7. 4.
[s] Zohar in Exod. fol. 39. 2.
[t] Debarim Rabba, fol. 237. 2.
[u] Zohar in Gen. fol. 112. 3.
[w] Shirhaſhirim Rabba, fol. 11. 4.
[x] T. Hieroſ. Taanith, fol. 63. 4. & 64. 1. & Bab. Sanhed. fol. 97. 2.
[y] R. David Kimchi in Iſa. xl. 1.
[z] Miſn. Negaim c. 11. §. 2. & Kilaim, c. 9. §. 1. Talmud. Bab. Menachot, fol. 39. 2.
[a] Bereſhit Rabba, fol. 18. 2.
[b] T. Hieroſ. Nedarim, fol. 40. 3.
[c] Miſn. Cholin. c. 3. §. 7.
[d] Maimon. & Bartenora in ib.
[e] Miſn. Beracot, c. 6. §. 3. Terumot. c. 10. §. 9. & Ediot. c. 7. §. 2. & 8. 4.
[f] Maacolot Aſurot, c. 1. §. 21.

Ver. 5. Then went out to him Jeruſalem, &c.] The uncommon appearance of this perſon, the oddneſs of his dreſs, the auſterity of his life, together with the awfulneſs and importance of his doctrine, and the novelty of the ordinance of baptiſm he adminiſtered, and the Jews having had no prophet for ſome hundreds of years, and imagining he might be the Meſſiah, quickly drew large numbers of people to him. Some copies read all Jeruſalem; that is, the inhabitants of that city, a very large number of them; and all Judea, a great number of peopſe from all parts of that country. All is here put for many. And all the region round about Jordan; multitudes from thence, which ſeems to be the ſame country with that which is called beyond Jordan, Matt. iv. 25. and is diſtinguiſhed from Judea, as here. The Septuagint in 2 Chron. iv. 17. uſe the ſame phraſe the Evangeliſt does here, and likewiſe in Gen. xiii. 10, 11.

Ver. 6. And were baptized of him, &c.] The place where they were baptized of him was, in Jordan; ſome copies read, in the river Jordan, as in Mark i. 5. As to the name of this river, and the etymology of it, the Jews ſay [l] it was ſo called, שיורד מדן becauſe it deſcended from Dan, i. e. Leſhem Dan, or Pamias, which they ſay is a cave at the head of it. It was in John's time and long after a conſiderable river, a river to ſwim in; we [m] read that "Reſh Lakiſh הוה סחי בירדנא was ſwimming "in Jordan." And elſewhere [n], that one day "R. Jochanan was ſwimming in Jordan." Alſo it was a river for boats and ſhips to paſs in, ſo that it was a navigable river; hence we read [o] of עריבת הירדן the boat of Jordan, and of ſhips in it, and of ſuch and ſuch things being forbidden to be carried over Jordan in a ſhip [p]; particularly, "a man might not "take the water of the ſin-offering, and the aſhes "of the ſin-offering, and carry them over Jordan "in a ſhip." Pliny [q], Pauſanias [r], Solinus [s], and others, ſpeak of it as a very conſiderable and delightful river; ſee Joſhua iii. 15, 16, 17. The Chriſtians of Chriſt's time, are called by the Jews, in a way of contempt, apoſtates, that received the doctrine of baptiſm, and were טבכוים בירדן dipped in Jordan [t]. The manner in which they were baptized by him, was by immerſion or plunging them in the water: this may be concluded from the ſignification of the word βαπτιζω here uſed, which in the primary ſenſe of it ſignifies to dip or plunge; from the place in which they were baptized, the river Jordan; and from John's conſtant manner of baptizing elſewhere, who choſe places for this purpoſe, where and becauſe there was there much water; ſee John i. 28. and iii. 23. The character of the perſons baptized by him is this, they were ſuch as were confeſſing their ſins. They were called to repentance by John's miniſtry, and had the grace of it beſtowed upon them; being thoroughly convinced of ſin, and truly ſorry for it, they were ready to acknowledge and confeſs it to God and men; and ſuch an abiding ſenſe they had of it upon their minds, that they continued doing it: they were not only confeſſing their ſins before baptiſm, which engaged John to adminiſter it to them; ſince we find afterwards he refuſed to admit others, becauſe of their want of repentance and fruits meet for it; but alſo whilſt they were going into the water, and when they came up out of it, ſo full were they of a ſenſe of ſin, and ſo ready to own it. Even in baptiſm itſelf there is a tacit confeſſion and acknowledgment of ſin, for it repreſents the ſufferings and death of Chriſt which were for ſin, into which perſons are baptized, and profeſs to be dead to ſin thereby; and alſo the reſurrection of Chriſt for juſtification from ſin, which obliges the baptized perſon to walk in newneſs of life, ſee Rom. vi. 3, 4, 5. beſides, in this ordinance believers are led to the blood of Chriſt, both for the cleanſing and remiſſion of their ſins, which ſuppoſe filth and guilt, Acts xxii. 16. and ii. 38. Now this is the character given of the very firſt perſons, that were baptized by John, and ought ſurely to be attended to by us; and as much care as poſſible ſhould be taken, that none but ſuch as have a true ſenſe of ſin, and are brought to an humble and hearty acknowledgment of it, be admitted to this ordinance.

Ver. 7. But when he ſaw many of the Phariſees, &c.] This being the firſt place in which mention is made of the Phariſees and Sadducees, it may not be amiſs to give ſome account of them once for all, and to begin with the Phariſees, and firſt with their name. Some derive this word from פרץ pharatz to divide, to make a breach, from whence Phares had his name, Gen. xxxviii. 29. ſo Jerom; [u] who obſerves, that "the Phariſees, who ſeparated them-"ſelves from the people as righteous perſons, were "called diviſi, the divided." And in [w] another place, "becauſe the Phariſees were divided from "the Jews on account of ſome ſuperfluous obſer-"vations, they alſo took their name from their "diſagreement." Origen [x] ſeems to refer to this etymology of the word, when he ſays, "the Pha-"riſees, according to their name, were διηρημενοι τινες "ϗ ϛασιωδεις, certain divided and ſeditious perſons." And true it is, that this ſect often meddled with the affairs of the government, and were very ambitious of being concerned therein. Joſephus [y] obſerves of queen Alexandra, that ſhe governed others, and the Phariſees governed her: hence though they were in great eſteem with the people, they were rather dreaded, than loved by the government. Others derive this name from פרש Pharas to expand, or ſtretch out; either becauſe they made broad their phylacteries, and enlarged the borders of their garments; or becauſe they expoſed themſelves to publick notice, did all they could to be ſeen of men, prayed in the corners of the ſtreets, had a trumpet blown before them when they gave alms, choſe the uppermoſt rooms at feaſts, and the chief ſeats in the ſynagogues, greetings in the markets, and to be called of men Rabbi; all which to be ſure are their juſt characters. Others derive it from the ſame word, as ſignifying to explain or expound; becauſe it was one part of their work, and in which they excelled, to expound the law: but this can't be the reaſon of their general name, becauſe there were women Phariſees as well as men, who can't be thought to be employed in that work. The more generally received opinion is, that this name is taken from the above word, as ſignifying to ſeparate; becauſe they ſeparated themſelves from the men and manners of the world, to the ſtudy of the law, and to a greater degree of holineſs, at leaſt in pretence, than other perſons. They were ſtrict obſervers of the traditions of the elders; are ſaid to hold both fate and free-will; they owned the reſurrection of the dead, and that there were angels and ſpirits, in which they differed from the Sadducees. Or rather they have their name from פרס which ſignifies a reward; they being ſtiff defenders of the doctrine of rewards and puniſhments in a future ſtate, which the Sadducees denied. The Talmudic writers [z] ſay, there were ſeven ſorts of them, and if it would not be too tedious to the reader, I would give the names of them; and the rather, becauſe ſome of them ſeem to tally with the complexion and conduct of the Phariſees mentioned in the ſcriptures. There were then, 1. פרוש שיכמי the Shechemite Phariſee, who does as Shechem did; is circumciſed, not on God's account, or for his glory, or becauſe circumciſion is a command of his, but for his own profit and advantage, and that he may get honour from men. 2. פרוש ניקפי the daſhing Phariſee; who walks gently, the heel of one foot touching the great toe of the other; and ſcarce lifts up his feet from the earth, ſo that he daſhes them againſt the ſtones, and would be thought hereby to be in deep meditation. 3. פרוש קיזאי the Phariſee letting blood; who makes as if he ſhut his eyes, that he mayn't look upon women, and ſo runs and daſhes his head againſt the wall, till the blood guſhes out, as though a vein was opened. 4. פרוש מדוכיא the depreſſed Phariſee; who went double, or bowed down, or as others render the phraſe, the mortar Phariſee; either becauſe he wore a garment like a mortar, with the mouth turned downwards; or a hat reſembling ſuch a veſſel; ſo that he could not look upward, nor on either ſide, only downward, or right forward. 5. פרוש מה חובתי ואעשנה the Phariſee, that ſaid, what is my duty and I will do it; the gloſs upon it is, teach me what is my duty, and I will do it: lo! this is his excellency, if he is not expert in the prohibitions and niceties of the commands, and comes to learn; or thus, what is more to be done and I have not done it; ſo that he ſhews himſelf, or would appear as if he had performed all. 6. פרוש יראה the Phariſee of fear; who does what he does from fear of puniſhment. 7. פרוש אהבה the Phariſee of love; who does what he does from love; which the gloſs explains thus; for the love of the reward of the commandment, and not for the love of the commandment of his creator; though they ſay of all theſe there is none to be beloved, but the Phariſee of love. When this ſect firſt began, and who was the firſt author of it, is not eaſy to ſay; 'tis certain there were great numbers of them in the times of John the Baptiſt, and of Chriſt, and for ſome time after. The Jews ſay [a], that when the temple was deſtroyed the ſecond time, the Phariſees increaſed in Iſrael. Next let us conſider the Sadducees, who they were, and from whence they ſprung. Theſe have their name not from צדיק Saddik righteous [b], or צדק Sedek righteouſneſs, being ſelf juſtitiaries; for though they were, yet this would not have diſtinguiſhed them from the Phariſees, who were likewiſe ſuch; but from צדוק Sadok or Saduk, a diſciple of Antigonus, a man of Socho [c]. The occaſion of this new ſect was this; Antigonus, among the inſtructions he gave to his ſcholars, had this ſaying; " be not as ſervants who ſerve their maſter for the " ſake of reward; but be ye as ſervants that ſerve " their maſter not for the ſake of reward, and let " the fear of God be upon you." Which, when Sadok, and a fellow ſcholar, whoſe name was Baithos, or Baithus heard, not rightly underſtanding him, concluded that there was no future ſtate of rewards and puniſhments; which notion they broached and had their followers, who from the one were called Sadducees, and ſometimes from the other Baithuſeans: theſe men held the Scriptures only, rejecting the traditions of the elders; they denied fate, and aſcribed all to free-will; they affirmed that there is no reſurrection of the dead; that the ſoul dies with the body; that there is no future ſtate after this life, and that there are neither angels nor ſpirits. Now when John ſaw or obſerved many of both theſe ſects come to his baptiſm; not merely to ſee it adminiſtered, led thither by the novelty of the thing; but to ſubmit to it, to which they might be induced by that very great character of a very holy good man, which John had got among the people; and they were deſirous of being thought ſo too, and therefore deſired to be baptized by him; but he knowing the men and their manners, ſaid unto them; addreſſed them in a very ſevere ſtile, quite contrary to their expectation, and the opinion the people had of them, O generation of vipers! It ſeems their parents before them were vipers, and they their offspring were like them, in hypocriſy and malice. The viper appears very beautiful outwardly, but is full of poiſon; it looks harmleſs and innocent, as if it neither could nor would do any hurt, its teeth being hid, but is a moſt deadly and hurtful creature: ſo theſe men, though they made ſpecious pretences to religion and holineſs, yet were full of the deadly poiſon of hypocriſy, malice and error. A very diſagreeable ſalutation this muſt be to men, who were deſirous of being reckoned very religious, and who boaſted of and truſted in their being the ſeed of Abraham; when they were the children of the devil, the ſeed of the old ſerpent, and the offspring of the worſt of men, and in whom was verified the proverb, like father like ſon. John proceeds and aſks ſaying, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? who has ſuggeſted this to you? from whom have ye received this hint? who has pointed out the way to you to eſcape divine vengeance, or the ruin which will quickly come upon you? for by wrath to come, is not meant hell-fire, everlaſting deſtruction, from which baptiſm could not ſave them; but temporal calamity and deſtruction, the wrath which in a little time came upon that nation to the uttermoſt, for rejecting the Meſſiah, and the Goſpel diſpenſation; from which they might have been ſaved, had they given credit to Jeſus as the Meſſiah, though only with a bare aſſent; and had they entered into the kingdom of heaven, or Meſſiah, the Goſpel diſpenſation, by receiving its doctrines, and ſubmitting to its ordinances, though only externally.

---

[g] Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 6. c. 30. Alex. ab Alex. l. 3. c. 11. Ludolph. Hiſt. Ethiop. l. 1. c. 13.

[h] Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 11. c. 29.

[i] Hieron. adv. Jovinian. fol. 26. tom. 2.

[k] Moſes Kotzenſis Mitzvot Tora precept. neg. 132.

[l] T. Bab. Becorot. fol. 55. 1. Kimchi in Joſh. xix. 47.

[m] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 9. 2.

[n] T. Bab. Bava Metzia, fol. 84. 1.

[o] T. Hieroſ. Sabbat. fol. 7. 1. Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 64. 2.

[p] T. Bab. Yebamot, fol. 116. 2. Chagiga fol. 23. 1. Sabbat. fol. 60. 2. Maimon. Hilch. Parah Adumah, c. 10. §. 2. & Bartenora in Miſn. Parah, c. 9. §. 6.

[q] Nat. Hiſt. l. 5. c. 15.

[r] l. 5. p. 29.

[s] Polyhiſt. c. 48.

[t] Coſri p. 3. §. 65. p. 241. Ed. Buxtorf.

[u] Trad. Heb. in Gen. fol. 72. D. Tom. 3.

[w] Adv. Luciferian. fol. 49. K. Tom. 2. ſo Tertullian. præſcript. Hæret. c. 45.

[x] Comment. in Joan. p. 115. Ed. Huet.

[y] De Bello Jud. l. 1. c. 5. §. 2.

Ver. 8. Bring forth therefore fruits, &c.] That is, if you are truly penitent, if you have a proper ſenſe of ſin, and true repentance for it, do ſuch works as are ſuitable to it, and will ſhew the genuineſs of it; for fruits meet for repentance, are the ſame as works meet for repentance, Acts xxvi. 20.

---

[z] T. Hieroſ. Beracot, fol. 14. 2. & Sota fol. 20. 3. Bab. Sota, fol. 22. 2. eight ſorts are reckoned in Abot R. Nathan, c. 37. fol. 8. 4.

[a] T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 60. 2.

[b] So Epiphanius contr. Hæreſ. l. 1. Hæreſ. 14. Hieron. Comment. in Matth. c. 22. l. 3. fol. 30. M. Tom. 9.

[c] Abot R. Nathan c. 5. fol. 3. 1. Sepher Coſri orat. 3. fol. 187. 2. & R. Juda Muſcatus in ib. Maimon. in Pirk. Abot. c. 1. §. 3. Juchaſin fol. 15. 2. Gantz Tzemach David, par. 1. fol. 20. 2. & Bartenora in Miſn. Judaim, c. 4. §. 6.

and as a tree is known by its fruit, ſo repentance is known by good works; theſe are the fruits and effects of repentance, and which are proofs with men of the ſincerity of it. Thoſe which follow upon evangelical repentance, are ſuch as are mentioned in 2 Cor. vii. 11. Now let it be obſerved, that John inſiſted upon repentance, and a good converſation, atteſting the truth of it, as neceſſary prerequiſites to the ordinance of baptiſm; and ſo Peter firſt urged repentance, and then propoſed baptiſm, Acts ii. 38. from whence one ſhould think it may be rationaly and ſtrongly concluded, that none but truly repenting ſinners, and ſuch who have given proofs that they are ſo, are to be admitted to this ordinance.

Ver. 9. And think not to ſay within yourſelves, &c.] John knew the ſentiments of their minds, and the prevailing opinion they had given into, againſt which he cautions them; as, that becauſe they were Abraham's ſeed, they were in a ſtate of ſalvation, in the favour of God, and had a right to all privileges and ordinances: this they truſted in, and boaſted of, and would often think of it within themſelves, pleaſing themſelves with the thoughts of it, and ſpeak of it to others; we have Abraham for our father. The Baptiſt was aware how ready they would be to object this to him; and therefore prevents their plea from hence in favour of their admiſſion to baptiſm, by aſſuring them, that this would have no weight with him, nor give them any right to the ordinance he adminiſtered: hence it appears that it is not a perſon's being born of believing parents, that can entitle him to water baptiſm; or be a reaſon why it ought to be adminiſtered to him: if nothing more than this can be ſaid in his favour, its a plain caſe from hence, he ought to be debarred from it. The reaſon, John gives why ſuch a plea as this would be inſufficient, is, for I ſay unto you; I aſſure you of it; you may depend on it as a certain truth, that God is able of theſe ſtones to raiſe up children unto Abraham. To raiſe up children is an Hebrew way of ſpeaking, and the ſame with שם or להקים ורע to raiſe up ſeed, or a name to another, Gen. xxxviii. 8. Deut. xxv. 7. Ruth iv. 10. and ſignifies to beget children for another, who are to be called by his name. Some by the ſtones, underſtand the Gentiles, comparable to ſtones, both for the hardneſs of their hearts, and their idolatry in worſhipping ſtocks and ſtones; of, and among whom God was able to raiſe, and has raiſed up a ſpiritual ſeed to Abraham; who are of the ſame faith with him, who walk in his ſteps, and whoſe father he is: but then it muſt be ſuppoſed, according to this ſenſe, that there were ſome Gentiles preſent, ſince John calls them theſe ſtones, pointing to ſome perſons or things, that were before him; wherefore I rather think that this phraſe is to be taken literaly, and that John pointed to ſome certain ſtones that were near him, within ſight, and which lay upon the banks of Jordan, where he was baptizing; for what is it that the omnipotent God cannot do? He could as eaſily of ſtones make men, as make Adam out of the duſt of the earth, and then make theſe men, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, children of Abraham; that is, believers in Chriſt, and partakers of his grace; for if ye be Chriſt's, then are ye Abraham's ſeed, and heirs according to the promiſe, Gal. iii. 29. So that God ſtood in no need of theſe perſons, nor had they any reaſon to boaſt of their natural deſcent from Abraham; ſince this in ſpiritual matters, and in things relating to the Goſpel diſpenſation, would ſtand them in no ſtead, or be of any advantage to them.

Ver. 10. And now alſo the ax is laid, &c.] Theſe words may be rendered, for now alſo, and contain in them a reaſon why they might expect future wrath; why they ſhould bring forth good fruit; and why they ſhould not truſt to, nor plead their deſcent from Abraham, becauſe the ax is now laid: by which is meant, not the Goſpel which now began to be preached by John; though this was like an ax laid to the root of, and which cut down, their pride and vanity, their ſelf-confidence and glorying in their righteouſneſs, holineſs, carnal wiſdom, and fleſhly privileges: but rather, the ax of God's judgment and vengeance is here deſigned, which becauſe of the certainty and near approach of it, is ſaid to be now laid; and that not to ſome of the branches only, to lop them off, to take away from the Jews ſome particular privileges, but to the root of all their privileges, civil and eccleſiaſtical; even the covenant which God had made with that people as a nation, who was now about to write, Lo Ammi upon them; ſo that henceforward they would have nothing to expect from their being the ſeed of Abraham, Iſraelites, or circumciſed perſons. The time was juſt at hand, when the Lord would take his ſtaff beauty and cut it aſunder, that he might break the covenant he had made with all the people, Zech. xi. 10. in a ſhort time their civil polity and church ſtate would be both at an end. The Romans, who were already among them and over them, would very quickly come upon them, and cut them off root and branch; and utterly deſtroy their temple, city and nation: and this ruin and deſtruction was levelled not at a ſingle tree, a ſingle perſon, or family only, as Jeſſe's, or any others, but at the root of the trees; of all the trees of the whole body of the people: for the covenant which was made with them all being broke, and which was their hedge and fence, they were all expoſed to the wild boar of the foreſt. Therefore every tree, every individual perſon, though one of Abraham's children, and made never ſuch a fair ſhew in the fleſh, which bringeth not forth good fruit; does not perform good works from a right principle, to a right end, ſuch as are meet for repentance; particularly, does not believe in the Meſſiah now ready to be revealed, which is the main and principal work; and does not continue ſo doing, and thus believing, is hewn down and caſt into the fire. Temporal ruin and deſtruction ſhall come upon him; he ſhall not eſcape divine vengeance here, and ſhall be caſt into everlaſting burnings hereafter; which is quite contrary to a notion of theirs, that בוכותי דאברהם by the merits of Abraham, the Iſraelites ſhall be delivered from the fire of hell[d].

Ver. 11. I indeed baptize you with water, &c.] Theſe words, at firſt view, look as if they were a continuation of John's diſcourſe with the Phariſees and Sadducees, and as though he had baptized them; whereas by comparing them with what the other Evangeliſts relate, ſee Mark i. 5, 8. Luke iii. 10, 15, 16. they are ſpoken to the people, who, confeſſing their ſins, had been baptized by him; to whom he gives an account of the ordinance of water baptiſm, of which he was the adminiſtrator, in what manner, and on what account he performed it: I indeed baptize you; or, as Mark ſays, I have baptized you; I have authority from God ſo to do; my commiſſion reaches thus far, and no farther; I can adminiſter, and have adminiſtered the outward ordinance to you; but the inward grace and increaſe of it, together with the ordinary and extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, I can't confer. I can, and do baptize, upon a profeſſion of repentance, and I can threaten impenitent ſinners with divine vengeance; but I can't beſtow the grace of repentance on any, nor puniſh for impenitence, either here or hereafter; theſe things are out of my power, and belong to another perſon hereafter named: all that I do, and pretend to do, is to baptize with water, or rather in water, as εν υδατι ſhould be rendered. Our verſion ſeems to be calculated in favour of pouring, or ſprinkling water upon, or application of it to the perſon baptized, in oppoſition to immerſion in it; whereas the prepoſition is not inſtrumental, but local, and denotes the place, the river Jordan, and the element of water there, in which John was baptizing: and this he did unto repentance, or at, or upon repentance; for ſo εις may be rendered, as it is in Matt. xii. 41. for the meaning is not that John baptized them in order to bring them to repentance; ſince he required repentance and fruits meet for it, previous to baptiſm; but that he had baptized them upon the foot of their repentance: and ſo the learned Grotius obſerves, that the phraſe may be very aptly explained thus; "I baptize you upon the profeſſion of " repentance which ye make." John gives an hint of the perſon whoſe forerunner he was, and of his ſuperior excellency to him: he indeed firſt ſpeaks of him as one behind him, not in nature or dignity, but in order of time as man; but he that comes after me. John was born before Jeſus, and began his miniſtry before he did; he was his harbinger; Jeſus was now coming after him to Jordan from Galilee, to be baptized by him, and then enter on his publick miniſtry: but though he came after him in this ſenſe, he was not beneath, but above him in character; which he freely declares, ſaying, is mightier than I; not only as he is the mighty God, and ſo infinitely mightier than he; but in his office and miniſtry, which was exerciſed with greater power and authority, and attended with mighty works and miracles, and was followed with the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit. Not to mention the mighty work of redemption performed by him; the reſurrection of his own body from the dead; and his exaltation in human nature, above all power, might and dominion. The Baptiſt was ſo ſenſible of the inequality between them, and of his unworthineſs to be mentioned with him, that he ſeems at a loſs almoſt to expreſs his diſtance from him; and therefore ſignifies it by his being unfit to perform one of the moſt ſervile offices to him, whoſe ſhoes I am not worthy to bear; or as the other Evangeliſts relate it, whoſe ſhoe latchet I am not worthy to unlooſe; which amounts to the ſame ſenſe, ſince ſhoes are unlooſed in order to be taken from, or carried before, or after a perſon; which to do was the work of ſervants among the Jews. In the Talmud [e] 'tis aſked, " What is the manner of poſſeſ- " ing of ſervants? or what is their ſervice? He " buckles his (maſter's) ſhoes; he unlooſes his ſhoes, " and carries them before him to the bath." Or, as is elſewhere [f] ſaid, " he unlooſes his ſhoes, or carries " after him his veſſels (whatever he wants) to the " bath; he unclothes him, he waſhes him, he " anoints him, he rubs him, he clothes him, he " buckles his ſhoes, and lifts him up." This was ſuch a ſervile work, that it was thought too mean for a ſcholar or a diſciple to do; for this [g] ſaid, " all ſervices which a ſervant does for his maſter, " a diſciple does for his maſter, חוץ מהתרת לו מנעל " except unlooſing his ſhoes." The Gloſs on it ſays, " he that ſees it, will ſay, he's a Canaanitiſh ſervant:" for only a Canaanitiſh, not an Hebrew ſervant [h], might be employed in, or obliged to ſuch work; for it was reckoned not only mean and ſervile, but even baſe and reproachful. 'Tis one of their [i] cannons; " if thy brother is become poor, and is ſold unto " thee, thou ſhalt not make him do the work of " a ſervant; that is, עבודת של גנאי any reproach- " ful work; ſuch as to buckle his ſhoes, or unlooſe " them, or carry his inſtruments (or neceſſaries) " after him to the bath." Now John thought himſelf unworthy; it was too great an honour for him to do that for Chriſt, which was thought too mean for a diſciple to do for a wiſe man, and too ſcandalous for an Hebrew ſervant, to do for his maſter, to whom he was ſold; which ſhews the great humility of John, and the high opinion he had of Chriſt. It has been controverted whether Chriſt wore ſhoes or not; Jerom affirmed that he did not: but it ſeems from hence that he did; nor were the Jews uſed to walk bare-foot, but on certain occaſions. The Baptiſt points at the peculiar work of this great perſon, in which he greatly exceeds any thing done by him; he ſhall baptize you with the Holy Ghoſt, and with fire; referring, either to the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, to be beſtowed on the diſciples on the day of Pentecoſt, of which the cloven tongues like as of fire, which appeared unto them, and ſat upon them, were the ſymbols; which was an inſtance of the great power and grace of Chriſt, and of his exaltation at the Father's right-hand. Or rather, this phraſe is expreſſive of the awful judgments, which ſhould be inflicted by him on the Jewiſh nation; when he by his Spirit ſhould reprove them for the ſin of rejecting him; and when he ſhould appear as a refiner's fire, and as fuller's ſoap; when the day of the Lord ſhould burn as an oven; when he ſhould purge the blood of Jeruſalem, his own blood, and the blood of the Apoſtles and Prophets ſhed in it, from the midſt thereof, by the ſpirit of judgment, and by the ſpirit of burning; the ſame with the Holy Ghoſt and fire here, or the fire of the Holy Ghoſt, or the holy Spirit of fire; and is the ſame with the wrath to come, and with what is threatened in the context: the unfruitful trees ſhall be cut down, and caſt into the fire, and the chaff ſhall be burnt with unquenchable fire. And as this ſenſe beſt agrees with the context, it may the rather be thought to be genuine; ſince John is ſpeaking not to the diſciples of Chriſt, who were not yet called, and who only on the day of Pentecoſt were baptized with the Holy Ghoſt and fire, in the other ſenſe of this phraſe; but to the people of the Jews, ſome of whom had been baptized by him; and others were aſking him queſtions, others gazing upon him, and wondering what manner of perſon he was; and multitudes of them continued obdurate and impenitent under his miniſtry, whom he threatens ſeverely in the context. Add to all this, that the phraſe of dipping or baptizing in fire, ſeems to be uſed in this ſenſe by the Jewiſh writers. In the Talmud [k] one puts the queſtion, In what does he, (God,) dip? You'll ſay in water, as it is written, who hath meaſured the waters in the hollow of his hand? Another replies, בנורא טביל he dips in fire; as it is written, for behold the Lord will come with fire. What is the meaning of טבילותא בנורא baptiſm in fire? He anſwers, according to the mind of Rabbah, the root of dipping in the fire, is what is written; all that abideth not the fire, ye ſhall make go through the water. Dipping in the fire of the law, is a phraſe uſed by the Jews[l]. The phraſes of dipping, and waſhing in fire, are alſo uſed by Greek[m] authors.

---

[d] Zohar in Exod. fol. 34. 4.

---

[e] T. Hieroſ. Kidduſhin, fol. 59. 4. Maimon. & T. Bartenora in Miſn. Kidduſhin, c. 1. §. 3. [f] T. Bab. Kidduſhin fol. 22. 2. Maimon. Hilch. Mechirah, c. 2. §. 2. [g] T. Bab. Cetubot, fol. 96. 1. Maimon. Talmud Tora, c. 5. §. 8. [h] Maimon. Hilch. Abadim, c. 1. §. 7. [i] Moſes Kotzenſis Mitzvot Torah, precept. neg. 176. [k] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 39. 1.

Ver. 12. Whoſe fan is in his hand, &c.] The Jews had their hand-fans, and which were like a man's hand; their names were מעבר מורה מגוב; which, as Maimonides ſays[n], were three ſorts of inſtruments uſed in the floor, in form of a man's hand; with which they cleanſed the wheat and barley from the ſtraw; and their names differ according to their form: ſome have many teeth, and with them they cleanſe the wheat, at the end of the work; and there are others that have few teeth, no more than three, and with theſe they purge the wheat at firſt, from the thick ſtraw. By the fan, here is meant, either the Goſpel which Chriſt was juſt ready to publiſh; by which he would effectually call his choſen people among the Jews, and ſo diſtinguiſh and ſeparate them from others, as well as purify and cleanſe them; or rather the awful judgment of God, which Chriſt was ready to execute, and in a ſhort time would execute on the unbelieving and impenitent Jews: hence it is ſaid to be in his hand; being put there by his father, who hath committed all judgment to the ſon. That this is the meaning of the Baptiſt, ſeems evident, ſince fanning is always, when figuratively taken, uſed for judgments, Iſ. xli. 6. Jer. xv. 17. and li. 2. By his floor, is meant the land of Iſrael, where he was born, brought up and lived; of which the Lord ſays, O my threſhing, and the corn of my floor! Iſ. xxi. 10. This he ſays, he will thoroughly purge, of all its refuſe and chaff, that is, by fanning: ſo fanning and cleanſing, or purging, are joined together, Jer. iv. 11. ſo ברר is uſed for purging by fanning, in the Miſnic writings[o]. By his wheat, are meant his elect among the Jews, the choſen of God and precious; ſo called becauſe of their excellency, purity, uſefulneſs, ſolidity, and conſtancy: theſe he will gather into his garner; meaning either ſome place of protection, where he would direct his people to for ſafety from that wrath, ruin, and deſtruction, which ſhould fall upon the Jewiſh nation; or elſe the kingdom of heaven, into which he would bring them, by taking them out of the world from the evil to come. By the chaff, are meant wicked and ungodly perſons, ſuch as are deſtitute of the grace of God, whether profeſſors, or profane; being empty, barren, and unfruitful; and ſo good for nothing but the fire, which therefore he will burn with unquenchable fire, of divine wrath and vengeance: an alluſion to a cuſtom among the Jews, who, when they purified the increaſe of their unclean fields, gathered it together in an area, or floor, in the midſt of them, and then ſifted it with ſieves; one ſort with two ſieves, another with three, that they might thoroughly purge it, and burnt the chaff and ſtalks[p]; ſee Iſ. v. 24.

Ver. 13. Then cometh Jeſus, &c.] That is, when John had been ſome time preaching the doctrine of repentance, and adminiſtring the ordinance of baptiſm; for which, time muſt be allowed, ſince he went into all the country about Jordan, and preached unto them, and baptized ſuch large numbers: very probably it might be ſix months from his firſt entrance on his miniſtry; ſince there was this difference in their age, and ſo might be in their baptiſm and preaching. Now when John had given notice of the Meſſiah's coming, and ſo had prepared his way; had declared the excellency of his perſon, the nature of his work, and office, and had raiſed in the people an expectation of him, then cometh Jeſus from Galilee; from Nazareth of Galilee, Mark i. 9. where he had lived for many years, as the Jews[q] themſelves own, in great obſcurity, in all obedience to God, in ſubjection to his parents, exerciſing a conſcience void of offence towards God and man, and employing his time in devotion and buſineſs: from hence he came to Jordan to John, who was baptizing there; which ſhews the great humility of Chriſt, who comes to John, and does not ſend for him, though John was his ſervant, and he was his Lord and Maſter; and alſo his chearful and voluntary ſubjection to the ordinance of baptiſm, ſince of himſelf, of his own accord, he took this long and fatiguing journey; for Nazareth, according to David de Pomis[r], was three days journey from Jeruſalem, though ſomewhat nearer Jordan; the end and deſign of his coming was to be baptized of him. It may reaſonably be enquired what ſhould be Chriſt's view in deſiring to be baptized; it could not be to take away original or actual ſin, ſince he had neither; nor has baptiſm any ſuch efficacy to do this, in thoſe who have either or both: but, it was to ſhew his approbation of John's baptiſm, and to bear a teſtimony of it, that it was from heaven; and alſo that he himſelf might receive a teſtimony both from heaven, and from John, that he was the ſon of God and true Meſſiah, before he entered upon his publick miniſtry, into which he was in ſome meaſure initiated and inſtalled hereby; and moreover, to ſet an example to his followers, and thereby engage their attention and ſubjection to this ordinance; and, in a word, as he himſelf ſays, to fulfil all righteouſneſs.

Ver. 14. But John forbad him, ſaying, &c.] It appears from hence, that John knew Chriſt before he baptized him, and before he ſaw the ſpirit deſcending and abiding on him, John i. 33. wherefore that was not a ſignal, whereby he ſhould firſt know him, but whereby his knowledge of him ſhould be confirmed; which knowledge of him he had, not thro' his kindred to him, or by any converſation he had with him before, but by immediate, divine revelation: upon which account he forbad him; refuſed to adminiſter the ordinance to him; earneſtly entreated that he would not inſiſt upon it; deſired to be excuſed being concerned herein: and this he did, partly leſt the people ſhould think, Chriſt was not ſo great a perſon, he had repreſented him to be; yea, that he was one of the penitent ſinners, John had admitted to his baptiſm; and chiefly becauſe of the majeſty and dignity of Chriſt's perſon, who he knew ſtood in no need of ſuch an outward ordinance; and becauſe of his own unworthineſs to adminiſter it to him, as is evident from what follows, I have need to be baptized of thee; not with water-baptiſm, which Chriſt never adminiſtred, but with the baptiſm of the ſpirit, which was his peculiar office. Hence we learn, that tho' John was ſo holy a man, was filled with the Holy Ghoſt from his mother's womb, had ſuch large meaſures of grace, and lived ſuch an exemplary life and converſation; yet was far from thinking, that he was perfect and righteous in himſelf, but ſtood in need of Chriſt, and of more grace from him. He ſeems ſurprized that Chriſt ſhould come to him, and make ſuch a motion to him; when it was his duty and privilege to come to him daily for freſh ſupplies of grace, and always to truſt in him for life and ſalvation; and comeſt thou to me? who am of the earth, earthly, when thou art the Lord from heaven; to me, a poor ſinful creature, when thou art the holy one of God; to me, who am thy ſervant, when thou art Lord of all; to me, who always ſtand in need of thy grace, when thou art God all-ſufficient.

---

[l] Tzeror Hammor. fol. 104. 4. & 142. 3. & 170. 1.

[m] Moſchi Idyll. 1. Philoſtrat. Vit. Apollon, l. 3. c. 5.

[n] In Miſn. Celim. c. 13. §. 7. Vid. Jarchi & Bartenora in ib. & in Miſn. Tibbul. Yom. c. 4. §. 6.

[o] Miſn. Sabbat. c. 7. §. 2. & Gittin, c. 5. §. 9.

[p] Miſn. Oholot, c. 18. §. 2.

[q] Toldos Jeſu, p. 6.

[r] Tzemach David, fol. 141. 2.

Ver. 15. And Jeſus anſwering, ſaid unto him, &c.] This is an Hebrew way of ſpeaking, often uſed in the Old Teſtament, and anſwers to ויען ויאמר; ſee Job iii. 1. He replied to John, who had made uſe of very forbidding words, after this manner, ſuffer it to be ſo now; let me have my requeſt; don't go on to object, but comply with my deſire; let it be done now, immediately, directly, at this preſent time; don't put me off with any excuſe; it is a proper ſeaſon for it, even now, ſince the time is not yet come that I am to baptize with the Holy Ghoſt; and beſides, thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteouſneſs. It became John to adminiſter the ordinance of baptiſm to Chriſt, as he was his forerunner, and the only adminiſtrator of it, and that he might fulfil the miniſtry which he had received; and as it became Chriſt to fulfil all righteouſneſs, moral and ceremonial, and baptiſm being a part of his father's will, which he came to do, it became him to fulfil this alſo. And ſince it became Chriſt, it cannot be unbecoming us, to ſubmit to this ordinance; and ſince he looked upon it as a part of righteouſneſs to be fulfilled by him, it ought to be attended to by all thoſe who would be accounted followers of him. Chriſt having ſtrongly urged the conveniency and equity of the adminiſtration of baptiſm to him, which ſhewed his eager deſire after it, and the lowlineſs of his mind; and John being convinced, and overcome by the force of his reaſoning, agrees to his baptiſm; then he ſuffered him, i. e. to be baptized in water by him, as he had requeſted, and accordingly did adminiſter it to him.

Ver. 16. And Jeſus, when he was baptized, &c.] Chriſt when he was baptized by John in the river Jordan, the place where he was baptizing, went up ſtraitway out of the water. One would be at a loſs at firſt ſight for a reaſon why the Evangeliſt ſhould relate this circumſtance; for after the ordinance was adminiſtred, why ſhould he ſtay in the water? what ſhould he do there? Every one would naturally and reaſonably conclude, without the mention of ſuch a circumſtance, that as ſoon as his baptiſm was over, he would immediately come up out of the water. However, we learn this from it, that ſince it is ſaid, that he came up out of the water, he muſt firſt have gone down into it; muſt have been in it, and was baptized in it; a circumſtance ſtrongly in favour of baptiſm by immerſion: for that Chriſt ſhould go down into the river, more or leſs deep, to the ancles, or up to the knees, in order that John ſhould ſprinkle water on his face, or pour it on his head, as is ridiculouſly repreſented in the prints, can hardly obtain any credit with perſons of thought and ſenſe. But the chief view of the Evangeliſt in relating this circumſtance, is with reſpect to what follows; and to ſhew, that as ſoon as Chriſt was baptized, and before he had well got out of the water, lo the heavens were opened; and ſome indeed read the word ſtraitway, in connexion with this phraſe, and not with the words went up: but there is no need of ſuppoſing ſuch a trajection, for the whole may be rendered thus; and Jeſus, when he was baptized, was ſcarcely come up out of the water, but lo, immediately, directly, as ſoon as he was out, or rather before, the heavens were opened to him; the airy heaven was materially and really opened, parted, rent, or cloven aſunder, as in Mark i. 10. which made way for the viſible deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt in a bodily ſhape. A difficulty ariſes here, whether the words, to him, are to be referred to Chriſt, or to John; no doubt but the opening of the heavens was ſeen by them both: but to me it ſeems that John is particularly deſigned, ſince this viſion was upon his account, and for his ſake, and to him the following words belong; and he, that is, John, ſaw the ſpirit of God deſcending like a dove, and lighting upon him: for this is what was promiſed to John, as a ſign, which ſhould confirm his faith in Jeſus, as the true Meſſiah, and which he himſelf ſays he ſaw, and upon which he founded the record and teſtimony he bore to Chriſt, as the ſon of God; ſee John [illegible] 32, 33, 34. not but that the deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt in this manner might be ſeen by Chriſt, as well as John, according to Mark i. 10. The ſpirit of God, here ſaid to deſcend and light on Chriſt, is the ſame, which in the firſt creation moved upon the face of the waters, and now comes down on Chriſt, juſt as he was coming up out of the waters of Jordan, where he had been baptized; and which the Jews[r] ſo often call רוח של מלך המשיח the ſpirit of the king Meſſiah, and the ſpirit of the Meſſiah. The deſcent of him was in a bodily ſhape, as Luke ſays, ch. iii. 32. either in the ſhape of a dove, which is a very fit emblem of the ſpirit of God who deſcended, and the fruits thereof, ſuch as ſimplicity, meekneſs, love, &c. and alſo of the dove-like innocence, humility, and affection of Chriſt, on whom he lighted; or it was in ſome other viſible form, not expreſſed, which pretty much reſembled the hovering and lighting of a dove upon any thing: for it does not neceſſarily follow from any of the accounts the Evangeliſts give of this matter, that the holy ſpirit aſſumed, or appeared in, the form of a dove; only that his viſible deſcent and lighting on Chriſt was ωσει περιστερα, as a dove deſcends, hovers and lights; which does not neceſſarily deſign the form of the creature, but the manner of its motion. However, who can read this account without thinking of Noah's dove, which brought in its mouth the olive leaf, a token of peace and reconciliation, when the waters were abated from off the earth? Give me leave to tranſcribe a paſſage I have met with in the book of Zohar[s]; "a door ſhall be " opened, and out of it ſhall come forth the dove " which Noah ſent out in the days of the flood, as " it is written, and he ſent forth the dove, that fa- " mous dove; but the ancients ſpeak not of it, for " they knew not what it was, only from whence it " came, and did its meſſage; as it is written, it " returned not again unto him any more: no man " knows whither it went, but it returned to its " place, and was hid within this door; and it ſhall " take a crown in its mouth, and put it upon the " head of the king Meſſiah." And a little after, the dove is ſaid to abide upon his head, and he to receive glory from it. Whether this is the remains of ſome ancient tradition, theſe men ſtudiouſly conceal, concerning the opening of the heavens, and the deſcent of the ſpirit of God, as a dove, upon the Meſſiah; or whether it is hammered out of the evangelic hiſtory, let the reader judge.

---

[r] Bereſhit Rabba, fol. 2. 4. & 6. 3. Vajikra Rabba, fol. 156. 4. Zohar in Gen. fol. 107. 3. & 128. 3. Baal Hatturim in Gen. i. 2. Caphtor Uperah, fol. 113. 2.

[s] In Num. fol. 68, 3, 4.

Ver. 17. And lo, a voice from heaven, ſaying, &c.] At the ſame time the heavens were opened, and the ſpirit of God deſcended as a dove, and lighted on Chriſt, and whilſt it abode upon him, an extraordinary voice was heard: hence the note of attention and admiration, lo, is prefixed unto it, as before, to the opening of the heavens; being what was unuſual and ſurprizing; and as denoting ſomething to be expreſſed of great moment and importance. The Jews, in order to render this circumſtance leſs conſiderable, and to have it believed, that theſe voices from heaven heard in the time of Jeſus, and in relation to him, were common things, have invented a great many ſtories concerning בת קול משמים, the voice, or the daughter of the voice from heaven; which they pretend came in the room of prophecy: their [t] words are, "after the death of the latter prophets, Haggai, "Zechariah and Malachi, the holy ſpirit departed "from Iſrael, and thenceforwards they uſed Bath "Kol, the voice. One time they were ſitting in the "chamber of the houſe of Guria in Jericho, and "there came to them בת קול משמים, the voice "from heaven, (ſaying;) there is one here, who is fit "to have the Shekinah (or divine majeſty) abide on "him, as Moſes our maſter; but becauſe his generation was not worthy, therefore the wiſe men "ſet their eyes on Hillell, the elder; and when he "died, they ſaid concerning him, this was a holy "man, a meek man, a diſciple of Ezra. Again, "another time they were ſitting in a chamber in "Jabneh, and there came to them the voice from "heaven, (ſaying;) there is one here, who is fit to "have the Shekinah dwell on him; but becauſe his "generation was not worthy, therefore the wiſe "men ſet their eyes on Samuel the little." I have cited this paſſage at large, partly becauſe, according to them, it fixes the date and uſe of the voice; and partly, becauſe it affords inſtances of it, wherefore more need not be mentioned; for it would be endleſs to repeat the ſeveral things ſpoken by it; ſuch as encouraging Herod to rebel, and ſeize his maſter's kingdom [u]; forbidding Ben Uzziel to go on with his paraphraſe on the Hagiographa, or holy books, when he had finiſhed his Targum on the prophets [v]; declaring the words of Hillell and Shammai to be the words of the living God [x]; ſignifying the conception, birth, and death of [y] perſons, and the like; all which ſeem to be mere fiction and imagination, diabolical deluſions, or ſatanical imitations of this voice, that was now heard, in order to leſſen the credit of it. But, to proceed; this extraordinary voice from heaven, which was formed in articulate ſounds, for the ſake of John; and, according to the other Evangeliſts, was directed to Chriſt, Mark i. 11. Luke iii. 22. expreſſed the following words, this is my beloved ſon. This perſon, who had been baptized in water, on whom the holy ſpirit now reſted, is no other than the ſon of God in human nature; which he aſſumed, in order to be obedient to this, and the whole of his father's will: he is his own proper ſon, not by creation, as angels, and men; nor by adoption, as ſaints; nor by office, as magiſtrates; but in ſuch a way of filiation as no other is: he is the natural, eſſential, and only-begotten ſon of God; his beloved ſon, whom the father loved from everlaſting, as his own ſon; the image of himſelf, of the ſame nature with him, and poſſeſſed of the ſame perfections; whom he loved, and continued to love in time, tho' clothed with human nature, and the infirmities of it; appearing in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh; being in his ſtate of humiliation, he loved him thro' it, and all ſorrows and ſufferings that attended it. Chriſt always was, and ever will be conſidered, both in his perſon as the ſon of God, and in his office as mediator, the object of his love and delight; wherefore he adds, in whom I am well pleaſed. Jehovah the father took infinite delight and pleaſure in him as his own ſon, who lay in his boſom before all worlds; and was well pleaſed with him in his office-relation, and capacity: he was both well pleaſed in him as his ſon, and delighted in him as his ſervant, Iſ. xlii. 1. he was pleaſed with his aſſumption of human nature; with his whole obedience to the law; and with his bearing the penalty and curſe of it, in the room and ſtead of his people: he was well pleaſed, with and for his righteouſneſs, ſacrifice and atonement; whereby his law was fulfilled, and his juſtice ſatisfied. God is not only well pleaſed in, and with his ſon, but with all his people, as conſidered in him; in him he loves them, takes delight in them, is pacified towards them, and graciouſly accepts of them. It would be almoſt unpardonable, not to take notice of the teſtimony here given to the doctrine of the Trinity; ſince a voice was heard from the father in heaven, bearing witneſs to the ſon in human nature on earth, on whom the Spirit had deſcended and now abode. The ancients looked upon this ſo clear and full a proof of this truth, that they were wont to ſay; Go to Jordan, and there learn the doctrine of the Trinity. Add to all this, that ſince this declaration was immediately upon the baptiſm of Chriſt; it ſhews that his father highly approved of, and was well pleaſed with his ſubmiſſion to that ordinance; and which ſhould be an encouraging motive to all believers to follow him in it.

CHAP. IV.

Ver. 1. THEN was Jeſus led up of the ſpirit, &c.] The Evangeliſt having finiſhed his account of John the Baptiſt, the forerunner of Chriſt; of his miniſtry and baptiſm; and particularly of the baptiſm of Chriſt; when the Holy Ghoſt came down upon him in a viſible and eminent manner; whereby he was anointed for his publick work, according to Iſ. lxi. 1. proceeds to give a narration of his temptations by ſatan, which immediately followed his baptiſm; and of thoſe conflicts he had with the enemy of mankind, before he entered on his publick miniſtry. The occaſion, nature, and ſucceſs of theſe temptations are here related. The occaſion of them, or the opportunity given to the tempter, is ſpoken of in this and the following verſe. In this may be obſerved the action of the Spirit in and upon Chriſt; he was led up of the ſpirit: by the ſpirit is meant the ſame ſpirit of God, which had deſcended and lighted on him in a bodily ſhape, with the gifts and graces of which, he was anointed, in an extraordinary manner, for publick ſervice; of which he was full, Luke iv. 1. not but that he was endowed with the Holy Ghoſt before, which he received without meaſure from his father; but now this more eminently and manifeſtly appeared, and by this ſpirit was he led; both the Syriac and the Perſic verſions read, by the holy ſpirit. Being led by him, denotes an internal impulſe of the ſpirit in him, ſtirring him up, and putting him upon going into the wilderneſs: and this impulſe being very ſtrong and vehement, another Evangeliſt thus expreſſes it; the ſpirit driveth him, εκϐαλλει, thruſts him forth into the wilderneſs, Mark i. 12. though not againſt his will; to which was added an external impulſe, or outward rapture, ſomewhat like that action of the ſpirit on Philip, Acts viii. 39. When he is ſaid to be led up, the meaning is, that he was led up from the low parts of the wilderneſs, where he was, to the higher and mountainous parts thereof, which were deſolate and uninhabited. The place where he was led, was into the wilderneſs, i. e. of Judea, into the more remote parts of it; for he was before in this wilderneſs, where John was preaching and baptizing; but in that part of it which was inhabited. There was another part which was uninhabited, but by wild beaſts; and here Chriſt was led, and with theſe he was, Mark i. 13. all alone, retired from the company of men; could have no aſſiſtance from any, and wholly deſtitute of any ſupply: ſo that ſatan had a fair opportunity of trying his whole ſtrength upon him; having all advantages on his ſide he could wiſh for. The end of his being led there, was to be tempted of the devil: by the devil is meant ſatan, the prince of devils, the enemy of mankind, the old ſerpent, who has his name here from accuſing and calumniating; ſo the Syriac calls him אכל קרצא, the accuſer, or publiſher of accuſations. He was the accuſer of God to men, and is the accuſer of men to God; his principal buſineſs is to tempt, and Chriſt was brought here to be tempted by him, that he might be tried before he entered on his publick work; that he might be in all things like unto his brethren; that he might have a heart as man, as well as power, as God, to ſuccour them that are tempted; and that ſatan, whoſe works he came to deſtroy, might have a ſpecimen of his power, and expect, in a ſhort time, the ruin of his kingdom by him. The time when this was done was then; when Jeſus had been baptized by John; when the Holy Ghoſt deſcended on him, and he was full of it; when he had ſuch a teſtimony from his father of his relation to him, affection for him, and delight in him; then was he led, immediately, as Mark ſays, ch. i. 12. As ſoon as all this was done, directly upon this, he was had into the wilderneſs to be tempted by, and to combat with ſatan; and ſo it often is, that after ſweet communion with God in his ordinances, after large diſcoveries of his love and intereſt in him, follow ſore temptations, trials, and exerciſes. There is a very great reſemblance and conformity between Chriſt and his people in theſe things.

---

[t] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 11. 1. Sota, fol. 48. 2. Yoma, fol. 9. 2. [u] T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 3. 2. [v] Megilla, fol. 3. 1. [x] T. Hieroſ. Beracot. fol. 3. 2. [y] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 22. 1. T. Hieroſ. Sabbat, fol. 8. 3.

Ver. 2. And when he had faſted forty days, &c.] As Moſes did, when he was about to deliver the law to the Iſraelites, Exod. xxxiv. 28. and as Elijah did, when he bore his teſtimony for the Lord of hoſts, 1 Kings xix. 8. ſo did Chriſt, when he was about to publiſh the Goſpel of his grace, and bear witneſs to the truth. Forty nights, as well as days, are mentioned; partly to ſhew that theſe were whole entire days, conſiſting of twenty-four hours; and partly to diſtinguiſh this faſt of Chriſt from the common faſtings of the Jews, who uſed to eat in the night, tho' they faſted in the day: for according to their canons[z], they might eat and drink as ſoon as it was dark, and that till cock-crowing; and others ſay, till break of day. Maimonides[a] ſays, they might eat and drink at night, in all faſts, except the ninth of Ab. What is very ſurprizing in this faſting of our Lord, which was made and recorded, not for our imitation, is, that during the whole time he ſhould not be attended with hunger; for 'tis added, he was afterwards an hungred; that is, as Luke ſays, when the forty days were ended, ch. iv. 2. which ſeized upon him, and is related, both to expreſs the reality of his human nature, which though miraculouſly ſupported for ſo long a time without food, and inſenſible of hunger, yet at length had appetite for food; and alſo that very advantageous opportunity, ſatan had to attack him in the manner he did, with his firſt temptation.

Ver. 3. And when the tempter came to him, &c.] By the tempter, is meant the devil, ſee 1 Theſſ. iii. 5. ſo called, becauſe it is his principal work and buſineſs, in which he employs himſelf, to ſolicit men to ſin; and tempt them either to deny, or call in queſtion the being of God, arraign his perfections, murmur at his providences, and diſbelieve his promiſes. When he is here ſaid to come to Chriſt at the end of forty days and nights, we are not to ſuppoſe, that he now firſt began to tempt him; for the other Evangeliſts expreſsly ſay, that he was tempted of him forty days, Mark i. 13. Luke iv. 2. but he now appeared openly, and in a viſible ſhape: all the forty days and nights before, he had been tempting him ſecretly and inwardly; ſuggeſting things ſuitable to, and taking the advantage of the ſolitary and deſolate condition he was in. But finding theſe ſuggeſtions and temptations unſucceſsful, and obſerving him to be an hungred, he puts on a viſible form, and with an articulate, audible voice, he ſaid, if thou be the ſon of God; either doubting of his divine ſon-ſhip, calling it in queſtion, and putting him upon doing ſo too; wherefore it is no wonder that the children of God ſhould be aſſaulted with the like temptation: or elſe arguing from it, if, or ſeeing thou art the ſon of God; for he muſt know that he was, by the voice which came from heaven, and declared it: and certain it is, that the devils both knew, and were obliged to confeſs that Jeſus was the ſon of God, Luke iv. 41. by which is meant, not a good, or righteous man, or one dear to God, and in an office; but a divine perſon, one poſſeſſed of almighty power; and therefore, as a proof and demonſtration of it, he urges him to command that theſe ſtones be made bread, pointing to ſome which lay hard by; ειπε, ſay but the word, and it will be done. He did not doubt but he was able to do it, by a word ſpeaking; but he would have had him to have done it at his motion, which would have been enough for his purpoſe; who wanted to have him obedient to him: and he might hope the rather to ſucceed in this temptation, becauſe Chriſt was now an hungry; and becauſe he had carried his point with our firſt parents, by tempting them to eat of the forbidden fruit.

Ver. 4. But he anſwered and ſaid, it is written, &c.] The paſſage referred to, and cited, is in Deut. viii. 3. the manner of citing it is what was common and uſual with the Jews; and is often to be met with in the Talmudic writings; who, when they produce any paſſage of ſcripture, ſay דכתיב, as it is written. The meaning of this ſcripture is; not that as the body lives by bread, ſo the ſoul lives by the word of God, and doctrines of the Goſpel; tho' this is a certain truth: or that man lives by obedience to the commands of God, as was promiſed miſed to the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, and in the land of Canaan; but that God, in ſatisfying man's hunger, and in ſupporting and preſerving his life, is not tied to bread only, but can make uſe of other means, and order whatever he pleaſes to anſwer theſe ends; as, by raining manna from heaven, which is mentioned in the paſſage cited; and therefore there was no occaſion to change the nature of things, to turn ſtones into bread; ſince that was not ſo abſolutely neceſſary to the ſuſtenance of life, as that it could not be maintained without it. Our Lord hereby expreſſes his ſtrong faith and confidence in God, that he was able to ſupport him, and would do it, tho' in a wilderneſs, and deſtitute of ſupply; whereby he overcame this temptation of ſatan. Chriſt, in this, and ſome following citations, bears a teſtimony to, and eſtabliſhes the authority of the ſacred writings; and though he was full of the Holy Ghoſt, makes them the rule of his conduct; which ought to be obſerved againſt thoſe, who, under a pretence of the Spirit, deny the ſcriptures to be the only rule of faith and practice; and, at the ſame time points out to us the ſafeſt and beſt method of oppoſing ſatan's temptations; namely, by applying to, and making uſe of the word of God.

[z] T. Bab. Taanith, fol. 12. 1, 2. Miſn. Taanith, c. 1. §. 5.

[a] Hilch. Taanioth, c. 5. §. 5.

Ver. 5. Then the devil taketh him up, &c.] This was done, not in a viſionary way, but really and truly: ſatan, by divine permiſſion, and with the conſent of Chriſt, which ſhews his great humiliation and condeſcenſion, had power over his body, to move it from place to place; in ſome ſuch like manner as the ſpirit of the Lord caught away Philip, Acts viii. 39. he took him up, raiſed him above ground, and carried him thro' the air, into the holy city: this was Jeruſalem; for Luke expreſſly ſays, he brought him to Jeruſalem, ch. iv. 9. called ſo, becauſe of the preſence, worſhip, and ſervice of God, which had been in it, though then in a great meaſure gone; and according to the common notions of the Jews, who ſay [b] Jeruſalem was more holy than any other cities in the land, and that becauſe of the ſhecinah. The inſcription on one ſide of their ſhekels was, ירושלם עיר הקדש, Jeruſalem, the holy city [c]. Satan frequents all ſorts of places; men are no where free from his temptations; Chriſt himſelf was not in the holy city, no nor in the holy temple; hither alſo he had him, and ſetteth him upon a pinnacle, or wing of the temple. In this place [d] the Jews ſet James, the brother of Chriſt, and from it caſt him down headlong: this was the ακρον, the ſummit, or top of it; and intends either the roof encompaſſed with battlements, to keep perſons from falling off; or the top of the porch before the temple, which was 120 cubits high; or the top of the royal gallery, built by Herod, which was of ſuch an heighth, that if a man looked down from it, he ſoon became dizzy [e]. The view ſatan had in ſetting him here, appears in the next verſe.

Ver. 6. And ſaith unto him, if thou be the ſon of God, &c.] He addreſſes him after the ſame manner as before; if, or ſeeing, thou art the ſon of God, ſhew thyſelf to be ſo; give proof of thy ſon-ſhip before all the prieſts which are in and about the temple, and before all the inhabitants of Jeruſalem; caſt thyſelf down; that is, from the pinnacle of the temple: for ſince thou art the ſon of God, no hurt will come to thee; thou wilt be in the utmoſt ſafety; and this will at once be a full demonſtration to all the people, that thou art the ſon of God: for hither ſatan brought him, hoping to have got an advantage of him publickly; otherwiſe, had his view only been, to have got him to caſt himſelf down from any place of eminence, and ſo to have deſtroyed himſelf; he might have ſet him upon any other precipice; but he choſe to have it done in the ſight of the people, and in the holy city, and holy place. Let it be obſerved, that ſatan did not offer to caſt him down himſelf; for this was not in his power, nor within his permiſſion, which reached only to tempt; and beſides, would not have anſwered his end; for that would have been his own ſin, and not Chriſt's: accordingly, we may obſerve, that when he ſeeks the lives of men, he does not attempt to deſtroy them himſelf, but always puts them upon doing it. To proceed, ſatan not only argues from his divine power, as the ſon of God, that he would be ſafe in caſting himſelf down; but obſerving the advantageous uſe Chriſt made of the ſcriptures, transforms himſelf into an angel of light, and cites ſcripture too, to encourage him to this action, aſſuring him of the protection of angels. The paſſage cited, is Pſ. xci. 11, 12. which expreſſes God's tender care and concern for his people, in charging the angels with the guardianſhip and preſervation of them, in all their ways, that they might be ſecured from ſin and danger. It does not appear that ſatan was wrong in the application of this paſſage to Chriſt; for ſince it reſpects all the righteous in general, why not Chriſt as man? the head, as well as the members? And certain it is, that angels had the charge of him, did watch over him, and were a guard about him; the angels of God aſcended, and deſcended on him; they were employed in preſerving him from Herod's malice in his infancy; they miniſtred to him here in the wilderneſs, and attended him in his agony in the garden: but what ſatan failed in, and that wilfully, and wickedly, was, in omitting that part of it, to keep thee in all thy ways; which he ſaw was contrary to his purpoſe, and would have ſpoiled his deſign at once; and alſo in urging this paſſage, which only regards godly perſons, in the way of their duty, to countenance actions which are out of the way of a man's calling, or which he is not called unto; and which are contrary to religion, and a tempting God. Satan before tempted Chriſt to diſtruſt the providence of God, and now he tempts him to preſume upon it: in like manner he deals with man, when he argues from the doctrines of predeſtination and providence to the diſuſe of means, for their good, either for this life, or that which is to come; and if he tempted the ſon of God to deſtroy himſelf, 'tis no wonder that the ſaints ſhould be ſometimes haraſſed with this temptation.

Ver. 7. Jeſus ſaith unto him, it is written again, &c.] Chriſt takes no notice of the falſe, and wrong citation of ſcripture made by the devil, nor of any miſapplication of it; but mildly replies, by oppoſing another paſſage of ſcripture to him, Deut. vi. 16. ye ſhall not tempt the Lord your God, thereby tacitly ſhewing, that he had produced ſcripture to a very wrong purpoſe, ſince that could never contradict itſelf; and alſo, that for a perſon to neglect the ordinary means of ſafety, and to expect, that as God can, ſo he will, preſerve without the uſe of ſuch means, is a tempting him. The Hebrew word תנסו, tempt, as Manaſſeh ben [f] Iſrael obſerves, is always taken in an ill part, and is to be underſtood of ſuch who would try the power, goodneſs, or will of God. And which, as it is not fitting it ſhould be done by any man, ſo not by himſelf; and perhaps he hereby intimates too, that he himſelf was God; and therefore, as it was not right in

[b] Bemidbar Rabba, fol. 188. 4. & Maimon. Hilch. Beth. Habechirah, c. 7. §. 14. & 6. 16.

[c] Waſerus de Antiq. Numm. Heb. l. 2. c. 5.

[d] Euſeb. Eccl. Hiſt. l. 2. c. 23.

[e] Joſeph. Antiq. Jud. l. 15. c. 14.

[f] Conciliat. in Deut. Quæſt. 3. p. 223.

in him to tempt God the father, by taking ſuch a ſtep ſatan ſolicited him to; nor would it be right in any other; ſo it was iniquitous in the devil to tempt him, who was God over all, bleſſed for ever.

Ver. 8. Again, the devil taketh him up into an exceeding high mountain, &c.] That is, he took him off from the pinnacle of the temple, and carried him through the air, to one of the mountains which were round about Jeruſalem; or to ſome very high mountain at a greater diſtance; but what mountain is not certain; nor can it be known; nor is it of any moment; it has been ſaid [g] to be mount Lebanon: here he ſheweth him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them. By all the kingdoms of the world are meant, not only the Roman empire, as Dr. Lightfoot thinks, though that was, to be ſure, the greateſt in the world at that time; but all the kingdoms in the whole world, which ſubſiſted in any form, whether within, or independent of the Roman empire; or whether greater or leſſer: andby the glory of them, is meant, the riches, pomp, power, and grandeur of them. Now the view which ſatan gave Chriſt of all this, was not by a repreſentation of them in a picture, or in a map, or in any geographical tables, as [h] ſome have thought; ſince to do this, there was no need to take him up into a mountain, and that an exceeding high one; for this might have been done in a valley, as well as in a mountain: and yet it could not be a true and real ſight of theſe things he gave him; for there is no mountain in the world, from whence, can be beheld any one kingdom, much leſs all the kingdoms of the world; and ſtill leſs the riches, glory, pomp, and power of them: but this was a fictitious, deluſive repreſentation, which ſatan was permitted to make; to cover which, and that it might be thought to be real, he took Chriſt into an high mountain; where he propoſed an object externally to his ſight, and internally to his imagination, which repreſented, in appearance, the whole world, and all its glory. Xiphilinus [i] reports of Severus, that he dreamed, he was had by a certain perſon, to a place where he could look all around him, and from thence he beheld πασαν μεν την γην, πασαν δε την θαλασσαν, all the earth, and alſo all the ſea; which was all in imagination. Satan thought to have impoſed on Chriſt this way, but failed in his attempt. Luke ſays, this was done in a moment of time, in the twinkling of an eye; as theſe two phraſes are joined together, 1 Cor. xv. 52. or in a point of time. The word ϛιγμη, uſed by Luke, ch. iv. 5. ſometimes ſignifies a mathematical point, which Zeno ſays [k] is the end of the line, and the leaſt mark; to which the alluſion may be here, and deſigns the ſmalleſt part of time that can be conceived of. Antoninus the emperor uſes the word, as here, for a point of time; and ſays [l], that the time of human life, and the whole preſent time, is but ϛιγμη, a point. Would you know what a moment, or point of time is, according to the calculation of the Jewiſh doctors, take the account as follows; though in it they differ: a moment, ſay they [m], is the fifty-ſix thouſandth, elſewhere [n], the fifty-eight thouſandth, and in another place [o], the fifty-three thouſandth and eight hundredth and forty-eighth, or, according to another account [p], eighty-eighth part of an hour. If this could be thought to be a true and exact account of a moment, or point of time, it was a very ſhort ſpace of time indeed, in which the devil ſhewed to Chriſt the kingdoms of this world, and their glory; but this is not more ſurprizing than his vanity, pride, and impudence, in the following verſe.

Ver. 9. And ſaith unto him, all theſe things will I give thee, &c.] This is more fully and ſtrongly expreſſed by the Evangeliſt Luke, ch. iv. 6, 7. And the devil ſaid unto him, All this power will I give thee, and the glory of them; for that is delivered unto me, and to whomſoever I will, I give it——all ſhall be thine. In which words he ſets up himſelf to be the God of this world, and the ſovereign diſpoſer of it: he pretends it was delivered to him by the true God, who had left it to his arbitrary diſpoſal; and that he could inveſt Chriſt with the power and government of it, and put him in poſſeſſion of all its glory, and make good and ſupport his title to it, and intereſt in it. Never was ſuch monſtrous arrogance expreſſed as this; when this poor, proud, wretched creature, has not the diſpoſal, at his pleaſure, of any one ſingle thing; no not the leaſt in the whole univerſe. He could not touch, neither Job's perſon, nor any of his ſubſtance, without divine permiſſion; nor enter into an herd of ſwine without Chriſt's leave; and yet had the front to make an offer of the whole world, as if he had a deſpotic power over it; and that upon this horrid and blaſphemous condition, if thou wilt fall down and worſhip me. This was the higheſt degree of effrontery and impudence. The devil is not content to be worſhipped by men, but ſeeks for adoration from the ſon of God: this opens at once his proud, ambitious, and aſpiring views, to be as God himſelf; for with nothing leſs can he be ſatisfied.

Ver. 10. Then ſaith Jeſus to him, get thee hence, ſatan, &c.] In Luke iv. 8. 'tis get thee behind me; and ſo ſome copies read here, and is expreſſive of indignation and abhorrence; ſee Matt. xvi. 23. rebuking his impudence, and deteſting his impiety: he had bore his inſults and temptations with great patience; he had anſwered him with mildneſs and gentleneſs; but now his behaviour to him was intolerable, which obliged him to ſhew his reſentment, exert his power, and authority, and rid himſelf at once of ſo vile a creature; giving this reaſon for it; for it is written, thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve. The place referred to is in Deut. vi. 13. thou ſhalt fear the Lord thy God, and ſerve him: to fear the Lord, and to worſhip him, is the ſame thing. Worſhip includes both an internal and external reverence of God: the word only is not in the original text, but is added by our Lord; and that very juſtly; partly to expreſs the emphaſis which is on the word him; and in perfect agreement with the context, which requires it; ſince it follows, ye ſhall not go after other Gods. Moreover, not to take notice of the Septuagint verſion, in which the word only is alſo added. Joſephus [q], the Jewiſh hiſtorian, referring to this law, ſays, becauſe God is one, και δει τουτον σεβεσθαι μονον, therefore he only is to be worſhipped. And Aben Ezra [r], a Jewiſh writer, explaining the laſt clauſe in the verſe, and thou ſhalt ſwear by his name, uſes the word only; and which indeed, of right, belongs to every clauſe in it. The meaning of our Lord in citing it is; that ſince the Lord God is the alone object of worſhip, it was horrid blaſphemy in ſatan to deſire, it might be given to him, and which could not be done without the greateſt impiety.

---

[g] Vid. Fabricii Bibliograph. Antiq. c. 5. p. 137. [h] Vid, Fabricium, ibid. & Grotium in loc. [i] Apud Fabricium ib. [k] Vid. Laertium in Vit. Zenou. [l] De ſeipſo, l. 2. c. 17. & l. 6. c. 36. [m] T. Hieroſ. Beracot, fol. 2. 4. [n] T. Bab. Beracot. ſol. 7. 1. [o] Avoda Zara, fol. 4. 1. [p] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 7. 1. [q] Antiq. Jud. l. 3. c. 5. §. 5. [r] In Deut. vi. 13.

Ver. 11. Then the devil leaveth him, &c.] Luke, in ch. iv. 13. ſays, when the devil had ended all the temptation, he departed from him for a ſeaſon, or until a ſeaſon. That is, having tempted him with all ſorts of temptations, and tried him every way to no purpoſe; having gone thro', and finiſhed the whole ſcheme and courſe of temptations he had deviſed, without ſucceſs; and having orders from Chriſt to depart, which he was obliged to obey, leaves him for a while, till another opportunity of tempting him in ſome other way ſhould offer; or till the time came, when he ſhould be ſo far able to get the advantage of him, as to bruiſe his heel, or bring him to the duſt of death; ſee John xiv. 30. Luke xxii. 53. and when he was gone; better company came in his room; behold, angels came and miniſtred to him. They came to him in a viſible, human form, as they were uſed to do under the Old Teſtament diſpenſation, and that after the temptation was over; after ſatan was foiled, and was gone; that it might appear that Chriſt alone had got the victory over him, without any help or aſſiſtance from them. When they were come, they miniſtred to him; that is, they brought him food of their own preparing and dreſſing, as they formerly did to Elijah, 1 Kings xix. 5, 6, 7, 8. to ſatisfy his hunger, and refreſh his animal ſpirits; which had underwent a very great fatigue, during this length of time, in which he faſted, and was tempted by ſatan. Thus, as the angels are miniſtring ſpirits to the heirs of ſalvation, both in a temporal and in a ſpiritual ſenſe, Heb. i. 14. ſo they were to Chriſt. Nothing is more frequent with the Jews than to call the angels מלאכי השרת, miniſtring angels: it would be needleſs and endleſs to refer to particular places.

Ver. 12. Now, when Jeſus had heard that John was caſt into priſon, &c.] John was caſt into priſon by Herod; the reaſon of it may be ſeen in Matt. xiv. 3, 4. The priſon into which he was caſt, according to Joſephus[s], was the caſtle of Machærus: here he continued ſome time before he was put to death; for from hence he ſent two diſciples to Jeſus, to know if he was the Meſſiah, Matt. xi. 2. Now when Jeſus heard of this his impriſonment, he departed into Galilee; not ſo much on account of ſafety, or for fear of Herod, but to call his diſciples, who lived in that country.

Ver. 13. And leaving Nazareth, &c.] Where he was educated, and had lived many years together; and where he preached firſt to the good liking of the people, who wondered at the gracious words that proceeded out of his mouth: though afterwards they were ſo much diſpleaſed with him, that they thruſt him out of their city; and intended to have deſtroyed him, by caſting him down headlong from the brow of an hill; and which ſeems to be the reaſon of his leaving this city; ſee Luke iv. 16—22—28, 29, 30, 31. he came and dwelt in Capernaum, a city of Galilee, Luke iv. 31. which is upon the ſea coaſt, by the ſea of Tiberias, or Geneſareth, in the borders of Zabulon and Nephthali: it bordered on both theſe tribes; it ſignifies the village of conſolation[t]; and ſo it was, whilſt the conſolation of Iſrael dwelt there. The Jews ſpeak very evilly of it: no doubt becauſe it was the dwelling-place of Chriſt; and becauſe there might be ſome in it who believed in him: they repreſent the inhabitants of it as very great ſinners, hereticks, and dealers in magic art. Chanina, the brother's ſon of R. Joſhua, they ſay[u], went to Capernaum, and the hereticks did ſomething to him; according to the Gloſs, they bewitched him: and elſewhere[w] explaining the words in Eccl. vii. 26. who ſo pleaſeth God, &c; this, they ſay is Chananiah, the brother's ſon of R. Joſhua; and the ſinner; theſe are the children, or inhabitants of Capernaum. Thus they ſhew their ſpite againſt the very place in which Chriſt dwelt.

Ver. 14, 15. That it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken, &c.] Chriſt's dwelling in Capernaum accompliſhed a prophecy of the prophet Eſaias, ch. ix. 1, 2. and he went and dwelt there, that it might be fulfilled which he had ſpoken: the meaning of which prophecy is[x], that as thoſe parts of the land of Iſrael, there mentioned, had ſuffered much by Tiglath Pilezer, who had carried them captive, 2 Kings xv. 29. and is the vexation referr'd to; ſo they ſhould be honoured, and made very glorious, by the preſence and converſation of the Meſſiah among them, and which now had its literal fulfilment: for Chriſt now came and dwelt in Capernaum, which lay between the lands, and upon the borders both of Zabulon and Nephthali; was ſituated by the ſea of Tiberias, beyond Jordan, and in Galilee of the nations; the upper Galilee, which had in it people of other nations beſides Jews. The ancient Jews expected the Meſſiah to make his firſt appearance in Galilee; which expectation muſt be grounded on this prophecy; for ſo they ſay[y] expreſsly, "the king Meſſiah ſhall be revealed בארעא דגליל, in the land of Galilee." And in another place[z] explaining Iſ. ii. 19. they paraphraſe it thus, "for fear of the Lord; this is the indignation of the whole world: and for the glory of his majeſty; this is the Meſſiah; when he ariſeth to ſhake terribly the earth, when he ſhall ariſe and be revealed בארעא דגליל, in the land of Galilee: becauſe that this is the firſt place to be deſtroyed in the holy land; therefore he ſhall be revealed there the firſt of all places." Here Jeſus, the true Meſſiah, made his firſt appearance publickly; here he called his diſciples, and began his miniſtry.

Ver. 16. The people which ſat in darkneſs, &c.] The inhabitants of Galilee, who ſat or walked, as in Iſaiah; that is, continued in ſpiritual darkneſs, in ignorance, blindneſs, error and infidelity, ſaw great light; Chriſt himſelf, who came a light into the world; he converſed with them, preached unto them, and opened the eyes of their underſtandings to behold his glory, and to know him, and ſalvation by him. And to them which ſat in the region and ſhadow of death: the ſame perſons who ſit in darkneſs, ſit alſo in the region of death; for ſuch are dead in treſpaſſes and ſins: where there is no ſpiritual light, there is no ſpiritual life, and ſuch are in danger of the ſecond death; but the happineſs of theſe people was, that to them light is ſprung up, like the riſing ſun, and this without their aſking or ſeeking for: Chriſt, the ſun of righteouſneſs, aroſe upon them, without any deſert, deſire, or expectation of theirs, with healing in his wings; and cured them of their darkneſs and deadneſs, turned them from darkneſs to light, and cauſed them to paſs from death to life. Light is not only a character under which Chriſt frequently goes in the New Teſtament, ſee John i. 4—8, 9. and iii. 19. and viii. 12. and xii. 46. but is one of the names by which the Meſſiah was known under the Old Teſtament; ſee Dan. ii. 22. Pſal. xliii. 3. and which the Jews give unto him: ſays R. Aba[a] Serungia, and the light dwelleth with him; this is the king Meſſiah. The note of R. Sol. Jarchi on theſe words, ſend forth thy light, is, the king Meſſiah; who is compared to light, according to Pſal. cxxxii. 17. the days of the Meſſiah, are by them ſaid to[b] be ימי אורה days of light; and ſo theſe Galileans found them to be; as all do, to whom the Goſpel of Chriſt comes with power and demonſtration of the Spirit. And theſe days of light, firſt begun in the land of Zabulon; which, according to Philo the Jew[c], was συμβολον φωτος, "a ſymbol of light; "ſince, adds he, its name ſignifies the nature of "night; but the night removing, and departing, "light neceſſarily ariſes." As did, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, here, when Chriſt the light aroſe.

---

[s] Antiq. l. 18. c. 7.

[t] Vid. Benjamin Tudelenſ. Itinerar. p. 37. & l'Empereur. not. in ib. & Hieron. in Mar. i. 21, & Origen. Comment. in Matt. p. 317. vol. 1. Ed. Huet.

[u] Midraſh Koheleth, fol. 63. 1.

[w] Ib. fol. 77. 1.

[x] See my treatiſe upon the prophecies of the Meſſiah, &c. p. 147, &c.

[y] Zohar in Gen. fol. 74. 3.

[z] Ib. in Exod. fol. 3. 3. & 88. 3.

Ver. 17. From that time Jeſus began to preach and to ſay, &c.] Not from the time he dwelt in Capernaum; for he had preached in Nazareth before he came there, Luke iv. 16, 31. nor from the time of John's being caſt into priſon; for he had preached, and made diſciples, who were baptized by his orders, before John's impriſonment, John iii. 22, 24—26. and iv. 1. but from the time that ſatan left tempting him; as ſoon as that combat was over, immediately he went into Galilee, began to preach, and called his diſciples. The words with which he began his miniſtry, are the ſame with which John begun his; which ſhews the entire agreement between them, in that they not only preached the ſame doctrine, but in the ſame words; ſee the note on Matt. iii. 2.

Ver. 18. And Jeſus walking by the ſea of Galilee, &c.] Not for his recreation and diverſion, or by accident; but on purpoſe to look out for, and call ſome, whom he had choſen to be his diſciples. And as he was walking about, to and fro, he ſaw two perſons; and as ſoon as he ſaw them, he knew them to be thoſe, he had determined to make his apoſtles: and theſe are deſcribed by their relation to each other, brethren; not merely, becauſe they were of the ſame nation, or of the ſame religion, or of the ſame employ and buſineſs of life, but becauſe they were of the ſame blood; and by their names, Simon called Peter, and Andrew his brother. Simon is the ſame name with שמעון Simeon; and ſo he is called, Acts xv. 14. and which, in the Jeruſalem dialect, is read סימון Simon. His ſurname Peter, which was afterwards given him by Chriſt, Matt. xvi. 18. John i. 42. is Greek, and anſwers to Cephas, ſignifying a rock; though this name is to be met with in the Talmudic[d] writings, where we read of R. Joſe, בר פיטרס bar Petros. This his ſurname is added here, to diſtinguiſh him from Simon, the Canaanite. The name of his brother Andrew, is generally thought to be Greek; though ſome have derived it from נדר to vow, and is alſo to be obſerved in the writings of the Jews[e]; where mention is made of R. Chanina בר אנדריי bar Andrei. They are further deſcribed by the work they were at, or buſineſs they were employed in, caſting a net into the ſea; either in order to catch fiſh in it, or to waſh it, Luke v. 2. and the reaſon of their ſo doing is added; for they were fiſhers. Of this mean employment, were the very firſt perſons Chriſt was pleaſed to call to the work of the miniſtry; men of no education, who made no figure in life, but were deſpicable and contemptible: this he did, to make it appear, that they were not qualified for ſuch ſervice of themſelves; that all their gifts and qualifications were from him; to ſhew his own power; to confound the wiſdom of the wiſe; and to let men ſee, that none ought to glory in themſelves, but in him. The Jews have a notion of the word of God and prophecy, being received and embraced only by ſuch ſort of perſons: ſays R. Iſaac Arama[f], "his word came to heal all, "but ſome particular perſons only receive it; and "who of all men are of a dull underſtanding, "דייגים עברי הים fiſhermen, who do buſineſs in "the ſea: this is what is written; they that go down "to the ſea in ſhips, that do buſineſs in great waters, "theſe ſee the works of the Lord: theſe ſeem not "indeed fit to receive any thing that belongs to the "underſtanding, becauſe of their dulneſs; and yet "theſe receive the truth of prophecy and viſion, "becauſe they believe his word." I can't but think, that ſome reſpect is had to theſe fiſhers, in Ezek. xlvii. 10. And it ſhall come to paſs that fiſhers ſhall ſtand upon it; that is, upon, or by the river of waters, ſaid ver. 8. to iſſue out toward the eaſt country, and go down into the deſert: which both R. Jarchi and Kimchi, underſtand of the ſea of Tiberias; the ſame with the ſea of Galilee, by which Chriſt walked; and where he found theſe fiſhers at work, and called them. See alſo Jer. xvi. 16.

Ver. 19. And he ſaith unto them follow me, &c.] Theſe two brethren had been the diſciples of John, as Theophylact thinks, and which ſeems agreeable to John i. 35—40. and though through John's pointing out Chriſt unto them, they had ſome knowledge of him, and converſation with him, yet they abode with him but for that day, ver. 37, 38, 39. and afterwards returned to their maſter; and upon his impriſonment, betook themſelves to their former employment: from whence Chriſt now calls them to be his diſciples, ſaying follow me, or come after me; that is, be a diſciple of mine; ſee Luke xiv. 27. And to encourage them to it, makes uſe of this argument; and, or for, I will make you fiſhers of men: you ſhall be fiſhers ſtill, but in a higher ſenſe; and in a far more noble employment, and to much better purpoſe. The net they were to ſpread and caſt was the Goſpel, ſee Matt. xiii. 47. for Chriſt made them not דייגי תורה fiſhers of the law, to uſe the words of Maimonides[g], but fiſhers of the Goſpel. The ſea into which they were to caſt the net, was firſt Judea, and then the whole world; the fiſh they were to catch, were the ſouls of men, both among Jews and Gentiles; of whoſe converſion and faith, they were to be the happy inſtruments: now none could make them fiſhers in this ſenſe, or fit them for ſuch ſervice, and ſucceed them in it, but Chriſt; and who here promiſes it unto them.

Ver. 20. And they ſtraightway left their nets, &c.] That is, as ſoon as he had called them, they left their worldly employment, and followed him; they gave up themſelves to his ſervice, and became his diſciples; they not only left their nets, but their fiſhing boats, and fiſhing trade, and all that belonged to it, even all their ſubſtance; and alſo their relations, friends and acquaintance, ſee Matt. xix. 27. which ſhews what a mighty power went along with the words and call of Chriſt; and what a ready, chearful, and voluntary ſubjection this produces, wherever it takes place.

Ver. 21. And going on from thence, he ſaw other two, &c.] When he had gone but a little way further, Mark i. 19. he ſpied two other perſons he was looking for, and had deſigned to call to the office of Apoſtleſhip; and theſe are alſo deſcribed as brethren, and by name, James, the ſon of Zebedee, and John his brother. The Jews make mention in their writings [h], of one ר׳ יעקב בר זבדי R. James the ſon of Zebedee; which Capellus [i] conjectures is the very ſame perſon here mentioned: but the James they ſpeak of as a diſciple of Jeſus, they call יעקב מינאה James the heretick [k]; who they ſay, was of the village of Secaniah, and ſometimes of the village of Sama. His brother's name was John, who was the Evangeliſt, as well as Apoſtle; theſe were in a ſhip with their father Zebedee. Men of this name, and ſons of men of this name, were very common among the Jewiſh Rabbins; but neither this man, nor his ſons, were maſters or doctors in Iſrael; for ſuch Chriſt choſe not for his Apoſtles. It ſeems to be the ſame name with Zebadiah, 1 Chron. xxvii. 7. theſe with him, were mending their nets, which were broken, and needed repairing; and perhaps being poor, could not afford to buy new ones: this ſhews their induſtry and diligence; and may be a pattern and example to perſons, cloſely to attend the buſineſs of their calling, whilſt the providence of God continues them in it. And he called them; from their employment, to follow him, and become his diſciples; and no doubt gave them the ſame promiſe and encouragement, he had given the two former.

---

[a] Bereſhith Rabba, fol. 1. 3. & Echa Rabbati, fol. 50 2.
[b] Baal Hatturim in Gen. fol. 2. 2.
[c] De Somniis, p. 1113.
[d] T. Hieroſ. Moed Katon, fol. 82. 4. Avoda Zara fol. 42. 3.
[e] T. Hieroſ. Megilla, fol. 75. 2. & Beracot. fol. 2. 3.
[f] Apud Galatin. de Arcan. Cathol. ver. l. 3. c. 5. p. 119. & Crocium de Meſſia Theſ. 213. p. 62, 63.
[g] Hilchot. Talmud. Torah, c. 1. §. 12. ſo Dr. Lightfoot cites the phraſe, but in Ed. Amſterd. 'tis דיני תורה the judgments of the law.

Ver. 22. And they immediately left the ſhip, &c.] More is expreſſed here than before, for they not only left their nets, but their ſhip too; which was of much more value; nay, even their father alſo, with the hired ſervants, Mark i. 20. and ſo complied with the call of Chriſt to his people, Pſal. xlv. 10. and thereby proved, that they were ſincerely his followers, Luke xiv. 26. and might expect the gracious promiſe of Chriſt to be made good unto them, Matt. xix. 28, 29.

Ver. 23. And Jeſus went about all Galilee, &c.] Having called four of his diſciples, he took a tour throughout Galilee; a country mean and deſpicable, inhabited by perſons poor, illiterate, vile, and wicked: ſuch had the firſt fruits of Chriſt's miniſtry, and meſſages of his grace; which ſhews the freeneſs, ſovereignty, and riches, of his abounding goodneſs. He went about all this country, both upper and nether Galilee, which was very populous: Joſephus ſays [l], there were two hundred and four cities and towns in it; he means, which were places of note, beſides villages. He went about, not like ſatan, ſeeking the deſtruction of men; but as one that went along with him ſays, doing good, Acts x. 38, both to the bodies and ſouls of men; for he was teaching in their ſynagogues, and preaching the goſpel of the kingdom. The places where he taught were their ſynagogues: he did not creep into private houſes, as the Phariſees then, and falſe apoſtles afterwards did; but he appeared openly, and declared his doctrine in places of publick worſhip; where the Jews met together for divine ſervice, to pray, read the Scriptures, and give a word of exhortation to the people; for though they had but one temple, which was at Jeruſalem, they had many ſynagogues, or meeting places, all over the land: here Chriſt not only prayed and read, but preached; and the ſubject matter of his miniſtry was, the goſpel of the kingdom: that is, the good news of the kingdom of the Meſſiah being come, and which now took place; wherefore he exhorted them to repent of, and relinquiſh their former principles; to receive the doctrines, and ſubmit to the ordinances of the goſpel diſpenſation: he alſo preached to them the things concerning the kingdom of heaven; as that except a man be born again, he cannot ſee it; and unleſs he has a better righteouſneſs than his own, he cannot enter into it: he was alſo healing all manner of ſickneſs, and all manner of diſeaſe among the people. 'Tis in the Greek text, every ſickneſs, and every diſeaſe; that is, all ſorts of maladies, diſorders and diſtempers, which attend the bodies of men; and is another inſtance beſides, Matt. iii. 5. in which the word all, or every, is to be taken in a limited and reſtrained ſenſe, for ſome, or ſome of all ſorts; which teaches us how to underſtand thoſe phraſes, when uſed in the doctrine of redemption by Chriſt.

Ver. 24. And his fame went throughout all Syria, &c.] For his miniſtry and miracles, eſpecially the latter; wherefore they brought to him, that is, out of Syria, the ſick. Syria was in ſome reſpects reckoned as the land of Iſrael, though in others not. "The [m] Rabbins teach, that in three reſpects Syria was like to "the land of Iſrael, and in three to the countries "without the land: the duſt defiled, as without "the land; he that ſold his ſervant to (one in) Syria, was as if he ſold him to one without the "land; and he that brought a bill of divorce from "Syria, as if he brought it from without the land: "and in three things it was like to the land of Iſrael; "it was bound to tithes, and to the obſervance of "the ſeventh year; and he that would go into it, "might go into it with purity; and he that purchaſed a field in Syria, was as if he had purchaſed "one in the ſuburbs of Jeruſalem." All ſick people, that were taken with divers diſeaſes and torments. This expreſſes in general, the grievous and tormenting diſeaſes with which the perſons were afflicted, who were brought to Chriſt for healing: ſome particular ones follow; and thoſe which were poſſeſſed with devils; in body as well as in mind; of which there were many inſtances, permitted by God on purpoſe, that Chriſt might have an opportunity of ſhewing his power over thoſe evil ſpirits. And thoſe which were lunatick; either melancholy perſons, or mad and diſtracted men; that retired from the converſation of men, into fields or deſert places: or ſuch, whoſe diſorders were influenced by the change of the moon; ſuch as thoſe who are troubled with the falling ſickneſs; ſo the Greeks [n] call ſuch perſons σεληνιαζομενους, the word here uſed by the Evangeliſt. And thoſe that had the palſy. Theſe were each of them ſuch diſorders, as were incurable by the art of medicine; or for which rarely, and with great difficulty, any manner of relief could be obtained; and he healed them; without any means, by a word ſpeaking; which ſhewed him more than a man, and truly and properly God.

Ver. 25. And there followed him great multitudes of people, &c.] Some on one account, and ſome on another; ſome out of good will, others out of ill will; ſome for the healing of their bodies, others for the good of their ſouls; ſome to ſee his miracles, others to hear his doctrine; and what with one and another, the concourſe of people that followed him, was greater than that which followed John. The Greek word for multitude, is adopted into the Talmudic language, and is often uſed by the doctors; who have a tradition to this purpoſe, that רבוא

---

[h] T. Hieroſ. Yebamot, fol. 9. 4. & Maaſer Sheni, fol. 55. 2. Trumot. fol. 45. 2. Sheviith fol. 35. 1. Bereſhith Rab. fol. 31. 4. & 36. 2. [i] Spicilegium in loc. [k] T. Bab. Megilla 23. 1. Avoda Zara, fol. 17. 1. & 27. 2. & 28. 1. Cholin. fol. 84. 1. T. Hieroſ. Sabbat fol. 14. 4. & Avoda Zara, fol. 40. 4. Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 62. 4. & 77. 1. Juchaſin, fol. 41. 1. [l] In vita ejus. [m] T. Bab. Gittin. fol. 8. 1. 2. vid. Maimon. Hilch. Tumath Meth. c. 11. §. 6. [n] Vid. Fabricii Bibl. Græc. vol. 2. l. 3. c. 26. p. 656—658.

אין אוכלוסא פחותה מששים רבוא, there is no multitude leſs than ſixty myriads[o]; but we are not to imagine, that when here, and elſewhere, a multitude is ſaid to follow, or attend on Chriſt, that he had ſuch a number of people after him as this; only that the number was very large. The places from whence they came are particularly mentioned, as from Galilee; where he had called his diſciples, had been preaching the Goſpel, and healing all manner of diſeaſes; and therefore it is not to be wondered at, that he ſhould have a large number of followers from hence. This country was divided into[p] three parts: "There was upper Galilee, and nether Galilee, and the valley from Capharbananiah and upwards: all that part which did not bring forth ſycamine trees, was upper Galilee, and from Capharbananiah downwards: all that part which did bring forth ſycamine trees, was nether Galilee; and the coaſt of Tiberias was the valley." Frequent mention is made in the Talmudic[q] writings, of upper Galilee, as diſtinct from the other. And from Decapolis; a tract of land ſo called, from the ten cities that were in it; and which, according to Pliny[r], were theſe following; Damaſcus, Opoton, Philadelphia, Raphana, Scythopolis, Gadara, Hippondion, Pella, Galaſa, and Canatha; ſee Mark v. 20. and vii. 31. And from Jeruſalem; the metropolis of the whole land; for his fame had reached that great city, and there were ſome there, curious and deſirous to ſee him, and hear him; though he was got into thoſe diſtant and obſcure parts. And from Judea; from the other parts of it: and from beyond Jordan; which was a diſtinct country of itſelf, known by the name of Peræa; ſo called, perhaps, from ϖεραν, the word here tranſlated, from beyond. It is to be obſerved, that here are three countries diſtinctly mentioned, Galilee, Judea, and beyond Jordan; which was the diviſion of the land of Iſrael; of theſe three lands the Talmudiſts often ſpeak. "It is a tradition of the Rabbins[s], that in three countries they intercalate the year; Judea, and beyond Jordan, and Galilee." Again[t], "There are three lands, that are obliged to the removing of fruits; Judea, and beyond Jordan, and Galilee." Once more[u], "There are three countries for celebration of marriages, Judea, and beyond Jordan, and Galilee." The account which[w] Maimonides gives of theſe three countries, is this; "The land of Judea, all of it, the mountain, the plain, and the valley, are one country; beyond Jordan, all of it, the plain of Lydda, and the mountain of the plain of Lydda, and from Bethoron to the ſea, are one country: Galilee, all of it, the upper and nether, and the coaſt of Tiberias, are one country." The country beyond Jordan, was not ſo much eſteemed, as what was properly the land of Canaan, or Iſrael; for the Jews[x] ſay, "the land of Iſrael is holier than all lands; becauſe they bring out of it the ſheaf, the firſt fruits, and the ſhew-bread, which they don't bring from other lands: the land of Canaan, is holier than beyond Jordan; the land of Canaan is fit to be the habitation of the Shekinah; beyond Jordan is not." This they ſay[y], was not the land flowing with milk and honey.

CHAP. V.

Ver. 1. AND ſeeing the multitudes, &c.] The great concourſe of people that followed him from the places before-mentioned, he went up into a mountain; either to pray alone, which was ſometimes his cuſtom to do, or to ſhun the multitude; or rather, becauſe it was a commodious place for teaching the people: and when he was ſat; not for reſt, but in order to teach; for ſitting was the poſture of maſters, or teachers, ſee Matt. xiii. 2. Luke iv. 20. and v. 3. John viii. 2. The form in which the maſter and his diſciples ſat, is thus deſcribed by Maimonides[z]. "The maſter ſits at the head, or in the chief place, and the diſciples before him in a circuit, like a crown; ſo that they all ſee the maſter, and hear his words; and the maſter may not ſit upon a ſeat, and the ſcholars upon the ground; but either all upon the earth, or upon ſeats: indeed from the beginning, or formerly היה הרב יושב the maſter uſed to ſit, and the diſciples ſtand; but before the deſtruction of the ſecond temple, all uſed to teach their diſciples as they were ſitting." With reſpect to this latter cuſtom, the Talmudiſts ſay[a], that "from the days of Moſes, to Rabban Gamaliel (the maſter of the Apoſtle Paul) they did not learn the law, unleſs ſtanding; after Rabban Gamaliel died, ſickneſs came into the world, and they learnt the law ſitting: hence it is a tradition, that after Rabban Gamaliel died, the glory of the law ceaſed." His diſciples came unto him; not only the twelve, but the company, or multitude, of his diſciples, Luke vi. 17. which he made in the ſeveral places, where he had been preaching; for the number of his diſciples was larger than John's.

Ver. 2. And he opened his mouth, &c.] He ſpoke with a clear and ſtrong voice, that all the people might hear him; and with great freedom, utterance, and chearfulneſs, and things of the greateſt moment and importance; and taught them; not his diſciples only, but the whole multitude, who heard him with aſtoniſhment; ſee ch. vii. 28, 29. Some things in the following diſcourſe are directed to the diſciples in particular, and others regard the multitude in general.

Ver. 3. Bleſſed are the poor in ſpirit, &c.] Not the poor in purſe, or who are ſo with reſpect to things temporal: for though God has choſen and called many, who are in ſuch a condition of life, yet not all; the kingdom of heaven can't be ſaid to belong to them all, or only; but ſuch as are poor in a ſpiritual ſenſe. All mankind are ſpiritually poor; they have nothing to eat that is fit and proper; nor any cloaths to wear, but rags; nor are they able to purchaſe either; they have no money to buy with; they are in debt, owe ten thouſand talents, and have nothing to pay; and in ſuch a condition, that they are not able to help themſelves. The greater part of mankind are inſenſible of this their condition; but think themſelves rich, and increaſed with goods: there are ſome who are ſenſible of it, who ſee their poverty and want, freely acknowledge it, bewail it, and mourn over it; are humbled for it, and are broken under a ſenſe of it; entertain low and mean thoughts of themſelves; ſeek after the true riches, both of grace and glory; and frankly acknowledge, that all they have, or hope to have, is owing to the free grace of God. Now theſe are the perſons intended in this place; who are not only poor, but are poor in ſpirit; in their own ſpirits, in their own ſenſe, apprehenſion, and judgment: and may even be called beggars, as the word may be rendered; for being ſenſible of their poverty, they place themſelves at the door of mercy, and knock there; their language is, God be merciful; their poſture is ſtanding, watching, and waiting, at wiſdom's gates, and at the poſts of her door; they are importunate, will have no denial, yet receive the leaſt favour with thankfulneſs. Now theſe are pronounced bleſſed, for this reaſon, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven; not only the Goſpel, and the miniſtration of it, which belongs to them. The poor have the Goſpel preached: it not only reaches their ears, but their hearts; it enters into them, is applied unto them, they receive and embrace it with the utmoſt joy and gladneſs: but eternal glory, this is prepared for them, and given to them; they are born heirs of it, have a right unto it, are making meet for it, and ſhall enjoy it.

---

[o] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 58. 1.
[p] Miſn. Sheviith. c. 9. §. 2.
[q] T. Bab. Bava Kama, fol. 80. 1. Cetubot fol. 67. 2. & Succa fol. 27. 2. & 28. 1. Zohar in Gen. fol. 129. 3.
[r] Nat. Hiſt. l. 5. c. 18.
[s] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 11. 2.
[t] Miſn. Sheviith, c. 9. §. 2.
[u] Miſn. Cetubot, c. 13. §. 10.
[w] Hilch. Shemittah, c. 7. §. 9.
[x] Bemidbar Rabba, §. 7. fol. 188. 3. Maimon. Beth Habechira, c. 7. §. 12.
[y] Miſn. Biccurim, c. 1. §. 10.
[z] Hilch. Talmud Torah, c. 4. §. 2.
[a] T. Bab. Megilla, fol. 21. 1. Vid. Miſn. Sota, c. 9. §. 15. & Jarchi, Maimon, & Bartenora in ib.

Ver. 4. Bleſſed are they that mourn, &c.] For ſin, for their own ſins; the ſin of their nature, indwelling ſin, which is always working in them, and is a continual grief of mind to them; the unbelief of their hearts, notwithſtanding the many inſtances, declarations, promiſes, and diſcoveries of grace made unto them; their daily infirmities, and many ſins of life, becauſe they are committed againſt a God of love, grace and mercy, grieve the Spirit, and diſhonour the Goſpel of Chriſt: who mourn alſo for the ſins of others, for the ſins of the world, the prophaneneſs and wickedneſs that abounds in it; and more eſpecially for the ſins of profeſſors, by reaſon of which, the name of God, and ways of Chriſt, are evil ſpoken of: who likewiſe mourn under afflictions, ſpiritual ones, temptations, deſertions; and declenſions; temporal ones, their own, which they receive, either more immediately from the hand of God, or from men; ſuch as they endure for the ſake of Chriſt, and the profeſſion of his Goſpel; and who ſympathize with others in their afflictions. Theſe, how ſorrowful and diſtreſſed ſoever they may appear, are bleſſed; for they ſhall be comforted: here, in this life, by the God of all comfort, by Chriſt the comforter; by the Spirit of God, whoſe work and office it is to comfort; by the Scriptures of truth, which are written for their conſolation; by the promiſes of the Goſpel, through which, the heirs of promiſe have ſtrong conſolation; by the ordinances of it, which are breaſts of conſolation; and by the miniſters of the word, who have a commiſſion from the Lord, to ſpeak comfortably to them; and then are they comforted, when they have the diſcoveries of the love of God, manifeſtations of pardoning grace, through the blood of Chriſt, and enjoy the divine preſence: and they ſhall be comforted hereafter; when freed from all the troubles of this life, they ſhall be bleſſed with uninterrupted communion with Father, Son, and Spirit, and with the happy ſociety of angels and glorified ſaints. Iſaiah lxi. 1, 2, 3. ſeems to be referred to, both in this, and in the preceding verſe.

Ver. 5. Bleſſed are the meek, &c.] Who are not eaſily provoked to anger; who patiently bear, and put up with injuries and affronts; carry themſelves courteouſly, and affably to all; have the meaneſt thoughts of themſelves, and the beſt of others; don't envy the gifts and graces of other men; are willing to be inſtructed and admoniſhed, by the meaneſt of the ſaints; quietly ſubmit to the will of God, in adverſe diſpenſations of providence; and aſcribe all they have, and are, to the grace of God. Meekneſs, or humility, is very valuable and commendable. The Jews, though a proud, haughty, and wrathful people, cannot but ſpeak in its praiſe: "Wiſdom, fear and meekneſs, ſay [b] they, are of high "eſteem; but ענוה meekneſs is greater than them "all." They had two very conſiderable doctors in the time of Chriſt, Hillell and Shammai; the one was of a meek, the other of an angry diſpoſition: hence ſay they [c], "Let a man be always meek as "Hillell, and let him not be angry as Shammai." Here meekneſs is to be conſidered, not as a moral virtue, but as a chriſtian grace, a fruit of the Spirit of God; which was eminently in Chriſt, and is very ornamental to believers; and of great advantage and uſe to them, in hearing and receiving the word; in giving an account of the reaſon of the hope that is in them; in inſtructing and reſtoring ſuch, who have backſlidden, either in principle or practice; and in the whole of their lives and converſations; and ſerves greatly to recommend religion to others: ſuch who are poſſeſſed of it, and exerciſe it, are well pleaſing to God; when diſconſolate, he comforts them; when hungry, he ſatisfies them; when they want direction, he gives it to them; when wronged, he'll do them right; he gives them more grace here, and glory hereafter. The bleſſing inſtanced, in which they ſhall partake of, is, they ſhall inherit the earth; not the land of Canaan, though that may be alluded to; nor this world, at leaſt in its preſent ſituation; for this is not the ſaints reſt and inheritance: but rather, the new earth, which will be after this is burnt up; in which, only ſuch perſons as are here deſcribed, ſhall dwell; and who ſhall inherit it, by virtue of their being heirs of God, and joint heirs with Chriſt; whoſe is the earth, and the fulneſs thereof. Though ſome think, heaven is here deſigned; and is ſo called, partly for the ſake of variety of expreſſion, from ver. 3. and partly in alluſion to the land of Canaan, a type of it; and may be called an earth, or country, that is an heavenly one, in oppoſition to this earthly one; as the heavenly Jeruſalem is oppoſed to the earthly one, and which will be a glorious inheritance. The paſſage referred to, is Pſal. xxxvii. 11.

Ver. 6. Bleſſed are they which do hunger and thirſt, &c.] Not after the riches, honours, and pleaſures of this world, but after righteouſneſs; by which is meant, not juſtice and equity, as perſons oppreſſed and injured; nor a moral, legal righteouſneſs, which the generality of the Jewiſh nation, were eagerly purſuing; but the juſtifying righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which is imputed by God the Father, and received by faith. To hunger and thirſt after this, ſuppoſes a want of righteouſneſs, which is the caſe of all men; a ſenſe of want of it, which is only perceived by perſons ſpiritually enlightened; a diſcovery of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt to them, which is made in the Goſpel, and by the Spirit of God; a value for it, and a preference of it to all other righteouſneſs; and an earneſt deſire after it, to be poſſeſſed of it, and found in it; and that nothing can be more grateful than that, becauſe of its perfection, purity, ſuitableneſs, and uſe: happy ſouls are theſe, for they ſhall be filled; with that righteouſneſs, and with all other good things, in conſequence of it; and particularly, with joy and peace, which are the certain effects of it: or, they ſhall be ſatisfied, that they have an intereſt in it; and ſo ſatisfied with it, that they ſhall never ſeek for any other righteouſneſs, as a juſtifying one, in the ſight of God; this being full, perfect, ſufficient, and entirely compleat.

---

[b] Piſke Toſaphot Yebamot, art. 196.

[c] T. Bab. Sabbat. fol. 30. 2.

Ver. 7. Bleſſed are the merciful, &c.] Who ſhew mercy to the bodies of men, to thoſe that are poor, indigent, and miſerable, in their outward circumſtances; by both ſympathizing with them, and diſtributing unto them; not only making uſe of expreſſions of pity and concern; but communicating with readineſs and chearfulneſs, with affection and tenderneſs, and with a view to the glory of God: who alſo ſhew mercy to the ſouls of men, by inſtructing ſuch as are ignorant, giving them good counſel and advice; reproving them for ſin, praying for them, forgiving injuries done by them, and by comforting thoſe that are caſt down. To ſhew mercy is very delightful to, and deſireable by God; it is what he requires, and is one of the weightier matters of the law; it is very ornamental to a child of God, and what makes him more like to his heavenly father. The happineſs of ſuch perſons is this, that they ſhall obtain mercy; from man, whenever they are attended with any uncomfortable circumſtances of life; כל מרחם מרחמין עליו whoever is merciful, men ſhew mercy to him [d]: and from God, through Chriſt; which is free, ſovereign, abundant, and eternal. Men are ſaid to obtain this, when they are regenerated, and called by grace; and when they have a diſcovery, and an application, of the forgiveneſs of their ſins: but here, it ſeems to deſign thoſe ſupplies of grace and mercy, which merciful perſons may expect to find and obtain, at the throne of grace, to help them in time of need; and, who ſhall not only obtain mercy of God in this life, but in the world to come, in the great day of the Lord; for which the Apoſtle prayed for Oneſiphorus, 2 Tim. i. 18.

Ver. 8. Bleſſed are the pure in heart, &c.] Not in the head; for men may have pure notions, and impure hearts; not in the hand, or action, or in outward converſation only; ſo the Phariſees were outwardly righteous before men, but inwardly full of impurity; but in heart. The heart of man, is naturally unclean; nor is it in the power of man to make it clean, or to be pure from his ſin; nor is any man in this life, in ſuch ſenſe, pure in heart, as to be entirely free from ſin. This is only true of Chriſt, angels, and glorified ſaints: but ſuch may be ſaid to be ſo, who, though they have ſin dwelling in them, are juſtified from all ſin, by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and are clean through the word, or ſentence of juſtification pronounced upon them, on the account of that righteouſneſs; whoſe iniquities are all of them forgiven, and whoſe hearts are ſprinkled with the blood of Jeſus, which cleanſes from all ſin; and, who have the grace of God wrought in their hearts, which, though as yet imperfect, it is entirely pure; there is not the leaſt ſpot or ſtain of ſin in it: and ſuch ſouls, as they are in love with, ſo they moſt earneſtly deſire after more purity of heart, lip, life, and converſation. And happy they are, for they ſhall ſee God; in this life, enjoying communion with him, both in private and publick, in the ſeveral duties of religion, in the houſe and ordinances of God; where they often behold his beauty, ſee his power and his glory, and taſte, and know, that he is good and gracious: and in the other world, where they ſhall ſee God in Chriſt, with the eyes of their underſtanding; and God incarnate, with the eyes of their bodies, after the reſurrection; which ſight of Chriſt, and God in Chriſt, will be unſpeakably glorious, deſireable, delightful, and ſatisfying; it will be free from all darkneſs and error, and from all interruption; it will be an appropriating and transforming one, and will laſt for ever.

Ver. 9. Bleſſed are the peace-makers, &c.] Not between God and man, for no man can make his own peace with God; nor can any mere creature, angels, or men, make it for him; Chriſt, in this ſenſe, is the only peace-maker: but between men and men; and ſuch are they, who are of peaceable diſpoſitions themſelves; live peaceably with all men, and with one another, as their relation obliges to, and their mutual comfort requires; and with the men of the world; and, who are ready, willing, and very ſerviceable, in compoſing differences, and making peace between their fellow creatures, and fellow Chriſtians. The Jews ſpeak very highly, and much, in the commendation of peace-making; they reckon this among the things which ſhall be of uſe to a man, both in this, and the other world. "Theſe are the things, ſay they [e], the fruit of "which, a man enjoys in this world, and his lot, "or portion, remains for him in the world to "come; honouring father and mother, liberality, "והבאת שלום בין אדם לחבירו and making peace "between a man and his neighbour." This they ſay [f], Aaron was much diſpoſed to. "Moſes uſed "to ſay, let juſtice break through the mountain; "but Aaron loved peace, and purſued it, and made "peace between a man and his neighbour, as is ſaid, "Mal. ii. 6." Hence that ſaying of Hillell [g], "be "thou one of the diſciples of Aaron, who loved "peace, and followed after it; he loved men, and "brought them to the law." Now of ſuch perſons it is ſaid, that they ſhall be called the children of God; that is, they are the children of God by adopting grace, which is made manifeſt in their regeneration; and that is evidenced by the fruits of it, of which this is one; they not only ſhall be, and more manifeſtly appear to be, the ſons of God hereafter; but they are, and are known to be ſo now, by their peaceable diſpoſition, which is wrought in them by the Spirit of God; whereby they become like to the God of peace, and to Chriſt, the great and only peace-maker, and ſo are truly ſons of peace.

Ver. 10. Bleſſed are they which are perſecuted, &c.] Not for any crimes they have done, for unrighteouſneſs and iniquity, as murderers, thieves, and evil doers, but for righteouſneſs ſake; on account of their righteous and godly converſation, which brings upon them the hatred and enmity, of the men of the world: for ſaints, by living righteouſly, ſeparate themſelves from them, and profeſs themſelves not to belong to them; their religious life ſets a brand upon, and diſtinguiſhes other perſons; yea, it reproves, and condemns, their wicked lives and practices; and this fills them with wrath againſt them, and puts them on perſecuting them: or by righteouſneſs may be meant, a righteous cauſe, the cauſe of Chriſt, and his Goſpel; for by making a profeſſion of Chriſt, ſhewing a concern for his intereſt, and by engaging in a vindication of his perſon and truths; ſaints expoſe themſelves to the rage and perſecution of men: and particularly, they are perſecuted for preaching, maintaining, or embracing, the doctrine of juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; becauſe it is not of man, nor agreeable to the carnal reaſon of man; it is oppoſite to the way of juſtification, which men naturally receive; it excludes boaſting, and is contrary to their carnal and ſelfiſh principles; perſecution is either verbal with the tongue, by cruel mockings and reproachful language; or real, by deeds, ſuch as confiſcation of goods, baniſhment, impriſonment of body, and innumerable ſorts of death: the latter ſeems here more eſpecially deſigned, and both are expreſſed in the following verſe; and yet the ſaints, tho' thus uſed, or rather abuſed, are happy; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven: the ſame bleſſedneſs is predicated of theſe as of the poor in ſpirit, ver. 3.

---

[d] Maimon. Hilch. Mattanot Anayim. c. 10. §. 2.

[e] Miſn. Peah. c. 1. §. 1. T. Bab. Sabbat. fol. 127. 1. & Kiddushin. fol. 40. 1.

[f] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 6. 2. Vid. Abot. R. Nathan, c. 12. fol. 4. 2.

[g] Pirke Abot. c. 1. §. 12.

Ver. 11. Bleſſed are ye when men ſhall revile you, &c.] Theſe words are particularly directed to the diſciples of Chriſt, and are deſigned to inform them, that they ſhould not be exempted from reproach and perſecution, and to animate and fortify them againſt it; and are prophetical of what they, and the firſt chriſtians particularly, were to endure for Chriſt's ſake. Men ſhould revile them, ſpeak very reproachfully of them, brand them with infamy, and load them with diſgrace; and perſecute you, from place to place, by ill uſage of all ſorts; and ſhall ſay all manner of evil againſt you; the worſt things they could think, of and invent, and all of them; ſuch, as that they were ſeditious perſons, enemies to the commonwealth, and the publick good, guilty of ſacriledge, inceſt, and murder: but what would ſerve to relieve them under theſe heavy charges, is, that they were falſely laid; there was not a word of truth in them; wherefore their own hearts would not reproach them; but all were the malicious lyes of men, invented on purpoſe to bring them and chriſtianity into diſgrace: and that they were brought againſt them for Chriſt's ſake, for his name ſake, for the ſake of his goſpel and intereſt: the treatment they meet with is on his account, and the ſame that he himſelf met with; the like reproaches fell on him, which will be all wiped off from him and them another day; when they'll appear to be the bleſſed perſons, and their revilers and perſecutors the unhappy ones. The Jews have ſome ſayings not unlike theſe, and which may ſerve to illuſtrate them; "תהוא לוטא ולא תהוא לאטא, " be thou curſed, or bearing curſes, but do not " curſe[g]. The gloſs upon it is, it is better to be " one of them that are curſed, than to be of them " that curſe; for, at the end, the curſe cauſeleſs re- " turns to him that curſeth." Again[h], "for ever " let a man be of them that are perſecuted, and " not of them that perſecute; of them that ſuffer " injury, and not of them that do it." Once more[i], "they that ſuffer injury, and do it not; who " hear reproach, and don't return it; who act from " love, and rejoice in chaſtiſements, of them the " ſcripture ſays, let them that love him, &c. Judg. " v. 31."

Ver. 12. Rejoice and be exceeding glad, &c.] Becauſe of the honour put upon them, the glory they bring to Chriſt and his cauſe, by chearfully ſuffering for it; and becauſe of the glory and happineſs that ſhall follow upon their ſufferings: for great is your reward in heaven; not of debt, but of grace; for there is no proportion or compariſon between what the ſaints ſuffer for Chriſt, and the glory that ſhall be revealed in them by him; not in earth, but in heaven. Saints muſt not expect their reward here, but hereafter, when God himſelf will be their reward; he will be all in all; Chriſt and all his glory, glory and all the riches of it will be the reward of the inheritance, and which muſt needs be a great one. And the more to animate them to ſuffer with joyfulneſs, and to ſupport them under all their reproaches and perſecutions, 'tis added; for ſo perſecuted they the prophets which were before you; as Iſaiah, Jeremiah, Zechariah, and others; which ſhews, that what ſhould befal them was no new and ſtrange thing, but what had been the lot of the moſt eminent ſervants of God in former ages.

Ver. 13. Ye are the ſalt of the earth, &c.] This is to be underſtood of the diſciples and apoſtles of Chriſt; who might be compared to ſalt, becauſe of the ſavoury doctrines they preached; as all ſuch are, which are agreeable to the ſcriptures, and are of the Evangelic kind, which are full of Chriſt, ſerve to exalt him, and to magnify the grace of God; and are ſuitable to the experiences of the ſaints, and are according to godlineſs, and tend to promote it: alſo becauſe of their ſavoury lives and converſations; whereby they recommended, and gave ſanction to the doctrines they preached, were examples to the ſaints, and checks upon wicked men. Theſe were the ſalt of the earth; that is, of the inhabitants of the earth, not of the land of Judea only, where they firſt lived and preached; but of the whole world, into which they were afterwards ſent to preach the Goſpel. But if the ſalt have loſt its ſavour, wherewith ſhall it be ſalted? The ſavour here ſuppoſed that it may be loſt, cannot mean the ſavour of grace, or true grace itſelf, which cannot be loſt, being an incorruptible ſeed; but either gifts qualifying men for the miniſtry, which may ceaſe; or the ſavoury doctrines of the Goſpel, which may be departed from; or a ſeeming ſavoury converſation, which may be neglected; or that ſeeming ſavour, zeal, and affection, with which the Goſpel is preached, which may be dropped: and particular reſpect ſeems to to be had to Judas, whom Chriſt had choſen to the apoſtleſhip, and was a devil; and who he knew would loſe his uſefulneſs and place, and become an unprofitable wretch, and at laſt be rejected of God and men; and this caſe is propoſed to them all, in order to engage them to take heed to themſelves, their doctrine and miniſtry. Moreover, this is but a ſuppoſition; if the ſalt, &c. and proves no matter of fact; and the Jews have a ſaying[k], that "all that " ſeaſon loſe their ſavour ומלח אינה מפיגה טעמה, " but ſalt does not loſe its ſavour." Should it do ſo, it is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be caſt out and to be trodden under foot. Salt is good for nothing, but to make things ſavoury, and preſerve from putrefaction; and when it has loſt its ſavour, it is of no uſe, neither to men nor beaſts, as ſome things are when corrupted; nor is it of any uſe to the land, or dungill, for it makes barren, and not fruitful: ſo miniſters of the word, when they have dropped the ſavoury doctrines of the Goſpel, or have quitted their former ſeeming ſavoury and exemplary converſations; as their uſefulneſs is gone, ſo, generally ſpeaking, its never retrieved; they are caſt out of the churches of Chriſt, and are treated with contempt by every one.

Ver. 14. Ye are the light of the world, &c.] What the luminaries, the ſun and moon are, in the heavens, with reſpect to corporal light, that the apoſtles were in the world with regard to ſpiritual light; carrying and ſpreading the light of the Goſpel not only in Judea, but all over the world, which was in great darkneſs of ignorance and error; and thro' a divine bleſſing attending their miniſtry, many were turned from the darkneſs of Judaiſm and Gentiliſm, of ſin and infidelity, to the marvellous light of divine grace. The Jews were wont to ſay, that of the Iſraelites in general, and particularly of their Sanhedrim, and of their learned doctors, what Chriſt more truly applies here to his apoſtles; they obſerve,

---

[g] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 49. 1.

[h] T. Bab. Baya Kama, fol. 93. 1. Maimon. Hilch. Deyot. c. 5. §. 13.

[i] T. Bab. Sabbat. fol. 88. 2. Yoma, fol. 23. 1. & Gittin, fol. 36. 2.

[k] T. Bab. Betzah, fol. 14. 1.

ſerve [l], that "on the fourth day it was ſaid, let "there be light; which was done with reſpect to the "Iſraelites, becauſe they are they, מאירים לעולם, "which give light to the world, as it is written, "Dan. xii. 3." And in another place [m], ſay they, "how beautiful are the great ones of the congregation, and the wiſe men, who ſit in the Sanhedrim! for they are they, מנהרין לעלמא, that en"lighten the world, the people of the houſe of "Iſrael." So R. Meir, R. Akiba his diſciple, and R. Judah the prince, are each of them called [n] אור העולם, the light of the world; as R. Jochanan ben Zaccai is by his diſciples, נר עולם, the lamp of the world [o]: and it was uſual for the head of a ſchool, or of an univerſity, to be ſtiled [p] נהורא דעלמא, the light of the world; but this title much better agrees, and ſuits with the perſons, Chriſt gives it to, who, no queſtion, had a view to thoſe exalted characters, the Jews gave to their celebrated Rabbins. A city that is ſet on an hill cannot be hid; alluding either to Nazareth, where he was educated, and had lately preached, which was built on an hill, from the brow of which the inhabitants ſought to have caſt him headſong, Luke iv. 29. or to Capernaum, which, on account of its height, is ſaid to be exalted unto heaven, Matt. xi. 23. or to the city of Jeruſalem, which was ſituated on a very conſiderable eminence. The land of Iſrael, the Jews ſay [q], was higher than all other lands; and the temple at Jeruſalem was higher than any other part of the land of Iſrael. And as a city can't be hid, which is built on a high place; ſo neither could, nor ought the doctrines which the apoſtles were commiſſioned to preach, be hid, or concealed from men: they were not to ſhun to declare the whole counſel of God, nor ſtudy to avoid the reproaches and perſecutions of men; for they were to be made a ſpectacle; to be ſet as in a publick theatre, to be ſeen by the world, angels, and men.

Ver. 15. Neither do men light a candle, &c.] Which may be read imperſonally, a candle is not lighted: and by it may be meant the goſpel and gifts qualifying men to preach it; which, like a candle, was lighted in the evening of the Jewiſh diſpenſation, tho' not confined to the land of Judea; but has ſhone throughout the world, being as a candle to be removed, and has been removed from place to place: wherever it is ſet, it gives light, more or leſs, and diſpels darkneſs; it is uſeful both to work, by and walk with; it does not always burn alike clearly, it needs looking after; it has its thieves, as candles ſometimes have; and will give the greateſt light towards the cloſe of the world, as they uſually do, when ready to go out. Now when a candle is lighted by men, they don't put it under a buſhel, or any thing which may hide and cover it, and ſo hinder its light and uſefulneſs. The Greek word μοδιος, rendered a buſhel, anſwers to the Hebrew סאה, ſeah, which is the very word uſed in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel; and this was a dry meaſure that held about a gallon and a half; and accordingly is rendered here by the Syriack סאתא. The deſign of the expreſſion is, that Chriſt has lighted the candle of the everlaſting Goſpel, and given gifts to men for the miniſtration of it, not to be concealed and neglected; or to be uſed as the ſervant did his lord's money, wrap it up in a napkin, and hide it in the earth. Miniſters are not, through ſlothfulneſs, to neglect the gift that is in them; nor, thro' fear, to hide their talents, or keep back any part of the Goſpel, or cover any thing out of ſight, which may be profitable to ſouls: but men, when they light a candle, put it on a candleſtick, and it giveth light to all that are in the houſe; as on the candleſtick in the temple, a type of the church; where Chriſt has ſet the light of the Goſpel, where it is held forth particularly by the miniſters of the word, to illuminate the whole houſe and family of God; by the light of which poor ſinners, the loſt pieces of ſilver, are looked up; ſtraggling ſouls are brought home; hypocrites and formaliſts are detected; and ſaints are enlightened, directed, and comforted. Much ſuch a proverbial ſaying is uſed by the Jews [r]; "don't leave a veſ"ſel of balſam in a dunghil, but move it from its "place, that its ſmell may ſpread, and men may "receive profit from it."

Ver. 16. Let your light ſo ſhine before men, &c.] Here Chriſt applies the foregoing ſimile to his diſciples, and more fully opens the meaning and deſign of it. His ſenſe is this; that the light of the Goſpel, which he had communicated to them, the ſpiritual knowledge of the myſteries of grace, which he had favoured them with, were to be openly declared, and made manifeſt before men. Light was not given merely for their own private uſe, but for the publick good of mankind; and therefore, as they were placed as lights in the world, they were to hold forth, in the moſt open and conſpicuous manner, the word of light and life: that they may ſee your good works; meaning their zeal and fervency; their plainneſs and openneſs; their ſincerity, faithfulneſs, and integrity; their courage and intrepidity; their diligence, induſtry, and indefatigableneſs in preaching the Goſpel; their ſtrict regard to truth, the honour of Chriſt, and the good of ſouls; as alſo their very great care and concern to recommend the doctrines of grace, by their example in their lives and converſations: and glorify your father which is in heaven; that is, that when the miniſtration of the Goſpel has been bleſſed, for the illumination of the minds of men, to a thorough conviction of their ſtate; and for their regeneration, converſion, ſanctification, and comfort; they may give praiſe to God, and bleſs his name for qualifying and ſending ſuch Goſpel-miniſters to ſhew unto them the way of ſalvation; and that the word has been made uſeful to them for communicating ſpiritual light, life, joy and comfort. אבינו שבשמים: Our and your father which is in heaven, is a name, appellation, or periphraſis of God, frequently uſed by Jewiſh writers [s]; and is often expreſſed by Chriſt in theſe his ſermons on the mount.

Ver. 17. Think not that I am come to deſtroy the law or the prophets, &c.] From verſe 3. to the 10th incluſive, our Lord ſeems chiefly to reſpect the whole body of his true diſciples and followers; from thence, to the 16th incluſive, he addreſſes the diſciples, whom he had called to be miniſters of the word; and in this verſe, to the end of his diſcourſe, he applies himſelf to the whole multitude in general; many of whom might be ready to imagine, that by the light of the Goſpel, he was giving his diſciples inſtructions to ſpread in the world; he was going to ſet aſide, as uſeleſs, the law of Moſes, or the prophets, the interpreters of it, and commentators upon it. Chriſt knew the thoughts of their hearts, that they had taken up ſuch prejudices in their minds againſt him; wherefore he ſays, think not; he was ſenſible what objections they were

---

[l] Tzeror Hammor, fol. 1. 3.

[m] Targum in Cant. iv. 1.

[n] Juchaſin, fol. 63. 2.

[o] Abot R. Nathan, c. 25. fol. 6. 3.

[p] Juchaſin, fol. 121. 2.

[q] T. Bab. Kiddushin, fol. 69. 1. Sanhedrim, fol. 87. 1. Zebachim, fol. 54. 2.

[r] Vid. Joh. Iſaac. Præfat. ad Eliæ Levit. Methurgeman.

[s] Vid. Miſn. Sota, c. 9. §. 15. & Yoma, c. 8. §. 9.

forming, and what an improvement they would make of them againſt his being the Meſſiah, and therefore prevents them, ſaying, I am not come to deſtroy, but to fulfil. By the law is meant the moral law, as appears from the whole diſcourſe following: this he came not to deſtroy, or looſe mens obligations to, as a rule of walk and converſation, but to fulfil it; which he did doctrinally, by ſetting it forth fully, and giving the true ſenſe and meaning of it; and practically, by yielding perfect obedience to all its commands, whereby he became the end, the fulfilling end of it. By the prophets are meant the writings of the prophets, in which they illuſtrated and explained the law of Moſes; urged the duties of it; encouraged men thereunto by promiſes; and directed the people to the Meſſiah, and to an expectation of the bleſſings of grace by him: all which explanations, promiſes, and prophecies, were ſo far from being made void by Chriſt, that they receive their full accompliſhment in him. The Jews[t] pretend, that theſe words of Chriſt are contrary to the religion and faith of his followers, who aſſert, that the law of Moſes is aboliſhed; which is eaſily refuted, by obſerving the exact agreement between Chriſt and the apoſtle Paul, Rom. iii. 31. and x. 4. and whenever he, or any other of the apoſtles, ſpeak of the abrogation of the law, it is to be underſtood of the ceremonial law, which in courſe ceaſed by being fulfilled; or if of the moral law, not of the matter, but of the miniſtry of it. This paſſage of Chriſt is cited in the Talmud[u], after this manner; "it is written in it, i. e. in the Goſpel, I Aven, neither to diminiſh from the law of Moſes am I come, but, or nor (for in the Amſterdam edition they have inſerted ולא between two hooks) to add to the law of Moſes am I come." Which, with their laſt correction, tho' not a juſt citation, yet tolerably well expreſſes the ſenſe; but a moſt blaſphemous character is affixed to Chriſt, when they call him Aven; which ſignifies iniquity itſelf, and ſeems to be a wilful corruption of the word Amen, which begins the next verſe.

Ver. 18. For verily I ſay unto you, &c.] Or I Amen ſay unto you, which is one of the names of Chriſt; ſee Rev. iii. 14. or the word Amen is only uſed by Chriſt as an aſſeveration of what he was about to ſay; and which, for greater confirmation, is uſually doubled in the Evangeliſt John, Amen, Amen, or verily, verily. The word is uſed by the Jews[w] for an oath; they ſwore by it; and it is a rule with them, that whoever anſwers Amen after an oath, it is all one as if he had pronounced the oath itſelf. The thing ſo ſtrongly affirmed in this ſolemn manner is, till heaven and earth paſs, one jot or one tittle ſhall in no wiſe paſs from the law, till all be fulfilled. The ιωτα or jot, in the Greek language, anſwers to jod in the Hebrew, the leaſt of all the letters in the alphabet; hence a little city is called by this name, and this reaſon is given for it, [x] שיוד קטנה באותיות, becauſe that Jod is the leaſt among letters. We read alſo of Rabbi Jod[y], perhaps ſo called becauſe היה קטן, he was little, as the author of Juchaſin obſerves[z]. This ſhews in what language the law was written; not in the Samaritan language, for the jod in that is a large letter, but in the Hebrew, in which it is very ſmall; and particularly is written in a very diminutive character, in Deut. xxxii. 18. by one tittle ſome think is meant one of thoſe ducts, daſhes, or corners of letters, which diſtinguiſh one letter from another, that is much alike; others have thought that one of the pricks or vowel-points is intended; others, one of thoſe little ſtrokes in the tops of letters, which the Jews call[a] crowns and ſpikes, is here meant, in which they imagined great myſteries were contained; and there were ſome perſons among them, who made it their buſineſs to ſearch into the meaning of every letter, and of every one of theſe little horns, or pricks, that were upon the top of them. So ſays R. Meir[b], "in the time of the prophets there were ſuch who very diligently ſearched every letter in the law, and explained every letter by itſelf; and don't wonder at this that they ſhould expound every letter by itſelf, for they commented על כל קוץ וקוץ של כל אות ואות, upon every one of the tops of each letter." Such an expounder was Akiba ben Joſeph[c]. To which cuſtom Chriſt is here ſuppoſed to have reſpect: however, certain it is that he ſpeaks very much in the language, and agreeable to the mind of the Jewiſh doctors; and ſome things in their writings will ſerve to illuſtrate this paſſage. "If, ſay they[d], all the nations of the world were gathered together, to root one word out of the law, they could not do it; which you may learn from Solomon, who ſought to root one letter out of the law, the letter jod, in Deut. xvii. 16, 17. but the holy bleſſed God ſaid, Solomon ſhall ceaſe, and an hundred ſuch as he (in the Talmud[e] it is a thouſand ſuch as he) ויוד ממך אינה בטילה לעולם, but jod ſhan't ceaſe from thee (the law) for ever." And elſewhere the ſame expreſſion is uſed[f], and 'tis added, "וקוצה ממך איני מבטל, but a tittle from thee ſhall not periſh." The deſign of Chriſt, in conformity to the language of the Jews, is to declare, that no part of the law, not one of the leaſt commandments in it, as he explains himſelf in the next verſe, ſhould be unaccompliſhed; but all ſhould be fulfilled before heaven and earth paſs away, as they will, with a great noiſe and fervent heat, as to their preſent form and condition; or ſooner ſhall they paſs away, than the leaſt part of the law ſhall: which expreſſes the perpetuity of the law, and the impoſſibility of its paſſing away, and the ſuperior excellency of it to the heavens and the earth. It is a ſaying of one of the Jewiſh doctors[g], that "the whole world is not equal even to one word out of the law," in which 'tis ſaid, there is not one letter deficient or ſuperfluous.

Ver. 19. Whoſoever therefore ſhall break one of theſe leaſt commandments, &c.] Which are to be underſtood not of the beatitudes in the preceding verſes, for theſe were not delivered by Chriſt under the form of commandments; nor of any of the peculiar commands of Chriſt under the Goſpel-diſpenſation; but of the precepts of the law, of which ſome were comparatively leſſer than others; and might be ſaid to be broke, looſed, or diſſolved, as the word here uſed ſignifies, when men acted contrary to them. And ſhall teach men ſo; not only teach them by their example, to break the commandments, but by expreſs orders: for however groſs and abſurd this may ſeem to be, that there ſhould be any ſuch teachers, and they ſhould have any hearers, yet ſuch there were among the Jews; and our Lord here manifeſtly ſtrikes at them: for notwithſtanding the great and excellent things they ſay of the law, yet they tell us, that the doctors of the ſanhedrim had power to root any thing out of the law; to looſe or make void any of its commands, for a time, excepting in the caſe of idolatry; and ſo might any true prophet, or wiſe man; which they pretend is ſometimes neceſſary for the glory of God, and the good of men; and they are to be heard and obeyed, when they ſay, tranſgreſs any one of all the commands which are in the law [h]. Maimonides ſays [i], that the ſanhedrim had power, when it was convenient, for the time preſent, to make void an affirmative command, and to tranſgreſs a negative one, in order to return many to their religion; or to deliver many of the Iſraelites from ſtumbling at other things, they may do whatſoever the preſent time makes neceſſary: for ſo, adds he, the former wiſe men ſay, a man may profane one ſabbath, in order to keep many ſabbaths. And elſewhere [k] he affirms, "if a prophet, whom we know to be a prophet, ſhould order us לעבור על אחת מכל מצות, to tranſgreſs any one of the commands, which are mentioned in the law, or many commands, whether light or heavy, for a time, we are ordered to hearken to him; and ſo we learn from the former wiſe men, by tradition, that in every thing a prophet ſhall ſay to thee עבור על דברי תורה, tranſgreſs the words of the law, as Elias on mount Carmel, hear him, except in the caſe of idolatry." And another of their writers ſays [l], "it is lawful ſometimes to make void the law, and to do that which appears to be forbidden." Nay, they even [m] ſay, that if a Gentile ſhould bid an Iſraelite tranſgreſs any one of the commands mentioned in the law, excepting idolatry, adultery, and murder, he may tranſgreſs with impunity, provided it is done privately. You ſee what reaſon Chriſt had to expreſs himſelf in the manner he does, and that with reſentment, ſaying, he ſhall be called, or be the leaſt in the kingdom of heaven; meaning either the church of God, where he ſhall have neither a name, nor place; he ſhall not be in the leaſt eſteemed, but ſhall be caſt out as a worthleſs man; or the ultimate ſtate of happineſs and glory, in the other world, where he ſhall not enter, as is ſaid in the next verſe: but, on the other hand, whoſoever ſhall do and teach; whoſe doctrine and converſation, principles and practices agree together; who both teach obedience to the law, and perform it themſelves: where again he glances at the maſters in Iſrael, and tacitly reproves them who ſaid, but did not; taught the people what they themſelves did not practiſe; and ſo were unworthy of the honour, which he that both teaches and does, ſhall have: for the ſame ſhall be called great in the kingdom of heaven; he ſhall be highly eſteemed of in the church here, and be honoured hereafter in the world to come. The Jews have a ſaying ſomewhat like this; "he that leſſens himſelf for the words of the law in this world, נעשה גדול, he ſhall become great in the world to come [n]," or days of the Meſſiah.

---

[t] R. Iſaac Chizuk Emuna, par. 2. c. 10. p. 401.

[u] T. Bab. Sabbat. fol. 116. 2.

[w] T. Hieroſ. Kiddushin, fol. 60. 4. Miſn. Bava Kama, c. 9. §. 7, 8. T. Bab. Shebuot, fol. 36. 1. Debarim Rabba, fol. 242. 2. Maimon. Hilch. Shebuot, c. 2. §. 1.

[x] T. Bab. Taanith, fol. 21. 2. & Gloſſ. in ib.

[y] Ib. fol. 22. 2.

[z] Fol. 93. 2.

[a] T. Bab. Menachot, fol. 29. 2.

[b] In Semitis fidei, fol. 104. 4. & 105. 1. apud Capell. in loc.

[c] T. Bab. Menachot, fol. 29. 2.

[d] Vajikra Rabba, fol. 160. 3. Shirhaſhirim Rabba, fol. 20. 2.

[e] T. Hieroſ. Sanhedrim, fol. 20. 3.

[f] Shemot Rabba, fol. 96. 1.

[g] T. Hieroſ. Peah, fol. 15. 4.

Ver. 20. For I ſay unto you, &c.] Theſe words are directed, not to the true diſciples of Chriſt in general, or to his apoſtles in particular, but to the whole multitude of the people; who had in great eſteem and admiration the Scribes and Phariſees, for their ſeeming righteouſneſs and holineſs; concerning which Chriſt ſays, that except your righteouſneſs exceed the righteouſneſs of the Scribes and Phariſees, ye ſhall in no wiſe enter into the kingdom of heaven. He mentions the Scribes, becauſe they were the more learned part of the people, who were employed in writing out, and expounding the law; and the Phariſees, becauſe they were the ſtricteſt ſect among the Jews for outward religion and righteouſneſs: and yet, it ſeems, their righteouſneſs was very defective; it lay only in an external obſervance of the law; did not ariſe from a purified heart, or the principles of grace; nor was it performed ſincerely, and with a view to the glory of God; but for their own applauſe, and in order to obtain eternal life: beſides, they neglected the weightier matters of the law, and contented themſelves with the leſſer ones; and as they were deficient in their practice, ſo they were very lax in their doctrines, as appears from the foregoing verſe. Wherefore Chriſt informs his hearers, that they muſt have a better righteouſneſs than theſe men had, if ever they expected to enter into the kingdom of heaven. There will be no admiſſion into heaven without a righteouſneſs: 'twas the loſs of righteouſneſs which removed Adam out of his earthly paradiſe; and 'tis not agreeable to the juſtice of God, to admit man into his heavenly paradiſe without one; yea, it is contrary to his nature, and would be deſtructive to the comfort of ſaints, to receive an unrighteous perſon into his kingdom and glory. A phariſaical righteouſneſs will never bring a perſon thither; nor will any righteouſneſs of man's, be it what it will, becauſe the beſt is imperfect; it muſt be a righteouſneſs exceeding that of the Scribes and Phariſees; and ſuch is the righteouſneſs of the ſaints: indeed, their inherent righteouſneſs, or the ſanctification of the Spirit, is preferable to any righteouſneſs of a natural man; it exceeds it in its author, nature, effects, and uſefulneſs; yea, even works of righteouſneſs done by believers, are greatly preferable to any done by ſuch men as are here mentioned: but, above all, the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which is imputed to them, and received by faith, is infinitely more excellent in its author, perfection, purity, and uſe; and which is their only right and title to eternal glory; and without which no man will be admitted into that glorious ſtate.

Ver. 21. Ye have heard, &c.] That is, from the ſcriptures being read to them, and the explanations of the ancients, which were called שמעתא, hearing, being read in the ſchools, and heard by the ſcholars [o]; ſo that to hear, was along with the recital of the text, to receive by tradition, the ſenſe the elders had given of it: of this kind is the inſtance produced by Chriſt. Thus Onkelos, and Jonathan ben Uzziel, render the phraſe, him ſhall ye hear, in Deut. xviii. 15. by מניה תקבלין, from him ſhall ye receive; ſo thoſe phraſes [p] למדו מפי השמועה, they learn from hearing, or by report from others; and אמרו מפי השמועה, they ſpeak from hearing, or from what they have heard, are often uſed for receiving and reporting things as they have them by tradition. That it was ſaid, or it hath been ſaid; this is alſo a Talmudic form of expreſſion; often is this phraſe to be met with in the Talmud איתמר, it has been ſaid [q]; that is, by the ancient doctors, as here, by them of old time, or to the ancients, לקדמונים, ſo in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel; not to the Iſraelites in the time of Moſes, but to the anceſtors of the Jews, ſince the times of Ezra; by the elders, who were cotemporary with them; and who by their falſe Gloſſes corrupted the law, when they recited any part of it to the people; or by the ancients, the ancient doctors and commentators, which preceded the times of Chriſt, whom the Jews often call קדמונינו, our ancients [r]. Now, upon that law, thou ſhalt not kill, they put this Gloſs, or added this by way of interpretation, and whoſoever ſhall kill, ſhall be in danger of the judgment; which they underſtood only of actual murder, either committed in their own perſons, or by the means of others. Their rules for the judgment of ſuch perſons were theſe; "every "one that kills his neighbour with his hand; as if "he ſtrikes him with a ſword, or with a ſtone that "kills him; or ſtrangles him till he die; or burns "him in fire; ſeeing he kills him in any manner, "in his own perſon, lo! ſuch an one muſt be put "to death בבית דין, by the houſe of judgment, or "the ſanhedrim [s]." Not that which conſiſted of three perſons only, but either that which conſiſted of twenty-three, or the ſupreme one, which was made up of ſeventy-one; which two laſt had only power of judging capital offences. Again, "if a "man hires a murderer to kill his neighbour, or "ſends his ſervants, and they kill him, or binds "him, and leaves him before a lion, or the like, "and the beaſt kills him, every one of theſe is a "ſhedder of blood; and the ſin of ſlaughter is in "his hand; and he is guilty of death by the hand "of heaven, i. e. God; but he is not to be put "to death by the houſe of judgment, or the ſanhedrim [t]." A little after, 'tis ſaid, their judgment is delivered to heaven, i. e. to God; and this ſeems to be the ſenſe of the word judgment here, namely, the judgment of God, or death by the hand of God; ſince it is manifeſtly diſtinguiſhed from the council, or ſanhedrim, in the next verſe. The phraſe, in danger of judgment, is the ſame with [u] חייב דין, guilty of judgment, or deſerves condemnation.

---

[h] T. Bab. Yebamot, fol. 79. 1. & 89. 2. & 90. 2.

[i] Hilch. Memarim, c. 2. §. 4.

[k] Hilch. Yeſode Hattorah, c. 9. §. 3.

[l] Bartenora in Miſn. Beracot, c. 9. §. 5.

[m] T. Hieroſ. Sheviith, fol. 35. 1.

[n] T. Bab. Bava Metzia, fol. 85. 2.

[o] Vid. Buxtorf. Lex. Rabbin. col. 2453.

[p] Maimon. Hilch. Iſſure Mizbeach, c. 1. §. 2, 4, 5, 7, 10. & paſſim. & T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 88. 1.

[q] Vid. Edzardi Not. in Avoda Zara, c. 2. p. 284.

Ver. 22. But I ſay unto you, &c.] This is a Rabbinical way of ſpeaking, uſed when a queſtion is determined, and a falſe notion is refuted; it is a magiſterial form of expreſſion, and well ſuits with Chriſt, the great teacher and maſter in Iſrael; who ſpake as one having authority, oppoſing himſelf, not to the law of Moſes, thou ſhalt not kill; but to the falſe Gloſs the ancient doctors had put upon it, with which their later ones agreed. You ſay, that if one man kills another himſelf, he is to be put to death by the ſanhedrim; and if he does it by proxy, he is to be left to the judgment of God, ſo wholly reſtraining the law to actual murder; but I affirm, that whoſoever is angry with his brother without a cauſe, ſhall be in danger of judgment. By brother is meant, not in a religious ſenſe, one that is of the ſame faith, or in the ſame church-ſtate; nor, in a ſtrict natural ſenſe, one that is ſo in the bonds of conſanguinity; but in a large ſenſe, any man, of whatſoever country or nation: for we are to be angry with no man; that is, as is rightly added, without a cauſe: for otherwiſe there is an anger which is not ſinful, is in God, in Chriſt, in the holy Angels; and is commendable in the people of God, when it ariſes from a true zeal for religion, the glory of God, and the intereſt of Chriſt; and is kindled againſt ſin, their own, or others, all manner of vice, falſe doctrine, and falſe worſhip: but it is cauſeleſs anger which is here condemned by Chriſt, as a breach of the law, thou ſhalt not kill; and ſuch perſons are in danger of judgment; not of any of the courts of judicature among the Jews, as the ſanhedrim of three, or of twenty-three, or of ſeventy-one, which took no notice of anger, as a paſſion in the mind, only of facts committed; but of the judgment of God, as in the preceding verſe, it being diſtinguiſhed from the ſanhedrim, or council, in the next clauſe. And whoſoever ſhall ſay to his brother Raca, ſhall be in danger of the council, or ſanhedrim. The word Raca is expreſſive of indignation and contempt; it was uſed as a term of reproach. Some derive it from רקק, to ſpit upon; as if the perſon that uſed it, thought the man he ſpoke to, deſerved to be ſpit upon, and treated in the moſt contemptuous manner: but rather the word ſignifies empty and vain, and denotes a worthleſs, empty-headed man; a man of no brains; a fooliſh, witleſs fellow: ſo it is often uſed in Jewiſh writings. Take a few inſtances, as follow; "a certain perſon ſaid "to R. Jochanan [w], Rabbi, expound, for it be-"comes thee to expound; for as thou haſt ſaid, "ſo have I ſeen: he replied to him ריקא, Reka, "if thou hadſt not ſeen, thou wouldſt not have "believed." Again [x], it happened to R. Simeon ben Eliezer of Migdal Edar, who went from the houſe of Rabbi; and he met with a certain man very much deformed; he ſays unto him, "ריקה, Reka, "how many are the deformed ſons of Abraham "our father?" Many more inſtances might be given [y]. Now I don't find that the uſe of this reproachful word was cognizable by the Jewiſh ſanhedrim, or great council; nor is it our Lord's meaning that it was, only that it ought to have been taken notice of in a proper manner, as well as actual murder. He adds, but whoſoever ſhall ſay thou fool, ſhall be in danger of hell-fire. The word fool does not ſignify a man of weak parts, one that is very ignorant in things natural; this the word Raca imports; but a wicked, reprobate man; in which ſenſe Solomon often uſes the word. The Perſic verſion renders it here wicked. There is a manifeſt gradation in the text from cauſeleſs anger in the breaſt, to reproachful words; and from thence to a cenſorious judging of a man's ſpiritual and eternal eſtate, which is what is here condemned. Thou fool, is, thou wicked man, thou ungodly wretch, thou graceleſs creature, whoſe portion will be eternal damnation. Calling a man by ſuch names was not allowed of by the Jews themſelves, whoſe rules are; "he that calls his neighbour a ſervant, "let him be excommunicated; a baſtard, let him "be beaten with forty ſtripes; רשע, a wicked "man, let him deſcend with him into his life or "livelihood [z]." The Gloſs upon it is, "as if "he ſhould ſay, to this the ſanhedrim is not oblig-"ed, but it is lawful to hate him, yea to leſſen his "ſuſtenance, and exerciſe his trade," which was done to bring him to poverty and diſtreſs. So, it ſeems, the ſanhedrim were not obliged to take notice of him. Again, they ſay, "it is forbidden a "man to call his neighbour by a name of re-"proach [a]; every one that calls his neighbour רשע, "a wicked man, ſhall be brought down to hell;" which is pretty much what Chriſt here ſays, ſhall be in danger of hell fire; or deſerving of hell fire;

---

[r] Vid. R. Aben Ezra in Exod. xxi. 17. & in Iſ. lii. 13. & lxvi. 24.
[s] Maimon. Hilch. Rotſeach, c. 2. §. 1.
[t] Ib. §. 2.
[u] In Targ. in 2 Chron. xix 10.
[w] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 100. 1. T. Bava Bathra, fol. 75. 1.
[x] Maſſechet Derech Eretz, c. 4. fol. 18. 1.
[y] Vid. T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 32. 2. Zohar in Exod. fol. 50. 2.
[z] T. Bab. Kiddushin, fol. 28. 1. Bava Metzia, fol. 71. 1.
[a] Zohar in Exod. fol. 50. 3.

or liable to, and in danger of puniſhment, even unto hell fire. An expreſſion much like this may be obſerved in Jarchi, on Iſ. xxiv. 23. where he ſpeaks of ſome perſons מחוייבי גהנם לגהנם, who are guilty, deſerving, or in danger of hell unto hell. The word γεεννα, here uſed, and which is often uſed in the New Teſtament for hell, is but the Hebrew גיא הנם, Ge-Hinnom, the valley of Hinnom, where the children were cauſed to paſs through the fire to Moloch. This place, the Jewiſh writers [b] ſay, “ was “ a place well known, near to Jeruſalem, a valley, “ whoſe fire was never quenched; and in which “ they burned the bones of any thing that was un-“ clean, and dead carcaſſes, and other pollutions.” Hence the word came to be uſed among them, as might be ſhewn in innumerable inſtances, to expreſs the place and ſtate of the damned; and very fitly deſcribes it.

Ver. 23. Therefore, if thou bring thy gift to the altar, &c.] The Jews obliged ſuch who had done any damage to their neighbours, by ſtealing from them, to make ſatisfaction before they brought their offering; concerning which they ſay [c], “ he that “ brings what he has ſtolen, before he brings his “ treſpaſs-offering, is right; he that brings his treſ-“ paſs-offering, before he brings that which he has “ ſtolen, is not right.” Again [d], “ they don't “ bring the treſpaſs-offering before the ſum of what “ is ſtolen is returned, either to the owners, or to “ the prieſts.” Some have thought Chriſt refers to this; only what they reſtrained to pecuniary damages, he extends to all ſorts of offences. But not a treſpaſs-offering, but a free-will-offering, ſeems to be deſigned by the gift; which, when a man either intended to bring, or was going to bring, or had already brought, as a voluntary ſacrifice to be offered unto God; and it came into his mind, that he had offended any man by ſhewing any undue paſſion, or by any reproachful words, then he was to do what is adviſed in the following verſe: and there, whilſt going, or when at the altar, remembreſt that thy brother hath ought againſt thee; hath any thing to charge thee with; any juſt ground of complaint againſt thee; if thou haſt done him any injury, or given him any offence: particularly, if he had at any time ſaid Raca to him, or called him fool; for thoſe words have reference to what goes before, and are a corollary, or concluſion from them, as appears from the cauſal particle therefore.

Ver. 24. Leave there thy gift before the altar, &c.] This might eaſily be done, and the buſineſs ſoon diſpatched, at ſome ſeaſons; particularly, at their publick feaſts, as the paſſover, pentecoſt, and feaſt of tabernacles, when all the Iſraelites were together: and go thy way; make what haſte thou canſt, firſt be reconciled to thy brother; uſe all means to reconcile him; acknowledge the offence; aſk his pardon; aſſure him that thou wiſheſt well to him, and not ill; and then come and offer thy gift, by putting it on the altar, before which it was left. This ſhews, that acts of love and friendſhip are preferable to ſacrifices; and that ſacrifices offered up in wrath, and whilſt unreconciled to others, are unacceptable to God, and of no avail: and ſo much the Jews themſelves ſeem to acknowledge, when they ſay [e]; “ that “ tranſgreſſions, which are between a man and “ God, the day of atonement expiates; the tranſ-“ greſſions which are between a man and his neigh-“ bour, the day of atonement does not expiate, “ עד שירצה את חבירו, until he hath reconciled his “ neighbour.” Which is enlarged upon, and explained by Maimonides [f], after this manner; “ the “ day of atonement does not expiate any tranſgreſ-“ ſions, but thoſe that are between a man and God, “ as when one eats any thing that is forbidden, and “ lies with any thing that is forbidden, or the like; “ but tranſgreſſions which are between a man and “ his neighbour, as he that hurts his neighbour, or “ curſes his neighbour, or ſteals from him, and the “ like, are never forgiven, until he has given his “ neighbour what he owed him, and has reconciled “ him; yea, though he has returned to him the “ money he owed him, he ought to reconcile him, “ and deſire him to forgive him; yea, even tho' “ he has only provoked him by words, (which is the “ very caſe in the text before us) צריך לפייסו, he “ ought to reconcile him, and to meet him until he “ forgives him: if his neighbour will not forgive, “ he muſt bring with him three of his friends, and “ meet him, and entreat him; and if he will not “ be reconciled by them, he muſt bring them a ſe-“ cond, and a third time.” So that he was to uſe all means to obtain a reconciliation.

Ver. 25. Agree with thine adverſary quickly, &c.] Theſe words are not to be underſtood in an allegorical ſenſe, as if the adverſary was the juſtice of God, demanding payment of debts; the way, this preſent life; the judge, God himſelf; the officer, the devil; the priſon, the pit of hell; and the uttermoſt farthing, the leaſt ſin, which will never be remitted without ſatisfaction: but the deſign of them is to prevent law-ſuits about debts, which may be in diſpute; it being much better for debtor and creditor, eſpecially the former, to compoſe ſuch differences among themſelves, than to litigate the matter in a court of judicature. By the adverſary is meant not an enemy, one that bears hatred and ill-will, but a brother that has ought againſt a man; a creditor, who demands and inſiſts upon payment of what is owing to him; and for this purpoſe has took methods towards bringing the debtor before a proper magiſtrate, in order to oblige him to payment: wherefore it's better for him to make up and agree the matter directly, as ſoon as poſſible, whilſt thou art in the way with him; that is, whilſt the creditor and debtor are going together to ſome inferior magiſtrate, or leſſer court, as the ſanhedrim, which conſiſted of three perſons only, before whom ſuch cauſes might be tried: for דיני ממונות בשלושה, pecuniary cauſes, or cauſes relating to money-matters, were tried by the bench of three [g]: and the ſelf-ſame advice is given in the Talmud [h], as here, where it ſeems to be a common proverb; for it is ſaid, “ there are men that ſay, or men uſually ſay, “ אגב אורחך לבעל דבבך אישתמע, whilſt thou “ art in the way with thine adverſary, be obedient.” Leſt at any time the adverſary ſhould deliver thee to the judge, a ſuperior magiſtrate in a higher court; for if the creditor would, he could oblige the debtor to go with him to the ſupreme court of judicature, and try the cauſe there; for ſo ſay the Jewiſh [i] canons; “ if the creditor ſays we will go to the great “ ſanhedrim, they compel the debtor, and he goes “ up with them, as it is ſaid, the borrower is ſervant “ to the lender,” where it might go harder with the poor debtor; and therefore it was adviſeable to prevent it by an agreement, leſt the judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou be caſt into priſon. “ It was “ an affirmative command in the law, ſays Mai-“ monides, to appoint judges and officers in every

---

[b] Sepher Coſri, fol. 57. 2. Vid. Kimchi in Pſ. xxvii. 13.

[c] Miſn. Bava Kama, c. 9. §. 12.

[d] Maimon. Hilch. Gezela, c. 8. §. 13.

[e] Miſn. Yoma, c. 8. §. 9.

[f] Hilchot Teſhuba, c. 2, §. 9. Vid. T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 87. 1.

[g] Miſn. Sanhedrim, c. 1. §. 1.

[h] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 95. 2.

[i] Maimon. Hilch. Sanhedrim, c. 6. §. 7.

“ country and province, as it is ſaid, Deut. xvi. “ 18. שופטים judges; they are the judges that are “ fixed in the Sanhedrim, and ſuch that engage in “ law-ſuits come before them: שוטרים officers; “ theſe are the maſters of the rod and ſcourge, i. e. “ who beat and ſcourge delinquents; and theſe ſtand “ before the judges——and all they do, is by the “ order of the judges.” Now it is one of theſe, that is meant by the officer: in Munſter's Hebrew goſpel, he is called שוטר; who, when he had authority from the judge, could caſt into priſon, and that for debt; of which we have no account in the law of Moſes.

Ver. 26. Verily, I ſay unto thee, &c] This may be depended upon, you may aſſure yourſelf of it, that thou ſhalt by no means come out thence, from priſon, 'till thou haſt paid the uttermoſt farthing, or laſt farthing; or as the Ethiopic verſion reads it, till thou haſt exactly paid all; which ſeems to expreſs the inexorableneſs of the creditor, and the impoſſibility of the debtor's releaſe.

Ver. 27. Ye have heard that it was ſaid, &c.] Theſe forms of ſpeech, as well as what follows, by them of old time, have been explained, in ver. 21. The law here mentioned, thou ſhalt not commit adultery, is recorded in Exod. xx. 14. and the meaning of our Lord is, not that the then preſent Jews, had heard that ſuch a law had been delivered to the ancients, their fathers, at mount Sinai; for that they could read in their bibles: but they had received it by tradition, that the ſenſe of it, which had been given to their anceſtors, by the ancient doctors of the church, was, that this law is to be taken ſtrictly, as it lies, and only regards the ſin of uncleanneſs in married perſons; or, what was ſtrictly adultery, and that actual; ſo that it had no reſpect to fornication, or unchaſt thoughts, words, or actions, but that ſingle act only.

Ver. 28. But I ſay unto you, that whoſoever looketh on a woman, &c.] Many and ſevere are the prohibitions of the Jews, concerning looking upon a woman, which they aggravate as a very great ſin: they ſay [k], it is not lawful to look upon a beautiful woman, though unmarried; nor upon another man's wife, though deformed; nor upon a woman's coloured garments: they forbid [l] looking on a woman's little finger, and ſay [m], that he that tells money to a woman, out of his hand into her's, that he may look upon her, though he is poſſeſſed of the law and good works, even as Moſes, he ſhan't eſcape the damnation of hell: they affirm [n], that he that looks upon a woman's heel, his children ſhall not be virtuous; and that a man may not go after a woman in the way, no, not after his wife: ſhould he meet her on a bridge, he muſt take her to the ſide of him; and whoever goes through a river after a woman, ſhall have no part in the world to [o] come: nay, they forbid [p] a man looking on the beauty of his own wife. Now theſe things were ſaid by them, chiefly to cover themſelves, and becauſe they would be thought to be very chaſt; when they were, as Chriſt calls them, an adulterous generation in a literal ſenſe: they uſually did what our Lord obſerves, ſtrain at a gnat, and ſwallow a camel. We read in the Talmud [q], of חסיד שוטה a fooliſh ſaint; and it is aſked, who is he? and it is anſwered, one that ſees a woman drowning in a river, and ſays, it is not lawful for me לאיסתכולי בה to look upon her, and deliver her. It was not any looking upon a woman, that is forbid by Chriſt as criminal; but ſo to look, as to luſt after her; for ſuch an one hath committed adultery with her already in his heart. But theſe men, who forbad external looking upon a woman, generally ſpeaking, had no notion of heart-ſins; and which was the prevailing opinion of the Phariſees, in Chriſt's time. “ A good thought they [r] allow, is “ reckoned as if done; as it is ſaid, Mal. iii. 16. “ Upon which it is aſked, what is the meaning of “ that, and that thought upon his name? Says R. “ Aſe, if a man thinks to do a good work, and is “ hindered, and does it not, the Scripture reckons “ it to him, as if he did it; but an evil thought, “ the holy bleſſed God does not account of it as if “ done, as is ſaid, Pſal. lxvi. 18.” Upon which words, a noted commentator [s] of theirs, has this remark. “ Though I regard iniquity in my heart “ to do it, even in thought, yea, againſt God himſelf, “ as if I had expreſſed it with my lips, he “ does not hear it; that is, לא חשב לי עון he does “ not reckon it to me for ſin; becauſe the holy bleſſed “ God does not account an evil thought for an “ action, to them that are in the faith of God, or “ of the true religion.” For it ſeems, this is only true of the Iſraelites; 'tis juſt the reverſe with the Gentiles, in whom God does not reckon of a good thought, as if it was done, but does of an evil one, as if it was in act [t]. It muſt be owned, that this is not the ſenſe of them all; for ſome of them have gone ſo far, as to ſay [u], that “ the thoughts of ſin are “ greater, or harder, than ſin itſelf:” by which they mean, that it is more difficult to ſubdue ſinful luſts, than to refrain from the act of ſin itſelf; and particularly, ſome of them ſay things which agree with, and come very near to what our Lord here ſays; as when they affirm [w], that “ every one that looks upon “ a woman בכוונה with intention, it is all one, as if “ he lay with her.” And that נואף בעיניו נקרא נואף he that committeth adultery with his eyes, is called an adulterer [x]. Yea, they alſo obſerve [y], that a woman may commit adultery in her heart, as well as a man; but the Phariſees of Chriſt's time, were of another mind.

Ver. 29. And if thy right eye offend thee, &c.] Or cauſe thee to offend, to ſtumble, and fall into ſin. Our Lord has no regard here, to near and dear relations, ſeeking to alienate us from God and Chriſt, and hinder us in the purſuit of divine things; whoſe ſollicitations are to be rejected with the utmoſt indignation, and they themſelves to be parted with, and forſaken, rather than complied with; which is the ſenſe ſome give of the words: for both in this, and the following verſe, reſpect is had only to the law of adultery; and to ſuch members of the body, which often are the means, of leading perſons on to the breach of it; particularly the eye and hand. The eye, is often the inſtrument of enſnaring the heart this way: hence the Jews have a [z] ſaying, “ whoever looks upon women, at the end comes “ into the hands of tranſgreſſion.” Mention is only made of the right eye; not but that the left may be an occaſion of ſinning, as well as the right; but that being moſt dear and valuable, is inſtanced in, and ordered to be parted with: pluck it out, and caſt it from thee; which is not to be underſtood literally;

---

[k] T. Bab. Avoda Zara, fol. 1, 2.

[l] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 24. 1. Sabbat. fol. 64. 2.

[m] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 61. 1. Eruvin, fol. 18. 2.

[n] T. Bab. Nedarim, fol. 20. 1. T. Hieroſ. Challa, fol. 58. 3. Derech Eretz. c. 1. fol. 17. 3.

[o] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 61. 1. Eruvin, fol. 18. 2.

[p] Zohar in Lev. fol. 34. 4.

[q] T. Bab. Sota, fol. 21. 2.

[r] T. Bab. Kiddushin, fol. 40. 1.

[s] R. David Kimchi, in. Pſ. lxvi. 18.

[t] T. Hieroſ. Peah, fol. 16. 2.

[u] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 29. 1.

[w] T. Hieroſ. Challa, fol. 58. 3. Maſſechet Calah, fol. 16. 4. Vid. Maimon. Iſſure Bia, c. 21. §. 2. & Moſes Kotſenſis Mitzvot Tora precept. neg. 126.

[x] Vajikra Rabba, §. 23. fol. 165. 1.

[y] Bemidbar Rabba, §. 9. fol. 196. 1.

[z] T. Bab. Nedarim, fol. 20. 1.

rally; for no man is obliged to mutilate any part of his body, to prevent ſin, or on account of the commiſſion of it; this is no where required, and if done, would be ſinful, as in the caſe of Origen: but figuratively; and the ſenſe is, that perſons ſhould make a covenant with their eyes, as Job did; and turn them away, from beholding ſuch objects, which may tend to excite impure thoughts and deſires; deny themſelves the gratification of the ſenſe of ſeeing, or feeding the eyes with ſuch ſights, as are grateful to the fleſh; and with indignation and contempt, reject, and avoid all opportunities and occaſions of ſinning; which the eye may be the inſtrument of, and lead unto: for it is profitable for thee, that one of thy members ſhould periſh, and not that thy whole body ſhould be caſt into hell. This is ſtill a continuation of the figure here uſed; and the meaning is, that it will turn to better account, to loſe all the carnal pleaſures of the eye, or all thoſe pleaſing ſights, which are grateful to a carnal heart, than, by enjoying them, to expoſe the whole man, body and ſoul, to everlaſting deſtruction, in the fire of hell.

Ver. 30. And if thy right hand offend thee, &c.] Or cauſe thee to offend; that is, is the means of enſnaring thine heart; and of drawing thee into either mental, or actual adultery; for, as before, all unchaſte looks, ſo here, all unchaſte touches, embraces, &c. are condemned. As adultery may be committed in the heart, and by the eye, ſo with the hand: “ ſays R. Eliezer[a], what's the meaning of “ that Scripture, your hands are full of blood, Iſa. i. “ 15.? 'Tis replied, אלו המנאפים ביד theſe are “ they, that commit adultery with the hand. 'Tis a tra“ dition of the houſe of R. Iſhmael, that the ſenſe “ of that command, thou ſhalt not commit adultery, “ is, there ſhall be none that commits adultery in “ thee, whether with the hand, or with the foot.” Like orders are given as before, cut it off, and caſt it from thee; as a man would chuſe to do, or have it done for him, when ſuch a part of the body is mortified, and endangers all the reſt. The Jews enjoined cutting off of the hand, on ſeveral accounts; if in a morning, before a man had waſhed his hands, he put his hand to his eye, noſe, mouth, ear, &c. תיקצץ it was to be cut off[b]; particularly, the handling of the membrum virile, was puniſhable with cutting off of the hand. “ Says R.[c] Tarphon, “ if the hand is moved to the privy parts, תקצץ ידו “ let his hand be cut off to his navel.” That is, that it may reach no farther; for below that part of the body, the hand might not be put[d]; leaſt unclean thoughts, and deſires, ſhould be excited. In the above[e] place it is added, “ what if a thorn ſhould “ be in his belly, muſt he not take it away? 'Tis “ replied, no: 'tis further aſked, muſt not his belly “ be ript up then? 'Tis anſwered, it is better that “ his belly be ript up, ואל ירד לבאר שחת than “ that he ſhould go down to the pit of corruption.” A way of ſpeaking, much like what our Lord here uſes; and to the above orders and canons, he may be very well thought to allude: but he is not to be underſtood literally, as enjoyning the cutting off of the right hand, as they did; but of men's refraining from all ſuch impure practices, either with themſelves, or women, which are of a defiling nature; and endanger the ſalvation of them, body and ſoul; the ſame reaſon is given as before.

Ver. 31. It hath been ſaid, &c.] 'Tis not added here, as in the former inſtances, by them of old time; nor prefaced with theſe words, ye have heard; becauſe the caſe of divorce, was not any law of Moſes, or of God by him; but only a permiſſion, becauſe of the hardneſs of the hearts of the Jews: and as to the controverſy, about the cauſes of divorce, this was not debated by them of old time, but was a new thing, juſt ſtarted in the times of Chriſt; and was a controverſy then agitating, between the ſchools of Hillell and Shammai: the one allowing it upon any frivolous cauſe; the other, only on account of adultery. Whoſoever ſhall put away his wife, diſſolve the marriage bond, diſmiſs her from his bed, and ſend her from his houſe, ſee Deut. xxiv. 1, 2. let him give her a writing of divorcement, ספר כריתת, a bill of divorcement, or a book of cutting off. For though a wife was obtained by ſeveral ways, there was but one way of diſmiſſing her, as the Jews obſerve[f], and that was, by giving her a bill. The form of a writing of divorcement, as given by Maimonides[g], is as follows. “ On ſuch a day of “ the week, in ſuch a month, of ſuch a year, ei“ ther from the creation, or the epocha of con“ tracts, according to the uſual way of computa“ tion, which we obſerve in ſuch a place; I ſuch “ an one, the ſon of ſuch an one, of ſuch a place; “ or if I have any other name, or ſurname, or “ my parents, or my place, or the place of my “ parents; by my own will, without any force, I “ put away, diſmiſs, and divorce thee. Thee I “ ſay, who art ſuch an one, the daughter of ſuch “ an one, of ſuch a place; or if thou haſt any other “ name, or ſurname, or thy parents, or thy place, “ or the place of thy parents; who waſt my wife “ heretofore, but now I put thee away, diſmiſs and “ divorce thee; ſo that thou art in thine own hand, “ and haſt power over thyſelf, to go, and marry any “ other man, whom thou pleaſeſt; and let no man “ hinder thee in my name, from this day forward “ and for ever; and lo! thou art free to any man: “ and let this be unto thee, from me, a bill of di“ vorce, an inſtrument of diſmiſſion, and a letter “ of forſaking, according to the law of Moſes and “ Iſrael.

“ Such an one, the ſon of ſuch an one, witneſs.
“ Such an one, the ſon of ſuch an one, witneſs.”

Would you chuſe to have one of theſe bills, filled up in proper form, take it in manner[h] following. “ On the fourth day of the week, on the eleventh “ day of the month Ciſleu, in the year five thou“ ſand four hundred and fifty four, from the crea“ tion of the world; according to the computation “ which we follow here, in the city of Amſterdam, “ which is called Amſtelredam; ſituated by the ſea“ ſide, called Taya, and by the river Amſtel. I “ Abraham, the ſon of Benjamin, ſurnamed Wol“ phius, the prieſt; and at this time dwelling in “ the city of Amſterdam, which is called Amſtelre“ dam, which is ſituated by the ſea-ſide, called “ Taya, and by the river Amſtel; or if I have any “ other name, or ſurname, or my parents, or my “ place, or the place of my parents; by my own “ free-will, without any compulſion, I put away, “ diſmiſs, and divorce thee, my wife Rebecca, the “ daughter of Jonas the Levite; who at this time, “ abides in the city of Amſterdam, called Amſtelre“ dam, ſituated by the ſea-ſide, called Taya, and “ by the river Amſtel; or if thou haſt any other “ name, or ſurname, or thy parents, or thy place, “ or the place of thy parents, who waſt heretofore “ my wife; but now I put thee away, diſmiſs, and

---

[a] T. Bab. Nidda, fol. 13. 2. Vid. Maimon. Iſſure Bia, c. 21. §. 18.

[b] T. Bab. Sabbat. fol. 108. 2. Maſſechet Callah, fol. 17. 1.

[c] T. Bab. Nidda, fol. 13. 2.

[d] Maimon. Iſſure Bia, c. 21. §. 23.

[e] T. Bab. Nidda, fol. 13. 2.

[f] Baal Hatturim in Deut. xxiv. 1. Maimon. Hilchot Iſhot, c. 1. §. 2, 3.

[g] Hilchot Geruſhin, c. 4. §. 12.

[h] In Surenhuſii Miſna, vol. III. p. 324. Vid. Moſes Kotſenſis Mitzvot Tora pr. affirm. 50.

" divorce thee; ſo that thou art in thine own hands, " and haſt power over thyſelf, to go and marry any " other man, whom thou pleaſeſt: and let no man " hinder thee in my name, from this day forward, " and for ever; and lo! thou art free to any man. " Let this be to thee, from me, a bill of divorce, " an inſtrument of diſmiſſion, and a letter of for- " ſaking, according to the law of Moſes, and " Iſrael.

" Sealtiel, the ſon of Paltiel, witneſs.
" Calonymus, the ſon of Gabriel, witneſs."

This bill being written in twelve lines, neither more nor leſs, and being ſealed by the huſband, and ſigned by the witneſſes, was delivered, either by him, or by a meſſenger, or deputy of his or hers, into her hand, lap, or boſom, in the preſence of two perſons; after which, ſhe might, if ſhe would, enroll it in the publick records, and marry whom ſhe pleaſed.

Ver. 32. But I ſay unto you, that whoſoever ſhall put away his wife, &c.] Chriſt does not infringe, or revoke the original grant, or permiſſion of divorce; only frees it from the falſe interpretations, and ill uſe, the Phariſees made of it; and reſtores the ancient ſenſe of it, in which only it was to be underſtood: for a divorce was allowable in no caſe, ſaving for the cauſe of fornication; which muſt not be taken ſtrictly for what is called fornication, but as including adultery, inceſt, or any unlawful copulation; and is oppoſed to the ſenſe and practices of the Phariſees, who were on the ſide of Hillell: who admitted of divorce, upon the moſt fooliſh and frivolous pretences whatever; when Shammai and his followers inſiſted on it, that a man ought only to put away his wife for uncleanneſs; in which they agreed with Chriſt. For ſo it is written [i], " The houſe of " Shammai ſay, a man may not put away his wife, " unleſs he finds ſome uncleanneſs in her, according " to Deut. xxiv. 1. the houſe of Hillell ſay, if ſhe " ſhould ſpoil his food, (that is, as Jarchi and Bartenora explain it, burns it either at the fire, or " with ſalt, i. e. over roaſts or over ſalts it) who ap- " peal alſo to Deut. xxiv. 1. R. Akiba ſays, if he " finds another more beautiful than her, as it is ſaid, " Deut. xxiv. 1. and it come to paſs that ſhe find no " favour in his eyes." The commentators [k] on this paſſage ſay, that the determination of the matter is, according to the ſchool of Hillell; ſo that according to them, a woman might be put away for a very trivial thing: ſome difference is made by ſome of the Jewiſh doctors, between a firſt and ſecond wife; the firſt wife they ſay [l], might not be put away, but for adultery; but the ſecond, might be put away, if her huſband hated her; or ſhe was of ill behaviour, and impudent, and not modeſt, as the daughters of Iſrael. Now our Lord ſays, without any exception, that a man ought not to put away his wife, whether firſt or ſecond, for any other other reaſon, than uncleanneſs; and that whoever does, upon any other account, cauſeth her to commit adultery; that is, as much as in him lies: ſhould ſhe commit it, he is the cauſe of it, by expoſing her, through a rejection of her, to the ſinful embraces of others; and, indeed, ſhould ſhe marry another man, whilſt he is alive, which her divorce allows her to do, ſhe muſt be guilty of adultery; ſince ſhe is his proper wife, the bond of marriage not being diſſolved by ſuch a divorce: and whoſoever ſhall marry her that is divorced, committeth adultery; becauſe the divorced woman he marries, and takes to his bed, is legally the wife of another man; and it may be added, from Matt. xix. 9. that her huſband, who has put her away, upon any other account than fornication, ſhould he marry another woman, would be guilty of the ſame crime.

Ver. 33. Again, ye have heard that it hath been ſaid, &c.] Beſides what has been obſerved, in ver. 21. 27. you know it has alſo been ſaid, by, or to them of old time, what is written in Lev. xix. 12. And ye ſhall not ſwear by my name falſely; which ſeems to be referred to, when it is ſaid, thou ſhall not forſwear thyſelf; and is the law forbidding perjury, or falſe ſwearing; and was what the Jews were chiefly, if not only concerned about; little regarding the vanity, only the truth of an oath: for they took ſwearing vainly, to be the ſame as ſwearing falſely; wherefore ſo long as what they ſwore was truth, they were not careful whether it was of any importance or no: moreover, theſe men ſinned, in that they ſwore by the creatures, which they thought they might do, and not ſin; and when they had ſo done, were not under obligation to perform; becauſe they made no uſe of the name of God, to whom only vows and oaths were to be performed, but ſhalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths, Numb. xxx. 2. which they underſtood of vows only made to the Lord, and not to others; and of oaths, when in his name, and not by others; which they did do, and yet thought themſelves not obliged by them.

Ver. 34. But I ſay unto you, ſwear not at all, &c.] Which muſt not be underſtood in the ſtricteſt ſenſe, as though it was not lawful to take an oath upon any occaſion, in an affair of moment, in a ſolemn ſerious manner, and in the name of God; which may be ſafely done: but of raſh ſwearing, about trivial matters, and by the creatures; as appears by what follows, neither by heaven; which is directly contrary to the Jewiſh canons [m], which ſay, " they that ſwear " בשמים by heaven, and by earth, are free." Upon the words in Cant. ii. 7. I adjure you, &c. 'tis aſked [n], " by what does ſhe adjure them? R. Eli- " ezer ſays, by the heavens, and by the earth; by " the hoſts, the hoſt above, and the hoſt below." So Philo the Jew ſays [o], that the moſt high and ancient cauſe, need not to be immediately mentioned in ſwearing; but the earth, the ſun, the ſtars, ȣρανον, heaven, and the whole world. So R. Aben Ezra, and R. David Kimchi, explain Amos iv. 2. The Lord God hath ſworn by his holineſs; that is, ſay they, בשמים, by heaven: which may be thought to juſtify them, in this form of ſwearing; though they did not look upon it as a binding oath, and therefore if broken, they were not criminal [p]. " He " that ſwears בשמים by heaven, and by the earth, " and by the ſun, and the like; though his inten- " tion is nothing leſs, than to him that created " them, this is no oath." The reaſon why it is forbidden by Chriſt to ſwear by heaven, is, for it is God's throne; referring to Iſa. lxvi. 1. where he ſits, the glory of his majeſty ſhines forth, and is itſelf glorious and excellent, and not to be mentioned in a vain way; and eſpecially, for the reaſon Chriſt elſewhere gives, Matt. xxiii. 22. that he that ſhall ſwear by heaven, ſweareth by the throne of God, and by him that ſitteth thereon; ſo that they doubly ſinned, firſt, by openly ſwearing by that which is God's creature; and then, by tacitly bringing God into their raſh and vain oaths.

---

[i] Miſn. Gittin c. 9. §. 10. Vid. T. Hieroſ. Gittin, fol. 49. 4. & Sota, fol. 16. 2. & Bemidbar Rabba, §. 9. fol. 195. 2.

[k] Maimon. & Bartenora in Gittin, c. 9. §. 10.

[l] T. Bab. Gittin, fol. 90. 2. Maimon. Hilch. Geruſhin, c. 10. §. 21, 22.

[m] Miſn. Shebuot, c. 4. §. 13.

[n] Shirhaſhirim Rabba, fol. 10. 4.

[o] De Special. leg. p. 770.

[p] Maimon. Hilch. Shebuot, c. 12. §. 3.

Ver. 35. Nor by the earth, for it is his footſtool, &c.] That the Jews were wont to ſwear by the earth, is clear from the above-mentioned inſtances; and is condemned by Chriſt for this reaſon, becauſe the earth is God's footſtool, referring, as before, to Iſa. lxvi. 1. on which he treads; and where he alſo manifeſts forth his glory, and is a conſiderable part of the work of his hands. Neither by Jeruſalem, which the Jews uſed to ſwear by: ſuch forms of vows as theſe, are to be met with in their writings [q]; "as the altar, as the temple, כירושלם as Jeruſalem;" that is, by Jeruſalem, I vow I'll do this, or the other thing. "R. Judah ſays, he that ſays Jeruſalem (i. e. as Bartenora obſerves [r], without the note of compariſon, as) ſays nothing." In the Gemara [s] it is, "he that ſays as Jeruſalem, does not ſay any thing, till he has made his vow concerning a thing, which is offered up in Jeruſalem." Dr. Lightfoot [t] has produced forms of vowing and ſwearing, which have not occurred to me. "Jeruſalem; לירושלם for, or unto Jeruſalem, which exactly anſwers to εις Ιεροσολυμα here; and by Jeruſalem." The reaſon given for prohibiting this kind of oath, is; for it is the city of the great king: not of David, but of the king of kings, the Lord of hoſts; who had his reſidence, and his worſhip, here; ſee Pſal. xlviii. 2.

Ver. 36. Neither ſhalt thou ſwear by thy head, &c.] This alſo was a common form of ſwearing among the Jews: take a few inſtances. "If any one is bound to his friend by an oath, and ſays to him, vow unto me בחיי ראשך by the life of thy head; R. Meir ſays [u], he may retract it; but the wiſe men ſay, he cannot." Again [w], a certain Rabbi ſaid to Elijah, "I heard Bath Kol (or the voice from heaven) mourning like a dove, and ſaying, woe to my children; for, becauſe of their ſins, I have deſtroyed my houſe, and have burnt my temple, and have carried them captive among the nations: and he (Elijah) ſaid unto him, חייך וחיי ראשך by thy life, and by the life of thy head, not this time only it ſays ſo, but it ſays ſo three times every day." Once more [x], ſays R. Simeon ben Antipatras, to R. Joſhua, "I have heard from the mouth of the wiſe men, that he that vows in the law, and tranſgreſſes, is to be beaten with forty ſtripes: he replies, bleſſed art thou of God, that thou haſt ſo done, חייך וחיי ראשך, by thy life, and by the life of thy head, he that is uſed to do ſo is to be beaten." This form of ſwearing is condemned, for this reaſon, becauſe thou canſt not make one hair white or black; which ſhows, that a man's head, nor indeed, one hair of his head, is in his own power, and therefore he ought not to ſwear by it; as he ought not to ſwear by heaven, or earth, or Jeruſalem, becauſe theſe were in the poſſeſſion of God. Some copies read, canſt not make one white hair, black.

Ver. 37. But let your communication be yea, yea, &c.] That is, let your ſpeech, in your common converſation, and daily buſineſs of life, when ye anſwer to any thing in the affirmative, be yea; and when ye anſwer to any thing in the negative, nay; and for the ſtronger aſſeveration of the matter, when it is neceſſary, double theſe words; but let no oaths be joined unto them: this is enough, a righteous man's yea, is yea, and his no, is no; his word is ſufficient. Hence it appears, that our Lord is here ſpeaking of raſh ſwearing, and ſuch as was uſed in common converſation, and is juſtly condemned by him. The Jews have no reaſon to reject this advice of Chriſt, who often uſe and recommend the ſame modes of expreſſion. They endeavour to raiſe the eſteem of their doctors and wiſe men, by ſaying, that their words, both in doctrines and dealings with men, are yea, yea [y]. One of their [z] commentators on the word ſaying, in Exod. xx. 1. makes this obſervation; "hence we learn, that they uſed to anſwer, על הן חן ועל לאו לאו concerning yea, yea, and concerning nay, nay." This way of ſpeaking, they looked upon equivalent to an oath; yea, they affirm it was one. "Says R. Eliezer [a], לאו שבועה הן שבועה, nay is an oath, yea is an oath, abſolutely; nay is an oath, as it is written, Gen. ix. 11. and Iſa. liv. 9. But that yea is an oath, how does it appear? Its concluded from hence, that nay is an oath; ſaith Rabba, there are that ſay nay, nay, twice, and there are that ſay yea, yea, twice; as it is written, Gen. ix. 11. and from hence, that nay is twice, yea, is alſo twice ſaid." The Gloſs upon it is, "he that ſays either nay, nay, twice, or yea, yea, twice; lo! it is כשבועה מאחר as an after oath, which confirms his words." For whatſoever is more than theſe, cometh of evil: that is, whatever exceeds this way of ſpeaking and converſation, in the common affairs of life, is either from the devil, who is the evil one, by way of eminency; or from the evil heart of man, from the pride, malice, envy, &c. that are in it.

Ver. 38. Ye have heard that it hath been ſaid, &c.] That is, to, or by them of old time, as is expreſſed in ſome of the foregoing inſtances, an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth, Exod. xxi. 24. This is lex talionis, the law of retaliation; which, whether it is to be underſtood literally, or not, is a matter of queſtion. The Baithuſeans, or Sadducees, among the Jews, took it in a literal ſenſe, and ſo does Joſephus, who ſays [b], he that ſhall blind, i. e. put out a man's eyes, ſhall ſuffer the like. But the Jewiſh doctors, generally underſtood it of paying a price equivalent to the damage done, except in caſe of life. R. Sol. Jarchi [c] explains the law thus: "He that puts out his neighbour's eye, muſt give him דמי עינו the price of his eye, according to the price of a ſervant, ſold in the market; and ſo the ſame of them all; for, not taking away of the member is ſtrictly meant." And, ſays Maimonides [d], "if a man cuts off his neighbour's hand, or foot, he is to be conſidered as if he was a ſervant ſold in a market; what he was worth then, and what he is worth now; and he muſt pay the diminution which is made of his price; as it is ſaid, eye for eye. From tradition 'tis learned, that this for, ſpoken of, is to be underſtood of paying money: this is what is ſaid in the law, as he hath cauſed a blemiſh in a man, ſo ſhall it be done to him again. Not that he is to be hurt, as he has hurt his neighbour; but inaſmuch as he deſerves to want a member, or to be hurt as he has done; therefore he ought to pay the damage." And Joſephus himſelf [e] ſays, that he muſt be deprived of that, which he has deprived another of, except he that has his eye put out, is willing to receive money; and which he obſerves, the law allows of. The controverſy about the ſenſe of this law, may be ſeen in a few words, as managed between R. Saadiah Hagaon, and Ben Zeta [f]. "Says R.

---

[q] Miſn. Nedarim, c. 1. §. 3.
[r] In ib.
[s] T. Bab. Nedarim, fol. 11. 1.
[t] In loc. ex Toſapht. in Nedarim, c. 1.
[u] Miſn. Sanhedrim, c. 3. §. 2.
[w] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 3. 1.
[x] Derech Eretz c. 6. fol. 18. 2.
[y] T. Bab. Moed Katon, fol. 20. 1. Maimon. Hilch. Dayot. c. 5. §. 13.
[z] R. Sol. Jarchi, in Exod. xx. 1.
[a] T. Bab. Shebuot, fol. 36. 1. Vid. Maimon. Hilch. Shebuot, c. 2. §. 1.
[b] Antiqu. Jud. l. 4. c. 8. §. 35.
[c] In Exod. xxi. 24.
[d] Hilchot Chobel. c. 1. §. 2, 3.
[e] In loc. ſupra-citat.
[f] In Aben Ezra in Exod. xxi. 24.

“ R. Saadiah, we can't explain this verſe according to its literal ſenſe; for if a man ſhould ſmite “ the eye of his neighbour, and the third part of “ the light of his eye ſhould depart, how will he “ order it, to ſtrike ſuch a ſtroke, as that, without “ adding or leſſening? perhaps he will put out the “ whole light of his eye. And it is yet more difficult with reſpect to burning, wound, and ſtripe; “ for ſhould they be in a dangerous place, the man “ might die, but that's intolerable. Ben Zeta anſwers him, is it not written, in another place, as “ he hath cauſed a blemiſh in a man, ſo ſhall it be “ done to him again? To which Hagaon replies, ב “ in, is inſtead of על upon, or againſt; and lo! “ the ſenſe is, ſo ſhall the puniſhment be upon “ him. Ben Zeta anſwers him again, as he does, “ ſo ſhall it be done to him. Hagaon replies, behold Samſon ſaid, as they have done to me, ſo will “ I do to them; but Samſon did not take their “ wives, and give them to others, he only rendered “ to them their reward: but Ben Zeta replies, if a “ poor man ſhould ſmite, what muſt be his puniſhment? Hagaon anſwers him, if a blind man “ ſhould put out the eye of one that ſees, what “ ſhall be done to him? as for the poor man, he “ may become rich, and pay, but the blind man “ can never pay.” Now our Lord here, does not find fault with the law of retaliation, as delivered by Moſes, but with the falſe gloſs of the Scribes and Phariſees; who, as they interpreted it of pecuniary mulcts, as a compenſation for the loſs of a member, which ſometimes exceeded all juſt and due bounds; ſo they applied it to private revenge, and in favour of it: whereas this law did not allow of a retaliation to be made by private perſons, at their pleaſure, but by the civil magiſtrate only.

Ver. 39. But I ſay unto you, that ye reſiſt not evil, &c.] This is not to be underſtood of any ſort of evil, not of the evil of ſin, of bad actions, and falſe doctrines, which are to be oppoſed; nor of the evil one ſatan, who is to be reſiſted; but of an evil man, an injurious one, who has done us an injury. We muſt not render evil for evil, or repay him in the ſame way; ſee James v. 6. Not but that a man may lawfully defend himſelf, and endeavour to ſecure himſelf from injuries; and may appeal to the civil magiſtrate for redreſs of grievances; but he is not to make uſe of private revenge. As if a man ſhould pluck out one of his eyes, he muſt not in revenge pluck out one of his; or ſhould he ſtrike out one of his teeth, he muſt not uſe him in the ſame manner; but patiently bear the affront, or ſeek for ſatisfaction in another way. But whoſoever ſhall ſmite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other alſo; which is to be underſtood comparatively, rather than ſeek revenge, and is directly contrary to the Jewiſh canons; which require, in ſuch a caſe, a pecuniary fine [g]. “ He that ſtrikes his neighbour (which Maimonides explains, he that ſtrikes “ his neighbour with his hand ſhut, about the “ neck) he ſhall give him a ſela, or ſhekel; R. Judah ſays, in the name of R. Joſe the Galilean, “ one pound: if he ſmite him, (i. e. as Maimonides ſays, if he ſmite him with his double fiſt up- “ on the face; or as Bartenora, with the palm of “ his hand לחיי on the cheek, which is a greater reproach) he ſhall give him two hundred zuzim; “ and if he does it with the back of his hand, four “ hundred zuzim.” R. Iſaac Sangari [h], manifeſtly refers to this paſſage of Chriſt's, when he ſays to the king he's converſing with; “ I perceive that “ thou upbraideſt us with poverty and want; but “ in them the great men of other nations glory: “ for they do not glory but in him, who ſaid, Whoſoever ſmiteth thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the “ left; and whoſoever taketh away thy coat, give “ him thy cloak.”

Ver. 40. And if any man will ſue thee at the law, &c.] Or will contend with thee, or as the Syriac renders it, דנדון עמך will ſtrive, or litigate with thee; not conteſt the matter, or try the cauſe in an open court of judicature, a ſenſe our verſion inclines to; but will wrangle and quarrel in a private way, in order to take away thy coat, by force and violence, let him have thy cloak alſo; don't forbid, or hinder him from taking it; ſee Luke vi. 29. The coat, is the ſame with טלית the upper garment; and what we render a cloak, anſwers to חלוק the inward garment; by which words, Sangari expreſſes the paſſage in the place before cited: and the ſenſe is, if a wrangling, quarrelſome man, inſiſts upon having thy coat, or upper garment, let him take the next; and rather ſuffer thyſelf to be ſtript naked, than engage in a litigious broil with him. This alſo is contrary to the above canon of the Jews [i], which ſays; “ If a man ſhould pull another by his ear, or pluck “ off his hair, or ſpit, and his ſpittle ſhould come “ to him, העביר טליתו ממנו, or ſhould take his “ coat from him, or uncover a woman's head in the “ ſtreet, he ſhall pay four hundred zuzim, and all “ this is according to his dignity; ſays R. Akiba; “ even the poor in Iſrael, they conſider them as if “ they were noblemen, who are fallen from their “ eſtates, for they are the children of Abraham, “ Iſaac, and Jacob.”

Ver. 41. And whoſoever ſhall compel thee to go a mile, &c.] The word αγγαρευσει, rendered compel, is generally ſaid to be of Perſic original; the Angari among the Perſians, were the king's meſſengers, or thoſe who rode poſt, and were maintained at the king's expences; and had power to take horſes, and other carriages, and even men, into their ſervice, by force, when they had occaſion for them: hence the word is uſed to force, or compel perſons to do this or the other thing; the word אנגריא is often to be met with in the Jewiſh writings, and is in them expounded to be [k], the taking of any thing, for the ſervice of the king. David de Pomis renders it by עול a yoke [l]; meaning any ſervile work, which ſuch, who were preſſed into the king's ſervice, were obliged unto. And [m] עשה אנגריא is uſed to compel perſons to go along with others, to do any ſervice; in which ſenſe it is here uſed: and Chriſt adviſes, rather than to contend and quarrel with ſuch a perſon, that obliges to go with him a mile, to go with him twain: his meaning is, not to diſpute ſuch a matter, though it may be ſomewhat laborious and diſagreeable, but comply, for the ſake of peace. The Jews [n], in their blaſphemous book of the birth of Chriſt, own, that he gave advice in ſuch words as theſe, when they introduce Peter thus ſpeaking of him. “ He, i. e. Jeſus, hath warned and commanded you, to do no more evil to “ a Jew; but if a Jew ſhould ſay to a Nazarene, “ go with me one mile, he ſhall go with him two “ miles; and if a Jew ſhall ſmite him on the left “ cheek, he ſhall turn to him alſo the right.” Can a Jew find fault with this advice?

---

[g] Miſn. Bava Kama, c. 8. §. 6. Vid. Maimon. & Bartenora in ib.

[h] Sepher Coſri, Orat. 1. Sign. 113. fol. 56. 1.

[i] Miſn. Bava Kama, c. 8. §. 6.

[k] Vid. Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Bava Metzia, c. 6. §. 3.

[l] Tzemach David, fol. 8. 4.

[m] Vid. Buxtorf. Lex. Rabb. p. 131, 132.

[n] Toldos Jeſu, p. 22.

Ver. 42. Give to him that aſketh thee, &c.] To every man, Luke vi. 30. whether Jew or Gentile; friend or foe; believer or unbeliever; a good, or a bad man; worthy or unworthy; deſerving or not, that aſketh alms, whether food or money; give it freely, readily, chearfully, according to your abilities, and as the neceſſity of the object requires: for ſuch rules are always ſuppoſed, and to be obſerved; and though all are to be relieved, yet the circumſtances of perſons, and their relation to men, are to be conſidered, and ſpecial regard is to be had to the houſhold of faith. And from him that would borrow of thee, turn not away; refuſe him not, turn not away from him with a frown, or without ſpeaking to him, or with a denial; look upon him with a pleaſant countenance, chearfully lend him what he wants, whether he be a Jew, from whom it was not lawful to take uſury; or a ſtranger, from whom it was lawful to take it, yet take it not; lend him freely, hoping for nothing again, Luke vi. 35. which muſt not be underſtood of not hoping for the money lent, for then it would be giving, and not lending; but of not hoping for any reward for lending it: and indeed, the money itſelf, is not to be hoped for again, when the circumſtances of the borrower are ſuch, that he is not able to make a return.

Ver. 43. Ye have heard that it hath been ſaid, &c.] By, or to them of old time. This law has been delivered to them, thou ſhalt love thy neighbour, with this appendage to it, or falſe gloſs upon it, and hate thine enemy; for the firſt of theſe only, is the law of Moſes, Levit. xix. 18. the other is the addition, or wrong interpretation of the Scribes and Phariſees: wherefore the Jew [o] has no reaſon, to charge Chriſt, or the Evangeliſt, with a falſe teſtimony, as he does, becauſe the latter is no where written in the law, nor in the prophets: nor does Chriſt ſay it is; he only obſerves, that it had been traditionally handed down to them, from the ancients, by the maſters of the traditions of the elders, that the law of loving the neighbour, was ſo to be underſtood, as to allow, and even enjoyn hatred of enemies: in proof of which, take the following inſtances [p]. "When one man ſins againſt another, he mayn't hate him in his heart, and be ſilent, as is ſaid of the wicked; Abſalom ſpoke not with Amnon: but it is commanded to make it known to him, and to ſay to him, why haſt thou done to me ſo and ſo? As it is ſaid, rebuking, thou ſhalt rebuke thy neighbour; and if he returns, and deſires him to pardon him, he ſhall not be implacable and cruel; but if he reproves him many times, and he don't receive his reproof, nor turn from his ſin, then מותר לשנאותו it is lawful to hate him." Again, they ſay [q], "Every diſciple of a wiſe man, שאינו נוקם ונוטר כנחש who does not revenge, and keep as a ſerpent; that is, as the Gloſs explains it, enmity in his heart, as a ſerpent, is no diſciple of a wiſe man." And ſo Maimonides [r], one of their better ſort of writers, ſays; "A diſciple of a wiſe man, or a ſcholar, whom a man deſpiſes and reproaches publickly, it is forbidden him to forgive him, becauſe of his honour; and if he forgives him, he is to be puniſhed, for this is a contempt of the law; but he muſt revenge, and keep the thing as a ſerpent, until the other aſks pardon of him, and then he may forgive him." Thus they bred their ſcholars, in hatred and malice againſt their enemies. This ariſes from a miſtaken ſenſe of the word neighbour, which they underſtood only of a friend; and concluded, that if a friend was to be loved, an enemy was to be hated; not the Gentiles only, but any one among themſelves, which could come under that name.

Ver. 44. But I ſay unto you, love your enemies, &c.] That is, as the Apoſtle Paul may be thought to interpret the words of Chriſt, Rom. xii. 20. If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirſt, give him drink: unleſs our Lord ſhould be ſuppoſed, rather to regard the internal affection of the mind; ſince outward expreſſions of love, by words and works, are urged in the following exhortations: the actions of a man may be hated, and juſt indignation be expreſſed againſt them, and yet his perſon be loved, tenderneſs be uſed to him, and pity ſhown him: all men, even enemies, are to be loved with a natural love, as men; though they can't be loved, with a ſpiritual affection, as brethren in Chriſt: and in natural affection there are degrees, according to the relation and circumſtances, that perſons ſtand in to one another. Bleſs them that curſe you: when wicked men curſe you, as Shimei curſed David, don't render evil for evil, or railing for railing, but contrariwiſe, bleſſing; give good words, uſe kind language, mild and ſoft expreſſions; ſuch as may either win upon them, or put them to ſhame and ſilence: bleſs, and curſe not; the latter belongs to them, the former to you; let them curſe, but bleſs thou; curſes better fit their mouths, and bleſſings thine. Bleſſing here, does not ſignify praiſing them, for that would be ſinful, which is ſometimes the ſenſe of the word; nor wiſhing, or praying for a bleſſing on them, which is right and good; but this is mentioned afterwards, as diſtinct from bleſſing: wherefore, it is better to underſtand it of a ſweet and engaging addreſs unto, and behaviour and conduct towards ſuch, whoſe mouths are full of curſing and bitterneſs. Do good to them that hate you; ſuch as hate you in their hearts, and diſcover their hatred by their actions; don't make returns in the ſame way, but on the contrary, do them all the good you can; perform all the kind offices that lie in your power; let them partake of your bounty and liberality; if poor, feed, cloath, and ſupply them, as you are able, with the neceſſaries of life; and give them wholeſome advice, for the good of their ſouls: by ſo doing, you will heap coals of fire on their heads; of enemies, make them friends; engage their affections to you, and you may be happy inſtruments in doing them good, both in ſoul and body: and pray for them that deſpitefully uſe you and perſecute you. What Chriſt here commands and adviſes to, he himſelf did; for as he hung upon the croſs, he prayed for his crucifiers, who were then uſing him in the moſt deſpiteful, as well as cruel manner; ſaying, Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do: and in this he has left us an example, that we ſhould tread in his ſteps; and herein he was quickly followed, by his holy martyr Stephen; who, whilſt he was ſtoning, prayed for his perſecutors and murderers, ſaying, Lord, lay not this ſin to their charge. This breathes out the true ſpirit of Chriſtianity, and is peculiar to it. The whole of this, is directly oppoſite to the tenets of the Jews, particularly the Scribes and Phariſees; who allowed of revenge, and keeping anger againſt any perſon that had done them an injury, as has been obſerved: and which were alſo the ſentiments of the Karaites, or Scripturarians, another ſect among them who kept to the letter of the ſcriptures, and rejected the traditions of the elders, which the Phariſees held: but in this they agreed with them, "that it was right to do good to their friends, and "to forgive them that aſked pardon of them; but "to ſuch men who rendered evil, and did not "return to do well, that they might receive for"giveneſs, אינו אסור לנקום ולנטור מהם, it is not "forbidden to revenge, and to keep anger againſt "them[s]." It is indeed ſaid[t] of their former holy men, חסידים, Haſideans, which ſome have thought to be the ſame with the Eſſenes, and a ſort of Chriſtians; however, were a better ſort of Jews; that theſe "heard their reproach, but did not return it; and "not only ſo, but they pardoned him that reproach"ed them, and forgave him." And it is reported of theſe men, that they uſed to pray to God to pardon and forgive all that diſturbed them. But the Phariſees, whom Chriſt had to do with, and againſt whom he inveighs, were men of another complexion.

---

[o] R. Iſaac Chizuk Emunah, par. 2. c. 11. p. 402.

[p] Moſes Kotſenſis Mitzvot Tora precept. neg. 5. Vid. Maimon. Hilchot Rotzeach, c. 13. §. 14.

[q] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 22. 2. & 23. 1.

[r] Maimon. Hilch. Talmud Tora, c. 7. §. 13.

Ver. 45. That ye may be the children of your father, &c.] Not that any became the children of God, by doing things in imitation of him: for as in nature no man becomes the ſon of another by imitating him, or by doing the things he does, but either by birth, or by adoption; ſo in grace no man becomes a child of God by the works he does, as a follower of God, but by adopting grace; and which is diſcovered in regeneration. Chriſt's meaning is, that they might appear, and be known to be the children of God, by doing thoſe things in which they reſemble their heavenly father; and which are agreeable to his nature and conduct; as the tree is known by its fruit, and the cauſe by its effect: for where adoption and regenerating grace take place, the fruit of good works is brought forth to the glory of God. Some copies, inſtead of υιοι, children, read ομοιοι, like; and accordingly, the Perſic verſion renders it thus, that ye may be like to your father, which is in heaven. Our Lord ſeems to have reſpect to the Jews, often having in their mouths this expreſſion אבינו בשמים, our father which is in heaven; and to their frequent boaſting that they were the children of God: and therefore he would have them make this manifeſt by their being like him, or acting in imitation of him; for he maketh his ſun to riſe on the evil, and on the good. Chriſt inſtances in one of the greateſt bleſſings in nature, the ſun, ſo uſeful to the earth, and ſo beneficial to mankind for light, and heat; which he calls his ſun; his own, and not another's; which he has made, and maintains, orders to run its race, and commands it to riſe morning by morning, and that upon good and bad men; one, as well as another; all equally ſhare in, and partake of its benign influences, and enjoy the comfortable effects and bleſſings of it: and ſendeth rain on the juſt and unjuſt; that is, on the fields of perſons of ſuch different characters, even both the early and the latter rain; which makes the earth fruitful, crowns it with goodneſs, and cauſes it to bring forth bread to the eater, and ſeed to the ſower. This is one of the moſt conſiderable bleſſings of life; the gift of it is God's ſole prerogative; it's peculiar to him; it is what none of the vanities of the Gentiles can give; and yet is beſtowed by him on the moſt worthleſs, and undeſerving. This flows from that perfection of God, which the Cabbaliſts[u] call "cheſed, "mercy, or benignity, to which it is eſſential to "give largely to all, both to the juſt and unjuſt." The Jews have a ſaying[x], that "greater is the day "of rain, than the reſurrection of the dead; for the "reſurrection of the dead is for the juſt; but rain "is בין לצדקים בין לרשעים, both for the juſt, and "for the wicked;" a way of ſpeaking much like this here. They alſo uſed to praiſe God for rain, on this conſideration, becauſe it was given to unworthy perſons. [y] R. Joſe Bar Jacob went to viſit "R. Joden of Magdala; whilſt he was there, rain "deſcended, and he heard his voice, ſaying, thou"ſands of thouſands, and millions of millions are "bound to praiſe thy name, O our king, for "every drop thou cauſeſt to deſcend upon us, "שאת גומל טובה לחייבים, becauſe thou rendereſt "good to the wicked." Now our Lord inſtances in things which could not be denied, and they themſelves allowed; and makes uſe of their own words, to engage them to imitate God, whom they call their father, by doing good to their enemies, and them that hated them, as well as to their friends and neighbours: yet ſometimes they could ſcarcely allow, that the Gentiles had the ſame ſhare in this divine favour with themſelves; for they ſay[z], that "God works by way of miracle, that rain "ſhould not be wanting in his land, although it is "wanting in the countries of the heathen; as he "ſays, Job v. 10. who giveth rain on the earth, "which is the land of Iſrael; for on that רב מטר, "a great rain deſcends, and ſendeth waters מעטים, "few (which is added to the text) upon the fields; "which relates to what is without the land, where"upon it does not deſcend, but the ſubſtance of "the land of Iſrael; therefore he ſaith, the Lord "will open to thee his good treaſure, and not to "others."

Ver. 46. For if ye love them which love you, &c.] That is, if ye only love ſuch that love you; for that ſuch, who love ſhould be loved again, is both natural and juſt: our Lord's meaning is not, that ye ought not to love them that love you, but that theſe ſhould not be the only objects of your love; for ſhould this be the caſe, what reward have ye? or ſhall ye have? Do you deſerve any thanks for your love now? none at all, it is what you are obliged to by your friend's love to you. Do you expect any hereafter with God? if you do, you'll be miſtaken; you have your reward with men, who have loved you as much as you have done them, and therefore none can be due to you, either from God or men; beſides, do not even the publicans the ſame? men of the worſt characters, and who were moſt hateful to the Jews, upon many accounts; partly becauſe of their buſineſs, which was to collect the Roman tax, and carry it to the proper officers appointed to receive it, and of whom they ſometimes farmed it. Now the Roman yoke was very grievous to the Jews, who boaſted of their being a free people; nor did they willingly pay their tribute-money; and ſome of them would refuſe to do it, under a pretence of religion; wherefore thoſe publicans, or tax-gatherers, which were oftentimes men of their own nation, as appears from the inſtances of Levi and Zaccheus, were very odious to them; becauſe they looked upon them as joining with the Romans, in oppreſſing them, and abridging them in their liberty: and partly becauſe of their character and conduct, being men of great improbity, rapine, and covetouſneſs: hence, as in the New Teſtament, they are frequently joined with ſinners, as being notorious ones themſelves; ſo in the Talmudic writings, with thieves [a], and are reckoned as thieves, with murderers, and robbers [b]; they were not allowed as witneſſes [c] in any of their courts of judicature; nor were they to be kept company [d] with in private houſes. Now our Lord inſtances in theſe men who were the moſt profligate part of the nation, and had in greateſt contempt by the reſt; and yet theſe, by the very dictates of nature, loved ſuch as loved them: wherefore it muſt be ſhameful and ſcandalous in the Phariſees, and others, who pretended to great ſanctity and religion, to do no more then theſe perſons did.

---

[s] R. Eliahu in Adderet, c. 3. apud Trigland. de Sect. Karæorum, c. 10. p. 166, 167.
[t] Maimon. Hilch. Talmud Tora, c. 7. §. 13.
[u] Sepher Shaar Haſſamaim Tract. 7. c. 12. p. 155.
[x] T. Bab. Taanith, fol. 7. 1.
[y] T. Hieroſ. Beracot, fol. 14. 1. & Taanith, fol. 64. 2.
[z] Tzeror Hammor, fol. 152. 4.

Ver. 47. And if you ſalute your brethren only, &c.] This does not mean ſalutation by embraces or kiſſes, but by words, aſking of each other's welfare, and wiſhing proſperity and happineſs to one another. “The manner of ſalutation among the wiſe men was “this [e]; he that ſalutes ſays, a good day to my “lord; and he replies, ſaying, a good, and long “day to my lord: always he that replies doubles “the ſalutation.” The perſons they uſually gave their ſalutations to, were thoſe of their own nation, their countrymen, relations, and friends; and who are here deſigned by brethren; meaning, not brethren in the ſtrict ſenſe, but any kindred, acquaintance, or any of their own nation. Some copies read it friends, who, generally ſpeaking, only partook of ſuch favours. “A man, ſays Maimonides [f], “might not ſalute his maſter, nor return a ſalutation to him in the manner they gave a ſalutation “לרעים, to friends; and they return it to one an-“other.” They were not very free in ſaluting any perſons, as ſtrangers and Gentiles: ſuch advice as this is indeed given הוי מקדים בשלום כל אדם [g], prevent every man with a ſalutation, or be firſt in ſaluting every man; upon which paſſage their commentators [h] ſay, even a Gentile in the ſtreets. Accordingly, 'tis elſewhere [i] obſerved, that “R. “Abai uſed to ſay, let a man be always cunning “with fear, for a ſoft anſwer turns away wrath; “and multiply ſalutation with his brethren, and “with his relations, and with every man, even “with a ſtranger in the ſtreets.” But this proceeded not from any cordial hearty reſpect, but out of policy, and from fear; and in order to maintain peace; and for ſelfiſh ends, and with ſiniſter views: otherwiſe their ſalutations were confined to their brethren and kinsfolk after the fleſh. Now, this being the caſe, ſays Chriſt, what do ye more than others? do not even publicans ſo? Or, as ſome copies read it, Gentiles or Heathens; and accordingly the Ethiopic verſion, and the Vulgate Latin ſo render it: the Arabic renders it Idolaters. Now, what great matter was this to ſalute their brethren and their friends, when even the very Heathens, who had nothing but the light of nature to guide them, did the ſame?

Ver. 48. Be ye therefore perfect, as your father, &c.] This perfection is to be reſtrained to the ſubject Chriſt is upon, love to men, and not to be referr'd to any, or every other thing; wherefore, in Luke vi. 36. 'tis, be ye merciful, as your father alſo is merciful; and regards not a perfection of degree in that, but objects and quality: that is to ſay, not that men may, or can, or ought to be as perfect in love, as to the degree of it, as God is; that is impoſſible: the as here, is not a note of equality, but of likeneſs: ſuch, who profeſs God to be their father, ought to imitate him, particularly in their love to men, which ought to be extended to the ſame objects, as the divine goodneſs is; that, as he ſhews regard in a providential way to all men, good and bad, juſt and unjuſt, and his tender mercies are over all his works; ſo ought they to love all men with a natural affection, and hate no man, no, not their enemies: for he that loves only his friends, and not his enemies, loves imperfectly; he does not take in the whole compaſs of objects, his love is to extend unto; and as God loves ſincerely, and without diſſimulation, ſo ſhould they. To be perfect, is to be ſincere and upright: in this ſenſe is the word often uſed, and anſwers to the Hebrew word תמים, which ſignifies the ſame: ſee Deut. xviii. 13. which is the paſſage Chriſt ſeems to refer to here; and the ſenſe is, be ye ſincere and upright in your love to all men, as your heavenly father is hearty and ſincere in his affections to them.

CHAP. VI.

Ver. 1. TAKE heed that ye do not your alms before men, &c.] Some copies read, take heed that ye do not your righteouſneſs, &c. which is a very good reading: but then, by righteouſneſs, is not meant righteouſneſs, as comprehending all other righteous acts, as particularly alms, prayer, and faſting, hereafter mentioned; but alms only; nothing being more common with the Jews than to call alms צדקה, righteouſneſs: and whatever word Matthew made uſe of, there is no doubt to be made of it, but this was the word Chriſt uſed. Now alms was ſo called, becauſe it is a righteous action, which ought to be performed; and to with-hold from the poor what is meet, is to deal unrighteouſly: hence we read of the mammon of unrighteouſneſs; by which is meant, not money unrighteouſly got, but that which is unrighteouſly kept from the poor: alſo it might be ſo called, becauſe the Jews very much placed their juſtifying righteouſneſs before God in the performance of it: let us firſt ſee how, according to them, it was to be done, and then what confidence they placed in it, and how much they made uſe of it. The account Maimonides [k] gives, is as follows, who obſerves; that “we are bound to take heed to the commandment “of alms more than all the affirmative commands; “becauſe alms is a ſign of a righteous man, the “ſeed of Abraham our father; as it is ſaid, in Gen. “xviii. 19. Nor is the throne of Iſrael eſtabliſhed, “nor can the law of truth ſtand, but by alms; as “it is ſaid, Prov. xvi. 12. Nor ſhall Iſrael be re-“deemed, but by alms, according to Iſ. i. 27.” “There are, ſays he, eight degrees in giving alms, “the one above another; the higheſt, than which “there is none higher, is this; when one relieves “an Iſraelite, and gives him a gift, or lends to “him, or takes him into partnerſhip, or finds him “work, ſo that he ſtrengthens his hands before he

---

[a] Maimon. Hilch. Gezela, c. 5. §. 9, 11. [b] Miſn. Nedarim, c. 3. §. 4. [c] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 25. 2. Maimon. Hilch. Eduth, c. 10. §. 4. Moſes Kotſenſis Mitzvot Tora pr. neg. 214. [d] Maimon. Hilch. Miſhcab, c. 10. §. 8. [e] Sepher Chaſidim, fol. 5. col. 2. apud Buxtorf. Florileg. Heb. p. 300, 301. [f] Hilch. Talmud Tora, c. 5. §. 5. [g] Pirke Abot, c. 4. §. 15. [h] Jarchi & Bartenora in ib. [i] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 17. 1. [k] Hilch. Mattanot Anayim, c. 10. §. 1. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14.

"ſtands in need of aſking; and of this it is ſaid, "and thou ſhalt relieve him, a ſtranger and a ſojourner, that he may live with thee: which is as much "as to ſay, relieve him before he falls, and is "brought to neceſſity. The next to this is, when "a man gives alms to the poor, and he knows "not to whom he gives; nor does the poor man "know of whom he receives; for, behold, this is "doing it for the ſake of it; as the chamber of "ſecrets, which was in the ſanctuary, into which "righteous men privately put, and the poor children of good men were privately ſupported: "and the next to this is, when a man puts into "the alms-cheſt; and a man does not put into the "alms-cheſt except he knows that the governor is "faithful and wiſe, and knows how to manage as "ſhould be; ſuch an one as R. Chananiah ben Tradion. The next to this is, when the giver knows "to whom he gives, but the poor man does not "know from whom he receives; as the great ones "of the wiſe men, who uſed to go ſecretly, and "caſt their money at the doors of the poor; and "this is right to do, and a good method it is when "the governors of alms do not diſpoſe aright. "The next to this is, when the poor man knows "of whom he takes, but does not know the giver; "as the great men among the wiſe men, who uſed "to bind up their money in linen cloths, and put "them behind them, and the poor came and took "them, that they might not be aſhamed. The "next to this is, when a man puts it into his hands "before he aſks. The next to this is, when he "gives to him after he has aſked. The next to "this is, when he gives to him leſs than is proper, with a pleaſant countenance. The next to "this is, when he gives with grief." Now this work, or duty, they magnify at a very great rate: not content to ſay [g], that "he that does alms, does "that which is more excellent than all offerings;" they further affirm [h], that "giving of alms and "beneficence כנגד התורה כולה, are equal to the "whole law;" or, it is all one, as if a man performed the whole law. Moreover, they give [i] out, "that whoever takes of his goods, and does "alms with them, he ſhall be delivered from the "damnation of hell." Yea, they reckon that this gives a right and title to eternal life [k]. "He that "ſays, let this ſela, or ſhekel, be for alms, that his "children may live, and that he may be worthy "of the life of the world to come, lo! this is "צדיק גמור, a perfect righteous man." Or, as elſewhere [l] expreſſed, "let this ſela be for alms, "that my ſon may live, and that he may be a ſon "of the world to come; lo! this is a perfect righ"teous man." Thus, you ſee, they looked upon it as their righteouſneſs; and what made them heirs of heaven, and gave them a title to eternal glory. Now our Lord adviſes them to take heed, as what would be of bad conſequence, and very detrimental to them, that they did not their alms before men, to be ſeen of them; not but alms may be lawfully done before, or in the ſight of men, and a good end may be anſwered by it; namely, to ſtir up others to acts of liberality; but then this muſt not be done with this view, to be ſeen of men, in order to gain their applauſe, and a good name among them, otherwiſe, ye have no reward of your father, which is in heaven. You expect a reward, and a very great one, for your alms; but if you do them only to raiſe your credit, and gain eſteem among men, you have your reward already with men: nor muſt you expect any from God, ſince you ſeek not his glory, but your own. When a man's ſelf, and not the glory of God, is the chief end of any action, that can't be called a good work, nor will it have any reward; whereas a good work, which ſprings from a principle of grace, and is directed to the glory of God, will have a reward, not of debt, but of grace, from whence it ariſes.

Ver. 2. Wherefore, when thou doſt thine alms, &c.] Chriſt proceeds to give ſome directions and cautions about giving of alms, that they might be done aright, and anſwer ſome valuable purpoſes for the glory of God, the good of others, and their own: do not ſound a trumpet before thee, as the hypocrites do, in the ſynagogues, and in the ſtreets, that they may have glory of men. The perſons, Chriſt has reference to, were the Scribes and Phariſees, who did all they did to be ſeen of men; whom he calls hypocrites; as he often does, becauſe they put on an appearance of religion and holineſs, but inwardly, and otherwiſe, were very wicked men. It does not appear that any ſuch practice was literally performed, as blowing a trumpet before them, when they gave their alms; tho' the collectors of alms did, by ſome means, publickly notify to the people when they were about that ſervice: for one of their rules is [m], "the collectors of alms don't proclaim on a "feaſt, as they proclaim on a common day; but "they collected בצינעה, privately, and put it into "their boſom, and diſtributed it to every one by "himſelf." Wherefore this muſt be underſtood proverbially; and the ſenſe is, that when they did their alms, they choſe public places for it, ſuch as the ſynagogues, where was a large concourſe of people met together for religious worſhip; or the open ſtreets of the city, where people were continually walking to and fro, ſo that nothing could be done in this way, but what muſt be ſeen and obſerved: and moreover, they took care, either by themſelves, or others, to proclaim their good actions, that they might have glory of men; not only of the poor, or, the collectors for them, but of the ſpectators. R. Aben Ezra [n] ſays, that "a man that gives alms to "the poor, muſt not give it becauſe of the glory "of the collector, i. e. that he may have glory of "him; nor that the children of men may praiſe "him." But his anceſtors were of another mind: but what did they get by it? verily I ſay unto you, they have their reward; and a poor one it is, the applauſe of men: however, it is what they ſeek after, and is all their empty performances deſerve, and all they will have. "He that glories in any "thing done by himſelf, הוא נוטל את שכרו, he "takes, or receives his reward [o]; for as for any reward from God, they'll have none; in this ſenſe, as the Ethiopic verſion reads it, they have loſt their reward; and as a learned critic has thought, is the ſenſe of the Greek word, they forbid, or hinder their reward. By ſeeking the glory of men, they lay impediments in the way of receiving honour from God.

Ver. 3. But when thou doſt alms, &c.] Do it ſo privately, and with ſo much ſecrecy, that, if it was poſſible, thou mighteſt not know it thyſelf, much leſs make it known to others: let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doth; acquaint not thy neareſt and deareſt friend with it; let not one that ſits at thy left hand know what thou art doing with thy right hand; 'tis a proverbial and hyperbolical phraſe, expreſſing the ſecrecy of the action. It is a Jewiſh canon [p], that "he that gives a gift to his friend out of love, may make it known אבל לא בצדקה, but not if it be by way of alms."

---

[g] T. Bab. Succa, fol. 49. 2. [h] T. Hieroſ. Peah, fol. 15. 2, 3. [i] T. Bab. Gittin, fol. 7. 1, 2. [k] T. Bab. Roſhhaſhanah, fol. 4. 1. Bava Bathra, fol. 10. 2. [l] T. Bab. Peſachim, fol. 8. 1, 2. [m] T. Hieroſ. Demai, fol. 23. 2. [n] In Exod. xx. 3. [o] R. Jona apud Capell. Spicileg. in loc.

Ver. 4. That thine alms may be in ſecret, &c.] May be done in ſecret, and be kept a ſecret. The alluſion ſeems to be to the ſecret-chamber, where money was brought privately for the relief of the poor. "There were two chambers in the ſanctuary, the one was לשכת חשאים, the chamber of ſecrets, and the other the chamber of veſſels: the chamber of ſecrets was that into which pious perſons put בחשאי, in ſecret, and the poor children of good men were maintained out of it privately [q]." The Jews ſay many things in favour of doing alms privately. "Greater, ſay they [r], is he that gives alms בסתר, in ſecret, than Moſes our maſter." They tell us [s], that "R. Jannai ſeeing a certain man give Zuz (a piece of money) to a poor man publickly, ſaid unto him, it would have been better, if thou hadſt not have given him any thing, than to have given him in this manner." This was the practice of the ancient religious Jews, to give their alms privately; but the Scribes and Phariſees had brought that practice into diſuſe, and which our Lord labours to reſtore; adding, for encouragement, and thy father, which ſeeth in ſecret; beholds all ſecret actions, and knows the ſecret ſprings of actions, himſelf ſhall reward thee openly; in the great day of account, before angels and men, when all ſecret things ſhall be brought to light, and every good man have praiſe of God. This duty, of giving alms to the poor, is mentioned by Chriſt before prayer to God; it may be for this reaſon, becauſe it was uſual to give alms before prayer. "The great, or famous men, among the wiſe men, uſed to give a Prutah (a ſmall piece of money) to a poor man before every prayer, and after that they prayed; as it is ſaid, I ſhall behold thy face in righteouſneſs [t]."

Ver. 5. And when thou prayeſt, thou ſhall not be as the hypocrites, &c.] As the Scribes and Phariſees; whoſe poſture in prayer, the places they choſe to pray in, and the view they had therein, are particularly taken notice of: for they love to pray ſtanding in the ſynagogues, and in the corners of the ſtreets, that they may be ſeen of men. It was their uſual cuſtom to pray ſtanding; nay, it is eſtabliſhed by their canons. "There are eight things, ſays Maimonides [u], that a man that prays ought to take heed to do; and the firſt he mentions is ſtanding; for, ſays he, no man may pray אלא מעומד, but ſtanding; if he is ſitting in a ſhip, or in a cart, if he can ſtand, he muſt ſtand; if not, he may ſit in his place and pray." Several hints of this cuſtom there are in the Miſna [w]. "On their faſt days they uſed to bring out the ark into the ſtreets—עמדו בתפלה, and they ſtood in prayer, or praying; and cauſed an old man to go down before the ark, who was uſed to recite prayers, and he ſaid them." Again [x], "whoever עומד בתפלה, ſtood praying, and remembred that any uncleanneſs attended him, he might not break off, but he might ſhorten." Yea, ſtanding itſelf is interpreted of praying; for it is ſaid [y], "and Abraham roſe up early in the morning to the place, where he ſtood, ואין עמידה אלא תפלה, and there is no ſtanding but prayer;" tho' ſometimes they prayed ſitting, as David did, 2 Sam. vii, 18. ſo it is ſaid of R. Joſe, and R. Eleazar, that יתבו וצלי, they ſat and prayed, and afterwards roſe up and went on their way [z]. So it was likewiſe cuſtomary to go to the ſynagogues, and there pray; and indeed they were places built and appointed for this purpoſe. "Wherever there were ten Iſraelites, a houſe ought to be provided, in which they may go to prayer at every time of prayer; and this place is called a ſynagogue [a]." Hence ſome have thought, that not ſuch places are here deſigned, but any aſſembly, or concourſe of people gathered together upon any occaſion; but ſuch an interpretation will find no place, when the following things are obſerved. "For ever let a man go, morning and evening, to the ſynagogue; for no prayer is heard, at any time, but in the ſynagogue; and every one that hath a ſynagogue in his city, and does not pray in it with the congregation, is called a bad neighbour [b]." Again [c], "he that prays in the houſe of the Lord, is as if he offered up a pure offering." Now, partly on account of the publickneſs of the place, and partly becauſe they thought their prayers were only heard there, therefore they choſe to pray in the ſynagogues; and alſo in the corners of the ſtreets, where two ſtreets met, and they might be the more eaſily ſeen. This was alſo a common thing to pray in the ſtreets; "ſays R. Jochanan, I ſaw R. Jannai ſtand and pray in the ſtreets of Tzippore [d]." And, a little after, 'tis ſaid of another, that he ſtood and prayed באסרטיא, in the ſtreets; tho' ſuch places were not reckoned holy, as the ſynagogues were. "The ſtreet of a city, ſays Maimonides [e], altho' the people pray in it at faſts, and ſtations, becauſe that there is a great collection of people, and the ſynagogues can't hold them, has no holineſs in it, becauſe it is accidental, and not appointed for prayer." Wherefore ſtreets were only uſed in caſe of neceſſity, or by ſuch of the Phariſees, who choſe to be ſeen of men. A reaſon is given for this practice in another place [f], where 'tis aſked, "why do they go out to the ſtreets, i. e. on their faſt-days? to ſhew that we are reckoned as if we were carried captive before thee: ſays Joſhua ben Levi, becauſe they prayed in ſecret, and were not anſwered; therefore they went without, ויתפרסמו, that they might be made publick." Now let it be obſerved, that neither the poſture, nor places of prayer, are condemned by our Lord, but their view in all to be ſeen of men; and a conſiderable emphaſis lies upon the word love; they loved ſtanding in prayer, rather than any other poſture, becauſe they could be better ſeen; and they loved to be in the ſynagogues and ſtreets, rather than in their cloſets; they liked publick, better than private prayer, becauſe it gained them applauſe among men. Verily I ſay unto you, they have their reward; they gain their point; they have what they ſeek for; and this is all they will have.

Ver. 6. But thou, when thou prayeſt, enter into thy cloſet, &c.] Or chamber, a ſecret place, fit for private retirement, meditation, and prayer. And when thou haſt ſhut thy door; ſee ſome ſuch like phraſes in Iſ. xxvi. 20. where they are uſed to expreſs

---

[p] Piſke Toſephot in Sabbat. c. 1. art. 134.
[q] Miſn. Shekalim, c. 5. §. 6. Maimon. Hilch. Eracin, c. 2. §. 12.
[r] T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 9. 2.
[s] T. Bab. Chagiga, fol. 5. 1.
[t] Maimon. Hilch. Mattanot Anayin, c. 10. §. 15.
[u] Hilch. Tephilla. c. 5. §. 1, 2.
[w] Miſn. Taanith, c. 2. §. 1, 2.
[x] Miſn. Beracot, c. 3. §. 5.
[y] Zohar in Lev. fol. 47. 1. T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 26. 2.
[z] Zohar in Exod. fol. 4. 4.
[a] Maimon. Hilch. Tephilla, c. 11. 1.
[b] Ib. c. 8. §. 1. T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 8. 1. & Piſke Toſephot Beracot, c. 1. art. 7.
[c] T. Hieroſ. Beracot, fol. 8. 4.
[d] Ib. fol. 8. 3. & 9. 1.
[e] Hilch. Tephilla, c. 11. §. 21. Vid. Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Megilla, c. 3. §. 1.
[f] T. Hieroſ. Taaniot, fol. 65. 1.

preſs ſecurity, here ſecrecy. Our Lord does not mean to exclude and condemn publick prayer, in joining with few, or more perſons, in ſuch ſervice; for he himſelf directs to it, and approves of it, ch. xviii. 19, 20. but his view is to inſtruct perſons that they ſhould not only pray in publick, but in private alſo; and eſpecially the latter, which is more ſuitable and fitting for their particular caſes, and leſs liable to pride, hypocriſy, and vanity. Pray to thy father, which is in ſecret; who is inviſible; not to be ſeen with the eyes of the body, but to be approached with a true heart, in faith and fear, through his ſon Jeſus Chriſt, the only mediator between God and man; and who is the image of the inviſible God, and in whom he is pleaſed to manifeſt himſelf to his people, ſo as he does not unto the world: and thy father, which ſeeth in ſecret, obſerves, and takes notice of the ſecret breathings, pantings, deſires, and requeſts of thy heart, and lips, ſhall reward thee openly, both here and hereafter; by pouring into thy boſom all the good things thou haſt been praying for, both for time and eternity. This is agreeable to what the Jews ſometimes ſay, "that a man ought not to cauſe his voice to be "heard in prayer; but ſhould pray בלחש, ſilently, "with a voice that is not heard; and this is the "prayer which is daily accepted [g]."

Ver. 7. But when ye pray, uſe not vain repetitions, &c.] Saying the ſame things over and over again, as the Heathens do, as the worſhippers of Baal, from morning till noon, 1 Kings xviii. 26. This our Lord obſerves, to diſſuade from ſuch practices, becauſe the Gentiles, who were odious to the Jews, uſed them, and the Jews were guilty of the ſame; had they not, there would not have been any need of ſuch advice: for they think they ſhall be heard for their much ſpeaking; as did the Jews, who, under pretence of long prayers, devoured widows houſes; and with whom it is an axiom, that every one המרבה בתפילה נענה, that multiplies prayer is heard [h]; and whoever prolongs his prayer, his prayer does not return empty; and he that is long in prayer, his days are prolonged [i]: and, according to their canons, every day a man ought to pray eighteen prayers. Moreover, their prayer-books abound in tautologies, and in expreſſing the ſame things in different words, and by a multiplicity of them.

Ver. 8. Be not ye therefore like unto them, &c.] Don't be imitators of them, and follow their ways, who have only the dim light of nature to guide them; it would be ſhameful in you to do as they do, when you have a divine revelation for your direction; and eſpecially, becauſe your father knoweth what things ye have need of before ye aſk him; and therefore have no need to make uſe of many words, or much ſpeaking, or long prayers. The omniſcience of God is a conſiderable argument, and a great encouragement to prayer; he knows our perſons and our wants before-hand; and as he is able to help us, we have reaſon to believe he will; eſpecially ſince he ſtands in the relation of a father to us.

Ver. 9. After this manner therefore pray ye, &c.] That is, in ſuch a conciſe and ſhort way, without much ſpeaking and vain repetitions; making uſe of ſuch like words and expreſſions as the following: not that Chriſt meant to pin down his diſciples to theſe expreſs words, and no other; for this prayer is not a ſtrict form, but a pattern of prayer, and a directory to it, both as to brevity, order, and matter; for we don't find the diſciples ever making uſe of it in form: and when it is recited by another Evangeliſt, it is not in the ſelf-ſame words as here; which would have been, had it been deſigned as an exact form. Beſides, Chriſt does not bid them pray in theſe very words, but after this manner; ſomewhat like this: not but that it is very lawful to uſe the very expreſs words of this prayer in any of the petitions here directed to; and which indeed were no other than what good people among the Jews did frequently make uſe of; and which were collected and ſingled out by Chriſt, as what he approved of, in diſtinction from, and oppoſition to, other impertinent expreſſions, and vain repetitions, which ſome uſed; as will appear by a particular conſideration of them. Our father which art in heaven. This may be looked upon as the preface and introduction to the prayer, and regards the object of it, and his character, which is an epithet of God, often to be met with in Jewiſh writings, and particularly in their prayers; for thus they [k] ſay, "אבינו שבשמים, our father which art in heaven, ſhew mercy to us, becauſe thy great "name is called upon us." Again [l], let the prayers and the requeſts of all Iſrael be received by אבוהון די בשמיא, their father, which is in heaven. They ſeem to have a regard to this prayer, when they apply that paſſage in Prov. iii. 35. ſhame ſhall be the promotion of fools, to the nations of the earth; who, they ſay [m], "do not conſider the glory of "the law; and how, ſay they, our father which art "in heaven, hear our voice, have mercy on us, "and receive our prayer?" So in confeſſions, thankſgivings, and ſacrifices of praiſe, they required, and looked upon it, as the main thing, for a man to direct his heart לאביו שבשמים, to his father which is in heaven [n]. By father, our Lord means the firſt perſon in the Trinity, who is the father of all men by creation, and of the ſaints by adoption; who are to addreſs him in prayer under the character of our father, partly to command a reverential fear of him, and partly to ſecure boldneſs and liberty of ſpeech before him; and alſo to expreſs fiducial confidence in him, faith of intereſt in him, and relation to him; which ariſes from ſome experience of his paternal love, and requires the witneſſings of the ſpirit of adoption; and inaſmuch as the direction is not to ſay my father, but our father; it ſhews, that we ſhould pray for others, as well as for ourſelves, even for all the dear children of God. It is a rule [o] with the Jews, "that a man ought "always to join himſelf in prayer with the church;" upon which the Gloſs ſays, "let him not pray the "ſhort prayer בלשון יחיד אלא בלשון רבים, in "the ſingular, but in the plural number, that ſo his "prayer may be heard." The object of prayer is further deſcribed by the place of his reſidence, in heaven; not that he is included in any place, but that the heaven of heavens is the place where he moſt eminently diſplays his glory: and this may teach us to look upwards in prayer, and ſeek thoſe things which are above; and alſo, that this earth, on which we dwell, is not our native country, but heaven is, where our father dwells. Next follows the firſt petition, hallowed, or ſanctified be thy name; ſo the Jews [p] in their prayers "יתקדש שמך, let "thy name be hallowed, or ſanctified by us, O Lord "our God, before the eyes of all living." And very often [p], "let his great name be magnified and "ſanctified in the world, which he hath created ac-"cording to his will." And again [q], "let us ſanc-"tify thy name in the world, as they ſanctify it in "the higheſt heavens." By the name of God is meant he himſelf, the perfections of his nature, and the ſeveral names by which he is known, and which we are to think and ſpeak of with holy reverence. By ſanctifying his name, is not meant a making him holy, but acknowledging, and declaring him to be holy, and a glorifying him, and all his perfections. He is ſanctified by himſelf, by declaring himſelf to be holy; by glorifying his perfections in his works; by implanting grace and holineſs in the hearts of his people; by reſtoring the purity of his worſhip; by diffuſing the knowledge of himſelf in the world; and by taking vengeance on the wicked: and he is ſanctified by others, when they fear him, believe in him, call upon his name, uſe it reverently, ſubmit to his will, acknowledge his mercies, regard his commands and ordinances, and live a holy life and converſation; all which is earneſtly deſired by truly gracious ſouls.

---

[g] Zohar in Gen. fol. 114. 4.
[h] T. Hieroſ. Taaniot, fol. 67. 3.
[i] Zohar in Exod. fol. 104. 4.
[k] Seder Tephillot, fol. 4. 2. Ed. Baſil.
[l] Ib. fol. 33. 2.
[m] Raya Mehimna in Zohar in Lev. fol. 34. 1.
[n] T. Bab. Shebuot, fol. 15. 1.
[o] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 30. 1.
[p] Seder Tephillot, fol. 78. 1. Ed. Amſtelod. Zohar in Exod. fol. 43. 4.

Ver. 10. Thy kingdom come, &c.] The form of expreſſion uſed by the ancient Jews, relating to this article, before the coming of Chriſt, doubtleſs was, as it now ſtands in their prayers [r], מלכות משיחך יבא, the kingdom of thy Meſſiah come. Chriſt alters the expreſſion, leaves out the word Meſſiah, and puts it thus, thy kingdom come, to let them know that the Meſſiah was come; and that it was the kingdom of the father, in the power of his grace, upon the ſouls of men, they muſt pray for, and expect: however, he conformed to a rule of theirs in this, as well as in the former petition [s]; that "every bleſſing, or prayer, "in which there is no ברכת השם, mention made of "the name, i. e. of God, is no prayer; and that "every prayer, in which there is not מלכות, the "kingdom, is no prayer." In this petition the diſciples were taught to pray for the ſucceſs of the Goſpel, both among Jews and Gentiles; for the converſion of God's elect, in which the kingdom of God would greatly appear, to the deſtruction of the kingdom of ſatan, and the abolition of the kingdom of the beaſt, in the latter day; which will uſher in the kingdom of the mediator, he will receive from his father, and this will terminate in the kingdom of glory: in a word, not the kingdom of nature and providence is meant, which always was; but the kingdom of heaven, which was at hand, nay had took place, tho' as yet was not very viſible, and which is ſpiritual in the hearts of God's people, Jews and Gentiles; and which will appear exceeding glorious in the latter day, and at laſt be ſwallowed up in the ultimate glory; all which muſt be very deſireable by the ſincere lovers of Jeſus Chriſt. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven. There is ſome appearance of this petition ſtill remaining, in what the [t] Jews call the ſhort prayer: "what is the ſhort prayer? "R. Eliezer ſays עשה רצונך בשמים, do thy will "in heaven; and give quietneſs of ſpirit, or ac-"quieſcence of ſpirit in thy will, to them that fear "thee below." Chriſt ſays thy will; not the will of wicked men, nor the will of ſatan, nor a man's own will, but the will of God: by which is meant either his ſecret will, which is the rule of all his proceedings both in providence and grace; is unknown to us, till facts make it appear; is always fulfilled in heaven and in earth; and ſometimes is fulfilled by thoſe who have no regard to his revealed will; and is what ought to be ſubmitted to patiently, and without murmuring: or rather his revealed will, which conſiſts, partly in the declarations of his grace and mercy; as that ſalvation is by Chriſt, whoever believes in him ſhall be ſaved, that all the redeemed be ſanctified, perſevere to the end, and be glorified; and partly in the commands enjoined his people, which will of his, is good, perfect, and acceptable. The will of God may be ſaid to be done by us, when our wills are reſigned to his; when we patiently ſubmit to every adverſe diſpenſation of providence; when our hearts and actions are, in ſome meaſure, conformed to his law; when what is done, is done in faith, with a view to his glory, and without dependance upon it; of which ſuch only are capable, who have a ſpiritual underſtanding of the will of God, believe in Chriſt, receive grace and ſtrength from him, and are aſſiſted by his Spirit. Theſe deſire to do the will of God, as it is done in heaven; meaning not ſo much by the inanimate creatures, the ſun, and moon, and ſtars, as glorified ſaints and holy angels; who do it voluntarily and chearfully; ſpeedily, and without delay; conſtantly, and without any interruption; and perfectly and completely.

Ver. 11. Give us this day our daily bread.] The Arabic verſion reads it, our bread for To-morrow; and Jerom ſays, that in the Hebrew Goſpel, uſed by the Nazarenes, he found the word מחר, which ſignifies To-morrow: but this reading and ſenſe ſeem to be contradicted by Chriſt, ver. 34. were it not that it may be obſerved, that this ſignifies the whole ſubſequent time of life, and ſo furniſhes us with a very commodious ſenſe of this petition; which is, that God would give us, day by day, as Luke expreſſes it, ch. xi. 3. that is, every day of our lives, to the end thereof, a proper ſupply of food: or the meaning of it is, that God would give us, for the preſent time, ſuch food as we ſtand in need of; is ſuitable to us, to our nature and conſtitution, ſtate and condition, and is ſufficient and convenient for us: to which agrees the petition of the [u] Jews; "The neceſſities of thy people are great, and their "knowledge ſhort; let it be thy good will and "pleaſure, O Lord, our God, that thou wouldſt "give to every one כדי פרנסתו, what is ſufficient "for his ſuſtenance, and to every one's body what "it wants." "Says R. Joſe [w], all the children of "faith ſeek every day לשאלא מזונייהו, to aſk their "food of the Lord, and to pray a prayer for it." By bread is meant all the neceſſaries of life, and for the ſupport of it: it is called ours; not that we have a right unto it, much leſs deſerve it, but to diſtinguiſh it from that of beaſts; and becauſe it is what we need, and can't do without; what is appointed for us by providence, is ours by gift, and poſſeſſed by labour. It is ſaid to be daily bread, and to be aſked for day by day; which ſuggeſts the uncertainty of life; ſtrikes at all anxious and immoderate cares for the morrow; is deſigned to reſtrain from covetouſneſs, and to keep up the duty of prayer, and conſtant dependance on God; whom we muſt every day aſk to give us our daily bread: for he is the ſole author of all our mercies; which are all his free gifts; we deſerve nothing at his hands: wherefore we ought to be thankful for what we have, without murmuring at his providences, or envying at what he beſtows on others. All kind of food, every thing that is eatable, is with the Jews called לחם, bread [x].

Ver. 12. And forgive us our debts, &c.] Nothing is more frequent in the Jewiſh writings than to call ſins חובי, debts; and the phraſe, of forgiving, is uſed both of God and men. Thus the prayer of Solomon is paraphraſed [y] by the Targumiſt; "and "hear thou the petition of thy ſervant, and of thy "people Iſrael, which they ſhall make before this "place; and do thou receive it from the place of "the houſe of thy ſhechinah, from heaven; and do "thou accept their prayer ותשבק לחוביהון, and "forgive their debts." So Joſeph's brethren ſignify to him, that it was their father's orders to ſay unto him, forgive, I pray thee now, the treſpaſs of thy brethren, and their ſin; which is rendered by the Chaldee paraphraſts [z] שבוק לחובי, forgive the debts of thy brethren, and their ſins. Accordingly, by debts are meant ſins here, as appears from Luke xi. 4. where it is read, and forgive us our ſins. Theſe are called debts; not becauſe they are ſo in themſelves, for then it would be right to do them; debts ſhould be paid; they are not debts we owe to God, but are ſo called, becauſe on account of them we owe ſatisfaction to the law and juſtice of God: the proper debts we owe to God are love, obedience, and gratitude; and in default of theſe, we owe the debt of puniſhment. Now theſe debts are numerous, and we are uncapable of paying, nor can any mere creature pay them for us; wherefore, we are directed to pray, that God would forgive them, or remit the obligation to puniſhment we lie under, on account of ſin. This petition ſuppoſes a ſenſe, acknowledgment, and confeſſion of ſin, and of inability to make ſatisfaction for it; and that God only can forgive it, who does, for Chriſt's ſake, and on account of his blood, ſacrifice, and ſatisfaction: what is here requeſted is a manifeſtation and application of pardon to the conſcience of a ſenſible ſinner; which, as it is daily needed, is daily to be aſked for. The argument, or reaſon uſed, is, as we forgive our our debtors; which is to be underſtood not ſo much of pecuniary debtors, though they are to be forgiven, when poor and unable to pay; but of ſuch who have offended, or done real injuries to others, either by word or deed: the injuries of enemies, the unkindneſs of friends, all ſorts of offences, are to be forgiven by us; and not only ſo, but we are to pray to God to forgive them alſo. Now this is mentioned, not as if our forgiving others is the cauſe of God's forgiving us, or the model of it, or as ſetting him an example, or as if his and our forgiving were to be compared together, ſince theſe will admit of no compariſon; but this is an argument founded upon God's own promiſe and grace, to forgive ſuch who have compaſſion on their fellow-creatures.

---

[p] Seder Tephillot, fol 17. 2. Ed. Baſil & paſſim. [q] Ib. fol. 22. 1. & paſſim. [r] Seder Tephillot, fol. 128. 2. Ed Baſil. [s] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 40. 2. [t] Ib fol. 29. 2. [u] Ib. [w] Zohar in Exod. fol. 26. 2. [x] Jarchi in Job vi. 7.

Ver. 13. And lead us not into temptation, &c.] Such a petition as this is often to be obſerved in the prayers of the Jews [a], "אל תביאני, do not lead me "neither into ſin, nor into tranſgreſſion and iniquity, "ולא לידי נסיון, nor into temptation, or into the "hands of temptation;" that is, into the power of it, ſo as to be overcome by it, and ſink under it; in which ſenſe the phraſe is to be underſtood here. We are not here taught to pray againſt temptations at all, or in any ſenſe, for they are ſometimes needful and uſeful; but that they may not have the power over us, and deſtroy us. There are various ſorts of temptations. There are the temptations of God; who may be ſaid to tempt, not by infuſing any thing that is ſinful, or by ſoliciting to it; but by enjoining things hard and diſagreeable to nature, as in the caſe of Abraham; by afflicting, either in body or eſtate, of which Job is an inſtance; by permitting and letting looſe the reins to ſatan, and a man's own corruptions; by with-drawing his preſence, and with-holding the communications of his grace; and ſometimes by ſuffering falſe prophets to ariſe among his people: his ends in them are on his own account, the diſplay of his power, grace, wiſdom, and faithfulneſs; on account of his ſon, that his ſaints might be like him, and he might have an opportunity of exerciſing his power and pity: and on his peoples account, that they might be humbled; their faith and patience tried; might ſee their weakneſs, and need of Chriſt, and be excited to prayer and watchfulneſs. There are alſo the temptations of ſatan; which lie in ſoliciting to evil, ſuggeſting hard, and blaſphemous thoughts of God, and filling with doubts and fears; which are cunningly formed by him, and are very afflictive. There are moreover the temptations of the world; which ariſe from poverty and riches, from the men of the world, the luſts of it, and from both its frowns and flatteries: add to all this, that there are temptations ariſing from a man's own heart. Now, in this petition, the children of God pray, that they may be kept from every occaſion and object of ſinning; from thoſe ſins they are moſt inclined to; that God would not leave them to ſatan, and their own corrupt hearts; nor ſuffer them to ſink under the weight of temptations of any ſort; but that, in the iſſue, they might have a way to eſcape, and be victorious over all. But deliver us from evil. This petition, with the Jews, is in this [b] form; "ותצילני מפגע רע, but deliver me from an evil "accident, and diſeaſes; and do not trouble me "with evil dreams, and evil imaginations." R. Juda, after his prayer, or at the cloſe of it, as is this petition, uſed [c] to ſay; "let it be thy good "pleaſure, O Lord our God, and the God of our "fathers, שתצילנו, that thou wouldſt deliver us "from impudent men, and impudence; from an "evil man, and from an evil accident; from the "evil imagination, i. e. the corruption of nature; "from an evil companion; from an evil neighbour; "and from ſatan the deſtroyer; and from hard "judgment; and from an hard adverſary, whether "he is the ſon of the covenant, or is not the ſon "of the covenant." And moſt, if not all of theſe things, may be very well thought to be comprized in the word evil here: particularly ſatan may be meant, by evil, or the evil one, as the word may be rendered; who is eminently, originally, and immutably evil; his whole work and employment is nothing elſe but evil: and to be delivered from him, is to be reſcued out of his hands, preſerved from his ſnares, and delivered from his temptations. Evil men may alſo be intended: all men are naturally evil, and unalterably ſo, without the grace of God; and ſome are notoriouſly wicked; from whoſe company, ſinful luſts, and pleaſures, to which they are addicted, as well as from their rage and perſecution, good men cannot but deſire deliverance; as alſo from the evil of afflictions, and eſpecially from the evil of ſin; as that they may be kept from the commiſſion of it; have the guilt of it removed; be preſerved from its power, and dominion; and, at laſt, be freed from the very being of it. For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen. This concluſion is left out in the Arabic and Vulgate Latin verſions, as it is in Luke xi. 4. It ſtands thus in the Jewiſh prayers [d], "כי המלכות שלך היא, for the kingdom is thine, and thou ſhalt reign in glory for ever and ever." The uſual reſponſe at the cloſe of prayers, and reading the Shema, inſtead of Amen, was [e] this; "Bleſſed be the name of the glory of his kingdom, for ever and ever." Which bears ſome reſemblance to this concluding expreſſion, which aſcribes everlaſting kingdom, power, and glory, to God: which may be conſidered, either as a doxology, or an aſcription of glory to God, which is his due; and ought to be given him in all our prayers to him; or as ſo many reaſons ſtrengthening our faith in prayer; or as ſo many arguments with God, with reſpect to the petitions made; ſince the kingdom of nature, providence, grace, and glory, is his: he is omnipotent, he has power to give us our daily bread; to forgive our ſins; to preſerve from, ſupport under, and deliver out of temptation; to keep from all evil, and preſerve from a total and final falling away: whoſe glory is concerned in all, to whom the glory of all is, and to whom it muſt, and ſhall be given; and all this for ever: and the whole is concluded with the word Amen; which is a note of aſſeveration, of the truth herein contained; is added by way of aſſent, to every petition made; is expreſſive of an hearty wiſh, and deſire to have all fulfilled; and alſo of faith and confidence, that they will be anſwered. And this word being retained, and kept the ſame in all languages, ſignifies the unity of the Spirit, and faith in prayer, in all the ſaints, in all ages. I leave this prayer with one obſervation, and that is, whereas it has been ſo long, and ſo often ſaid, that this is the Lord's prayer, it can never be proved, that he ever made uſe of it; and it is certain, that he did not make it, as appears from what has been cited out of the Jewiſh records: the ſeveral petitions in it, were in being and uſe, before he directed to them; and not only the petitions, but even the very preface and concluſion, are manifeſtly of Jewiſh original: what our Lord did, was, he took the moſt proper and pertinent petitions, that had been uſed by good men among that people; which, with ſome alterations much for the better, he put together in this order, and gave his approbation of; and that with this view, to point out to his diſciples, ſome of the beſt and moſt ſuitable petitions to be made; and to give them a pattern of brevity and conciſeneſs in prayer; and teach them to pray after ſuch a manner, or in ſome ſuch like words and expreſſions. This I obſerve, not to leſſen the uſefulneſs of this excellent pattern of ſound words; the whole, and every part of it, being exceedingly inſtructive, and worthy of imitation; but to rectify a vulgar miſtake, and to abate the formal and ſuperſtitious obſervance of it.

---

[y] Targum in 2 Chron. vi. 21. [z] Targum Onkelos & Jon. ben Uzziel in Gen. l. 17. Vid. Targum in 1 Chron. iv. 18. & in Cant. i. 1. & in Gen. iv. 13. & paſſim. [a] Seder Tephillot, fol. 3. 1. Ed. Baſil. fol. 4. 2. Ed. Amſtelod. Shaare Zion, fol. 73. 1. T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 60. 2. [b] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 60. 2. [c] Ib. fol. 16. 2.

Ver. 14. For if ye forgive men their treſpaſſes, &c.] Chriſt here refers to the petition in ver. 12. which is inforced with this reaſon and argument, as, or for, ſo Luke xi. 4. we forgive our debtors; which he repeats and explains: and the reaſon why he ſingles out this particularly is, becauſe he knew the Jews were a people very ſubject to revenge; and were very hardly brought to forgive any injuries done them: wherefore Chriſt preſſes it upon them cloſely, to forgive men their treſpaſſes; all ſorts of injuries done them, or offences given them, whether by word or deed; and that fully, freely, from the heart; forgetting, as well as forgiving; not upbraiding them with former offences; and even without aſking pardon, and though there might be no appearance of repentance. Now to this he encourages, by ſaying, your heavenly Father will alſo forgive you; will hear your prayers, and manifeſt his forgiving love to you: not that the forgiveneſs of others, is the procuring cauſe of forgiveneſs with God, which is the blood of Chriſt; or of the manifeſtation and application of it, that is, the advocacy of Chriſt; nor the moving cauſe of it, that is, the free grace of God: but this enters into the character, and is deſcriptive of the perſons, to whom God is pleaſed to make a comfortable diſcovery, and give a delightful ſenſe, of his pardoning grace; ſuch perſons, ſo diſpoſed and aſſiſted by his grace, may expect it of him.

Ver. 15. But if you forgive not men their treſpaſſes, &c.] On the other hand, where men are not of a forgiving temper to their fellow creatures, and fellow chriſtians, how can they expect forgiveneſs at the hands of God? or what ſenſe of pardoning grace, can there be upon their minds? Had they any right apprehenſions of the grace and goodneſs of God, in the forgiveneſs of their ſins, this would influence their minds, and engage their hearts to forgive ſuch who have offended them: wherefore, where this is wanting, it may be concluded of, and ſaid to ſuch perſons, neither will your Father forgive your treſpaſſes. It is a plain caſe, that your Father has not given you a true ſenſe of the pardon of your ſins, nor can you be certain that he will; nor have you any reaſon to expect it, when you are ſo cruel and revengeful to others. There is a conſiderable emphaſis lies upon the word men, to which heavenly Father is oppoſed; and the ſenſe, according to it, is, that if men, who are upon an equal foot with each other, ſhould not forgive one another, how ſhould it be expected that our Father which is in heaven, who is ſo much above, and no ways obliged to us, ſhould forgive us?

Ver. 16. Moreover when ye faſt, &c.] This is to be underſtood, not ſo much of their publick ſtated faſts, and which was by divine appointment, as of their private faſts; which, with the Jews, were very frequent and numerous, and particularly every Monday and Thurſday; ſee Luke xviii. 12. in which they affected great ſeverity, and is here condemned by Chriſt: be not as the hypocrites, the Scribes and Phariſees, of a ſad countenance; who put on very mournful airs, and diſmal looks; made wry faces, and diſtorted countenances; baniſhed all pleaſantry and chearfulneſs from them, ſo that they looked quite like other men, than they really were; for they disfigure their faces; not by covering them out of ſight; by putting a veil over them, as ſome have thought; but they neglected to waſh their faces, and make them clean, as at other times; and not only ſo, but put aſhes upon their heads, and other methods they uſed: they diſcoloured their faces, or made them black, as the Arabic verſion reads it; that they might look as if they became ſo through faſting: and ſuch perſons were in great eſteem, and thought to be very religious. It is ſaid [f], in commendation of R. Joſhua ben Chananiah, that all his days הושחרו פניו his face was black, through faſtings; and this is ſaid [g] to be the reaſon of Aſhur's name, in 1 Chron. iv. 5. becauſe his face was black with faſting: yea, they looked upon ſuch a disfiguring of the face to be meritorious, and what would be rewarded hereafter. "Whoever, ſay they [h], המשחיר פניו, makes his face black, on account of the law in this world, God will make his brightneſs to ſhine in the world to come."

---

[d] Seder Tephillot, fol. 280. 1. Ed. Baſil.

[e] Miſn. Yoma, c. 4. §. 1. & 6. 2. T. Bab. Peſachim, fol. 56. 1. & Taanith, fol. 16. 2. Seder Tephillot, fol. 70. 2. Ed. Baſil.

[f] Juchaſin, fol. 59. 1.

[g] T. Bab. Sota, fol. 12. 1.

[h] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 100. 1.

“ come.” Now theſe practices they uſed, that they might appear unto men to faſt: ſo that either they did not really faſt, when they pretended to it; only put on theſe outward appearances, that men might think they did; or, not content with real faſting, which they muſt be conſcious of themſelves, and God knew; they took ſuch methods, that it might appear to men that they faſted, and that they might be took notice of, and applauded by them: for their view in faſting, was not to ſatisfy their own conſciences, or pleaſe God; but that they might have glory of men. Hence, ſays Chriſt, verily I ſay unto you, they have their reward; they obtain what they ſeek for, honour from men, and that is all they will have.

Ver. 17. But thou when thou faſteſt, &c.] Chriſt allows of faſting, but what is of a quite different kind from that of the Jews; which lay not in an outward abſtinence from food, and other conveniences of life, and refreſhments of nature; but in an abſtinence from ſin, in acknowledgment and confeſſion of it; and in the exerciſe of faith and hope in God, as a God pardoning iniquity, tranſgreſſion and ſin; wherefore chearfulneſs, and a free uſe of the creatures, without an abuſe of them, beſt became ſuch perſons. Anoint thine head, and waſh thy face; directly contrary to the Jewiſh canons, which forbid theſe things, with others, on faſt-days: “ On the day of atonement, ſay [i] they, “ a man is forbidden eating and drinking, “ וברחיצה ובסיכה and waſhing, and anointing, “ and putting on of ſhoes, and the uſe of the bed.” And the ſame were forbidden on other faſts: in anointings, the head was anointed firſt, and this rule and reaſon are given for it: “ he that would “ anoint his whole body, סך ראשו תחילה, let him “ anoint his head firſt, becauſe it is king over all “ its members [k].” Anointing and waſhing, were ſigns of chearfulneſs and joy; ſee Ruth iii. 3. 2 Sam. xii. 20.

Ver. 18. That thou appear not unto men to faſt, &c.] Which is juſt the reverſe of the hypocrites, the Scribes and Phariſees; and quite contrary to the cuſtoms of the Jews, who when they faſted, particularly on their noted faſts [l], “ brought out the “ ark into the ſtreet of the city, and put burnt “ aſhes upon it, and upon the head of the prince, “ and upon the head of the preſident of the San- “ hedrim, and every man upon his own head.” All which was done, to be ſeen of men to faſt; but Chriſt directs to ſuch ſort of faſting, and which is to be done in ſuch a manner, as only to be ſeen by God: but unto thy Father which is in ſecret; who is inviſible, and who ſees what is done in ſecret; and takes notice of the internal exerciſe of grace; which he approves of, and prefers to outward faſtings; and thy Father which ſeeth in ſecret, ſhall reward thee openly: and to have honour from God, is infinitely more than to have the applauſe of men; for as God delights in, ſo he will reward his own grace with glory.

Ver. 19. Lay not up for yourſelves treaſures upon earth, &c.] Meaning either treaſures that are of an earthly nature and kind, the more valuable and excellent things of the earth, worldly wealth and riches; or the things and places, in which theſe are laid up, as bags, cheſts, or coffers, barns and other treaſuries, private or publick. Chriſt here diſſuades from covetouſneſs, and worldly mindedneſs; an anxious care and concern, to hoard up plenty of worldly things for themſelves, for time to come, making no uſe of them at preſent, for the good of others: and this he does, from the nature of the things themſelves; the places where they are laid up; the difficulty of keeping them; and their liableneſs to be corrupted or loſt. Where moth and ruſt doth corrupt, and thieves break through and ſteal. Garments formerly, were a conſiderable part of the treaſures of great men, as well as gold and ſilver; ſee Job xxvii. 16. So according to the [m] Targumiſt, Haman is bid to go לבית גנזי דמלכא to the king's treaſury, and take from thence, one of the purple garments, the beſt, and raiment of the beſt ſilk, &c. and theſe were liable to be eaten with the moth, James v. 2. The word tranſlated ruſt, does not here ſignify the ruſt of metals, as gold and ſilver; by which there is not ſo much damage done, ſo as to deſtroy them, and make them uſeleſs; but whatever corrupts and conſumes things eatable, as blaſting and mildew in corn, or any ſort of vermin in granaries: for gold and ſilver, or money, with jewels and precious ſtones, which make a very great part of worldly treaſure, ſeem to be more particularly deſigned, by what thieves break through into houſes for, and carry away. So that here are three ſorts of earthly treaſures pointed at, which are liable to be corrupted, or taken away: garments, which may be deſtroyed, and rendered uſeleſs for wearing; proviſions of things eatable, as all ſorts of corn and grain, which may be ſo corrupted by ſmut and vermin, as not to be fit for uſe; and money and jewels, which may be ſtolen by thieves: ſo that no ſort of worldly riches and treaſure is ſafe, and to be depended on; and therefore it is a great folly and vanity to lay it up, and truſt in it.

Ver. 20. But lay up for yourſelves treaſure in heaven, &c.] That is, either be concerned for, and ſeek after heavenly treaſure, the riches of glory, the joys and glories of another world, which infinitely excel every thing that is valuable on earth; and which can never be corrupted, or taken away: or rather, lay up your earthly treaſures in heaven; that is, put them into the hands of God in heaven; and this is done, by liberally communicating to the poor; by which means men provide themſelves bags which wax not old, and a treaſure in heaven that faileth not, Luke xii. 33. They ſhall never want any good thing here, and they lay up in ſtore for themſelves, a good foundation againſt the time to come, 1 Tim. vi. 18, 19. This is the way to have worldly treaſure ſecured from moth, ruſt, and thieves; for to lay it up in heaven with God, to give it to him, to his poor, to make uſe of it for his glory, is to lay it up in a place, where neither moth nor ruſt doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor ſteal. Treaſures are ſafer here than in our own hands, and will turn to better account, and more to our own advantage, both in this life, and that which is to come; ſee Matt. xix. 21. In this way, though not for it, men come to have treaſure in heaven, even the treaſure of eternal life, glory, and happineſs. Heaven is often repreſented by the Jewiſh writers, as a treaſury; and the treaſures which are in it, are ſaid [n] to be “ גנזי חיים treaſures of life, “ and treaſures of peace, and treaſures of bleſſing; “ and the ſouls of the righteous, and the ſpirits and “ ſouls that ſhall be created, and the dew with “ which God will quicken the dead.” Thoſe words in Deut. xxxi. 16. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, thou ſhalt ſleep with thy fathers, are thus [o] paraphraſed. “ And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, lo! thou ſhalt “ ſleep in the duſt with thy fathers, and thy ſoul

---

[i] Miſn. Yoma, c. 8. §. 1. & Taanith, c. 1. §. 4, 5, 6. T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 77. 2. Taanith, fol. 12. 2. Moſes Kotſenſis Mitzvot Tora, pr. affirm. 32.

[k] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 61. 1.

[l] Miſn. Taanith, c. 2. §. 1.

[m] Targum Sheni. in Eſth. vi. 10.

[n] T. Bab. Chagiga, fol. 12. 2.

[o] Targum Jon. ben Uzziel, in Deut. xxxi. 16.

"ſhall be treaſured up, בגניז חיי עלמא, in the treaſury of eternal life, with thy fathers." They tell us [p] a ſtory of Monbaz the king, who was ſon to queen Helena; in which, are many things agreeable to theſe words of Chriſt, and which may ſerve to illuſtrate them. "Monbaz the king, ſtood and "gave all his goods to the poor: his relations ſent "to him, and ſaid, thy fathers added to that "which was theirs, and to that which was their fa-"thers; but thou haſt given away that which "was thine, and that which was thy father's: "he replied to them all thus; my fathers "גנזו בארץ ואני גנזתי בשמים laid up treaſure on "earth, but I have laid up treaſure in heaven, ac-"cording to Pſal. lxxxv. 11. My fathers laid up "treaſures, which do not bring forth fruit; but I "have laid up treaſures, which bring forth fruit, "according to Iſa. iii. 10. My fathers gathered in "a place, where the hand, i. e. of man rules, "(where thieves break through and ſteal) but I have "gathered in a place, where the hand of man does "not rule, according to Pſal. xcvii. 2. My fathers "gathered mammon, or money, but I have gather-"ed ſouls, according to Prov. xi. 30. My fathers "gathered for others, but I have gathered לעצמי "for myſelf, according to Deut. xxiv. 13. My "fathers gathered in this world, but I have gather-"ed for the world to come." One of their commentators [q] on the phraſe, my fathers laid up treaſures below, as it is in the Babyloniſh Talmud [r], has this remark; "for lo! all that they treaſured up, "was for the neceſſaries of this world; which is "מקום עפר רמה תולעה a place of duſt and ver-"min, which corrupt and deſtroy every thing; but "I have laid up treaſures above, a place ſecure and "firm, and which preſerves every thing that is "put into it."

Ver. 21. For where your treaſure is, there will your heart be alſo.] This ſeems to be a proverbial expreſſion, and contains in it another reaſon, diſſuading from worldly mindedneſs; becauſe of the danger the heart is in, of being enſnared and ruined thereby: and the ſenſe of it is, if your treaſure is on earth, and lies in earthly things, your hearts will be ſet upon them, and be in them, in your bags, your coffers and ſtore-houſes; and ſo your ſouls will be in danger of being loſt; which loſs will be an irreparable one, though you ſhould gain the whole world. But if your treaſure is put into the hands of God, your hearts will be with him, and be ſettled on him; your deſires will be after heavenly things; your affections will be ſet on things above; your converſation will be in heaven, whilſt you are on earth; and that will be the place and ſeat of your happineſs, to all Eternity.

Ver. 22. The light of the body is the eye, &c.] Or, the candle of the body is the eye; for the eye is that in the body, as a candle is in the houſe; by the light of it, the ſeveral members of the body perform their office; and what is ſaid of the eye of the body, is transferred to the eye of the mind: if therefore thine eye be ſingle; that is, if thy mind be liberal, generous, and bountiful: for Chriſt is ſtill upon the ſame ſubject of liberality, and againſt covetouſneſs; and here ſpeaks entirely in the language of the Jews, who could eaſily underſtand him; in whoſe writings, we read of three ſorts of eyes; a good eye, a middling one, and an evil one; ſo in the offerings of the firſt-fruits [s], "עין יפה, a good "eye gave the fortieth, the houſe Shammai ſay, "the thirtieth part; a middling one, the fiftieth; "and an evil one, the ſixtieth part." Upon which the commentators ſay [t], a good eye, means one that is liberal, and an evil eye, the contrary: hence you often read [u], of trading, dedicating, and giving with a good or an evil eye; that is, either generouſly, liberally, or in a niggardly and grudging manner; which may help us to the ſenſe of our Lord in theſe words; whoſe meaning is, that if a man is not covetous, but his mind is diſpoſed to generoſity and liberality; if this be the caſe, as if he ſhould ſay, thy whole body ſhall be full of light: all thy actions will be influenced by this noble principle; thy whole life will be illuminated, guided and governed by it; thy mind will be chearful and pleaſant, and thy eſtate and condition will be proſperous and ſucceſsful.

Ver. 23. But if thine eye be evil, &c.] If thou art of a ſordid diſpoſition, of an avaricious temper, if the ſin of covetouſneſs prevails over thee, thy whole body will be full of darkneſs: thy judgment will be ſo influenced by that ſordid principle, that thou wilt not be able to diſcern what is agreeable to the law of God, or human reaſon; what is fitting to be done for thyſelf, for God, or for thy fellow creatures; all the powers and faculties of thy ſoul will be enſlaved by it, and all be intent upon, and employed in the gratification of it: thy mind will be always ſad and ſorrowful, harraſſed and diſtreſſed; and thy eſtate, and condition, will be moſt miſerable and uncomfortable: if therefore the light that is in thee be darkneſs, how great is that darkneſs! as it is in the body, ſo it is with the mind; as when the eye, the light of the body, is put out by any means, all the members of the body are in entire darkneſs; ſo when the light of reaſon in the mind, is ſo far extinguiſhed by any prevailing iniquity, particularly the ſin of covetouſneſs, ſo that it is wholly influenced and governed by it, what irregular actions is it led into! What deeds of darkneſs does it perform! and what will be the conſequence of it, but utter and eternal darkneſs, if grace prevent not!

Ver. 24. No man can ſerve two maſters, &c.] Whoſe orders are directly contrary to one another: otherwiſe, if they were the ſame, or agreed, both might be ſerved; but this is rarely the caſe, and ſeldom done. This is a proverbial expreſſion, and is elſewhere uſed by Chriſt, Luke. xvi. 13. The Jews have ſayings pretty much like it, and of the ſame ſenſe as when they ſay [w], "we have not found that "כל אדם זוכה לשתי שולחנות any man is fit for two "tables." And again [x], "that it is not proper for "one man to have two governments:" their meaning is, that two things can't be done together: for, either he will hate the one, and love the other; he will have leſs affection and regard to the one, than to the other; as the ſervice or orders of the one, are leſs agreeable to him than the others: or elſe he will hold to the one; hearken to his commands, obey his orders, and abide in his ſervice: and deſpiſe the other; ſhew diſreſpect to his perſon, neglect his orders, and deſert his ſervice: ye cannot ſerve God and mammon. The word mammon is a Syriac word, and ſignifies money, wealth, riches, ſubſtance, and every thing that comes under the name of worldly goods. Jerom ſays, that riches, in the Syriac language, are called mammon; and ſo the word is often uſed in the above ſenſes, in the Chaldee paraphraſes [y], and in the Talmudic writings; where [z] דיני ממונות pecuniary judgments, judgments, or cauſes relating to money affairs, in which were pecuniary mulcts, are oppoſed to דיני נפשות judgments of ſouls, or cauſes relating to life and death. The account and interpretation Irenæus[a] gives of the word, is very wide and foreign; who ſays, that “ Mammon, according to the Jewiſh way of ſpeaking, which the Samaritans uſed, “ is one that is greedy, and would have more than “ he ought; but, according to the Hebrew language, “ it is called adjectively Mam, and ſignifies one that “ is gluttonous; that is, who can't refrain himſelf “ from gluttony.” Whereas it is not an Hebrew word, nor an adjective, but a ſubſtantive, and ſignifies riches; which are oppoſed to God, being by ſome men loved, admired, truſted in, and worſhipped, as if they were God; and which is incompatible with the ſervice of the true God: for ſuch perſons, whoſe hearts go after their covetouſneſs, and are ſet upon earthly riches, who give up themſelves to them, are eagerly and anxiouſly purſuing after them, and place their confidence in them; whatever pretenſions they may make to the ſervice of God, as did the Scribes and Phariſees, who are particularly ſtruck at by this expreſſion, both here and elſewhere, they cannot truly and heartily ſerve the Lord. Mammon is the god they ſerve; which word may well be thought to anſwer to Pluto, the god of riches, among the Heathens. The Jews in Chriſt's time, were notorious for their love of mammon; and they themſelves own, that this was the cauſe of the deſtruction of the ſecond temple: the character they give of thoſe, who lived under the ſecond temple, is this; “ we know that they laboured in the law, “ and took care of the commandments, and of the “ tithes, and that their whole converſation was “ good; only that they אוהבין את הממם loved “ the mammon, and hated one another without a “ cauſe[b].

---

[p] T. Hieroſ. Peah, fol. 15. 2. [q] Caphtor, fol. 97. 1. [r] T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 11. 1. [s] Miſn. Trumot, c. 4. §. 3. [t] Maimon. Bartenora & Ez Chayim in ib. [u] T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 37. 2. & 71. 1. & 72. 1. [w] Præfat. Celi Jaker, fol. 3. 1. [x] Piſke Toſephot Cetubot, art. 359. [y] Vid. Targum Onkelos, & Jon. in Gen. xiii. 13. & in Jud. v. 19. & in Prov. iii. 9. & in Iſa. xlv. 13. & paſſim. [z] Miſn. Sanhed. c. 1. §. 1. & c. 4. §. 1.

Ver. 25. Therefore I ſay unto you, take no thought for your life, &c] Since ye cannot ſerve both God and mammon, obey one, and neglect the other. Chriſt does not forbid labour to maintain, ſupport, and preſerve, this animal life; nor does he forbid all thought and care about it, but all anxious, immoderate, perplexing, and diſtreſſing thoughts and cares; ſuch as ariſe from diffidence and unbelief, and tend to deſpair; which are diſhonourable to God, as the God of nature and providence, and uncomfortable to men: what ye ſhall eat, or what ye ſhall drink, nor yet for your body, what ye ſhall put on. The ſeveral and the only things, which are neceſſary for the ſupport and comfort of human life, are mentioned; as meat, drink, and clothing. Eating and drinking, are neceſſary to preſerve life; and raiment, to cover and defend the body, from the injuries of the heavens: and having theſe, men have every thing neceſſary, and ought herewith to be content; nor ſhould they be anxiouſly thoughtful about theſe: for is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment? And yet, God has given theſe without man's thought: and ſince theſe are better, and much more excellent, than food and raiment, as all muſt and will acknowledge; and God has given theſe the greater gifts, it may be depended upon, that he will give the leſſer; that he will give meat and drink, to uphold that valuable life, which he is the author of; and raiment to clothe that body, which he with ſo much wiſdom and power, has accurately and wonderfully made.

Ver. 26. Behold the fowls of the air, &c.] Not ſuch as are brought up in houſes, but which fly abroad in the air, wild; and are not ſupported by their own, or any human care, but by the care of God: Luke, ch. xii. 24. particularly mentions the ravens, referring probably, to Pſal. cxlvii. 9. and becauſe they are very voracious creatures: and there it is ſaid, conſider the ravens; look attentively upon them, and with obſervation, for they ſow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns. This is not ſaid, that men ſhould not ſow, nor reap, nor gather into barns; but to reprove their diffidence and unbelief: who, though they have the opportunity of ſowing, reaping, and gathering in, year by year, yet diſtruſt the providence of God; when the fowls of the air do none of theſe, yet your heavenly Father feedeth them; ſee Pſal. cxlv. 15, 16. and cxlvii. 9. The Jews acknowledge this, that the leaſt and meaneſt of creatures, are fed by God. “ Mar “ ſays[c], the holy bleſſed God ſits וזן and feeds, “ i. e. all creatures, and takes care of them.” Are ye not much better then they? Don't you differ from them? are ye not much more excellent than they? And if God feeds and provides for inferior creatures, ſuch as are very mean and contemptible, how much more will he not provide for you? There is a paſſage in the Talmud, which has great affinity to this of Chriſt's, and appears to have in it, pretty much of the like kind of reaſoning. In the Miſna[d] it is ſaid, that R. Simeon ben Eleazer ſhould ſay, “ Did you ever ſee a beaſt, or a fowl, “ that had a trade? but they are fed without trou- “ ble.” In the Gemara[e] is added, “ Did you ever “ ſee a lion bearing burdens, an hart gathering ſum- “ mer-fruits, a fox a money-changer, or a wolf “ ſelling pots? And yet מתפרנסין בלא צער they “ are nouriſhed without labour, and wherefore are “ they created? To ſerve me, and I am created to “ ſerve my Maker: and lo! theſe things have in “ them an argument, from the leſs to the greater; “ for if theſe, which are created to ſerve me after “ this manner, are ſupported without trouble; I, “ who am created to ſerve my Maker, is it not fit “ that I ſhould be ſupplied without trouble? And “ what is the reaſon that I am ſuſtained with trou- “ ble? My ſins.”

Ver. 27. Which of you by taking thought, &c.] As Chriſt argued before, from the unneceſſarineſs of anxious thoughts and cares, about the proviſions of life; ſo here, from the unprofitableneſs of them; it being impoſſible for a man, with all his care and thought, to add one cubit unto his ſtature, or to his age; ſo the word is rendered, John ix. 21—23. Heb. xi. 11. to the days of his life, he is ſo ſollicitous about; for a cubit may as well be applied to a man's age, as an hand's breadth is to his days, Pſal. xxxix. 5. Nor is it ſo reaſonable to think, that Chriſt ſhould be ſpeaking of making ſuch an addition to a man's height; though, that to be ſure, is an impoſſible thing: ſince the far greater part of Chriſt's hearers, muſt be come to their full growth, and could not hope to have any addition made to their height; though they might hope to add to their days; much leſs ſuch a monſtrous one, as that of a cubit, and which is a ſtrong reaſon againſt the other ſenſe of the word, and for this; for our Lord is ſpeaking of ſomething very ſmall, which men can't do; as appears from what Luke ſays, ch. xii. 26. If ye then be not able to do that which is leaſt, why

---

[a] Adv. Hæreſ. l. 3. c. 8. p. 249. [b] T. Hieroſ. Yoma, fol. 38. 3. [c] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 107. 2. Avoda Zara, fol. 3. 2. [d] Kiddúſhin, c. 4. §. 14. [e] T. Hieroſ. Kidduſhin, fol. 66. 2. Vid. T. Bab. Kidduſhin, fol. 82. 1, 2.

why take ye thought for the reſt? Whereas, to add a cubit to a man's height, is a great deal: “ the ſtature “ of a middling man, ſays [f] Bartenora, is three “ cubits.” And to add one more, makes a large addition to his ſtature; but to apply this to a man's age, is a ſmall matter, and yet is what men can't do: the ſenſe of the words is this, that no man, by all the care and thought he can make uſe of, is ever able to add one cubit, or the leaſt meaſure to his days; he can't lengthen out his life one year, one month, one day, one hour; no, not one moment.

Ver. 28. And why take ye thought for raiment, &c.] Having expoſed the folly of an anxious and immoderate care and thought, for food to ſupport and prolong life, our Lord proceeds, to ſhew the vanity of an over concern for raiment: conſider the lilies of the field, or the flowers of the field, as the Arabic verſion reads it, the lilies being put for all ſorts of flowers. The Perſic verſion mentions both roſe and lily; the one being beautifully cloathed in red, the other in white. Chriſt does not direct his hearers to the lilies, or flowers which grow in the garden, which receive ſome advantage from the management and care of the gardener; but to thoſe of the field, where the art and care of men, were not ſo exerciſed: and beſides, he was now preaching on the mount, in an open place; and as he could point to the fowls of the air, flying in their ſight, ſo to the flowers, in the adjacent fields and vallies: which he would have them look upon, with their eyes, conſider and contemplate in their minds, how they grow; in what variety of garbs they appear, of what different beautiful colours, and fragrant odours, they were; and yet they toil not, or do not labour as huſbandmen do, in tilling their land, plowing their fields, and ſowing them with flax, out of which linnen garments are made: neither do they ſpin; the flax, when plucked and dreſſed, as women do, in order for cloathing; nor do they weave it into cloth, or make it up into garments, as other artificers do.

Ver. 29. And yet I ſay unto you, that even Solomon in all his glory, &c.] This is a certain truth, to be affirmed in the ſtrongeſt manner, and to be believed, that not only men and kings too in general; but even particularly Solomon, the richeſt and moſt magnificent of all the kings of Iſrael, whoſe grandeur, and glory, exceeded all the princes of the earth; that even he, not in his common dreſs, but when in his glory, and in all his glory, when arrayed with his royal and richeſt robes, with his crown on his head, and when ſeated on his throne, was not arrayed like one of theſe, lilies, or flowers of the field: for the glory and beauty of his garments, were purely from art, but theirs by nature; which can never be equalled by art. This phraſe, Solomon in all his glory, is the ſame which the Jewiſh doctors in their writings, expreſs by שלמה בשעתו Solomon in his hour[g]: that is, as their commentators explain it[h], בעת מלכותו in the time of his reign; for they ſay, he was firſt a king, and then a private perſon. Now, not whilſt he was a private perſon, but when a king, in the height of his grandeur and magnificence, and when dreſſed out in the moſt ſplendid manner, he was exceeded in array, by a ſingle lily: or the ſenſe is, in his royal apparel. For as the ſame doctors ſay, “ what is a man's glory? It is “ his cloathing that is his outward glory; and “ again, garments are the glory of a man[i].”

Ver. 30. Wherefore if God ſo clothe the graſs of the field, &c.] Theſe words are a concluſion from the former, and contain an argument from the leſſer to the greater; that if God, for this is ſolely his work, ſo clothes the lilies, the flowers of the field, and whatever grows up out of the earth, in ſuch a beautiful and ſplendid manner, as even to out-do Solomon, in his richeſt apparel; there's no doubt to be made of it, or at leaſt ought not, but that he will much more provide clothing for men. The argument is illuſtrated, by the ſhort continuance of the graſs of the field, which is ſo clothed; and the uſe it is put to, when cut down; which to day is in being, but abides not long, as it were but for a day: it flouriſhes in the morning, continues for the day in its glory and verdure, is cut down at evening, and withers and dies, and to-morrow is caſt into the oven, to heat it with, or as the Syriac verſion reads בתנורא in the furnace. And ſo Munſter's Hebrew edition of this Goſpel. For furnaces uſed to be heated with ſtraw and ſtubble, and ſuch like things, as were gathered out of the fields; ſo, we read in the Miſna[k], that pots and furnaces were heated; “ a pot which they heat, with ſtraw and “ ſtubble, they put into it, that which is to be boil- “ ed——a furnace which they heat with ſtraw and “ ſtubble, they put nothing into it, nor upon it, “ (i. e. till they have removed the coals or aſhes:) “ a little furnace, which they heat בקש ובגבבא “ with ſtraw and ſtubble, is as the pots.” The laſt word גבבא Bartenora ſays, ſignifies wood, or ſticks, ſmall as ſtubble, which they gather out of the field; that is, the ſtalks of ſome ſort of herbs and plants, that grow in the field: now if God clothes theſe plants, which are ſo ſhort-lived, and at laſt uſed for ſuch mean purpoſes; ſhall he not much more clothe you men, his people, who are of a much longer life, and deſigned for greater ends and purpoſes; for the worſhip and ſervice of God, for his honour and glory here, and for eternal life and happineſs hereafter, O ye of little faith? As ſuch perſons are, who diſtruſt the providence of God, with reſpect to food and raiment. The phraſe, קטני אמנה men of little faith, is often to be met with in the Rabinical writings: ſo Noah is repreſented by them, as one of little faith, who believed, and did not believe the flood; and therefore did not go into the ark, till the waters drove him[l]: and though he is ſaid to be perfect, this was not by his works, but by the grace of God[m]. So the Iſraelites at the Red-Sea, who thought that when they came out on one ſide, the Egyptians would come out on the[n] other. So the little children that mocked Eliſha, are ſaid to be ſo called, becauſe they were men of little[o] faith. So every one that exalts his voice in prayer, is reckoned ſuch an one[p]. But what comes neareſt to the caſe before us, is the following[q] paſſage; “ Says R. Eliezer the Great, whoever has a morſel “ in his baſket, and ſays, what ſhall I eat to mor- “ row? is no other, than מקטני אמנה one of thoſe “ of little faith.”

Ver. 31. Therefore take no thought, &c.] That is, for the morrow, as it is explained, ver. 34. for it is lawful to take proper care and thought for preſent food, drink and raiment; but not to be anxiouſly concerned for futurity; ſaying, what ſhall we eat? or what ſhall we drink? or wherewithal ſhall we be clothed? Theſe are a repetition of the ſeveral things inſtanced in, and are the very language and expreſſions, of men of little faith; as in the above citation, מה אוכל למחר what ſhall I eat to morrow?

---

[f] In Miſn. Erubim, c. 4. §. 5. & Negaim, c. 13. §. 1.

[g] Miſn. Baya Metzia, c. 7. §. 1. T. Bab. ib. fol. 49. 1. & 83. 1. & 86. 2.

[h] Jarchi & Bartenora in ib.

[i] Tzeror Hammor, fol. 95. 1. & 99. 4. & 110. 4.

[k] Sabbat, c. 3. §. 1, 2.

[l] Jarchi in Gen. vii. 7.

[m] Tzeror Hammor, fol. 10. 2.

[n] T. Bab. Peſachim, fol. 118. 2. Erachin, fol. 15. 1.

[o] T. Bab. Sota, fol. 46. 2. Zohar in Exod. fol. 90. 2.

[p] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 24. 2. Zohar in Num. fol. 93. 2.

[q] T. Bab. Sota, fol. 48. 2.

Ver. 32. For after all theſe things do the Gentiles ſeek, &c.] Or the nations of the world, as in Luke xii. 30. The Syriac reads it ſo here: the phraſe, אומות העלם, the nations of the world, is uſed of the Gentiles, in diſtinction from the Iſraelites, thouſands of times in the Jewiſh writings, it would be endleſs to give inſtances. Theſe knew not God, nor acknowledged his providence; the greater part of them thought, that the ſoul periſhed with the body; few of them thought, that any thing remained after death; and they that did, ſpoke very doubtfully of it: wherefore it is no wonder, that ſuch perſons ſhould greedily ſeek after, and be anxiouſly concerned for all theſe things, food, raiment, and riches, and a great plenty of them; ſince this is all the happineſs they expect; and imagine, that this is to be acquired by their care, thought, diligence, and induſtry; having no regard to a ſuperior being, and his all-wiſe providence: but for the Jews, and ſo Chriſtians, who have a divine revelation, the knowledge of God, and his providence, and of a future ſtate after this life, to act the ſame part the Heathens do, is exceedingly unbecoming, abſurd, and wicked: and beſides, ſuch greedy deſires, immoderate care, and anxious ſollicitude, are altogether unneceſſary; for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all theſe things. Every word almoſt, carries in it an argument, to ſtrengthen the faith of God's children, to encourage them to believe, that he will beſtow upon them, whatever is needful, for meat, drink, and clothing: he is a Father, and will take care of his children; their Father; they have intereſt in him, being related to him, and need not doubt of his paternal care, and affectionate regard to them: their heavenly father, or their father in heaven; who has all things at his command, who ſits there, and does whatever he pleaſeth on earth: he knoweth that they have need; he knows all things, all their ſtraits, difficulties, wants and neceſſities; he knows they need every day, all theſe things, food and raiment, and can't do without them: and therefore they may depend upon it, that as it is in his power to relieve them, and their perſons and caſes are not unknown to him; he who ſtands in the relation of a father to them, will ſupply them with whatever is proper and convenient for them.

Ver. 33. But ſeek firſt the kingdom of God, &c.] Meaning either the Goſpel, and the miniſtration of it; in which ſenſe this phraſe is often uſed, ſee Matt. xxi. 43. Mark i. 14. Luke iv. 43. and ix. 2—60. and xvi. 16. and which is diligently to be ſought after, and into; to be conſtantly attended on, and to be preferred to our neceſſary food, to raiment, or riches, or any enjoyment of life: or elſe the kingdom of glory, which is prepared by God, and is his gift; for which he makes his people meet here, and will introduce them into it hereafter. And his righteouſneſs; the righteouſneſs of God, which is revealed in the Goſpel, and is what gives a right and title to the kingdom of heaven. This is not the righteouſneſs of man, but of God; and is no other than the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; ſo called, becauſe he is God who has wrought it; it is what God approves of, accepts, and imputes, and which only can juſtify in his ſight, and give an abundant entrance into his kingdom and glory. Heaven is to be ſought for in the firſt place, as the perfection of the ſaints happineſs; and Chriſt's righteouſneſs is to be ſought for, and laid hold on by faith, as the way and means of enjoying that happineſs; without which, there will be no entering into the kingdom of heaven. And all theſe things ſhall be added unto you; of the free bounty, goodneſs, and liberality of God, without your thought and care, and much leſs merit; even all theſe things, meat, drink, clothing, or whatſoever worldly ſuſtenance elſe is neceſſary for you: which are not parts of the happineſs of ſaints, only appendages thereunto; which they have over and above what they are, or ſhould be chiefly ſeeking after. The Hebrews [r] ſay, "that no good ſign "will be ſhewn to Iſrael, until they return and "ſeek three things: afterwards the children of Iſrael "ſhall return and ſeek the Lord; זו מלכות שמים "this is the kingdom of heaven; and David their "king, according to its literal ſenſe; and ſhall fear "the Lord and his goodneſs; this is the houſe of the "ſanctuary, as it is ſaid, this goodly mountain, and "Lebanon."

Ver. 34. Take therefore no thought for the morrow, &c.] Reference is had to Prov. xxvii. 1. Boaſt not thyſelf of to-morrow: a man can't promiſe or aſſure himſelf, that he ſhall have a morrow, and therefore 'tis great weakneſs and folly, to be anxiouſly thoughtful about it. This is expreſſed in the Talmud [s], nearer the ſenſe of Chriſt's words, after this manner: "אל תצר צרת מחר don't diſtreſs thy"ſelf with to-morrow's affliction, for thou knoweſt "not what a day may bring forth; perhaps to mor"row may not be, and thou wilt be found diſtreſ"ſing thyſelf, for the time which is nothing to "thee." And ſhould it come, it is unneceſſary to be thoughtful of it in a diſtreſſing manner beforehand; for the morrow ſhall take thought for the things of itſelf. The morrow is here introduced by a proſopopeia, as if it was a perſon ſufficiently thoughtful and careful for the neceſſaries of it: every day brings along with it freſh care and thought, being attended with freſh wants and troubles; and therefore, it is very unadviſeable, to bring the cares and troubles of two days upon one; as he does, who is anxiouſly concerned to day, for the things of to-morrow; ſufficient unto the day is the evil thereof. This proverb is thus expreſſed in the Talmud [t], דיה לצרה בשעתה ſufficient for diſtreſs, or vexation, is the preſent time; which the Gloſs explains thus, "ſufficient for the vexation it is, that men ſhould "grieve for it, at the time that it comes upon them." It is very wrong to anticipate trouble, or meet it beforehand; if it was for no other reaſon but this, that every day's trouble is enough, and ſhould not be needleſsly added to, by an over concern what ſhall be done for to morrow; or how ſhall the neceſſities of it be anſwered, or the trials of it be endured.

---

[r] Jarchi & Kimchi, in Hoſ. iii. 5.

[s] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 100. 2.

[t] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 9. 2.

CHAP.

CHAP. VII.

Ver. 1. JUDGE not, that ye be not judged.] This is not to be underſtood of any ſort of judgment; not of judgment in the civil courts of judicature, by proper magiſtrates, which ought to be made and paſs, according to the nature of the caſe; nor of judgment in the churches of Chriſt, where offenders are to be called to an account, examined, tried, and dealt with according to the rules of the Goſpel; nor of every private judgment, which one man may make upon another, without any detriment to him; but of raſh judgment, interpreting mens words and deeds to the worſt ſenſe, and cenſuring them in a very ſevere manner; even paſſing ſentence on them, with reſpect to their eternal ſtate and condition. Good is the advice given by the famous Hillell [u], who lived a little before Chriſt's time; “ Don't judge thy neighbour, ſays “ he, until thou comeſt into his place.” It would be well, if perſons ſubject to a cenſorious ſpirit, would put themſelves in the caſe and circumſtances the perſons are in they judge; and then conſider, what judgment they would chuſe others ſhould paſs on them. The argument Chriſt uſes to diſſuade from this evil, which the Jews were very prone to, is, that ye be not judged; meaning, either by men, for ſuch cenſorious perſons rarely have the good-will of their fellow-creatures, but are commonly repaid in the ſame way; or elſe by God, which will be the moſt awful and tremendous: for ſuch perſons take upon them the place of God, uſurp his prerogative, as if they knew the hearts and ſtates of men; and therefore will have judgment without mercy at the hands of God.

Ver. 2. For with what judgment ye judge, ye ſhall be judged, &c.] Both by God and men; to which agree thoſe proverbial ſentences uſed by the Jews; “ He that judgeth his neighbour according to the “ balance of righteouſneſs, or innocence, they judge “ him according to righteouſneſs.” [w] And a little after, “ As ye have judged me according to the “ balance of righteouſneſs, God will judge you ac- “ cording to the balance of righteouſneſs.” Hence that advice of Joſhua ben Parachiah [x], who by the Jewiſh writers, is ſaid to be the maſter of Chriſt; “ Judge every man according to the balance of “ righteouſneſs.” Which their commentators explain thus [y]; when you ſee a man as it were in equilibrio, inclining to neither part, it is not clear from what he does, that he is either good or evil, righteous or unrighteous; yet when you ſee him do a thing which may be interpreted either to a good or a bad ſenſe, it ought always to be interpreted to the beſt. And with what meaſure you mete, it ſhall be meaſured to you again. This was an uſual proverb among the Jews; it is ſometimes delivered out thus, מדה כנגד מדה meaſure againſt meaſure [z]; but oftner thus, and nearer the form of it here, במדה שאדם מודד בה מודדין לו with what meaſure a man meaſures, they meaſure to him: one might fill up almoſt a page, in referring to places, where it is uſed in this form: beſides thoſe in the [a] margin, take the following, and the rather, becauſe it gives inſtances of this retaliation [b]: “ With what meaſure “ a man meaſures, they meaſure to him; ſo the “ woman ſuſpected of adultery, ſhe adorned her- “ ſelf to commit ſin, and God diſhonoured her; “ ſhe expoſed herſelf to iniquity, God therefore “ ſtripped her naked; the ſame part of her body in “ which her ſin begun, her puniſhment did. Sam- “ ſon walked after his eyes, and therefore the Phi- “ liſtines plucked out his eyes. Abſalom was lifted “ up in his mind, with his hair, and therefore he was “ hanged by it; and becauſe he lay with his father's “ ten concubines, they therefore pierced him with “ ten lances; and becauſe he ſtole away three hearts, “ the heart of his father, the heart of the Sanhe- “ drim, and the heart of Iſrael, therefore he was “ thruſt with three darts: and ſo it is with reſpect “ to good things; Miriam waited for Moſes one “ hour, therefore the Iſraelites waited for her ſeven “ days in the wilderneſs; Joſeph, who was greater “ than his brethren, buried his father; and Moſes, “ who was the greateſt among the Iſraelites, took “ care of the bones of Joſeph, and God himſelf “ buried Moſes.”

Ver. 3. And why beholdeſt thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, &c.] By mote is meant, any little bit of ſtraw, or ſmall ſplinter of wood, that flies into the eye, and does it damage, hinders its ſight, and gives it pain; and deſigns little ſins, comparatively ſpeaking, ſuch as youthful follies, human frailties, and infirmities, inadvertencies and imprudencies; which may be ſaid to be light faults, in compariſon of others: and though not to be vindicated, nor continued in, yet not to be ſeverely looked upon and chaſtized. To ſcrutinize diligently into, aggravate, dwell upon, and ſharply reprove the lighter faults of others, is a conduct, which is here inveighed againſt, and condemned by Chriſt; and more eſpecially, when it may be ſaid with the greateſt truth and juſtice to ſuch, but conſidereſt not the beam that is in thine own eye: by the beam is meant, greater ſins, groſſer abominations, and ſuch as were more peculiar to the Phariſees; as pride, arrogance, a vain opinion of themſelves, confidence in their own righteouſneſs, hypocriſy, covetouſneſs, and iniquity; things they did not advert to in themſelves, when they loudly exclaimed againſt leſſer evils in others. Such men muſt be of all perſons inexcuſable, who condemn that in others, which either they themſelves do, or what is abundantly worſe.

Ver. 4. Or how wilt thou ſay to thy brother, &c.] This is not ſo much an interrogation, as an expreſſion of admiration, at the front and impudence of ſuch cenſorious remarkers, and rigid obſervators; who not content to point at the faults of others, take upon them to reprove them in a very magiſterial way: and it is as if Chriſt had ſaid, with what face canſt thou ſay to thy friend or neighbour, let me pull out the mote out of thine eye; give me leave to rebuke thee ſharply for thy ſin, as it deſerves, and behold a beam is in thine own eye; thou art guilty of a far greater iniquity: aſtoniſhing impudence! Art thou ſo blind, as not to ſee and obſerve, thy viler wickedneſs? Or which, if conſcious of, how canſt thou prevail upon thyſelf to take upon thee to reprove and cenſure others? Doſt thou think thy brother can't ſee thy beam? and may he not juſtly retort thine iniquities upon thee, which exceed his? and then what ſucceſs canſt thou promiſe thyſelf? Such perſons are very unfit to be reprovers of others.

---

[u] Pirke Abot, c. 2. §. 4.

[w] T. Bab Sabbat, fol. 127. 2.

[x] Pirke Abot, c. 1. §. 6.

[y] Maimon. & Bartenora in ib.

[z] Bereſhit Rabba, §. 9. fol. 7. 4.

[a] T. Bab. Megilla, fol. 12. 2. Sota, fol. 8. 2. Sanhedrim, fol. 100. 1. Zohar in Gen. fol. 87. 4. & in Lev. fol. 36. 1. & 39. 3. & in Num. fol. 67. 3. Bemidbar Rabba, fol. 194. 1. Miſn. Beracot, c. 9. §. 5.

[b] Miſn. Sota, c. 1. § 7, 8, 9. Vid. Tzeror Hammor, fol. 99. 1, 2.

Ver. 5. Thou hypocrite, firſt caſt out the beam out of thine own eye, &c.] Very rightly does our Lord call ſuch a man an hypocrite, who is very free in remarking and reproving other mens ſins, and covering his own; and indeed, one end of his critical obſervations, rigid cenſures, and raſh judgments is, that he might be thought to be holier than he is: Chriſt very manifeſtly points at the Scribes and Phariſees, who were men of ſuch a complexion; and whom he often, without any breach of charity, calls hypocrites. The meaning of this proverbial expreſſion is, that a man ſhould firſt begin with himſelf, take notice of his own ſins, reprove himſelf for them, and reform; and then it will be ſoon enough to obſerve other mens. And then ſhalt thou ſee clearly, to caſt out the mote out of thy brother's eye: then will he, and not before, be a proper perſon to reprove others; all objections and impediments to ſuch a work, will then be removed. Our Lord here ſpeaks in the language of the Jewiſh nation, with whom ſuch like expreſſions were common, and of long ſtanding[c]. "In the generation that judged the "judges, one ſaid to another, טול קיסם מבין עיניך, "caſt out the mote out of thine eye; to whom it was "replied, טול קורה מבין עיניך, caſt out the beam "from thine eye: one ſaid to another, thy ſilver is "become droſs; the other replies, thy wine is mixed "with water." Again[d], "R. Tarphon ſaid, I "wonder whether there is any in this generation, "that will receive reproof; if one ſhould ſay to "him, caſt out the mote out of thine eye, will he "ſay to him, caſt out the beam out of thine eye? "Says R. Eleazer ben Azariah, I wonder whether "there is any in this generation, that knows how to "reprove." From whence its clear, that theſe phraſes were uſed in the ſame ſenſe they are by Chriſt; and which is ſtill more evident by the Gloſs upon them: for upon the word mote, it obſerves, "That it is as if it had been ſaid, עון קטן, a little "ſin, which is in thine hand (i. e. which thou haſt "committed): the other could ſay to him, caſt thou "away עון גדול the great ſin, which is in thine "hand; ſo that they could not reprove, becauſe "they were all ſinners." Agreeable to theſe, are ſome other proverbs uſed by the Jews, ſuch as "a "vice which is in thyſelf, do not ſpeak of to thy "neighbour,"[e] or upbraid him with it: and[f] again, "adorn thyſelf, and afterwards adorn others." Which is produced by a noted commentator[g] of theirs, to illuſtrate the text in Zeph. ii. 1. on which he alſo makes this remark; "enquire firſt into your own "blemiſhes, and then enquire into the blemiſhes of "others. The ſenſe of each of them is, that a man ſhould firſt reform himſelf, and then others; and that he that finds fault with others, ought to be without blame himſelf.

Ver. 6. Give not that which is holy to the dogs, &c.] Dogs were unclean creatures by the law; the price of one might not be brought into the houſe of the Lord, for a vow, Deut. xxiii. 18. yea, theſe creatures were not admitted into ſeveral temples of the Heathens[h]. Things profane and unclean, as fleſh torn by beaſts, were ordered to be given to them, Exod. xxii. 31. but nothing that was holy was to be given them, as holy fleſh, or the holy oblations, or any thing that was conſecrated to holy uſes; to which is the alluſion here. It is a common maxim[i] with the Jews, "שאין פודין את הקדשים להאכילן לכלבים, that "they don't redeem holy things, to give to the dogs to "eat." Here the phraſe is uſed in a metaphorical ſenſe; and is generally underſtood of not delivering or communicating the holy word of God, and the truths of the Goſpel, comparable to pearls, or the ordinances of it, to perſons notoriouſly vile and ſinful: to men, who being violent and furious perſecutors, and impudent blaſphemers, are compared to dogs; or to ſuch, who are ſcandalouſly vile, impure in their lives and converſations, and are therefore compared to ſwine; neither caſt ye your pearls before ſwine. But ſince the ſubject Chriſt is upon, is reproof, it ſeems rather to be the deſign of theſe expreſſions, that men ſhould be cautious, and prudent, in rebuking and admoniſhing ſuch perſons for their ſins, in whom there is no appearance or hope of ſucceſs; yea, where there is danger of ſuſtaining loſs; leſt they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rent you: that is, deſpiſe the admonitions and reproofs given, and hurt the perſons who give them, either by words or deeds; ſee Prov. ix. 7, 8. The Jews have ſome ſayings much like theſe, and will ſerve to illuſtrate them[k]; "אל תשליכו הפנינים לפני החזירים, do "not caſt pearls before ſwine, nor deliver wiſdom to "to him, who knows not the excellency of it; "for wiſdom is better than pearls, and he that does "not ſeek after it, is worſe than a ſwine."

Ver. 7. Aſk and it ſhall be given you, &c.] This is to be underſtood of aſking of God in prayer, for ſuch things as are wanting; whether of a temporal nature, as food and raiment, which Chriſt in the former chapter, had warned againſt an immoderate and anxious concern for; or of a ſpiritual nature, as grace, and wiſdom to behave in a proper manner, both towards God and men: and ſuch, who aſk according to the will of God, in the name of Chriſt, and under the direction, guidance, and influence of the Spirit, who aſk in faith and fear, and with ſubmiſſion to the divine will, ſhall have what they aſk for; not as what they deſerve, but as a free gift. Seek, and ye ſhall find. This is ſtill meant of prayer, and of ſeeking God, his face and favour; which ſuch ſhall find, who ſeek in a right way, by Chriſt, and with their whole hearts, diligently: knock and it ſhall be opened unto you; as beggars do, who uſe much importunity for relief and aſſiſtance. So men ſhould ſtand and knock at the door of mercy, which will not always be ſhut againſt them. Faith in prayer, is a key that opens this door, when a poor ſoul finds grace and mercy to help it in time of need. Our Lord's deſign, is to expreſs the nature, fervor, and conſtancy of prayer, and to encourage to it.

Ver. 8. For every one that aſketh receiveth, &c.] For God is no reſpecter of perſons; whoever makes application, be he a Jew, or a Gentile, rich or poor, bond or free, a man of great gifts, or mean parts, provided he aſks aright, from right principles, and with right views, ſhall not loſe his labour; but ſhall receive all ſuch good things at the hand of God, as are ſuitable and convenient for him. And he that ſeeketh findeth; he that ſeeks for God in Chriſt, the grace and mercy of God, the kingdom of God, and his righteouſneſs; that ſeeks after the true riches, both of grace and glory, ſhall be ſure to find them; ſee Prov. xxi. 21. And to him that knocketh it ſhall be opened; that is, to him that is conſtant at the throne of grace, who continues knocking at the door of mercy, and will have no denial, it ſhall be opened to him; and he ſhall have entrance into the holieſt of all by the blood of Jeſus.

---

[c] T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 15. 2. [d] T. Bab. Erachin, fol. 16. 2. [e] T. Bab. Bava Metzia, fol. 59. 2. [f] T. Bab Sanhedrim, fol. 19. 1. [g] R. David Kimchi in Zeph. ii. 1. Vid. Tzeror Hammor, fol. 142. 4. [h] Vid. Alex. ab. Alex. Gneial. Dier. l. 2. c. 14. [i] T. Bab. Temura, fol. 17. 1. & 31. 1. & 33. 2. Becorot, fol. 15. 1. Hieroſ. Peſachim, fol. 27. 4. & Maaſer Sheni, fol. 53. 3. [k] Miſchar Happeninim apud Buxtorf. Florileg. Heb. p. 306.

Ver. 9. Or what man is there of you, &c.] That is a father, as in Luke xi. 11. that is, is in the relation, and has the affections of a father; and indeed is a man, and has the nature and paſſions of a man; unleſs he is become a mere brute, and devoid of all humanity, whom if his ſon aſk bread, will he give him a ſtone? No, by no means; no man can act ſuch a mercileſs, cruel part as this to a child: for tho' he might impoſe upon him by the likeneſs of ſome ſort of ſtones with bread; yet could not hope to ſatisfy his hunger, or ſtop his mouth this way; but muſt expect to hear from him again with bitter complaints.

Ver. 10. Or if he aſk a fiſh, will he give him a ſerpent?] Which is ſomewhat like a fiſh, eſpecially an eel. Fiſh and bread are mentioned, becauſe theſe were common food; ſee Mark v. 41. and viii. 6, 7. John xxi. 13. and particularly in Galilee, a fiſh-country, where Chriſt now was, and from whence he had called his diſciples, who were fiſhermen. In Luke xi. 12. 'tis added, or if he ſhall aſk an egg, will he offer him a ſcorpion? which is uſed, as the reſt, to ſhew the abſurdity and inhumanity of ſuch conduct; and that indeed nothing of this kind is to be found among men, unleſs it be among monſters in nature.

Ver. 11. If ye then being evil, &c.] As all mankind in general are, both by nature and practice: they are conceived in ſin, ſhapen in iniquity; are evil from their youth, and tranſgreſſors from the womb; are corrupt, and do abominable things; and ſuch theſe Jews were, Chriſt ſpeaks unto; and who, very likely, has reſpect chiefly to the evil of covetouſneſs they were addicted to. The argument is taken from the leſſer to the geater, and runs thus; that if ye, who are but men, men on earth, yea evil men, not over liberal and beneficent, nay covetous and niggardly, know how to give good gifts unto your children; can find in your hearts, having it in the power of your hands, to give ſuitable proviſions for the ſupport and ſuſtenance of your children; how much more ſhall your father, which is in heaven; who is omniſcient and omnipotent; who knows the perſons and wants of his children, and what is proper for them, and is able to relieve them, being Lord of heaven and earth, give good things to them that aſk him? Not only temporal good things, as meat, drink, and clothing; but all ſpiritual good things; every ſupply of grace; all things pertaining to life and godlineſs. In Luke xi. 13. the holy ſpirit is mentioned, and ſo ſeems to deſign his gifts and graces, every thing that is neceſſary for the ſpiritual and eternal good of his people: but for theſe things he muſt be enquired of, and ſought after; and it is the leaſt ſaints can do to aſk for them; and they have encouragement enough to aſk; for 'tis but aſk and have.

Ver. 12. Therefore all things whatſoever, &c.] Theſe words are the epilogue, or concluſion of our Lord's diſcourſe; the ſum of what he had delivered in the two preceding chapters, and in this hitherto, is contained in theſe words: for they not only reſpect the exhortation about judging and reproving; but every duty reſpecting our neighbour; it is a ſummary of the whole. 'Tis a golden rule, here delivered, and ought to be obſerved by all mankind, Jews and Gentiles. So the Karaite Jews[l] ſay, "all "things that a man would not take to himſelf, "אין ראוי לעשותם לאחיו, it is not fit to do them "to his brethren." And Maimonides[m] has expreſſed it much in the ſame words our Lord here does; "all things whatſoever ye would that others ſhould "do to you, ſays he, do you the ſame to your "brethren, in the law, and in the commandments:" only there ſeems to be a reſtriction in the word brethren; the Jews, perhaps, meaning no other than Iſraelites; whereas our Lord's rule reaches to all, without exception, all things whatſoever ye would that men ſhould do to you, do ye even ſo to them: let them be who they will, whether brethren, or kinſmen, according to the fleſh, or what not; for this is the law and the prophets: the ſum of the law and the prophets; not the whole ſum of them, or the ſum of the whole law; but of that part of it which reſpects our neighbours. Remarkable is the advice given by Hillell[n], to one who came to be made a proſelyte by him; "whatſoever is hate"ful to thee, that do not thou to thy neighbour; "זו היא כל התורה כולה, this is all the whole "law, and the reſt is an explication of it, go and "be perfect:" yea, this rule is not only agreeable to the law of Moſes, and the prophets, but even to the law and light of nature. Ariſtotle being aſked, how we ought to carry ourſelves to our friends, anſwered[o], as we would wiſh they would carry it to us: Alexander Severus, a Heathen emperor, ſo greatly admired this rule of Chriſt's, that he ordered it to be written on the walls of his cloſet.

Ver. 13. Enter ye in at the ſtrait gate, &c.] By the ſtrait gate is meant Chriſt himſelf; who elſewhere calls himſelf the door, John x. 7—9. as he is into the church below, and into all the ordinances and privileges of it; as alſo to the father, by whom we have acceſs unto him, and are let into communion with him, and a participation of all the bleſſings of grace; yea, he is the gate of heaven, through which we have boldneſs to enter into the holieſt of all by faith and hope now; as there will be hereafter an abundant entrance into the kingdom and glory of God, thro' his blood and righteouſneſs. This is called ſtrait; becauſe faith in Chriſt, a profeſſion of it, and a life and converſation agreeable to it, are attended with many afflictions, temptations, reproaches, and perſecutions. Entering in at it is by faith, and making a profeſſion of it: hence it follows, that faith is not the gate itſelf, but the grace, by which men enter in at the right door, and walk on in Chriſt, as they begin with him. For wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to deſtruction; ſo that the one may be eaſily known from the other. There is no difficulty in finding out, or entering in at, or walking in the way of ſin, which leads to eternal ruin. The gate of carnal luſts, and worldly pleaſures, ſtands wide open, and many there be which go in thereat; even all men in a ſtate of nature: the way of the ungodly is broad, ſmooth, eaſy, and every way agreeable to the fleſh; it takes in a large compaſs of vices, and has in it abundance of company; but its end is deſtruction. Our Lord ſeems to allude to the private and publick roads, whoſe meaſures are fixed by the Jewiſh canons; which ſay[p], that "a pri"vate way was four cubits broad, a way from city "to city eight cubits, a publick way ſixteen cu"bits, and the way to the cities of refuge thirty"two cubits."

---

[l] R. Eliahu Addaret, c. 3. apud Trigland. de ſect. Karæorum, c. 10. p. 166. Vid. Tzeror Hammor, fol. 146. 4.

[m] Hilch. Ebel. c. 14. §. 1.

[n] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 31. 1. Maimon. in Miſn. Peah, c. 1. §. 1.

[o] Diog. Laert. in Vit. Ariſtotel. l. 5.

[p] T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 100. 1, 2. Vid. Maimon. & R. Sampſon in Miſn. Peah, c. 2. §. 1. & Maimon. in Sabbat, c. 1. §. 1.

Ver. 14. Becauſe ſtrait is the gate, and narrow is the way, &c.] And ſo, difficult to enter in at; and when entered, the way is unpleaſant to the fleſh to walk in, being hedged up on each ſide with afflictions and tribulations; and moreover, is like the narrow place, or ϛενος τοπος, the ſtrait place, as the Septuagint in Numb. xxii. 26. render it; in which the angel that met Balaam ſtood; and in which there was no turning to the right-hand or the left; and ſuch is the way to eternal happineſs. The great encouragement to walk on in it is, becauſe it is that way which leadeth unto life; unto eternal life: it certainly leads thither; it never fails of bringing perſons to it; believers in Chriſt, all that walk in Chriſt the way, though they are ſaid to be ſcarcely ſaved, by reaſon of their afflictions and trials, they meet with in their way to the kingdom; yet they are, and ſhall be certainly ſaved: they ſhall be ſafely brought to glory; which will be an abundant recompence for all the troubles and ſorrows that have attended them in their journey. And few there be that find it; the way, and ſo conſequently the life it leads to. The gate is ſtrait; ſmall and little, and ſo unobſerved: there is but one way to heaven, and the generality of men neglect it. The way is narrow, and ſo diſagreeable; the company few, and not engaging. Men chuſe large gates, broad ways, and much company. The fleſh loves to walk at liberty, unconfined, and uncontrolled, and with a multitude to do evil: hence, Zion's ways are thin of paſſengers; a ſmall number, comparatively ſpeaking, walk therein, and will be ſaved; a remnant, a little flock, a little city, and few men in it. 'Tis aſked in the Talmud[q], “why is the world to come “created with Jod? (the leaſt of the letters in “the Hebrew alphabet) the anſwer is, becauſe “צדיקים שבו מועטים, the righteous which are “in it are few.” Some read the words, as the Syriac, Arabic, and Vulgate Latin, with a note of admiration, how ſtrait is the gate! &c. and ſo ſome copies.

Ver. 15. Beware of falſe prophets, &c.] Or falſe teachers; for not ſuch who pretended to foretel things to come, but ſuch who ſet up themſelves to be teachers of others, are here meant; ſee 2 Pet. ii. 1. It may be queried, whether our Lord has not reſpect to the Scribes and Phariſees, who ſat in Moſes's chair, and taught, for doctrines, the commandments of men? and of whoſe doctrines he elſewhere bids men beware: for whatever plauſible pretences for holineſs and righteouſneſs might appear in them, they were repugnant to the word of God, and deſtructive to the ſouls of men; ſuch as their doctrines of free-will, juſtification by the works of the law, the traditions of the elders, &c. ſince it follows, which come to you in ſheeps clothing, but inwardly are ravenous wolves; for theſe loved to go in long clothing, Mark xii. 38. בטלית, in a garment which reached to the feet, and was made of the wool of ſheep. The Babyloniſh garment Achan ſaw and ſtole, Rab ſays[r] was, איצטלא דמילתא, a garment called melotes; which is the very Greek word the author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews uſes for ſheep-ſkins, perſecuted ſaints wandred about in, Heb. xi. 37. and the Gloſs upon the place in the Talmud referred to, ſays, that this was, טלית של צמר נקי, a Talith, or garment of pure wool; and Jarchi[s] ſays, that “it was the way of deceivers, and profane men, “to cover themſelves, בטליתם, with their Talith, “or long garment, as if they were righteous men, “that perſons might receive their lyes.” All which agrees very well with the Phariſees, who would have been thought to have been holy and righteous, humble, modeſt, and ſelf-denying men; when they were inwardly full of hypocriſy and iniquity, of rapine, oppreſſion, and covetouſneſs; and, under a pretence of religion, devoured widows houſes. Though, it ſeems, by what follows, that Chriſt has reſpect, at leaſt alſo, to ſuch, who bore his name, and came in his name, tho' not ſent by him, and called him Lord, and propheſied, and caſt out devils, and did many wonderful works in his name; who, that they might get the good-will and affections of the people, clothed themſelves, not in garments made of ſheeps wool, but in the very ſkins of ſheep, with the wool on them, in imitation of the true prophets, and good men of old; pretending great humility, and ſelf-denial, and ſo wore a rough garment to deceive, Zech. xiii. 4. when they were inwardly greedy dogs, grievous wolves, of inſatiable covetouſneſs; and, when opportunity offered, ſpared not the flock to ſatisfy their rapacious and devouring appetites. The Jews ſpeak of a wolfiſh humility; like that of the wolf in the fable, which put on a ſheep-ſkin. “There are ſome men, ſays one of their[t] writers, “who appear to be humble, and fear God in a de-“ceitful and hypocritical way, but inwardly lay “wait: this humility our wiſe men call ענוה זאבית, “wolfiſh humility.” Such is this our Lord inveighs againſt, and bids his followers beware of.

Ver. 16. Ye ſhall know them by their fruits, &c.] By fruits are meant, not ſo much their external works in life and converſation; for a falſe prophet may ſo behave, as not to be diſcovered thereby. So the Phariſees were outwardly righteous before men; and falſe teachers among Chriſtians may have the form of godlineſs, and keep it up, tho' they are ſtrangers to, and even deny the power of it: but their doctrines are here meant, and the effects of them. When doctrines are contrary to the perfections of God, repugnant to the ſcriptures of truth, tend to depreciate the perſon and offices, blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice of Chriſt, to leſſen the glory of God's grace, to exalt the creature, and to fill mens minds with notions of the purity, ſelf-ſufficiency, and ability of human nature; when they are calculated to feed the pride and vanity of men, to get money, and gain applauſe, to ſerve their own intereſts, and gratify mens luſts and paſſions, they may be eaſily diſcerned who they are, and from whence they come. The Jews have a proverb pretty much like this[u], בוצין מקטפיה ידיע, a gourd is known by its branches. The Gloſs upon it is, “it “is, as if it was ſaid, from the time it buds forth, “and goes out of the branch, it is known whether “it is good or no;” i. e. the goodneſs of the gourd is known by the fruit its branches bear. So a good preacher is known by the good doctrine he brings, and a bad one, by his unſound doctrine. Chriſt is not ſpeaking of theſe falſe prophets, as men, or as private profeſſors of religion, but as prophets, or teachers. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thiſtles? Grapes and figs were common fruit; there was great plenty of them in Judea; we often read of the gathering of them. It is a matter in diſpute with the doctors[w], “if a man intends “ללקט תאנים ולוקט ענבים, to gather figs, and “he gathers grapes, black ones, and he gathers “white ones, white ones, and he gathers black “ones, whether he is gulty of a ſin-offering or no.”

---

[q] T. Bab. Menachot, fol. 29. 2.

[r] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 41. 1.

[s] In Zech. xiii. 4.

[t] Abarbinel Nachalath Abot, fol. 192. 1. & 20. 1.

[u] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 48. 1.

[w] T. Bab. Ceritot, fol. 19. 1, 2.

One ſays he is, another [illegible] These words of Chriſt put me in [illegible] paſſage, which ſeems to ſpeak o[illegible]s [x]; "he that marries his d[illegible]lar, it is like to grapes of th[illegible]s of the vine, a thing beauti[illegible] but he that marries his dau[illegible] is like to grapes of the vin[illegible]th grapes of the thorn, a thing [illegible]eptable." Though ענבי, in the laſt [illegible] be taken for berries which grow on ſome thorn-buſhes, and not what are properly grap[illegible] do not grow upon, and are not to be gathered from thorns, and bramble-buſhes. The meaning of our Lord is, that from the falſe doctrines of men comes no good fruit of faith, holineſs, joy, peace, and comfort. Their doctrines are like thorns, which prick and pierce, give pain and uneaſineſs; and, like thiſtles, choak, and are unprofitable, afford no ſolid food and nouriſhment; yea, their words eat as do a canker, are contrary to vital religion and powerful godlineſs. This ſenſe I prefer: becauſe, on the one hand, it is poſſible for a falſe teacher to do works, which may be externally good; tho' indeed no good works, properly ſpeaking, can be performed by an unregenerate man, becauſe he has neither good principles to act from, nor good ends in view: and, on the other hand, a man deſtitute of the grace of God, and lives ill, may yet have right notions of the Goſpel, tho' he has no experimental knowledge and reliſh of it; but where falſe doctrines are imbibed, and propagated, no good fruit can follow upon it.

Ver. 17. Even ſo every good tree bringing forth good fruit, &c.] As is the tree, ſo is its fruit; if the tree is good, it will bring forth good fruit. The tree that brings forth good fruit, is good antecedent to the fruit it produces; its firſt good, and then puts forth good fruit: it is not the fruit that makes the tree good, but makes it appear to be ſo; but it is the goodneſs of the tree that makes the fruit good. As a good man does, and will do good works, but his works don't make him a good man; he is ſo before he performs good works, or he would never be able to do them; theſe make him appear to be a good man: ſo a good preacher, that has an experimental knowledge of the doctrines of the Goſpel, will deliver out ſound doctrine, who is firſt made ſo by the gifts and graces of the Spirit of God; and by ſearching the ſcriptures, and examining his doctrines by them, he will be known and appear to be a good miniſter of Jeſus Chriſt, nouriſhed up in the words of faith and good doctrine; and ſuch a good miniſter of the Goſpel, out of the good treaſure of Goſpel-truths put into his earthen veſſel, will bring forth, from time to time, good and excellent truths, to the edification and profit of thoſe that hear: but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit; if the tree is corrupt, the fruit will be corrupt; and as is the preacher, ſo will be his doctrines: if he is a corrupt preacher, or a man of a corrupt mind, deſtitute of the truth, his preaching will be ſuch as will tend to corrupt both the principles and practices of men; for ſuch evil men and ſeducers, out of the evil treaſure of falſe doctrines, which they have received into their judgments, will bring forth either more ſecretly or openly, evil tenets in their miniſtry, which prove of bad conſequence to the ſouls of men.

Ver. 18. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, &c.] A man that is imprincipled with the grace of God, has an experimental acquaintance with the Goſpel of Chriſt, and is guided by the Spirit of God into all truth, as it is in Jeſus, cannot knowingly deliver, maintain, and abide by any doctrine that is contrary to the glory of God's grace, and the perſon of Chriſt, the work of the Spirit, the fundamental doctrines of the bible; or what is repugnant to the experiences of God's people, and prejudicial to their ſouls. Neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. A corrupt preacher, one deſtitute of the truth of the Goſpel, reprobate concerning the faith, who never had any experience of the doctrines of grace, and denies them in the theory of them, can't, conſiſtent with himſelf, and his own principles, deliver, or preach good doctrine; or that which tends to produce any good fruit, either in the experience or lives of men. 'Tis true, a corrupt man, that is, an unregenerate man, may preach ſound doctrine, it being what he believes, tho' he has no experience of it: but then this man is not a corrupt tree, that is, a corrupt preacher, though a corrupt man. As our Lord means by a good tree, not a good man, barely, or one that is made ſo by the grace of God; but a good miniſter, one that is furniſhed by the Spirit of God, and is well inſtructed in the kingdom of heaven: ſo by a corrupt tree he does not mean a corrupt man, a man that is in a ſtate of nature, habitually and practically evil; but a corrupt preacher, a falſe prophet or teacher, that has ſucked in corrupt principles, and has nothing elſe in him, and therefore can bring forth no other.

Ver. 19. Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, &c.] Every preacher and teacher that does not bring the Goſpel of Chriſt with him, and plainly and faithfully preach it to the people, ſooner or later, is hewn down: however he may have appeared as a tall lofty cedar, and have carried it with a high hand againſt Chriſt and his Goſpel, ſpoke great ſwelling words of vanity, and behaved with much loftineſs and haughtineſs; yet the time comes on, when all this is bowed and made low, and the Lord alone is exalted: ſuch preachers are either cut off from the churches of Chriſt, or hewn down by death, and caſt into the fire; into the fire of hell; into the lake of fire and brimſtone, where the beaſt and falſe prophet ſhall be.

Ver. 20. Wherefore by their fruits ye ſhall know them.] This is the concluſion of the whole, and a repetition of what is before ſaid, the more to fix the rule of judgment upon their minds, and engage them to try men by their doctrines, and their doctrines by the ſtandard of the ſcriptures, and not believe every ſpirit; for with ſome care and diligence ſuch perſons may be detected, and the malignant influence of their miniſtry be prevented. The ſum of the whole is, that ordinarily, and generally ſpeaking, as men are, ſo are the doctrines they preach, and by them they may be known, and judged to be what they are. Chriſt here, and in the preceding verſes, is ſpeaking not of men of bad lives and converſations, who take upon them to teach others; for there is not ſo much reaſon to caution good men againſt theſe; they are eaſily detected, and generally diſcarded; but of men that put on ſheeps clothing, who pretended to much holineſs of life and converſation, and ſtrictneſs of religion; and under that diſguiſe delivered out the moſt corrupt and unwholeſome doctrines; which tended greatly to depreciate him and his grace, and to do damage to the ſouls of men.

Ver. 21. Not every one that ſaith unto me Lord, Lord, &c.] Not every one that calls Chriſt his Lord and Maſter, profeſſes ſubjection to him, or that calls upon his name, or is called by his name, or makes uſe of it in his publick miniſtrations. There are many who deſire to be called, and accounted Chriſtians, and who make mention of the name of Chriſt in their ſermons, only to take away their reproach, to cover themſelves, and gain credit with, and get into the affections and good-will of the people; but have no hearty love to Chriſt, nor true faith in him: nor is it their concern to preach his Goſpel, advance his glory, and promote his kingdom and intereſt; their chief view is to pleaſe men, aggrandize themſelves, and ſet up the power of human nature in oppoſition to the grace of God, and the righteouſneſs of Chriſt. Now not every one of theſe, no, not any of them, ſhall enter into the kingdom of heaven. This is to be underſtood not of the outward diſpenſation of the Goſpel, or the Goſpel church-ſtate, or the viſible church of Chriſt on earth, in which ſenſe this phraſe is ſometimes uſed; becauſe ſuch perſons may, and often do, enter here; but of eternal glory, into which, none ſhall enter, but he that doeth the will of my father which is in heaven. This, as it may regard private chriſtians, intends not merely outward obedience to the will of God, declared in his law, nor barely ſubjection to the ordinances of the Goſpel; but more eſpecially faith in Chriſt for life and ſalvation; which is the ſource of all true evangelical obedience, and without which nothing is acceptable to God. He that ſeeth the ſon, looks unto him, ventures on him, commits himſelf to him, truſts in him, relies on him, and believes on him for righteouſneſs, ſalvation, and eternal life, he it is that does the will of the father, and he only; and ſuch an one, as he is deſirous of doing the will of God in all acts of chearful obedience to it, without dependance thereon; ſo he ſhall certainly enter the kingdom of heaven, and have everlaſting life; ſee John vi. 40. but as theſe words chiefly reſpect preachers, the ſenſe of them is this, that only ſuch who are faithful diſpenſers of the word ſhall enter into the joy of their Lord. Such do the will of Chriſt's father, and ſo his own, which are the ſame, who fully and faithfully preach the Goſpel of the grace of God; who declare the whole counſel of God, and keep back nothing that is profitable to the ſouls of men; who are neither aſhamed of the teſtimony of Chriſt, nor afraid of the faces of men; but as they are put in truſt with the Goſpel, ſo they ſpeak it boldly, with all ſincerity, not as pleaſing men, but God, and commend themſelves to every man's conſcience in the ſight of God: ſuch as theſe ſhall have an abundant entrance into the kingdom and glory of God. The Vulgate Latin adds this clauſe, he ſhall enter into the kingdom of heaven, and ſo does Munſter's Hebrew edition of the Goſpel according to Matthew.

---

[x] T. Bab. Peſachim, fol. 49. 1.

Ver. 22. Many will ſay to me in that day, Lord, Lord, &c.] That is, in the laſt day, the day of judgment, the great and famous day, fixed by God, unknown to angels and men, which will be terrible to ſome, and joyful to others; the day in which the faithful miniſters of the Goſpel ſhall be owned by Chriſt, and received into the kingdom of heaven: many, not of the common people only, but of the preachers of the word, who have filled up the higheſt ſtation in the church below; not one, or two, or a few of them only, but many of them will ſay to me; to Chriſt, who will appear then as the judge of quick and dead, to which he is ordained by his father, Lord, Lord; not my Lord, my Lord, as the Syriac verſion reads it; for they'll not be able to claim any intereſt in him, though they'll be obliged to own his dominion, power, and authority over them. The word is repeated to ſhew their importunity, ſenſe of danger, the confuſion they'll be in, the wretched diſappointment they will have; and therefore ſpeak as perſons amazed and confounded, having expected they would have been the firſt perſons that ſhould be admitted into heaven. Their pleas follow; have we not propheſied in thy name? This may be underſtood either of foretelling things to come; which gift wicked men may have, who have never had any experience of the grace of God, as Balaam, and Caiaphas, and others; or rather of preaching the word, which is ſometimes called propheſying, Rom. xii. 6. 1 Cor. xiii. 9. and xiv. 1—3, 4, 5. and which may be done in the name of Chriſt, pretending miſſion and authority from him, and to be preachers of him, and yet be no better than ſounding braſs, or a tinkling cymbal; yea, nothing at all as to true grace, or ſpiritual experience. And in thy name have caſt out devils? Diabolical poſſeſſions were very frequent in the times of Chriſt; no doubt but they were ſuffered, that Jeſus might have an opportunity of ſhewing his power over ſatan, by diſpoſſeſſing him from the bodies, as well as the ſouls of men; and of giving proof of his deity, divine ſon-ſhip and meſſiah-ſhip: and this power of caſting out devils was given to others, not only to the twelve apoſtles, among whom Judas was, who had the ſame power with the reſt, and to the ſeventy diſciples; but even to ſome who did not follow him, and his diſciples, Mark ix. 38. and ſome did this in the name of Jeſus, who don't appear to have any true faith in him, and knowledge of him; as the vagabond Jews, exorciſts, and the ſeven ſons of Sceva, Acts xix. 13, 14. An awful conſideration it is, that men ſhould be able to caſt out devils, and at laſt be caſt to the devil. And in thy name done many wonderful works? that is, many miracles; not one, or a few only, but many; ſuch as ſpeaking with tongues, removing mountains, treading on ſerpents and ſcorpions, and drinking any deadly thing without hurt, and healing all manner of diſeaſes and ſickneſſes. Judas, for one, was capable of pleading all theſe things; he had the gift of preaching, and a call from Chriſt to it, and yet a caſtaway; he had the power of caſting out devils, and yet could not prevent the devil from entering into him; he could perform miracles, do wonders in Chriſt's name, and yet, at laſt, was the betrayer of him. Theſe pleas and arguments will be of no uſe to him, nor of any avail to any at the great day. It may be obſerved, that theſe men lay the whole ſtreſs of their ſalvation upon what they have done in Chriſt's name; and not on Chriſt himſelf, in whom there is ſalvation, and in no other: they ſay not a ſyllable of what Chriſt has done and ſuffered, only of what they have done. Indeed, the things they inſtance in, are the greateſt done among men; the gifts they had were the moſt excellent, excepting the grace of God; the works they did, were of an extraordinary nature; whence it follows, that there can be no ſalvation, nor is it to be expected from men's works: for if preaching the word, which is attended with ſo much ſtudy, care, and labour, will not be a prevailing argument to admit men into the kingdom of heaven; how can it be thought that ever reading, or hearing, or any other external performance of religion, ſhould bring perſons thither?

Ver. 23. Then will I profeſs unto them, &c.] Publickly before men and angels, at the day of judgment, I never knew you; which muſt be underſtood conſiſtent with the omniſcience of Chriſt; for as the omniſcient God he knew their perſons and their works, and that they were workers of iniquity; he knew what they had been doing all their days under the guiſe of religion; he knew the principles of all their actions, and the views they had in all they did; nothing is hid from him. But, as words of knowledge often carry in them the ideas of affection, and approbation, ſee Pſ. i. 6. 2 Tim. ii. 19. the meaning of Chriſt here is, I never had any love, or affection for you; I never eſteemed you; I never made any account of you, as mine, as belonging to me; I never approved of you, nor your conduct; I never had any converſe, communication, nor ſociety with you, nor you with me. The Perſic verſion reads it, I have not known you of old, from ancient times, or from everlaſting; I never knew you in my father's choice, and my own, nor in my father's gift to me, nor in the everlaſting covenant of grace; I never knew you as my ſheep, for whom, in time, I died, and called by name; I never knew you believe in me, nor love me, or mine; I have ſeen you in my houſe, preaching in my name, and at my table adminiſtring mine ordinance; but I never knew you exalt my perſon, blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice; you talk of the works you have done, I never knew you do one good work in all your lives, with a ſingle eye to my glory; wherefore, I'll neither hear, nor ſee you; I have nothing to do with you. In this ſenſe the phraſe is uſed in the Talmud[y]: "Bar Kaphra went to viſit R. Juda; "he ſays to him, Bar Kaphra, איני מכירך מעולם, "I never knew thee." The Gloſs upon it is, "he "intimates, that he would not ſee him." So here, Chriſt declares, he knew them not; that is, he did not like them; he would not admit them into his preſence and glory; but ſaid, depart from me, ye workers of iniquity. The former of theſe expreſſions contains the awful ſentence pronounced by Chriſt, the judge; which is, baniſhment from his preſence, than which nothing is more terrible: for as it is his preſence that makes heaven, it is his abſence that makes hell; and this ſuppoſes a place and ſtate, whither they are baniſhed; which is elſewhere called their own place, the lake which burns with fire and brimſtone; everlaſting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels. Departure from Chriſt's preſence is the puniſhment of loſs, and being ſent to everlaſting burnings, is the puniſhment of ſenſe; and the whole, as it is an inſtance of ſtrict juſtice, ſo a diſplay of Chriſt's almighty power. The latter expreſſion contains the character of theſe perſons, and in it a reaſon of their puniſhment; they were workers of iniquity: it may be, neither adulterers, nor murderers, nor drunkards, nor extortioners, nor thieves, or any other openly profane ſinners; but inaſmuch as they did the work of the Lord deceitfully, preached themſelves, and not Chriſt; ſought their own things, and not his; what they did, they did with a wicked mind, and not with a view to his glory; they wrought iniquity, whilſt they were doing the very things they pleaded on their own behalf, for their admiſſion into the kingdom of heaven. Some copies read, all the workers of iniquity, as in Pſ. vi. 8. from whence the words are taken.

Ver. 24. Therefore whoſoever heareth theſe ſayings of mine, &c.] The compariſon in this, and the following verſes, is the concluding part of our Lord's diſcourſes upon the mount, which are meant by theſe ſayings, or doctrines, he here ſpeaks of; and as he had in ſome foregoing verſes chiefly reſpect to preachers, ſo here, to hearers, his diſciples and followers in general. The ſubject of this compariſon, in Luke vi. 47. is, whoſoever cometh unto me; as all that are given to Chriſt by the father will do, ſooner or later: ſuch whom he encourages to come to him, are they that labour and are heavy laden; and they that come aright, come as poor periſhing ſinners; they believe in him, give up themſelves to him, to be ſaved by him with an everlaſting ſalvation; all which is owing to efficacious grace. Theſe hear his ſayings, as doctrines, not merely externally, but internally, having ears to hear given unto them, ſo as to underſtand them, love them, believe them, feel the power, taſte the ſweetneſs, and have a delightful reliſh of them; and ſuch an one hears them, and doth them: he is not only an hearer, but a doer of the word of the Goſpel; the doctrines of it he receives in the love of them, and exerciſes faith on them; upon Chriſt, his grace and righteouſneſs held forth in them; which is the great work and buſineſs of a Chriſtian, he is to do, and does do in this life: the ordinances of it he chearfully obeys; and all the duties of religion he performs from love to Chriſt, without any view to obtain eternal life hereby, which he only expects from Chriſt, as his ſayings and doctrines direct him. The compariſon follows, I will liken him to a wiſe man, which built his houſe upon a rock. Luke ſays, he is like a man which built an houſe, and digged deep, and laid the foundation on a rock. Every believer is a builder; the houſe he builds, is his own ſoul, and the ſalvation of it; in order to which he digs deep, till he comes to a rock, to a good foundation; he ſearches diligently into the ſcriptures of truth; he conſtantly attends the miniſtry of the word; he enquires of Goſpel-preachers, and other ſaints, the way of ſalvation; which having found, he lays the whole ſtreſs of his ſalvation on the rock of ages, which rock is Chriſt: he makes him the foundation of all his hope of eternal life and happineſs; which is the foundation God has laid in Zion; and which has been laid miniſterially by the prophets of the Old, and the apoſtles of the New Teſtament; and by believers themſelves, when they build their faith and hope upon it. This foundation, the perſon, blood, and righteouſneſs of Chriſt is as a rock, firm and ſtrong, will bear the whole weight that is laid upon it; it is ſure and certain, it will never give way; 'tis immoveable and everlaſting; the houſe built upon it ſtands ſafe and ſure.

Ver. 25. And the rains deſcended, and the floods came, &c.] Theſe ſeveral metaphors of rain, floods, ſtream, and winds, may deſign the temptations of ſatan, the perſecutions of the world, the corruptions of a man's own heart, and the errors and falſe doctrines of men; from all which ſuch a man is ſafe, who is built upon the rock Chriſt Jeſus; ſee Iſ. xxxii. 2. not but that the rain of temptation may deſcend upon him, with great violence and force, but ſhall not beat him down; he ſhall be made able to bear the whole force of it; the gates of hell can't prevail againſt him; the floods of perſecution may be caſt after him, but ſhall not carry him away; the ſtream of corruption may run ſtrong againſt him, yet ſhall not over-ſet him; and the wind of divers and ſtrange doctrines may blow hard upon him, but not caſt him down: ſome damage he may receive by theſe ſeveral things, but ſhall not be deſtroyed; he may be ſhaken by them, but not ſo as to be removed off of the foundation, on which he is laid; yea, he may fall from ſome degree of the ſtedfaſtneſs of his faith, but not ſo as to fall totally and finally; the reaſon is, becauſe he is founded on the rock Chriſt Jeſus, which is ſure and immoveable: whence it appears that ſuch a man acts the wiſe and prudent part, and may be truly called a wiſe man.

---

[y] T. Bab. Moed Katon, fol. 16. 1.

Ver. 26. And every one that heareth theſe ſayings of mine, &c.] Who only externally hears them, but has no underſtanding of them; don't believe them, nor like and approve of them, but hates and deſpiſes them; or if not, depends upon his external hearing of them, and contents himſelf with a ſpeculative knowledge, without the practice of them, and doth them not; does not yield the obedience of faith to the doctrines of the Goſpel, nor ſubmits to the ordinances of it, but neglects them, and all other duties of religion: or if he does obey, it is only outwardly, not from the heart; nor from a principle of love; nor in faith; nor in the name and ſtrength of Chriſt; nor for the glory of God, but in order to obtain life for himſelf: ſuch ſhall be likened unto a fooliſh man, which built his houſe upon the ſand; or, as Luke has it, without a foundation upon the earth; upon the ſurface of the earth, without digging into it for a foundation: and ſuch may be ſaid to build without a foundation, who pretend to make their peace with God, by their own works; who hope for pardon on the foot of the mercy of God, and their own repentance; ſeek for juſtification by their own, and not the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; look for acceptance with God, for the ſake of their own worthineſs; and who expect ſalvation in any other way than by Chriſt: as in each of theſe articles, they leave out Chriſt, they may be ſaid to build without a foundation indeed, and to build upon the ſurface of the earth; as they do, who build their hope of ſalvation upon any thing that is merely external; as, their riches and grandeur, their wiſdom and learning, their natural deſcent, and religious education, their civility, courteouſneſs, and what is called good nature, their liberality and alms-deeds, their morality, common juſtice and honeſty, their legal righteouſneſs, whether moral or ritual, and a round of religious duties; and ſuch may be ſaid, to build upon the ſand, on that which will bear no weight, but gives way, and ſinks. The ſalvation of the ſoul is a weighty thing; and that which is like ſand, as is every thing of a man's own, can never ſupport it: God has therefore laid the ſalvation of his people on his own ſon; and he muſt be a fooliſh man that builds on any thing ſhort of him.

Ver. 27. And the rain deſcended, and the floods came, &c.] Such builders, and ſuch a building, can't ſtand againſt the violent rain of ſatan's temptations, the floods of the world's perſecutions, the ſtream and rapid torrent of their own heart's luſts, nor the blowing winds of hereſy and falſe doctrine, and much leſs the ſtorms of divine wrath and vengeance. They are in a moſt dangerous condition; they can't ſupport themſelves; they muſt fall, and great will be their fall; their deſtruction is inevitable, their ruin is irrecoverable. The Jews make uſe of ſome ſimilies, which are pretty much like theſe of Chriſt's. "R. Eliezer ben Azariah uſed " to ſay [z], he whoſe wiſdom is greater than his " works, to what is he like? to a tree, whoſe " branches are many, and its roots few, and the " wind comes, and roots it up, and overturns it; as " it is ſaid, Jer. xvii. 6. but he whoſe works are " greater than his wiſdom, to what is he like? to " a tree, whoſe branches are few, and its roots " many, againſt which, if all the winds in the world " were to come and blow, they could not move it " out of its place; as it is ſaid, Jer. xvii. 8." Again [a], " Eliſha ben Abuijah uſed to ſay, a man " who hath good works, and learns the law much, " to what is he like? to a man that builds with " ſtones below, and afterwards with bricks; and " though באים מים הרבה, many waters come, " and ſtand at their ſide, they cannot remove them " out of their place; but a man who hath no good " works, and learns the law, to what is he like? " to a man that builds with bricks firſt, and afterwards with ſtones; and tho' few waters come, " they immediately overturn them." The ſame uſed to ſay, " a man who hath good works, and " learns the law much, to what is he like? to mortar " ſpread upon bricks; and tho' יורדין עליו גשמים, " the rains deſcend upon it, they can't remove it out " of its place: a man that hath no good works, " and learns the law much, to what is he like? " to mortar thrown upon bricks; and tho' but a " ſmall rain deſcends upon it, it is immediately " diſſolved, and falls."

Ver. 28. And it came to paſs, when Jeſus had ended theſe ſayings, &c.] Delivered in this, and the two foregoing chapters, concerning true happineſs; the duty and uſefulneſs of Goſpel-miniſters; the true ſenſe and meaning of ſeveral commandments in the law; concerning alms, prayer, and faſting; concerning the care of worldly things, raſh judging, rigid cenſures, and reproofs; the ſtraitneſs and narrowneſs of the way to eternal life, and the largeneſs and breadth of the way to deſtruction; concerning falſe prophets, and the right hearing of the word. The people were aſtoniſhed at his doctrine; it being ſomething new, and unheard-of, what they had not been uſed to; and coming in the demonſtration of the ſpirit, and of power, it carried its own evidence along with it, wrought conviction in their minds, and obliged them to acknowledge the truth of it.

Ver. 29. For he taught them, as one having authority, &c.] This does not ſo much reſpect the ſubject-matter of his miniſtry, the gravity, weight, and ſolidity of his doctrine; which, to be ſure, was greatly different from that of the Scribes, which chiefly lay in propoſing and handling things trivial, and of no moment; ſuch as the rituals of the law, the tradition of the elders, or waſhing of the hands and cups, &c. nor merely the manner of his delivery, which was with great affection, ardour, and fervency of ſpirit, with much liberty and utterance of ſpeech, and with wonderful perſpicuity and majeſty; in which alſo he differed from the Scribes, who taught, in a cold and lifeleſs manner, without any ſpirit and power: but this chiefly regards the method he uſed in preaching, which was by delivering truths of himſelf in his own name, and by his own authority; often uſing thoſe words, but I ſay unto you: he ſpoke as a lawgiver, as one that had authority from heaven, and not from men; and not as the Scribes, who uſed to ſay, when they delivered any thing to the people, our Rabbins, or our wiſe men ſay ſo and ſo: ſuch as were on the ſide of Hillell made uſe of his name; and thoſe who were on the ſide of Shammai made uſe of his name; ſcarce ever would they venture to ſay any thing of themſelves, but ſaid, the ancient doctors ſay thus and thus: almoſt innumerable inſtances might be given, out of the Talmud, in which one Rabbi ſpeaks in the name of another; but our Lord ſpoke boldly, of himſelf, in his own name, and did not go about to ſupport his doctrine by the teſtimony of the elders; but ſpake, as having received power and authority, as man, from his father, and not as the Scribes. Some copies add, and Phariſees; theſe generally going together; and ſo read the Vulgate Latin, the Syriac, the Perſic verſions, and the Hebrew edition of Matthew by Munſter.

---

[z] Pirke Abot, c. 3. §. 17. & Abot R. Nathan, c. 22. fol. 6. 1, 2.

[a] Abot R. Nathan, c. 24. fol. 6. 2.

CHAP. VIII.

Ver. 1. WHEN he was come down from the mountain, &c.] Into which he went up, and preached the ſermon recorded in the three preceding chapters: great multitudes followed him; which is mentioned, partly to ſhew, that the people which came from ſeveral parts, ſtill continued with him, being affected with his diſcourſes and miracles; and partly on account of the following miracle, of healing the leper, which was not done in a corner, but before great multitudes, who were witneſſes of it: tho' ſome think this miracle was wrought more privately.

Ver. 2. And behold there came a leper, &c.] As ſoon as he came down from the mountain, and whilſt he was in the way; though Luke ſays, ch. v. when he was in a certain city; in one of the cities of Galilee; one of their large towns, or unwalled cities, into which a leper might come: he might not come into walled [b] towns, at leaſt they might turn him out, tho' without puniſhment; for the canon runs thus [c], "a leper that enters into Jeruſalem is to be beaten; but if he enters into any of the other walled towns, tho' he has no right, as it is ſaid, he ſitteth alone, he is not to be beaten." Beſides, this leper, as Luke ſays, was full of leproſy, ch. v. 12. ſee the note there; and he might be pronounced clean by the prieſt, tho' not healed, and ſo might go into any city or ſynagogue: the law concerning ſuch an one, in Lev. xiii. is a very ſurprizing one; that if only there were ſome riſings and appearances of the leproſy here and there, the man was unclean; but if the leproſy covered all his fleſh, then he was pronounced clean; and ſuch was this man: he was a very lively emblem of a poor vile ſinner, full of ſin and iniquity, who is brought to ſee himſelf all over covered with ſin, when he comes to Chriſt for pardon and cleanſing; and is ſo conſidered by Chriſt the high-prieſt, when he applies his juſtifying righteouſneſs and ſin-purging blood to his conſcience. A leper, by the Jews [d], is called רשע, a wicked man; for they ſuppoſe leproſy comes upon him for evil ſpeaking. This account is uſhered in with a behold, as a note of admiration and attention, expreſſing the wonderfulneſs of the miracle wrought, and the ſeaſonableneſs of it to confirm the doctrines Chriſt had been preaching to the multitude. This man came of his own accord, having heard of the fame of Chriſt; and worſhipped him in a civil and reſpectful way, ſhewing great reverence to him as a man; which he did by falling down on his knees, and on his face; proſtrating himſelf before him, in a very humble and ſubmiſſive manner, as the other Evangeliſts relate: for that he worſhipped him as God, is not ſo manifeſt; tho' it is certain he had an high opinion of him, and great faith in him; which he very modeſtly expreſſes, ſaying, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canſt make me clean: he was fully aſſured of his power, that he could make him clean, entirely rid him of his leproſy, which the prieſt could not do; who could only, according to the law, pronounce him clean, ſo that he might be admitted to company, but could not heal him of his diſeaſe: this the poor man was perſuaded Chriſt could do for him, and humbly ſubmits it to his will; of which, as yet, he had no intimation from him. And thus it is with poor ſenſible ſinners under firſt awakenings; they can believe in the ability of Chriſt to juſtify them by his righteouſneſs, cleanſe them by his blood, and ſave them by his grace to the uttermoſt; but they ſtick at, and heſitate about his willingneſs, by reaſon of their own vileneſs and unworthineſs.

Ver. 3. And Jeſus put forth his hand, and touched him, &c.] This is a wonderful inſtance both of the grace, and goodneſs of Chriſt, in touching this loathſome creature; and of his unſpotted purity and holineſs, which could not be defiled by it; and of his mighty power in healing by a touch, and with a word of his mouth, ſaying, I will, be thou clean: in which he expreſſes at once his willingneſs, I will, of which the leper before was not certain; and his power by a word of command, be thou clean; and in which alſo is ſhewn the readineſs of Chriſt to do it: he did not ſtand parlying with the man, or making any further trial of his faith, or objecting to him his uncleanneſs; but at once ſtretches out his hand, touches his filthy fleſh, and commands off the diſorder. A great encouragement this, for poor ſenſible ſinners to betake themſelves to Chriſt, under a ſenſe of their guilt and filth; who readily receives ſuch, in no wiſe caſts them out, but gives immediate diſcoveries of his power and grace unto them. And immediately his leproſy was cleanſed, or he was cleanſed from it; he was not only pronounced clean, but was made ſo; he was thoroughly healed of the diſeaſe of leproſy. The Jews themſelves acknowledge this fact; for ſo they tell us in their wicked and blaſphemous book [e], that Jeſus ſhould ſay, "bring me a leper, and I will heal him; and they brought him a leper, and he healed him alſo by Shemhamphoraſh," i. e. by the ineffable name Jehovah. Tho' they greatly miſrepreſent the matter; for this man was not brought by others, at the requeſt of Chriſt, but came of his own accord; nor was he healed by the uſe of any name, as if it was done by a ſort of magic, but by a touch of his hand, and the word of his mouth. Whether this was the ſame man with Simon the leper, Matt. xxvi. 6. as ſome have thought, is not certain.

Ver. 4. And Jeſus ſaith unto him, ſee thou tell no man, &c.] Not that this fact could be concealed, if it was done publickly, before the multitude; nor was it Chriſt's deſign that it ſhould be; only it was his counſel to this man, that whilſt he was on the road to Jeruſalem, and when he was come there, that he would ſpeak of it to no man, before he came to the prieſt, or prieſts; leſt out of ill will to Chriſt, they ſhould refuſe to pronounce him clean: but go thy way, ſhew thyſelf to the prieſt, and offer the gift that Moſes commanded, for a teſtimony unto them. The man was now in one of the cities of Galilee; from hence Chriſt orders him to make the beſt of his way, directly to Jeruſalem; and preſent himſelf to one of the prieſts, by him to be examined, whether he was free of his leproſy; and then offer what was ordered by the law of Moſes in ſuch caſes: for as yet the ceremonial law was not aboliſhed; and therefore, as Chriſt was ſubject to it himſelf, ſo he enjoins others the obſervance of it. There was a twofold offering, according to the law of Moſes, on account of the cleanſing of the leper; ſee Lev. xiv. the one was on the firſt day of his cleanſing, when he firſt ſhewed himſelf to the prieſt, and conſiſted of two birds, alive and clean, cedar-wood, ſcarlet, and hyſſop; the other, and which was properly the offering on the eighth day, was, if the man was able, two he-lambs and one ew-lamb, with a meat offering; but if poor, one lamb, with a meat offering, and two turtle doves, or two young pidgeons. The Jewiſh canons, concerning this matter, are as follow [f]; "when a leper is healed of his leproſy, after they have cleanſed him with cedar wood, and hyſſop, and ſcarlet, and the two birds, and have ſhaved all his fleſh, and bathed him; after all this he enters into Jeruſalem, and numbers ſeven days; and on the ſeventh day he ſhaves a ſecond time, as he ſhaved at firſt, and bathes—and on the morrow, or eighth day, he bathes a ſecond time, and after that they offer his offerings—he bathes on the eighth day in the court of the women, in the chamber of the lepers, which is there—if it is delayed, and he ſhaves not on the ſeventh day, but he ſhaves on the eighth, or ſome days after, on the day that he ſhaves, he bathes, and his ſun ſets; and on the morrow he brings his offerings, after he hath bathed a ſecond time, as we have declared: how do they do unto him? The leper ſtands without the court of Iſrael, over againſt the eaſtern gate, in the gate of Nicanor, and his face to the weſt; and there ſtand all they that want atonement; and there they give the bitter waters to the ſuſpected women: and the prieſt takes the leper's treſpaſs offering, while it is alive, and waves it with the log of oil, towards the eaſt, according to the way of all wave offerings; and if he waves this by itſelf, and this by itſelf, it is right: after that he brings the leper's treſpaſs offering to the door, and he brings it in both his hands into the court, and layeth them upon it; they ſlay it immediately, and two prieſts receive its blood; the one receives it in a veſſel, and ſprinkles it upon the top of the altar; and the other, in his right hand, and pours it into his left hand, and ſprinkles with his finger the right hand; and if he repeats it, and receives it in his left hand firſt, it is unlawful. The prieſt that receives ſome of the blood in a veſſel, carries it, and ſprinkles it upon the altar firſt; and after that comes the prieſt, who receives the blood in the palm of his hand, to the leper, the prieſt being within, and the leper without; and the leper puts in his head, and the prieſt puts of the blood that is in the palm of his hand, upon the tip of his right ear; after that he puts in his right hand, and he puts of it on the thumb of his hand; and after that he putteth in his right foot, and he puts of it upon the toe of his foot, and if he puts of it upon the left, it is not right; and after that he offers his ſin offering, and his burnt offering: and after that he hath put the blood upon his thumb and toe, the prieſt takes of the log of oil, and pours it into the left hand of his fellow-prieſt; and if he pours it into his own hand, it will do; and he dips the finger of his right hand into the oil, which is in his hand, and ſprinkles it ſeven times towards the moſt holy place: at every ſprinkling there is a dipping of the finger in the oil; and if he ſprinkles, and does not intend it, over againſt the holy place, 'tis right; and after that, he comes to the leper, and puts of the oil upon the place of the blood of the treſpaſs offering, on the tip of the ear, and on the thumb of his hand, and toe of his foot; and that which is left of the oil, that is in his hand, he puts it on the head of him that is to be cleanſed; and if he puts it not, atonement is not made; and the reſt of the log is divided among the prieſts; and what remains of the log is not eaten, but in the court, by the males of the prieſts, as the reſt of the holy things; and its forbidden to eat of the log of oil, until he has ſprinkled it ſeven times, and has put of it upon the thumb and toe; and if he eats, he is to be beaten, as he that eats holy things before ſprinkling." Now theſe were the things, which, as the other Evangeliſts ſay, this leper was ordered to offer for his cleanſing, for a teſtimony unto them; meaning either to the prieſts; for the Syriac and Perſic verſions read the former clauſe, ſhew thyſelf to the prieſts, in Luke xvii. 4. that they being ſatisfied of the healing and cleanſing of this man, and accordingly pronouncing him clean, and accepting his offerings, this might be either a convincing teſtimony to them, that Jeſus was the ſon of God, and true Meſſiah, and that he did not deny or oppoſe the law given by Moſes; or might be a ſtanding teſtimony againſt them, ſhould they continue in unbelief; or elſe to the Jews, who ſaw the miracle, and heard the orders Chriſt gave to the man after he had healed him; or to the lepers that they were cleanſed; or this law of Moſes was for a teſtimony or ſtatute to be always obſerved by them in ſuch caſes.

---

[b] Miſn. Celim. c. 1. §. 7.

[c] Maimon. Biath Hamikdaſh, c. 3. §. 8. & in Miſn. Celim. c. 1. §. 8.

[d] Maimon. in Miſn. Negaim, c. 12. §. 5. & Bartenora in ib. §. 6.

[e] Toldos Jeſu, p. 8.

Ver. 5. And when Jeſus was entered into Capernaum, &c.] Was returned from his journey thro' Galilee, to the place where he before dwelt, and is called his own city, ch. ix. 1. there came unto him a centurion, a Roman officer, שר מאה, a commander of an hundred men, as the Hebrew Goſpel by Munſter reads it: tho' the number of men under a centurion was more, according to ſome accounts. "A band, 'tis ſaid [g], made two centuries, each of which conſiſted of an hundred and twenty-eight ſoldiers; for a doubled century made a band, whoſe governor was called an ordinary centurion." Such an one was Cornelius, a centurion of a band, Acts x. 1. The other perſon that was healed was a Jew. The next inſtance of Chriſt's power and goodneſs, is the ſervant of a Gentile; he came to do good both to Jews and Gentiles; beſeeching him, not in perſon, but by his meſſengers; ſee Luke vii. 3. and the Jews [h] ſay, ששלוחו של אדם כמותו, that a man's meſſenger is as himſelf.

Ver. 6. And ſaying, Lord, my ſervant lieth at home, &c.] It would be a difficulty whether it was a ſon or a ſervant he was ſo concerned for; ſince παις, the word here uſed, more commonly ſignifies a ſon or child; but that Luke, ſuppoſing it to be the ſame caſe he relates, expreſsly calls him δουλος, a ſervant, Luke vii. 2. The concern of the centurion for him, ſhews him to have been a good ſervant, faithful and obedient to his maſter; ſince he was ſo much affected with his caſe, and took ſo much care of him; and Luke ſays, he was dear unto him; in great eſteem, highly valued, and much beloved: and alſo, that the centurion was a good maſter; he does not put his ſick ſervant from him, but takes care of him at home, and ſeeks out for relief for him; being greatly deſirous of his life. And as his keeping him at home diſcovered a tender regard to him; ſo his not bringing him forth, or ordering him to be brought out to Chriſt, which was ſome times done in ſuch caſes, ſhews his great faith in Chriſt, that he was as able to cure him lying at home, as if brought before him; abſent, as well as preſent. 'Tis in the original text, is caſt; or, as it is rendered, ver. 14. laid in the houſe, as if he was dead, ſpeechleſs, and without motion; and Luke ſays, that he was ready to die, being as one laid out for dead. The phraſe anſwers to מוטל, a word often uſed by the Rabbins; ſometimes of ſick perſons, as when they ſay [i] of any one, that he is חולה ומוטל במטה, ſick, and laid upon the bed; and ſometimes of a perſon really dead, and laid out: and often this phraſe is to be met with, מי שמתו מוטל לפניו, he that hath his dead caſt, or laid out before him [k]; concerning whom they diſpute many things; as what he is free from, the reading of Shema, prayer, and the phylacteries; and where he ought to eat and drink till ſuch time his dead is buried out of his ſight. But this man's ſervant was not dead, but lay as one dead; ſick of the palſy, his nerves all relaxed, and he ſtupid, ſenſeleſs, motionleſs, grievouſly tormented, or puniſhed, or rather afflicted; as the Ethiopic verſion, and Munſter's Hebrew edition read it; for paralytick perſons don't feel much pain and torment: but the meaning is, that he was in a miſerable afflicted condition. The account of his diſorder is given to move Chriſt's compaſſion, and recorded to ſhew the greatneſs of the miracle.

---

[f] Maimon. Hilchot Mechoſre Capporah, c. 14. per totum.

[g] Alex. ab Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 6. c. 13.

[h] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 34. 2.

Ver. 7. And Jeſus ſaith unto him, I will come, and heal him.] This anſwer of Chriſt's, which is ſhort and full, not only ſhews the readineſs of Chriſt to do good, how ſoon and eaſily he complied with the centurion's requeſt, it being a prayer of faith, and ſo effectual, and was heard as ſoon as delivered; but alſo contains an abſolute promiſe that he would heal him. He does not ſay that he would come and ſee him, and what his caſe was, and do what he could for him, as ordinary phyſicians do; but he would come and heal him at once: and indeed 'tis a propoſal of more than what was aſked of him; his preſence was not aſked, and yet he offered it; tho' Luke ſays, that he beſought him by the meſſengers to come and heal his ſervant; and ſo this is an anſwer to both parts of the requeſt; the whole is granted. Chriſt can't deny any thing to faith, his preſence or aſſiſtance.

Ver. 8. The centurion anſwered, and ſaid, &c.] This, according to Luke vii. 6. was ſaid by his friends in his name, when he underſtood that Chriſt had agreed to come to his houſe, with the elders of the Jews, he firſt ſent to him; and after he was actually ſet out with them, and was in the way to his houſe; who, conſcious of his own unworthineſs, deputes ſome perſons to him, to addreſs him in this manner, Lord, I am not worthy that thou ſhouldſt come under my roof. This is not ſaid as rejecting and deſpiſing the preſence and company of Chriſt; but is expreſſive of his great modeſty and humility, and of his conſciouſneſs of his own vileneſs and unworthineſs, of having ſo great a perſon in his houſe: it was too great a favour for him to enjoy. And if ſuch a man was unworthy, having been an idolater, and lived a profane courſe of life, that Chriſt ſhould come into his houſe, and be, tho' but for a ſhort time, under his roof; how much more unworthy are poor ſinful creatures, (and ſenſible ſinners ſee themſelves to be ſo) unworthy, that Chriſt ſhould come into their hearts, and dwell there by faith, as he does, in all true believers, however vile and ſinful they have been? But ſpeak the word only, and my ſervant ſhall be healed. As the former expreſſion declares his modeſty and humility, and the mean apprehenſions he had of himſelf; ſo this ſignifies his great faith in Chriſt, and the perſuaſion he had of his divine power: he does not ſay pray, and my ſervant ſhall be healed, as looking upon him barely as a man of God, a prophet, one that had great intereſt in God, and at the throne of grace; but ſpeak, command, order it to be done, and it ſhall be done, which is aſcribing omnipotence to him; ſuch power as was put forth in creation, by the all-commanding word of God; he ſpake, and it was done, he commanded, and it ſtood faſt, Pſ. xxxiii. 9. yea, he ſignifies that if he would but ſpeak a word, the leaſt word whatever; or, as Luke has it, ſay in a word; let but a word come out of thy mouth, and it will be done.

Ver. 9. For I am a man under authority, &c.] Of Cæſar the Roman emperor, and of ſuperior officers under him, as a tribune, &c. having ſoldiers under me; an hundred of them at leaſt, for military ſervice, and ſome of them were uſed by him as his domeſtics: and I ſay unto this man go, and he goeth, and to another come, and he cometh: for there is no diſputing the commands of officers, by ſoldiers, in any thing, in exerciſes, marches, battles, &c. and to my ſervant, that was more properly his domeſtic ſervant, who waited upon him, and did thoſe things for him which every ſoldier under him was not employed in, do this, and he doth it; immediately, without any more ado; as indeed a ſervant ought. The Jews [l] have a ſaying, that "a "ſervant over whom his maſter אין רשות, hath no "power, is not called a ſervant." Now, theſe words are not a reaſon excuſing Chriſt's coming to his houſe, or ſhewing how unworthy it was, and how unfit it would be for him to come thither, ſince he was a man that held ſoldiers under him, and his houſe was incumber'd with them; for theſe were not with him, but quarter'd out elſewhere: but they are an argument, from the leſſer to the greater, that ſeeing he was a man, and Chriſt was God, he was under the authority of others. Chriſt was ſubject to none; and yet he had ſuch power over his ſoldiers and ſervants, that if he bid one go, and another come, or ordered them to ſtand in ſuch a place, and in ſuch a poſture, or do this, and the other ſervile work, his orders were immediately obeyed: how much more eaſily then could Chriſt, who had all power in heaven and in earth, command off this diſtemper his ſervant was afflicted with? He ſuggeſts, that as his ſoldiers were under him, and at his command; ſo all bodily diſeaſes were under Chriſt, and to be controlled by him, at his pleaſure; and that, if he would but ſay to that ſervant of his, the palſy, remove, and it would remove at once.

Ver. 10. When Jeſus heard it, he marvelled, &c.] Which muſt be underſtood of him as man; for as God, ſeeing nothing could preſent itſelf unto him at unawares, unthought of, and not known before; and ſo could not raiſe admiration in him, and which cannot properly fall on a divine perſon: or he behaved, both by words and geſture, as perſons do when they are aſtoniſhed at any thing; and this he might do, to raiſe the attention and wonder of thoſe that were with him: and ſaid to them that followed. This agrees perfectly with the account that Luke gives, that Chriſt was ſet out with the meſſengers, the centurion ſent unto him, in order to come to his houſe, and heal his ſervant; and theſe that followed him were his diſciples, and ſo ſome copies read, and others that were ſollowing him thither to ſee the miracle. Verily, I ſay unto you; a ſtrong aſſeveration, and which Chriſt uſed, when he was about to deliver any thing of conſiderable importance, and required attention: I have not found ſo great faith, no not in Iſrael; that is, among the people of Iſrael: ſo the Arabic verſion reads it, in any of Iſrael; and the Perſic, among the children of Iſrael; and is to be underſtood, not of the patriarchs and prophets, and other eminent believers, which were in Iſrael formerly; but of the men of the then preſent generation, his mother and his apoſtles being excepted: though it may be queſtioned, whether the apoſtles themſelves as yet, had expreſſed ſuch a ſtrong faith in him, as this man: or it may have a particular reſpect to them in Iſrael, who had applied to him for healing, and had been healed by him; that he had not met with and obſerved any ſuch expreſſion of faith, in his divine power from them, as this centurion had delivered. And it was the more remarkable, that it came from a Gentile, and from a ſoldier too: but as great as it was, he did not exceed in it; he did not aſcribe more to Chriſt than was proper, and which, by the way, is a clear proof of our Lord's divinity: for had he not been truly God, he would have rebuked, and not have commended this man's faith in him; who aſcribed that power to him, which is peculiar to God: he is ſo far from finding fault with him, for thinking or ſpeaking ſo highly of him, that he praiſes him for it, and prefers his faith in him, to any inſtance of it, he had met with among the Iſraelites; who yet had far greater advantages of knowing him, and believing in him. There is a phraſe in the Talmud [m] ſomewhat like this, only uſed of a perſon of a different character; where a certain Jew, obſerving another called by ſome of his neighbours Rabbi, thus expreſſed himſelf; "If this be a Rabbi, אל ירבו כמותו בישראל, "let there not be many ſuch as he in Iſrael." And it is ſaid [n] of Nadab and Abihu, "that two ſuch "were not found כוותיהו בישראל as they in "Iſrael."

---

[i] T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 146. 2. 147. 1. Cetubot, fol. 103. 2.

[k] Miſn. Beracot, c. 3. §. 1. T. Bab. Moed Katon, fol. 23. 2. Maimon. Hilch. Ebel, c. 4. §. 7.

[l] T. Bab. Kiddushin, fol. 72. 2.

Ver. 11. And I ſay unto you, that many ſhall come from the eaſt and weſt, &c.] On occaſion of the faith of the centurion, who was a Gentile, our Lord makes a ſhort digreſſion, concerning the call of the Gentiles; and ſuggeſts, that what was ſeen in that man now, would be fulfilled in great numbers of them in a little time: that many of them from the ſeveral parts of the world, from the riſing of the ſun to the ſetting of it, from the four points of the heaven, eaſt, weſt, north, and ſouth, as in Luke xiii. 29. and from the four corners of the earth, ſhould come and believe in him; and ſit down with Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven: ſignifying, that as the Goſpel would be preached in a ſhort time to all nations, many among them would believe in him, as Abraham, and the reſt of the patriarchs did; and ſo would partake of the ſame bleſſings of grace with them; ſuch as adoption, juſtification, pardon of ſin, and the like; for they which be of faith, are bleſſed with faithful Abraham, Gal. iii. 9. now, under the Goſpel diſpenſation, though Gentiles; and ſhall enjoy with him the ſame eternal glory and happineſs he does, in the other world. Which ſhews, that the faith of Old and New Teſtament ſaints, Jews and Gentiles, is the ſame; their bleſſings the ſame, and ſo their eternal happineſs; they have the ſame God and Father, the ſame Mediator and Redeemer, are actuated and influenced by the ſame Spirit, partake of the ſame grace, and ſhall ſhare the ſame glory. The alluſion is to ſitting, or rather lying along, which was the poſture of the ancients at meals, and is here expreſſed, at a table, at a meal, or feaſt: and under the metaphor of a feaſt or plentiful table to ſet down to, are repreſented the bleſſings of the Goſpel, and the joys of heaven; which are not reſtrained to any particular nation, or ſett of people; not to the Jews, to the excluſion of the Gentiles. Our Lord here, goes directly contrary to the notions and practices of the Jews, who thought it a crime, to ſit down at table, and eat with the Gentiles; ſee Acts xi. 3. and yet Gentiles ſhall ſit at table, and eat with the principal men, the heads of their nation, in the kingdom of heaven, and they themſelves at the ſame time ſhut out.

Ver. 12. But the children of the kingdom, &c.] The Jews, who were ſubjects of the kingdom, and commonwealth of Iſrael, from which the Gentiles were aliens; and who were alſo in the church of God, which is his kingdom on earth; and beſides, had the promiſe of the Goſpel diſpenſation, ſometimes called the kingdom of heaven, and by them, often the world to come; and were by their own profeſſion, and in their apprehenſion and expectation, children, and heirs of the kingdom of glory. Theſe phraſes, בן העולם הבא, a ſon of the world to come, and בני עלמא דאתי children of the world to come [o], are frequent in their writings: theſe Chriſt ſays, ſhall be caſt out; out of the land of Iſrael, as they were in a few years after, and out of the church of God: theſe branches were broken off, and the Gentiles grafted in, in their room; and will be excluded from the kingdom of heaven, where they hoped to have a place, and caſt into outer darkneſs: into the Gentile world, and into judicial blindneſs, and darkneſs of mind, and into the blackneſs of darkneſs in hell, where ſhall be weeping, and gnaſhing of teeth. Phraſes expreſſive of the miſerable ſtate and condition, of perſons out of the kingdom of heaven; who are weeping for what they have loſt, and gnaſhing their teeth with the pain of what they endure. The Jews ſay [p], "he that ſtudies "not in the law in this world, but is defiled with "the pollutions of the world, he is taken "וישליכו אותו הברה, and caſt without: this is "hell itſelf, to which ſuch are adjudged, who do "not ſtudy the law." The alluſion in the text is, to the cuſtoms of the ancients at their feaſts and entertainments; which were commonly made in the evening, when the hall or dining-room, in which they ſat down, was very much illuminated with lamps and torches; but without in the ſtreets, were entire darkneſs: and where were heard nothing but the cries of the poor, for ſomething to be given them, and of the perſons that were turned out as unworthy gueſts; and the gnaſhing of their teeth, either with cold in winter nights, or with indignation at their being kept out. Chriſt may alſo be thought to ſpeak in the language, and according to the notions of the Jews, who aſcribe gnaſhing of teeth to the devils in hell; for they ſay [q], that "for the flattery with which they flattered Korah, in the buſineſs of rioting, the prince of hell חרק שניו gnaſhed his teeth at them." The whole of this may be what they call רוגז גהנם, the indignation, or tumult of hell [r].

---

[m] T. Bab. Taanith, fol. 20. 2. Derech Eretz, fol. 18. 1.

[n] Zohar in Lev. fol. 24. 1. & 25. 4.

[o] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 4. 2. Taanith, fol. 22. 1. Megilla, fol. 28. 2. Yoma, fol. 88. 1. & Sanhedrim, fol. 88. 2. Raziel, fol. 37. 1. & 38. 1. Caphtor, fol. 15. 1. & 18. 2. & 60. 1. & 84. 2. Raya Mehimna, in Zohar in Lev. fol. 34. 2.

[p] Zohar in Gen. fol. 104. 3.

Ver. 13. And Jeſus ſaid unto the centurion, &c.] Chriſt having finiſhed the digreſſion, returns an anſwer to the centurion, agreeable to his deſire, ſaying to him, go thy way; not as diſpleaſed with him, but as granting his requeſt: for it follows, and as thou haſt believed, ſo be it done unto thee. As he had faith to believe, that Chriſt could cure his ſervant by a word ſpeaking, it was done accordingly. Chriſt by his almighty fiat ſaid, let him be healed, and he was healed: juſt as God in the creation ſaid, let there be light, and there was light. He does not ſay according to thy prayer, or according to thy righteouſneſs, and goodneſs, but according to thy faith: and it is further to be obſerved, that this cure was wrought, not ſo much for the ſake of the ſervant, as his maſter; and therefore Chriſt ſays, be it done unto thee; let him be healed for thy ſake, and reſtored unto thee, to thy uſe, profit, and advantage. And his ſervant was healed in the ſelf ſame hour, at the very exact time, even in that moment. Some copies add, and when the centurion returned to his houſe, in the ſelf ſame hour he found his ſervant healed; which the Ethiopic verſion has, and it agrees with Luke vii. 10.

Ver. 14. And when Jeſus was come into Peter's houſe, &c.] And which was alſo Andrew's, Mark i. 29. for theſe two brothers lived together, and this was in Capernaum, as appears from the context. Though Andrew and Peter were originally of Bethſaida, a place not far from this, but had removed hither ſince their call by Chriſt, this being his city; though probably this houſe was Peter's wife's mother's, and only called theirs, becauſe they lodged there, whilſt in this city: into this houſe Chriſt entered, with James and John, and others; when he ſaw his (Peter's) wife's mother, laid, or caſt on a bed, ſee note on ver. 6. and ſick of a fever: Luke ſays, chap. iv. 38. that ſhe was taken, or rather held, or detained with a great fever; the diſtemper was very raging and furious, it had got to a very great height. The other Evangeliſts ſay, that the perſons in the houſe told him of her, and beſought him for her, that he would heal her, having a very great affection for her, and deſire of her life, which ſeemed to be in great danger. Hence it may be obſerved againſt the Papiſts, that miniſters of the Goſpel may lawfully marry; Peter, an Apoſtle, and from whom they pretend to derive their ſucceſſion of biſhops, was a married man, had a wife, and that after he was called to be an apoſtle. His wife's mother is expreſsly mentioned, being the perſon labouring under a violent fever, and whom Chriſt cured in the following manner.

Ver. 15. And he touched her hand, &c.] Sometimes he healed by a word, as the centurion's ſervant; and ſometimes by a touch, as here; and ſometimes by both, as the leper. Luke ſays, that he ſtood over her, reached over her to take her by the hand, and lift her up, and rebuked the fever. Juſt as he did the winds and ſea, having all diſeaſes, as well as the elements, at his beck and controul; and the fever left her immediately, as the other Evangeliſts ſay. And ſhe aroſe and miniſtred unto them: the former of theſe actions, is a proof of her being reſtored to health and ſtrength, inſomuch that ſhe could riſe and walk about of herſelf; whereas generally, perſons after fevers, continue very weak a conſiderable time; which ſhews what a miracle was wrought upon her by Chriſt: and the latter of them expreſſes her gratitude, for the mercy ſhe had received; ſhe riſes and ſerves him and his friends, preparing proper and ſuitable proviſions for them.

Ver. 16. When the even was come, &c.] The other Evangeliſts ſay, when the ſun was ſet, or ſetting; which circumſtances are obſerved, not as ſome think, becauſe the cool of the evening, and when the ſun was ſet, it was more ſeaſonable and convenient, in thoſe hot countries, to bring out their ſick, than in the heat of the day: nor are they remarked, as others think, becauſe it was an unſeaſonable time to bring them to Chriſt, when he had been fatigued all day long, and yet he healed them; ſuch was his goodneſs and compaſſion: but the true reaſon of the mention of them is, becauſe it had been their ſabbath-day, as appears from Mark i. 21. Luke iv. 31. and they could not, according to their canons, bring them ſooner. Their ſabbath began at ſun-ſetting; hence they ſay [s], that on the eve of the ſabbath, that is, immediately preceding it, when the ſabbath is about to begin, it is lawful to work עד שתשקע החמה until the ſun ſets; and ſo it ended at ſun ſetting the next day, which they judged of by the appearance of three ſtars [t]. "R. Phinehas, in the name of R. Aba Bar Papa ſays, if but one ſtar appears, it is certainly day; if two, its a doubt whether its night or no; if three, its certainly night.——On the eve of the ſabbath, if he ſees one ſtar and does any work, he's free; if two, he brings a treſpaſs offering for a doubt; if three, he brings a ſin offering: at the going out of the ſabbath, if he ſees one ſtar, and does any work, he brings a ſin-offering; if two, he brings a treſpaſs-offering for a doubt; if three, he is free." So that till the ſun was ſet, and three ſtars appeared as a proof of it, it was not lawful to do any ſort of buſineſs; but as ſoon as it was out of doubt, that the ſun was ſet, they might do any thing: and this being the caſe, they brought to him (Chriſt) many that were poſſeſſed with devils; whoſe bodies ſatan had been ſuffered to enter into, and were acted, and governed, and thrown into ſtrange diſorders by him. Such poſſeſſions, through divine permiſſion, were frequent; that Chriſt, who was come in the fleſh, might have an opportunity of ſhewing his power over ſatan, and giving proof of his deity and Meſſiahſhip. And he caſt out the ſpirits with his word; only by ſpeaking to them; who were obliged, at his command, and by his orders, to quit their tenements, though unwillingly enough. And healed all that were ſick; whoever they were, without any reſpect of perſons, of whatſoever diſeaſe attended them: the moſt ſtubborn, inveterate, and otherwiſe incurable diſorder, was not too hard for him, which he cured without the help of medicine, and where that could be of no uſe, and either by ſpeaking, or touching, or ſome ſuch like means.

Ver. 17. That it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by Eſaias the prophet, &c.] In Iſa. liii. 4. He hath born our griefs and carried our ſorrows, here rendered, himſelf took our infirmities and bare our ſickneſſes; very agreeable to the Hebrew text, הוא he himſelf, not another; נשא took up, upon himſelf voluntarily, freely, as a man lifts up a burden, and takes it on his ſhoulders; חלינו our infirmities, diſeaſes, ſickneſſes, whether of body or ſoul, ומכאבינו סבלם and bare, or carried, as a man does a burden upon his back, our ſickneſſes, or diſeaſes, which occaſion pain and ſorrow. And that theſe words are ſpoken of the Meſſiah, the Jews themſelves own; for among the names they give to the Meſſiah, a leper is one; which they prove from this paſſage [u]. "The Rabbans ſay, a leper of the houſe of Rabbi is his name; as it is ſaid, ſurely he hath born our griefs, and carried our ſorrows, yet we did eſteem him ſtricken, ſmitten of God and afflicted. Says R. Nachman, if he is of the living, he is as I am, as it is ſaid, Jer. xxx. 21. Says Rab, if of the living, he is as our Rabbi, the holy." Upon which laſt clauſe the Gloſs is, "If the Meſſiah is of them that are alive, our Rabbi the holy is he, becauſe דסובל החלואים he bears infirmities." Elſewhere [w] they ſay, "There is one temple that is called the temple of the ſons of afflictions; and when the Meſſiah comes into that temple, and reads all the afflictions, all the griefs, and all the chaſtiſements of Iſrael, which come upon them, then all of them ſhall come upon him: and if there was any that would lighten them off of Iſrael, and take them upon himſelf, there is no ſon of man that can bare the chaſtiſements of Iſrael, becauſe of the puniſhments of the law; as it is ſaid, ſurely he hath born our griefs, &c." And in another ancient book [x] of theirs, God is repreſented ſaying to the Meſſiah, "תסבול ישורין wilt thou bear chaſtiſements, in order to remove their iniquities? (the iniquities of the children of God) as it is written, ſurely he hath born our griefs: he replied, I will bear them with joy." Hence it is manifeſt, that according to the mind of the ancient Jews, this paſſage belongs to the Meſſiah, and is rightly applied to him by the Evangeliſt. But the difficulty is, how it had its accompliſhment in Chriſt's healing the bodily diſeaſes of men; ſince Iſaiah ſpeaks not of his actions and miracles, but of his ſufferings and death; and not of bearing the diſeaſes of the body, as it ſhould ſeem, but of the diſeaſes of the mind, of ſins, as the Apoſtle Peter interprets it, 1 Peter ii. 24. To remove which, let it be obſerved, that tho' the Prophet chiefly deſigns to point out Chriſt taking upon him, and bearing the ſins of his people, in order to make ſatisfaction for them, and to ſave them from them; yet ſo likewiſe, as to include his bearing, by way of ſympathy, and taking away by his power, the bodily diſeaſes of men, which ariſe from ſin; and which was not only an emblem of his bearing, and taking away ſin, but a proof of his power and ability to do it: for ſince he could do the one, it was plain he could do the other.

---

[q] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 52. 1.

[r] Targum in Job iii. 17.

[s] T. Hieroſ. Sheviith, fol. 33. 1.

[t] T. Hieroſ. Beracot, fol. 2. 2. Maimon. Sabbat, c. 5. § 4.

Ver. 18. Now when Jeſus ſaw great multitudes about him, &c.] Who got together, partly out of novelty to ſee his perſon, of whom they had heard ſo much; and partly to ſee the miracles he wrought: ſome came to have their bodily diſeaſes healed; few, if any, to hear the Goſpel preached by him, and for the good of their immortal ſouls: the moſt part came with ſome ſiniſter, ſelfiſh, and carnal views; wherefore he gave commandment to depart unto the other ſide. Different were the reaſons, which at certain times moved Chriſt to depart from the multitude; as that he might have an opportunity of private prayer, or to preach to others, or to ſhew he ſought not popular applauſe, and to avoid ſeditions: his reaſons here ſeem to be with reſpect to himſelf, that being wearied as man, with the work of the day, he might have an opportunity of refreſhing himſelf with ſleep; with reſpect to his diſciples, that he might have a trial of their faith, when in danger at ſea; and with reſpect to the multitude, becauſe of their carnality, and ſole concern for their temporal, and worldly good. The perſons he gave commandment to, muſt be either the multitude, or the diſciples; not the former, becauſe he ſtudiouſly avoided their company, and his concern was to be rid of them; but the latter, and ſo the Vulgate Latin and Munſter's Hebrew goſpel read, he commanded his diſciples. The place he would have them go to was, the other ſide of the lake of Tiberias, or Geneſaret; not over the river Euphrates, as ſays the author of the old Nizzachon [y].

Ver. 19. And a certain Scribe came, &c.] As they went in the way, Luke ix. 57. to go to the ſea-ſide, in order to take ſhipping, and paſs to the other ſhore; and ſaid unto him, Maſter, or Rabbi, I will follow thee whitherſoever thou goeſt. One would have thought, that this man deſired in good earneſt to be a diſciple of Chriſt, were it not for Chriſt's anſwer to him, who knew his heart: from whence it appears, that he, ſeeing the miracles which Chriſt wrought, and obſerving the fame of him among the people, began to think that he would be generally received as the Meſſiah; and by joining himſelf to him, promiſed himſelf much eaſe, honour, and wealth. Theſe ſeem to be the motives, which prevailed upon him to take ſo ſudden and haſty a ſtep; for he did not wait to be called to follow Chriſt, as the other diſciples were, but offers himſelf to be one; that is, to be one of his intimates, one of his apoſtles; and beſides, he raſhly promiſes to do that, which he knew nothing of, and which in ſome caſes is impoſſible to be done.

Ver. 20. And Jeſus ſaith unto him, &c.] Knowing his heart, and the carnal and worldly views with which he acted; the foxes have holes in the earth, where they hide themſelves from danger, take their reſt, and ſecure their whelps; and the birds of the air have neſts, where they ſit, lay, and hatch their eggs, and bring up their young; but the Son of man has not where to lay his head, when he is weary, and wants reſt and ſleep, as he did at this time. So that though he was Lord of all, as being the mighty God; yet as the Son of man, a phraſe, expreſſive both of the truth and meanneſs of his human nature, the moſt deſpicable of creatures in the earth and air, were richer than he. This he ſaid, to convince the Scribe of his miſtake; who expected much worldly grandeur and wealth, by becoming his diſciple. When Chriſt ſtiles himſelf the ſon of man, it is no contradiction to his being God; nor any objection to truſt and confidence in him, as the Jew [z] ſuggeſts; for he is truly and properly God, as well as really man, having two natures, human and divine, united in his perſon; ſo that he is, as was propheſied of him, Emmanuel, God with us, in our nature, God manifeſted in the fleſh: and ſince he is ſo, it can't be unlawful to truſt in him; which it would be indeed, was he a mere man. The Jews ought not to object to this name and title of the Meſſiah, the Son of man; ſince he is ſo called, as their own writers and commentators acknowledge, in [a] Pſal. lxxx. 17. and [b] Dan. vii. 14. And whereas it is further urged againſt theſe words of Chriſt, that if he was God, why does he complain of want of place? Is not the whole world his, according to Pſal. xxiv. 1? It may be replied, that it is very true, that the whole world is his, nor could he be in want of any thing, as God; but yet, as man, for our ſakes he became poor, that we might be rich: nor ſhould this be any difficulty with a Jew, when they themſelves ſay, as ſome have thought, if he (the Meſſiah) ſhould come, לי דוכתא דיתיבנא ביה, there's no place in which he can ſit down[c]. Unleſs it be underſtood of Nebuchadnezzar, as the Gloſs explains it; let the learned inſpect the place, and judge: the coming of the Meſſiah is immediately ſpoken of.

---

[u] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 98. 2.

[w] Zohar in Exod. fol. 85. 2.

[x] Peſikta in Abkath Rochel, l. 1. par. 2. p. 309. Ed. Hulſ.

[y] Pag. 205.

[z] R. Iſaac Chizzuk Emuna, par. 2. c. 12. p. 403.

[a] Targum & Aben Ezra in loc. Abarbinel Maſhmia Jeſhua, fol 81. 2.

[b] R. Jeſhua in Aben Ezra in loc. & Saadiah Gaon & Jarchi in loc. Zohar in Gen. fol. 85. 4.

Ver. 21. And another of his diſciples ſaid unto him, &c.] That is, one of his diſciples; for this does not ſuppoſe, that the other, the Scribe before-mentioned, was one. 'Tis poſſible, he might be one of the twelve. The Perſic verſion makes him one of the diſciples, whom they call Hawarion, Apoſtles; and, according to ancient tradition, it was [d] Philip. And certain it is, that he was one, who was called to preach the Goſpel; ſo that he was not a common ordinary diſciple; nor could he be one of the ſeventy diſciples, ſince it was after this, that they were called and ſent forth; as appears from Luke's account, chap. ix. 60. and x. 1. But who he particularly was, cannot be certainly known, nor is it of any great importance to know it: his addreſs to Chriſt, is made with great reſpect and reverence, and in a very modeſt and humble manner, Lord, ſuffer me firſt to go and bury my father: for it ſeems, according to Luke, that Chriſt had bid him follow him: he had given him a call to be his diſciple, and to go and preach the Goſpel, which he did not refuſe; but deſires leave firſt, to attend his father's funeral, who was now dead; as his requeſts, and Chriſt's anſwer, both ſuppoſe: though ſome conjecture, that he was only very aged, or was dangerouſly ill; and therefore it could not be thought, he would live long: hence he was deſirous of doing this laſt good office, before he entered on his publick work; but theſe are conjectures, without any foundation: its plain, his father was dead, and what he requeſted was, to go home, which perhaps might not be a great way off, and perform the funeral rites, and then return. This may ſeem very reaſonable, ſince burying the dead, was reckoned by the Jews, not only an act of kindneſs and reſpect to the deceaſed, but an act of piety and religion; and in which, men are followers of God, and imitate him, who himſelf buried the body of Moſes[e]. And though this man was called to preach the Goſpel, yet he might think he would be eaſily excuſed for the preſent, on this account; ſince, according to the Jewiſh canons, ſuch whoſe dead lay before them, who were as yet unburied, were excuſed reading the Shema, they were free from performing the duty of prayer, and were not obliged to wear their phylacteries[f].

Ver. 22. But Jeſus ſaid unto him, follow thou me, &c.] Chriſt would not excuſe him on this account, but inſiſts on what he had before called him to; to attend upon him, and give himſelf up to the miniſtry of the word: which was done, partly to ſhew, that a greater regard ought to be had to him, than to the neareſt relation and friend whatever; and partly, on account of the dignity of the goſpel miniſtry, which greatly exceeds any ſuch ſervices; as alſo to ſignify, of what little account were the traditions of the elders with him; wherefore he ſays, let the dead bury the dead. Our Lord is not to be underſtood, as ſpeaking againſt, or diſreſpectfully of burying the dead; his words ſuppoſe it ought to be done: only it was not proper, that this perſon ſhould be concerned in it at this time, who was called to an higher employment; and therefore ſhould leave this to be done by perſons, whom it better became. And however ſtrange and odd ſuch a phraſe may ſound in the ears of ſome, of one dead man's burying another, it was eaſily underſtood by a Jew; with whom it is common to ſay, החוטא חשוב כמת, that a ſinner is counted as [g] dead, and that ungodly perſons, even while they are alive, קרויין מתים, are called dead[h]. And in this ſenſe is the word uſed, in the former part of this phraſe; and Chriſt's meaning is, let ſuch who are dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, and to all that is ſpiritually good, bury thoſe who are dead in a natural or corporal ſenſe. It is likely, the deceaſed was an unregenerate man; however, it is plainly ſuggeſted, that many of the relations were; and there were enough of them to take care of this ſervice: and therefore, there was no need why he ſhould neglect the miniſtry of the Goſpel to attend that; but ought to leave it to perſons who were fitter for it.

Ver. 23. And when he was entered into a ſhip, &c.] Which was got ready by his diſciples, or hired by them for his uſe, according to the directions he had given; his diſciples followed him into the ſhip, and they only; for as for the men hereafter mentioned, they were the men that belonged to the ſhip, and had the management of it: the multitude were diſmiſſed, and in order to be clear of them, Chriſt took this method; and being deſirous alſo of trying the faith of his diſciples, he ordered it ſo, that they ſhould be alone with him.

Ver. 24. And behold, there aroſe a great tempeſt, &c.] A great concuſſion, or ſhaking of the ſea; the ſtormy wind moved the ſea, and the waves thereof; and both wind and ſea ſhook the ſhip, and the men that were in it. Luke calls this tempeſt a ſtorm of wind, chap. viii. 23. and Mark ſays, it was a great ſtorm of wind, chap. iv. 37. and both uſe the word lælaps, which ſignifies a particular kind of wind, which is ſuddenly whirled about upwards and downwards; or rather, a conflict of many winds: it ſeems to be a whirlwind, or hurricane. It is ſaid, that this tempeſt aroſe, not by chance, nor by the power of ſatan, but by divine providence; for the trial of the faith of Chriſt's diſciples, and that he might have an opportunity of giving proof of his deity on the ſea, as he had lately done in ſeveral inſtances on the dry land. Luke ſays, that this ſtorm of wind came down; referring to the motion and courſe of the winds, which are exhalations from the earth, raiſed up into the middle region of the air, from whence they are depelled by a ſuperior force to the lower region, and from thence move in an oblique, ſlanting manner, downwards. The place where this tempeſt aroſe, or into which this ſtorm of wind came down, is here ſaid to be in the ſea. Luke calls it a lake, and it was the lake of Geneſareth. But both Matthew and Mark, call it the ſea, and is what is ſometimes called the ſea of Tiberias, and the ſea of Galilee; ſee John vi. 1. and xxi. 1. agreeable to the language of the Jewiſh[i] writers. To all this, the word behold! is prefixed; which is ſometimes uſed, when any thing extraordinary and preternatural is ſpoken of: and this ſtorm ſeems to be more than an ordinary one; at leaſt, it was very ſudden and unexpected: when the diſciples entered the ſhip, the air was ſerene, and the ſea ſtill and quiet; but as ſoon as they had ſet ſail, at once, on a ſudden, this ſtorm came down, with great force into the ſea, and lifted up its waves; inſomuch that the ſhip was covered with the waves; it was juſt ſinking to the bottom, ſo that they were in the utmoſt extremity: and what added to their diſtreſs was, but he, Chriſt, was aſleep. Mark mentions the place where he was aſleep, in the hinder part of the ſhip; that is, in the ſtern: where he, as Lord and maſter ſhould be, though to the great concern of his diſciples, there aſleep; and that in a deep ſound ſleep, as the word which Luke makes uſe of, ſignifies; and as appears by the loud repeated call of his diſciples to awake him: and though this ſleep doubtleſs aroſe from natural cauſes, he being greatly fatigued with the buſineſs of the day paſt; yet was ſo ordered by the providence of God, to come upon him in ſuch a manner at this time, for the trial of the faith of his diſciples. Chriſt's body needing ſleep, and refreſhment by it, ſhews that it was a real human body he aſſumed; ſubject to the ſame infirmities as ours, excepting ſin; and is no contradiction to the truth of his divinity, as the Jew [k] ſuggeſts. He ſlept as man, though as God, he is Iſrael's keeper, who neither ſlumbers nor ſleeps.

---

[c] T. Bab. Sanhedrim. fol. 96. 2. [d] Clement. Alex. Strom. l. 3. p. 436. [e] T. Bab. Bava Metzia, fol. 30. 2. & Sota, fol. 14. 1. [f] Miſn. Beracot, c. 3. §. 1. [g] Tzeror Hammor, fol. 6. 2. [h] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 18. 2. Jarchi in Gen. 11. 32. Baal Hatturim, in Deut. xvii. 6. Tzeror Hammor, fol. 58. 3. Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 78. 2. Caphtor, fol. 79. 1, 2. & 84. 1. [i] T. Bab. Moed. Katon, fol. 18. 2. Bava Kama, fol. 81. 2. Bereſhit Rabba, fol. 86. 2.

Ver. 25. And his diſciples came unto him, &c.] From ſome other part of the ſhip, being in great conſternation, and diſtreſs, and awoke him; ſaying, Lord, ſave us, we periſh. They awoke him by their loud cries, and repeated calls; for in Luke, the form of addreſs is doubled, Maſter, Maſter! expreſſing their diſtreſs, importunity, and haſte for deliverance; ſaying, ſave us, we periſh, or we are loſt: which ſhews the apprehenſions they had of their condition; not only that they were in danger of being loſt, or were ready to be loſt, but were loſt: they ſaw no probability of eſcaping by any natural, rational methods; wherefore they apply to Chriſt, believing that he was able to ſave them, in this their extremity; as they had indeed a great deal of reaſon to conclude, from the miracles they had that day ſeen performed by him.

Ver. 26. And he ſaith unto them, why are ye fearful? &c.] Though they had ſome faith in him, yet there was a great deal of fear and unbelief, for which Chriſt blames them, ſaying, O ye of little faith; ſee note on chap. vi. 30. In Luke, the phraſe is, where is your faith? what is become of it? you profeſſed but juſt now to believe in me, is your faith gone already? In Mark it is, how is it that ye have no faith? That is, in exerciſe, their faith was very ſmall, it could hardly be diſcerned: ſome faith they had, as appears by their application to him, but it was very little. They had no faith in him, as ſleeping, that he could deliver them; but had ſome little faith in him that he might, could he be awaked out of ſleep; and for this Chriſt blames them; for he, as the eternal God, was as able to ſave them ſleeping as waking. Then he aroſe and rebuked the winds and the ſea, and there was a great calm: being awaked by his diſciples, he raiſes his head from his pillow, ſtands up, and with a majeſtic voice, in an authoritative manner, ſhewing ſome kind of reſentment at the wind and ſea, as if they had exceeded their commiſſion; and the one had blown, and the other raged too much and too long; he rebukes them in ſuch language as this, peace, be ſtill; σιωπα πεφιμωσο, as it is in Mark, be ſilent, hold your peace, ſtop your mouth, put a bridle on it, as the words uſed ſignify; and go on no longer to threaten with ſhipwrack and loſs of lives; upon which the wind ceaſed, the ſea became calm, and the ſhip moved quietly on.

Ver. 27. But the men marvelled, &c.] Mark ſays, they feared exceedingly; and Luke, they being afraid, wondered: they were filled with aſtoniſhment and fear, or reverence: there was ſuch a ſhine of majeſty, ſuch a luſtre of divine power appeared in this affair. The other two Evangeliſts ſeem to refer this to the diſciples, which Matthew ſeems to aſcribe to the men, the mariners that were in the ſhip; its likely it had the ſame effect on both; and both were abundantly convinced of his deity and dignity, ſaying, what manner of man, or perſon is this? For the word man, is not in the text; of what qualities, perfections and powers, is he poſſeſſed? Surely he muſt be more than a mere man; he can be no other than the mighty God, that even the winds and the ſea obey him; which can be ſaid of no other, than the moſt high God: never was ſuch a thing heard of, that the winds and ſea ſhould be rebuked by a mere creature, and ſhould obey. That man muſt be an infidel to revelation, that can read this account, and deny the deity of Chriſt; to one or other of theſe he muſt be drove, either to deny the truth of the fact, and the circumſtances of it, or believe that Jeſus Chriſt is truly and properly God, as the diſciples and mariners did.

Ver. 28. And when he was come to the other ſide, &c.] Of the lake, or ſea of Tiberias, right over-againſt Galilee, into the country of the Gergeſenes, the ſame with the Girgaſhites, Gen. xv. 21. Deut. vii. 1. Joſh. iii. 10. whom Joſhua drove out of the land of Canaan; and who, as a Jewiſh writer [l] ſays, left their country to the Iſraelites, and went to a country, which is called to this day, גורגיסטאן, Gurgeſtan; of which theſe people were ſome remains: both in Mark, ch. v. 1. and Luke, ch. viii. 26. it is called the country of the Gadarenes; and ſo the Syriac and Perſic verſions read it here; which is eaſily reconciled by obſerving, not that Gergeſa and Gadara, were one and the ſame city, called by different names; but that theſe two cities were near each other, in the ſame country, which was ſometimes denominated from the one, and ſometimes from the other. Origen [m] has a remarkable paſſage, ſhewing the different ſituations of Gadara and Gergeſa; and that the latter cannot be Geraſa in Arabia; and alſo the ſignification of the name, for the ſake of which, I ſhall tranſcribe it. "Geraſa, ſays he, is a city of Arabia, having neither ſea nor lake near it; wherefore the Evangeliſts, who well knew the countries about Judea, would never have ſaid ſo manifeſt an untruth: and as to what we find in ſome few copies, into the country of the Gadarenes, it muſt be ſaid, that Gadara indeed was a city of Judea, about which, were many famous baths; but there was no lake, or ſea in it, adjacent with precipices; but Gergeſa, from whence were the Gergaſenes, is an ancient city about the lake, now called Tiberias; about which is a precipice adjacent to the lake, from whence is ſhewn, that the ſwine were caſt down by the devils. Gergeſa is interpreted, παροικια εκβεβληκοτων, the habitation of thoſe that caſt out; being called ſo perhaps prophetically, for what the inhabitants of thoſe places did to the Saviour, beſeeching him to depart out of their coaſts." Dr. Lightfoot ſuggeſts, that this place might be ſo called, from גרגשתא, which ſignifies clay or dirt, and mentions Lutetia for an example. But to paſs this, as ſoon as Chriſt was got out of the ſhip, and

---

[k] Vet. Nizzachon, p. 210

[l] Juchaſin, fol. 135 2.

[m] Comment. in Joannem, T. 2. p. 131. Ed. Huet.

come to land in this country, there met him two poſſeſſed with devils. Both Mark and Luke mention but one, which is no contradiction to Matthew; for they don't ſay that there was only one; and perhaps, the reaſon why they only take notice of him, is, becauſe he was the fierceſt, had a legion of devils in him, and was the principal one, that ſpake to Chriſt, and with whom he was chiefly concerned. This is to be underſtood, not of any natural diſeaſe of body, but of real poſſeſſion by ſatan. Theſe poſſeſſed men met him, not purpoſely, or with deſign, but accidentally to them, and unawares to ſatan too; for though he knows much, he's not omniſcient: had he been aware of Chriſt's coming that way, and what he was about to do, he would have took care to have had the poſſeſſed out of the way; but ſo it was ordered by providence, that juſt as Chriſt landed, theſe ſhould be coming out of the tombs. Their cœmeteria, or burying places, were at ſome diſtance from towns or cities; wherefore Luke ſays, the poſſeſſed met him out of the city, a good way off from it; for the Jews [n] ſay, שלא היו בתי הקברות סמוכין לעיר, that the ſepulchres were not near a city; ſee Luke vii. 12. and theſe tombs were built ſo large, that perſons might go into them, and ſit and dwell in them, as theſe dæmoniacks did, and therefore are ſaid to come out of them. The rules for making them are [o] theſe; "He that ſells ground to his neighbour to make a burying-place, or that receives of his neighbour, to make him a burying-place, muſt make the inſide of the cave four cubits by ſix, and open in it eight graves; three here, and three there, and two over againſt them; and the graves muſt be four cubits long, and ſeven high, and ſix broad. R. Simeon ſays, he muſt make the inſide of the cave ſix cubits by eight, and open within thirteen graves, four here, and four there, and three over againſt them; and one on the right hand of the door, and one on the left: and he muſt make חצר a court, at the mouth of the cave, ſix by ſix, according to the meaſure of the bier, and thoſe that bury; and he muſt open in it two caves, one here and another there: R. Simeon ſays, four at the four ſides. R. Simeon ben Gamaliel ſays, all is according to the nature of the rock." Now in the court, at the mouth, or entrance of the cave, which was made for the bearers to put down the bier or coffin upon, before the interment, there was room for perſons to enter and lodge, as theſe poſſeſſed with devils did: which places were choſen by the devils, either becauſe of the ſolitude, gloomineſs, and filthineſs of them; or, as ſome think, to confirm that perſuaſion ſome had, that the ſouls of men after death, are changed into devils; or rather, to eſtabliſh a notion which prevailed among the Jews, that the ſouls of the deceaſed continue for a while to be about their bodies; which drew perſons to necromancy, or conſulting with the dead. 'Tis a notion that obtains among the Jews [p], that the ſoul for twelve months after its ſeparation from the body, is more or leſs with it, hovering about it; and hence, ſome have been induced to go and dwell among the tombs, and enquire of ſpirits: they tell us [q], "it happened to a certain holy man, that he gave a penny to a poor man on the eve of the new year; and his wife provoked him, and he went ולן בבית הקברות and lodged among the tombs, and heard two ſpirits talking with one another." Or the devil choſe theſe places, to render the perſons poſſeſſed, the more uncomfortable and diſtreſſed; to make them wilder and fiercer, by living in ſuch deſolate places, and ſo do more miſchief to others: which was the caſe of theſe, who were exceeding fierce, wicked, malignant, miſchievous, and troubleſome, through the influence of the devils in them; ſo that no man might paſs that way, without being inſulted, or hurt by them.

Ver. 29. And behold, they cried out, ſaying, &c.] This is an inſtance and proof, of the wonderful power of Chriſt over the devils; and has therefore the note of admiration, behold! prefixed to it, that the devils themſelves, who had took poſſeſſion of theſe men, and made them ſo fierce and cruel, and outragious, that there was no paſſing the way for them; yet upon the ſight of Chriſt, and eſpecially at hearing his orders to come out from them, not only ſay, but cry out, as being in great conſternation, horror, and fear, and with the utmoſt ſubjection to him, what have we to do with thee, Jeſus, thou ſon of God? They had nothing indeed to do with him; they had no intereſt in his grace, blood, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation; he was no Saviour for them: but he had to do with them, and that was what they dreaded; and therefore mean, that he would let them alone, in the quiet poſſeſſion of theſe men, and not diſturb and diſlodge them; for they knew that he was Jeſus, the Saviour of ſinful men, though none of theirs, the true Meſſiah; and that he was alſo the ſon of God, a divine perſon, poſſeſſed of almighty power, and ſo an over match for them; at whoſe preſence they trembled, and whoſe all-commanding voice they were obliged to obey, though ſorely againſt their wills. Art thou come hither to torment us before the time? This queſtion implies the apprehenſion the devils had of Chriſt as a judge, and their ſenſe of his authority, and power, to puniſh them; as alſo that they deſerved it, and expected it, nor do they ſay any thing againſt it; only imagine that the time of their full torment, was not yet come; which is generally referred unto the day of judgment, to which they were reſerved by the appointment of God; which they had ſome notion of, and as at a diſtance; and therefore complain of Chriſt's coming to them now, and expoſtulate with him about it: though it may be underſtood of the time they had propoſed to themſelves, to abide in the men they had poſſeſſed, and which they concluded, they had a permiſſion for; and nothing could give more torment, pain, and uneaſineſs, than to be turned out, and remanded to their priſon, and reſtrained from doing more miſchief to the bodies and ſouls of men. Or whether this mayn't have ſome reſpect to the time of the preaching of the Goſpel, and ſetting up the kingdom of Chriſt among the Gentiles, the devils might have ſome hint of, as not yet to be, I leave to be conſidered, with this obſervation; that there ſeems to be a conſiderable emphaſis on the word hither, meaning the country of the Gergeſenes, an heathen country, at leaſt where many Gentiles inhabited: and it is as if they had ſaid, is it not enough, that thou turneſt us out of the land of Judea, and haſt diſpoſſeſſed us out of the bodies of men dwelling there; but thou purſueſt us hither alſo, and will not let us have any reſt, even in this heatheniſh land; though the time is not yet come, for the diſſolution of our empire and government in the Gentile world?

Ver. 30. And there was a good way off from them, &c.] Nigh unto the mountains, as Mark ſays, or on the mountain, as Luke, bordering on the ſea-ſhore; ſo that though it was at ſome diſtance, yet within ſight. The Vulgate Latin, and the Hebrew edition of Munſter read, not far off; and the Perſic verſion, near them: which agree with the accounts of Mark and Luke, who ſay, that there were there, or hard by, an herd of many ſwine feeding. Since ſwines fleſh was forbidden the Jews to eat, Levit. xi. 7. it may be aſked, how came it to paſs, that there ſhould be any number of theſe creatures, or that ſuch a herd of them ſhould be kept in the land of Iſrael? To which may be replied, that though the Jews might not eat ſwines fleſh, they were not forbid to bring them up; which they might do, in order to ſell to the Gentiles, who dwelt among them; and particularly to the Romans, under whoſe government they now were, and with whom ſwines fleſh was in great eſteem: but ſtill a difficulty remains; for it was not only forbidden by the law of God to eat ſwines fleſh, but, by the Jewiſh canons, to bring them up, and make any advantage of them in any ſhape: their law was this, לא יגדל ישראל חזירים בכל מקום, an Iſraelite might not bring up hogs in any place [r]: the reaſons of this cannon were many, partly becauſe of the uncleanneſs of theſe creatures; hence one of their writers [s] obſerving, that next to thoſe words, they are unclean unto you, are, and the ſwine, ſays, that this is to teach us, that it is forbidden to bring up hogs; and partly, becauſe of the damage which theſe creatures do to other men's fields: hence [t] "the wiſe men ſay, curſed is he that brings "up dogs and hogs, מפני שהזיקן מרובה, becauſe "they do much hurt." But the chief reaſon given by the Gemariſts [u] for this prohibition, was the fact following: "When the Haſmonean fa-"mily, or Maccabees, were at war with one ano-"ther, Hyrcanus was within (Jeruſalem,) and Ari-"ſtobulus without, and every day they let down "to them money in a box; and they ſent up to "them the daily ſacrifices: there was one old man, "who underſtood the wiſdom of the Greeks, and "he ſaid unto them, as long as they employ them-"ſelves in the ſervice (of God,) they'll not be de-"livered into your hands: on the morrow they let "down their money, and they ſent them up a hog; "and when it came to the middle of the wall, he "fixed his hoofs in the wall, and the land of Iſrael "ſhook, &c. at that time they ſaid, curſed be the "man שיגדל חזירים, that breeds hogs; and curſed "is the man that teaches his ſon the learning of the "Grecians." Before this time, it ſeems to have been lawful to bring them up, and trade with them; but now it was forbid, not only to breed them, but to receive any gain or profit by them; for this is another of their rules [w]. "It is forbidden to bring "up a hog, in order to get any profit by his ſkin, "or by his lard, or fat, to anoint with, or to light "(lamps) with; yea, though it may fall to him "by inheritance." And nothing was more infamous and reproachful among them, than a keeper of theſe creatures: when therefore they had a mind to caſt contempt upon a man, they would call him מגדל חזירי [x] a breeder of hogs, or חזריא [y] a hog-herd. But after all, it was only an Iſraelite that was forbid this; a ſtranger might bring them up, for this is one of their canons [z]. "A man may ſell "fetches to give to a ſtranger that breeds hogs, "but to an Iſraelite it is forbidden to breed them." Yea, they ſay [a], "If others breed them to anoint "ſkins with their lard, or to ſell them to an Iſra-"elite to anoint with them, it was lawful: all fat "may be ſold, which is not for eating." And ſo ſome cities are ſuppoſed to have hogs in them, concerning which they obſerve [b], that "a city that "has hogs in it, is free from the mezuzah;" the ſchedules which were faſtened to the poſts of doors and gates: but now ſuppoſing this herd of ſwine belonged to Jews in theſe parts, it may eaſily be accounted for; for ſince they lived among Heathens, they might not have ſo great a regard to the directions of their Rabbins; and eſpecially, ſince it was ſo much for their profit and advantage, they might make no ſcruple to break through theſe ordinances. Though this herd of ſwine may well enough be thought to belong to the Gentiles, that dwelt in this country; ſince Gadara was a Grecian city, and then inhabited more by Syrians, than by Jews, as Joſephus relates [c].

---

[n] T. Bab. Kiddushin, fol. 80. 2. Gloſſ.

[o] Miſn. Bava Bathra, c. 6. §. 8.

[p] Niſhmat Chayim, par. 2. c. 22. p. 81. 2. c. 24. p. 85. 1. &c. 29. p. 93. 1. p. 94. 1, 2.

[q] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 18. 2.

Ver. 31. So the devils beſought him, ſaying, &c.] All the devils, the whole legion of them, who perceiving that they muſt be obliged to go out of theſe men, and after they had earneſtly entreated they might not be ſent out of the country where they had long been, and had made themſelves maſters of the tempers, diſpoſitions, and circumſtances of the inhabitants, and ſo capable of doing the more miſchief, begged hard, if thou caſt us out of theſe men, or from hence, as the Vulgate Latin, the Ethiopic, and Munſter's Hebrew goſpel read, or out of our place, as the Perſic; ſince we muſt depart, and can't be allowed to enter into other men, ſuffer us to go away into the herd of ſwine. This requeſt ſhews the weakneſs of the infernal ſpirits, they are not able to do any thing without leave; and the ſuperior power of Chriſt over them, and their acknowledgment of it; as well as the wretched malignity of their nature, who muſt be doing miſchief, if not to the bodies and ſouls of men, yet to their property and goods; and if they can't vent their malice on rational creatures, are deſirous of doing it on irrational ones. Many reaſons have been thought of, why the devils ſhould deſire to go into the herd of ſwine; as becauſe of the filthineſs of theſe creatures, theſe impure ſpirits delighting in what is impure; or out of pure hatred to the inhabitants of this country, who, becauſe they could no longer hurt their perſons, would deſtroy their goods; or that by ſo doing, they might ſet the people againſt Chriſt, and ſo prevent his uſefulneſs among them; which laſt ſeems to be the trueſt reaſon, and which end was anſwered.

Ver. 32. And he ſaid unto them, go, &c.] He gave them leave, as God did to ſatan, in the caſe of Job; for without divine permiſſion, theſe evil ſpirits cannot do any thing to the bodies, ſouls, or eſtates of men: they could not enter into the ſwine without leave, and much leſs do things of greater moment and conſequence; and therefore are not to be feared, or dreaded by men, eſpecially by the people of God. It may be aſked, why did Chriſt ſuffer the devils to enter the herd of ſwine, and deſtroy them, which was a conſiderable loſs to the proprietors? To which may be anſwered, that if the owners were Jews, and theſe creatures were brought up by them for food, it was a juſt puniſhment of their breach of the law of God; or if to be ſold to others, for gain and filthy lucres ſake, it was a proper rebuke, both of their avarice and the contempt of the laws of their own country, which were made to be a hedge or fence for the law of God: or if they were Gentiles, this was ſuffered to ſhew the malice of theſe evil ſpirits, under whoſe influence they were, and who would, if they had but leave, ſerve them as they did the ſwine; and to diſplay the power of Chriſt over the devils, and his ſovereign right to, and diſpoſal of the goods and properties of men; and to evince the truth of the diſpoſſeſſion, and the greatneſs of the mercy the diſpoſſeſſed ſhared in; and to ſpread the fame of the miracle the more. And when they were come out of the men that had been poſſeſſed by them, they went into the herd of ſwine; which ſhews the real exiſtence of theſe ſpirits, the truth of poſſeſſions and diſpoſſeſſions; and that by theſe devils can't be meant the ſins and corruptions of mens hearts, ſuch as pride, covetouſneſs, uncleanneſs, envy, malice, cruelty, &c. for theſe could never be ſaid to enter into a herd of ſwine, or be the authors of their deſtruction: and behold, the whole herd of ſwine, and which was a very large one, conſiſting of about two thouſand, ran violently down a ſteep place; a precipice of one of the rocks, by the ſea-ſide, into the ſea of Tiberias, or lake of Geneſareth, which were the ſame, and over which Chriſt had juſt now paſſed; and periſhed in the waters of the ſea, or lake, and not any other waters near Gadara, and afar off from hence.

---

[r] Miſn. Bava Kama, c. 7. §. 7. Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 77. 2.
[s] Baal Hatturim, in Deut. xiv. 7, 8.
[t] Maimon. Nezike Mammon, c. 5. §. 9.
[u] T. Bab. Bava Kama, fol. 82. 2. Menachot, fol. 64. 2. Sota, fol. 49. 2.
[w] Toſaphot in Peſach, art. 62.
[x] T. Hieroſ. Shekalim, fol. 47. 3.
[y] Ib. Trumot, fol. 46. 3.
[z] Piſke Toſaphot in Sabbat, art. 317.
[a] Yom Tob & Ez Chayim, in Miſn. Bava Kama, c. 7. §. 7.
[b] Ib. art. 130.
[c] De Bello Jud. l. 2. c. 33.

Ver. 33. And they that kept them, fled, &c.] The hogherds, men of very low life, and whoſe employment was very infamous and reproachful, as has been obſerved. Theſe, amazed at what they had ſeen, diſtreſſed with the loſs of the ſwine, and ſo of their employment, and frighted alſo leſt they ſhould incur the blame and diſpleaſure of their maſters, ran away in great haſte, fear, and aſtoniſhment; and went their way into the city; either of Gergeſa, or Gadara. Mark and Luke ſay, they went and told it in the city, and in the country: in their fright and diſtreſs, ſome ran one way, and ſome another; ſome went into the city, others into the country, and ſo ſpread the affair far and near, and the fame of Chriſt, which was deſigned by this miracle; and told every thing they ſaw and heard; how the devils entered into the ſwine, and they ran headlong into the ſea, and were drowned: this they told firſt, as being done laſt, and with which they were moſt affected, and what chiefly concerned their employers; and after they had told every circumſtance of the affair, next they gave a narrative of what was befallen to the poſſeſſed of the devils, and which was the occaſion of the loſs of their ſwine; how ſubject the devils, that were in them, were to Chriſt; how eaſily he diſpoſſeſſed them by a word of command; how they entreated they might have leave to go into the herd of ſwine, which was granted; and how perfectly whole, and in health, both in body and mind, the men were.

Ver. 34. And behold, the whole city, &c.] The inhabitants of it, not every individual perſon, but the greater number of them, or, at leaſt, a very great number of them. Luke ſays, the whole multitude of the country of the Gadarenes round about: for as the news was carried both into the city and country, great numbers flock'd from all parts, and came out to meet Jeſus; not out of any love and reſpect to him, and in order to invite him, and conduct him into their city, and there receive him kindly, and treat him with due honour and reverence; but either out of curioſity to ſee ſuch an extraordinary perſon, which, doubtleſs, was the caſe of many; or, elſe being terrified at the report concerning him, and diſtreſſed with their preſent loſs, which was the caſe of others, went out to prevent his coming any farther, leſt they ſhould ſuffer ſomething worſe: accordingly, when they ſaw him, they beſought him that he would depart out of their coaſts; which was done, not as tho' they thought themſelves unworthy the preſence of ſo great a perſon, as did the centurion, in the former part of this chapter, or, as Peter, when he ſaid, depart from me, I am a ſinful man; but as fearing, leſt ſome greater puniſhment ſhould be inflicted on them for their ſins, of which they were conſcious; and therefore make no complaint of any injuſtice being done them by the loſs of their ſwine; tho' theſe they preferr'd to the preſence of Chriſt, and even to any cures wrought, or which might have been wrought, either upon the bodies, or ſouls of men.

CHAP. IX.

Ver. 1. AND he entered into a ſhip, &c.] Or the ſhip, the ſelf-ſame ſhip he came over in, with his diſciples. The Gergeſenes, or Gadarenes, or both, having deſired him to depart their coaſts, ſhewing an unwillingneſs to receive him, and an uneaſineſs at his company, he immediately turn'd his back upon them, as an ungrateful people, being no better than their ſwine; and who, by their conduct, judged themſelves unworthy of his preſence, miniſtry, and miracles: he return'd to the ſea-ſide, took ſhipping, and paſſed over the ſea of Tiberias again, and came into his own city; not Bethlehem, where he was born, nor Nazareth, as Jerom thought, where he was educated, but Capernaum, as is clear from Mark ii. 1. where he much dwelt, frequently converſed, and his diſciples: here he paid tribute as an inhabitant, or citizen of the place, which he was entitled to by only dwelling in it twelve months, according to the Jewiſh canons; where 'tis aſked[d], "how long ſhall a man be in a city e'er he is as the men of the city? 'Tis anſwered, twelve months; but if he purchaſes a dwelling-houſe, he is as the men of the city immediately;" that is, he is a citizen, and obliged to all charges and offices, as they are: tho' they ſeem to make a diſtinction between an inhabitant and a citizen[e]. "A man is not reckoned כבני העיר, as the children of the city, or as one of the citizens, in leſs than twelve months; but he may be called, or accounted, מיושבי העיר, as one of the inhabitants of the city, if he ſtays there thirty days." One or other of theſe Chriſt had done, which denominated this city to be his, and he to be either an inhabitant, or a citizen of it.

Ver. 2. And behold, they brought to him a man ſick of the palſy, &c.] That is, ſome of the inhabitants of Capernaum, four men of that city particularly; for Mark ſays, ch. ii. 3. he was born of four: theſe brought him to Jeſus, lying on a bed, or couch, he being ſo enfeebled by the diſeaſe upon him, his nerves ſo weak, and the members of his body in ſuch a tremor, that he was not able to walk himſelf, nor even to be carried by others in any other way than this. And Jeſus ſeeing their faith; the faith of the bearers of him, his friends, who brought out a man to be healed, who was otherwiſe incurable; and tho' they could not, for the multitude, bring him directly to Chriſt, they were not diſcouraged, but took the pains to carry him to the top of the houſe, and there let him him down thro' the roof, or tiling; as both Mark and Luke ſay; and then ſet him down before him, believing he was able to cure him: moreover, Chriſt took notice not only of their faith, but of the ſick man's too, who ſuffered himſelf to be brought out in this condition, and was contented to go thro' ſo much fatigue and trouble, to get at him; when he ſaid unto the ſick of the palſy, ſon, be of good chear, thy ſins are forgiven thee. He calls him ſon, either meaning by it no more than man; ſee Luke v. 20. or uſing it as a kind, tender, and endearing appellation; or as conſidering him in the grace of adoption, as one that God had put among the children, had given to him as ſuch, and whom he ſhould bring to glory. He bids him be of good chear, whoſe animal ſpirits were fainting thro' the diſeaſe that was upon him, and the fatigue he had underwent in being brought to him; and his ſoul more diſtreſſed and dejected, under a ſenſe of his ſins and tranſgreſſions; which Jeſus knowing, very pertinently ſays, thy ſins be forgiven thee; than which, nothing could be more chearing and reviving to him: or Chriſt ſays this to ſhew, that ſin was the cauſe of the diſeaſe and affliction that were upon him, for אין יסורין בלא עון, there are no chaſtiſements without ſin, as the Jews ſay [f]; and that the cauſe being removed, the effects would ceaſe; of both which he might be aſſured, and therefore had good reaſon to chear up, and be of good heart. This was a wonderful inſtance of the grace of Chriſt, to beſtow a bleſſing unaſked, and that of the greateſt moment and importance.

---

[d] Miſn. Bava Bathra, c. 1. §. 5.

[e] Gloſſ. in T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 112. 1.

Ver. 3. And behold, certain of the Scribes ſaid within themſelves, &c.] And of the Phariſees alſo, as Luke ſays; for there were at this time Phariſees and Doctors of the law, who were come out of every town of Galilee and Judea, and out of Jeruſalem, ſitting and hearing him teach, and obſerving what he ſaid, and did; who upon hearing him pronounce the ſentence of pardon, upon this paralytick man, reaſoned and concluded in their own minds, tho' they did not care to ſpeak it out, that this man blaſphemeth: the reaſon was, becauſe they thought he aſcribed that to himſelf, which was peculiar to God: and ſo he did, and yet did not blaſpheme; becauſe he himſelf was God, of which he quickly gave convincing proofs.

Ver. 4. And Jeſus knowing their thoughts, &c.] Which was a clear evidence, and full demonſtration of his deity; for none knows the thoughts of the heart but God; and ſince he knew the thoughts of mens hearts, it could be no blaſphemy in him to take that to himſelf which belonged to God, even to forgive ſins. And this, one would think, would have been ſufficient to have approved himſelf to them as the true Meſſiah; ſince this is one of the ways of knowing the Meſſiah, according to the Jews, and which they made uſe of to diſcover a falſe one. “Bar Coziba, they ſay [g], reigned two years and a half: he ſaid to the Rabbins, I am the Meſſiah; they replied to him, it is written of the Meſſiah, that he is of quick underſtanding, and judges, (referring to Iſ. xi. 3.) let us ſee whether this man is of quick underſtanding, and can make judgment, i. e. whether a man is wicked, or no, without any external proof; and when they ſaw he was not of quick underſtanding, and could not judge in this manner, they ſlew him.” But now Chriſt needed not any teſtimony of men; he knew what was in the hearts of men, of which this inſtance is a glaring proof: hence he ſaid, wherefore think ye evil in your hearts? it was no evil in them to think that God only could forgive ſin; but the evil was, that they thought Chriſt was a mere man, and ought not to have took ſo much upon him; and that, for ſo doing, he was a wicked man, and a blaſphemer.

Ver. 5. For whether is eaſier to ſay, &c.] Chriſt proceeds to clear himſelf of the charge of blaſphemy, and to prove his power to forgive ſins, by putting a caſe to them, of which he makes themſelves judges, and is this: which is eaſieſt to be ſaid, thy ſins are forgiven thee? or to ſay, ariſe and walk? Neither of them were eaſy to a mere creature, but both of them eaſy to God; and he that could ſay the one with power and efficacy going along with his word, could ſay the other as effectually: and whereas it was a plain caſe, and out of all queſtion, that he could bid this paralytick man, though in this weak condition, ariſe from his bed, ſtand upon his feet, and go home of himſelf; and ſince he had already healed many that were ſick of the palſy, and particularly the centurion's ſervant, by a word ſpeaking, he muſt have equal power to forgive ſin. For to heal the diſeaſes of the body in ſuch a wonderful manner, was a very ſenſible proof of his power to heal the maladies of the ſoul; and tho' theſe are greater than thoſe of the body, yet ſince both require divine power, he that is able to do the one, is able to do the other. And that it might appear, he did not ſay this in a boaſting manner, he adds,

Ver. 6. But that ye may know that the ſon of man, &c.] That they might have a viſible proof, an ocular demonſtration, that tho' he was the ſon of man, truly and really man, yet not a mere man; but alſo as truly and properly God, God and man in one perſon, and ſo hath power on earth to forgive ſins: not only ability as God, but even authority to do it as mediator, even whilſt he was on earth, in a ſtate of humiliation, in faſhion as a man, in the form of a ſervant, converſing with ſinful mortals. Then ſaith he to the ſick of the palſy; turning himſelf from the Scribes, unto him, and without putting up any prayer to God, but by a mere word of command, ſays to him, ariſe, take up thy bed, and go unto thine houſe: he ordered him to ariſe from his bed, on which he was carried by four men, and take up his bed, and carry it himſelf; which would be not only an evidence that the diſeaſe had left him, but that he was in full ſtrength, and perfect health; and to go to his own houſe, not only that the multitude might ſee that he could walk home himſelf, whom they had ſeen brought by others; but that thoſe in the houſe, who had been eye-witneſſes of his great diſorder and weakneſs, might be alſo of his cure.

Ver. 7. And he aroſe, and departed to his houſe.] Immediately, at the command of Chriſt, believing he was able to heal him by a word ſpeaking; and, upon his attempt to ariſe, found himſelf perfectly healed of his diſeaſe, and endued with ſuch ſtrength, that he could, not only with the greateſt eaſe, ariſe from his bed, ſtand upon his feet, and walk alone, without any help; but, as the other Evangeliſts declare, took up his bed, on which he lay, carried it home on his ſhoulders, in the ſight of all the people, praiſing, and giving glory to God for this wonderful cure, which he had received.

Ver. 8. But when the multitude ſaw it, &c.] The miracle that was wrought; when they ſaw the man take up his bed, and carry it home, which was done by Chriſt, as a proof of his having power to forgive ſin, they marvelled, and glorified God: they were ſtruck with amazement and aſtoniſhment at the ſight, it being what was ſtrange and unuſual; the like to which they had never ſeen before, nor heard of: and concluding it to be more than human, they aſcribed it to God; they praiſed, and adored the divine goodneſs, which had given ſuch power unto men; of working miracles, healing diſeaſes, and delivering miſerable mortals from ſuch maladies, as were otherwiſe incurable; ſtill looking upon Chriſt as a mere man, by whom God did theſe things; not knowing yet the myſtery of the incarnation, God manifeſt in the fleſh.

---

[f] T. Bab Sabbat. fol. 55. 1. Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 70. 4. Tzeror Hammor, fol. 99. 1.

[g] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 93. 2.

Ver. 9. And as Jeſus paſſed forth from thence, &c.] That is, from Capernaum to the ſea-ſide; where, as Mark ſays, the multitude reſorted, and he taught them; he ſaw a man named Matthew; the writer of this Goſpel. The other Evangeliſts call him Levi, who was the ſon of Alpheus: he went by two names; Mark and Luke call him by the name, which perhaps was the more honourable, or the leaſt known, on purpoſe to conceal the former life of the apoſtle, which might expoſe him to the contempt of ſome; but he himſelf chuſes to mention the name by which he was moſt known, as an apoſtle, and that the grace of God might appear the more illuſtrious in his calling and converſion. The Jews ſay [h], that one of Chriſt's diſciples was called מתאי, Matthew, which, as Levi, is an Hebrew name; for tho' he was a publican, yet a Jew; for it was common with the Jews either to be employed by the Roman officers in collecting the toll or tribute, or to farm it of them. Sitting at the receit of cuſtom, or at the cuſtom-houſe, or toll-booth; which both the Syriac verſion, and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel, call מכס, or בית מכסא, the publican's houſe. In the [i] Talmud mention is made of it, in the following parable, upon citing Iſ. lxi. 8. "it is like, ſay the doctors, "to a king of fleſh and blood, who paſſing by "בית המכס, the toll-booth, or publican's houſe, ſays "to his ſervants, give toll to the publicans: they "reply to him, is not all the toll thine? he ſays "to them, all that paſs by the ways will learn of "me, and will not avoid the toll; ſo ſays the holy "bleſſed God, &c." The publicans had houſes, or booths built for them, at the foot of bridges, at the mouth of rivers, and by the ſea-ſhore, where they took toll of paſſengers that went to and fro: hence we read [k] of bridges being made to take toll at, and of publicans being at the water-ſide [l], and of קישרי מוכס [m], the tickets, or ſeals of the publicans; which, when a man had paid toll on one ſide of a river, were given him by the publican, to ſhew to him that ſat on the other ſide, that it might appear he had paid; in which were written two great letters, bigger than thoſe in common uſe [n]. Thus Matthew was ſitting in a toll-booth, near the ſea-ſhore, to receive the toll of paſſengers that came, or went in ſhips or boats. And he ſaith unto him, follow me; notwithſtanding the infamous employment he was in, as accounted by the Jews: this was no bar in the way of his call to be a diſciple of Chriſt; and ſhews, that there was no merit and motive in him, which was the reaſon of this high honour beſtowed upon him; but was entirely owing to the free, ſovereign, and diſtinguiſhing grace of Chriſt, and which was powerful and efficacious: for without telling him what work he muſt do, or how he muſt live, and without his conſulting with fleſh and blood, at once, immediately he aroſe, and followed him: ſuch a power went along with the call, that he directly left his employment, how profitable ſoever it might be to him, and became a diſciple of Chriſt.

Ver. 10. And it came to paſs, as Jeſus ſat at meat in the houſe, &c.] That is, as the Arabic verſion reads it, in the houſe of Matthew, not in the toll-houſe, but in his own houſe; for he immediately quitted the toll-booth, and his office there, and followed Chriſt, and had him to his own houſe, where he made a great feaſt for him, as Luke ſays, to teſtify the ſenſe he had of the wondrous grace which was beſtowed on him; and alſo, that other publicans and ſinners might have an opportunity of hearing Chriſt, and converſing with him, whom he invited to this feaſt; his bowels earning towards them, and ſincerely deſiring their converſion, which is the nature of true grace: for, when a ſoul is made a partaker of the grace of God, it is earneſtly deſirous that this might be the caſe of others, eſpecially its ſinful relations, friends, or companions; and it takes every opportunity of uſing, or bringing them under the means; ſo did Matthew: hence it is ſaid, behold, many publicans and ſinners came and ſat down with him and his diſciples; not of their own accord, but by the invitation of Matthew, and with the good will, and full conſent of Chriſt, who was far from being diſpleaſed with their company and freedom; but gladly embraced every opportunity of doing good to the ſouls of the worſt of men; for ſuch as theſe he came to call and ſave.

Ver. 11. And when the Phariſees ſaw it, &c.] The feaſt Matthew made, the gueſts that were invited, and particularly that Chriſt ſat down to meat with ſuch vile and wicked company; they and the Scribes, as Mark and Luke add, who generally were together, of the ſame complexion, equally enemies to Chriſt, and watchful obſervers of his conduct, and pretending to a more ſtrict and religious way of life, were offended at all this; and ſaid to his diſciples, which they choſe to do, rather than to Chriſt himſelf; partly, becauſe they were afraid to engage in a diſpute with him, who had juſt given them a full proof of his omniſcience, that he knew the very thoughts and reaſonings of their minds, and had ſo confounded them already, both by his arguments and miracles; and partly, becauſe they might think themſelves a match for the diſciples, and might hope to ſtumble and enſnare them, and prevail upon them to quit their profeſſion, and leave following him, whom they would ſuggeſt could not be a good man, that was guilty of ſo evil an action; which, with them, was very unlawful and abhorrent, as that for which they accuſe and reprove him, why eateſt your maſter with publicans and ſinners? The publicans, or gatherers of the Roman tax, toll, or tribute of any ſort, whether Jews or Gentiles, were perſons of a very infamous character; and, as here, ſo often, in Jewiſh writings, are ranked with ſinners, and thoſe of the worſt ſort: ſo falſe ſwearing was allowed to be made להורגים ולחרמין ולמוכסין, to murderers, and to robbers, and to publicans [o]; and ſo publicans and thieves are joined together by Maimonides [p], and a publican is ſaid by him to be as a thief. And indeed this was not only the ſenſe of the Jews, but alſo of other people, according to thoſe words of

Zeno

---

[h] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 43. 1.
[i] T. Bab. Succa, fol. 30. 1.
[k] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 33. 2.
[l] Jarchi in Jud. v. 10.
[m] Miſn. Sabbat, c. 8. §. 2. T. Hieroſ. Sabbat, fol. 11. 2. T. Bab Sabbat, fol. 78. 2. & Bechorot, fol. 30. 2. & Avoda Zara, fol. 39. 1.
[n] Jarchi, Maimonides, & Bartenora in Miſn. Sabbat, c. 8. §. 2. & Gloſſ. in T. Bab. Bechorot, fol. 30. 2.
[o] Miſ. Nedarim, c. 3. §. 4.
[p] Hilch. Gezela, c. 5. §. 9. 11.

Xeno the poet, παντες τελωναι παντες εισιν αρπαγες[q], all publicans are all of them robbers: tho' this was not originally their character; for formerly the beſt of the Roman Gentry were employed in this office, till by male practices it became ſcandalous, when the meaner ſort of people, yea, even vaſſals, were put into it[r]. Now, with ſuch ſort of men as theſe the Phariſees held it unlawful to have any ſort of converſation; they expelled ſuch their ſociety, would not dwell with them in the ſame houſe, nor eat or drink with them; concerning which, their rules and methods are theſe; “ a companion, or friend, who “ becomes the king's collector, or a publican, or “ the like, they drive him from ſociety with them: “ if he abſtains from his evil works, then he is as “ any other man[s].” Again, “ when the king's “ collectors enter into a houſe to dwell, all that are “ in the houſe are defiled[t].” Moreover, 'tis[u] ſaid, that “ the former ſaints eat their common food with “ purity, i. e. with their hands waſhed, and took “ care of all defilements every day; and theſe were “ called Phariſees; and this ſect was exceeding- “ ly holy, and was the way of piety; for ſuch a “ man was ſeparated, and he abſtained from the “ reſt of the people, and he did not touch them, “ ולא יאכל וישתה עמהם, nor did he eat and drink “ with them.” It was a general rule with them, that a clean perſon ought not to eat with an unclean, as they judged the common people to be; nay, that a Phariſee, who was unclean himſelf, might not eat with another perſon that was ſo, and which they boaſt of, as a great degree of holineſs. “ Come and “ ſee, ſay they[w], to what a pitch purity has arrived “ in Iſrael; for they not only teach, that a pure per- “ ſon may not eat with one that is defiled, but “ that one that has a gonorrhœa, may not eat with “ another that has one, leſt he ſhould be uſed to “ tranſgreſs this way; and a Phariſee that has a “ gonorrhœa, may not eat with a common perſon “ that has one, leſt he ſhould be uſed to do ſo.” Hence they looked upon Chriſt and his diſciples as ſuch, and would inſinuate that they were evil men, who had no regard to purity of life and converſation.

Ver. 12. But when Jeſus heard that, &c.] The charge the Phariſees brought againſt him, and the inſinuations they had made of him to his diſciples; which he either over-heard himſelf, or his diſciples related to him, he ſaid unto them; the Phariſees, with an audible voice, not only to confute and convince them, but chiefly to eſtabliſh his diſciples, they were endeavouring to draw away from him: they that be whole need not a phyſician; by which he would ſignify that he was a phyſician; and ſo he is in a ſpiritual ſenſe, and that a very ſkilful one: he knows the nature of all the diſeaſes of the ſoul, without being told them by the patient; what are the true cauſes of them; what is proper to apply; when is the beſt time, and what the beſt manner: he is an univerſal one, with regard both to diſeaſes and to perſons, that apply to him; he heals all ſorts of perſons, and all ſorts of diſeaſes; ſuch as are blind from their birth, are as deaf as the deaf adder, the halt, and the lame, ſuch as have broken hearts, yea the plague in their hearts, and have ſtony ones, and all the relapſes of his people; which he does by his ſtripes and wounds, by the application of his blood, by his word and goſpel, thro' ſinners looking to him, and touching him: he is an infallible one, none ever went from him without a cure; none ever periſhed under his hands; the diſeaſe he heals never returns more to prevail; ſo as to bring on death and deſtruction; and he does all freely, without money, and without price. So Philo the Jew calls the Logos, or word, ιατρον κακων, an healer of diſeaſes[x], and God our legiſlator, των της ψυχης παθων αριστος ιατρος, the beſt phyſician of the diſeaſes of the ſoul[y]. Now Chriſt argues from this his character, in vindication of himſelf; as that he was with theſe perſons, not as a companion of theirs, but as a phyſician to them; and as it is not unlawful, but highly proper and commendable, that a phyſician ſhould be with the ſick; ſo it was very lawful, fit, and proper, yea praiſe-worthy in him, to be among theſe publicans and ſinners, for their ſpiritual good. He ſuggeſts indeed, that they that be whole, in perfect health and ſtrength, as the Phariſes thought themſelves to be, even free from all the maladies and diſeaſes of ſin, were ſtrong, robuſt, and able to do any thing, and every thing of themſelves; theſe truly ſtood in no need of him, as a phyſician, in their own apprehenſion; they ſaw no need of him; in principle they had no need of him, and in practice did not make uſe of him; and therefore it was to no purpoſe to attend them, but converſe with others, who had need of him: but they that are ſick; who are not only diſeaſed and diſordered in all the powers and faculties of their ſouls; as all Adam's poſterity are, whether ſenſible of it or not; but who know themſelves to be ſo, theſe ſee their need of Chriſt as a phyſician, apply to him as ſuch, and to them he is exceeding precious, a phyſician of value; and ſuch were theſe publicans and ſinners. Theſe words ſeem to be a proverbial expreſſion; and there is ſomething like it in the[z] Talmud, דכאיב ליה כאיבא איזל לבי אסיא, he that is afflicted with any pain goes, or let him go to the phyſician's houſe; that is, he that is attended with any ſickneſs or diſeaſe, does, or he ought to, conſult a phyſician.

Ver. 13. But go ye and learn what that meaneth, &c.] צא ולמד, go and learn, is a phraſe uſed by the Jews[a], when they are about to explain a paſſage of ſcripture, and fetch an argument from the connexion of the text. So the phraſe τι εστιν, what that is, or what that meaneth, is Talmudic, as, מהי, what is it? מאי דכתיב, what is that which is written? מאי קרא, what is the ſcripture? that is, what is the meaning of it? Our Lord ſpeaks in their own dialect, and tacitly reproves their ignorance of the ſcriptures; and inſtead of finding fault with him, and his conduct, he intimates, it would better become them to endeavour to find out the meaning of that paſſage in Hoſ. vi. 6. I will have mercy, and not ſacrifice; which, if rightly underſtood, was ſufficient to ſilence all their cavils and objections: and which words are to be taken, not in an abſolute and unlimited ſenſe; for ſacrifices even of ſlain beaſts, which were offered up in the faith of Chriſt's ſacrifice, and were attended with other acts of religion and piety, were acceptable to God, being his own inſtitutions and appointments; but, in a comparative ſenſe, as the following clauſe in the prophet ſhews; and the knowledge of God more than burnt offerings: and ſo the ſenſe is given in the Chaldee paraphraſe, after this manner; for in thoſe that exerciſe mercy is my good-will and pleaſure, or delight, ממדבח, more than in ſacrifice:

---

[q] Apud Fabricii Græc. Biblioth. l. 2. c. 22. p. 755.
[r] Alex. ab Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 2. c. 29.
[s] Maimon. Miſhcab & Moſhab, c. 10. §. 8.
[t] Ib. c. 12. §. 12.
[u] Ib. Hilchoth Tumaot Okelim. c. 16. §. 12.
[w] T. Bab. Sabbat fol. 13. 1.
[x] Allegor. l. 2. p. 93.
[y] Quod Deus ſit immutab. p. 303.
[z] T. Bab. Bava Kama, fol. 46. 2.
[a] T. Bab. Succa, fol. 5. 1. & Sanhedrim, fol. 86. 1. Moſes Kotſenſis Mitzvot Tora pr. neg. 116. Vid. Maimon. Hilchot Melachim, c. 5. §. 11.

and the meaning is, that God takes more delight and pleaſure, either in ſhewing mercy himſelf to poor miſerable ſinners; or in acts of mercy, compaſſion, and beneficence done by men, to fallen creatures in diſtreſs, whether for the good of their bodies, or more eſpecially for the welfare of their ſouls, than he does even in ſacrifices, and in any of the rituals of the ceremonial law, though of his own appointing: and therefore muſt be ſuppoſed to have a leſs regard to ſacrifices, which were offered, neither in a right manner, nor from a right principle, nor to a right end; and ſtill leſs to human traditions, and cuſtoms, which were put upon a level, and even preferr'd to his inſtitutions; ſuch as theſe the Phariſees were ſo zealous of. The force of our Lord's reaſoning is, that ſince his converſation, with publicans and ſinners, was an act of mercy and compaſſion to their ſouls, and deſigned for their ſpiritual good; it muſt be much more pleaſing to God, than had he attended to the traditions of the elders, they charge him with the breach of: beſides, what he was now doing was the end of his coming into this world, and which was anſwered hereby; for I am not come to call the righteous, but ſinners to repentance. The phraſe, to repentance, is not in the Vulgate Latin, nor in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel, nor in the Syriac, Ethiopic, and Perſic verſions; but is in the Arabic, and in the ancient Greek copies, and is very juſtly retained. The repentance here deſigned, is not a legal, but an evangelical one; which is attended with faith in Chriſt, with views, at leaſt hopes of pardon thro' his blood, and ſprings from a diſcovery and ſenſe of his love: it lies in a true ſenſe of ſin, and the exceeding ſinfulneſs of it, by the light of the Spirit of God; in a godly ſorrow for it, and hearty loathing of it; in real ſhame and bluſhing for it, ingenuous confeſſion of it, and departing from it; all which is brought on, influenced, heightened, and increaſed, by diſplays of the love of God through Chriſt. The perſons called to this are not the righteous; meaning either ſuch who are really ſo, becauſe theſe are already called to it, tho' whilſt in a ſtate of imperfection, daily need the exerciſe of this grace; or rather ſuch who are ſo in their own opinion, and in the ſight of men only, not in the ſight of God, which was the caſe of the Scribes and Phariſees, and very few of theſe were called and brought to repentance; but ſinners, even the worſt, and chief of ſinners, who, as they ſtand in need of this grace, and when thoroughly convinced, ſee they do; ſo Chriſt came into this world as a prophet and miniſter of the word to call them to it: which call of his does not ſuppoſe that they had a power to repent of themſelves; for this man has not, he is naturally blind, and don't ſee his ſin; his heart is hard and obdurate, and till his eyes are opened, and his ſtony heart taken away by a ſuperior power to his own, he'll never repent; tho' he may have ſpace, yet if he has not grace given him, he'll remain impenitent. No means will bring him to it of themſelves, neither the moſt ſevere judgments, nor the greateſt kindneſſes, nor the moſt powerful miniſtry; repentance is entirely a free grace-gift: nor does the call of Chriſt imply the contrary; which may be conſidered either as external, as a preacher of the word, and as ſuch was not always attended to, and effectual, but often ſlighted and rejected: or as internal, being by the power of his grace effectual; for he who called to repentance, as a miniſter of the word, as a prince and a ſaviour, was able to give it, and which none but a divine perſon is able to do. The Jews have a ſaying [b] of "ſhepherds, collectors of taxes and publicans, תשובתן קשה, that their repentance is difficult." Now, ſince this was the end of his coming into the world, his conduct in converſing with publicans and ſinners was in all reſpects highly to be juſtified.

Ver. 14. Then came to him the diſciples of John, &c.] Of John the Baptiſt, to whom they had addicted themſelves, and by whom they abode: tho' their maſter was in priſon, and the Meſſiah was known to be come, yet ſtill they were attached to John, and particularly imitated him in the auſterities of his life. Theſe, either hearing of the great entertainment made at Matthew's houſe for Chriſt, and his diſciples, at which they were offended; or elſe being moved, and ſet on by the Phariſees, with whom they were agreed in the buſineſs of faſting, came to Chriſt where he was, and put this queſtion to him, ſaying, why do we, and the Phariſees, faſt oft, but thy diſciples faſt not? Not that they wanted to know the reaſon why they and the Phariſees faſted; that they could account for themſelves, but why Chriſt's diſciples did not: and this is ſaid not ſo much by way of enquiry, as reproof; and their ſenſe is, that Chriſt's diſciples ought to faſt, as well as they and the Phariſees, and not eat, and drink, and feaſt in the manner they did. The faſtings here referr'd to, are not the publick faſts enjoined by the law of Moſes, or in any writings of the Old Teſtament; but private faſts, which were enjoined by John to his diſciples, and by the Phariſees to theirs; or which were, according to the traditions of the elders, or of their own appointing, and which were very often indeed: for beſides their faſting twice a week, on Monday and Thurſday, Luke xviii. 12. they had a multitude of faſts upon divers occaſions, particularly for rain [c]. If the 17th of Marcheſvan, or October, came, and there was no rain, private perſons kept three days of faſting, viz. Monday, Thurſday, and Monday again; and if the month of Ciſleu, or November, came, and there was no rain, then the ſanhedrim appointed three faſt-days, which were on the ſame days as before, for the congregation; and if ſtill there was no rain came, they added three more; and if yet there were none, they enjoined ſeven more, in all thirteen, which R. Acha and R. Barachiah kept themſelves [d]. Faſts were kept alſo on account of many other evils, as peſtilence, famine, war, ſieges, inundations, or any other calamity; ſometimes for trifling things, as for dreams [e], that they might have good ones, or know how to interpret them, or avoid any ill omen by them; and it is almoſt incredible what frequent faſtings ſome of the Rabbins exerciſed themſelves with, on very inſignificant occaſions. They [f] ſay, "R. Joſe צם תמני" צומין, faſted fourſcore faſts to ſee R. Chiyah Rubba; at laſt he ſaw, and his hands trembled, and his eyes grew dim.——R. Simeon Ben Lakiſh צם תלת מאוון צומין, faſted three hundred faſtings to ſee R. Chiyah Rubba, and did not ſee him." Elſewhere it is ſaid, that R. Aſe faſted thirty days to ſee the ſame perſon, and ſaw him not [g]. Again [h], "R. Jonathan faſted every eve of the new year, R. Abin faſted every eve of the feaſt of tabernacles, R. Zeura faſted three hundred faſts, and there are that ſay nine hundred faſts." This may ſerve to illuſtrate and prove the frequency of the Jewiſh faſtings. Luke repreſents this queſtion as put by the Phariſees, which is here put by the diſciples of John: it was doubtleſs put by both agreeing in this matter; and which ſhews that John's diſciples were inſtigated to it by the Phariſees, who ſought to ſow diſcord between them, and to bring Chriſt and his diſciples into contempt with them.

---

[b] T. Bab. Bava Kama, fol. 94. 3.

[c] Miſn. Taanith, c. 1. §. 4, 5, 6. & c. 3. §. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. Maimon. & Bartenora in ib.

[d] T. Hieroſ. Taaniot, fol. 65. 2. & 66. 4.

[e] T. Bab. Sabbat. fol. 10. 1. Maimon Taaniot, c. 1. §. 12—14.

[f] T. Hieroſ. Cilaim, fol. 32. 2. & Cetubot, fol 35. 1.

[g] Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 79. 1.

[h] Ib. Nedarim, fol. 40. 4. & Taanioth, fol. 66. 1.

Ver. 15. And Jeſus ſaid unto them, &c.] To the diſciples of John, the Phariſees being preſent, who both have here a full anſwer; tho' it ſeems to be eſpecially directed to the former: can the children of the bride-chamber mourn, as long as the bridegroom is with them? By the bridegroom Chriſt means himſelf, who ſtands in ſuch a relation to his church, and to all believers; whom he ſecretly betrothed to himſelf from all eternity, in the covenant of grace; and openly eſpouſes in effectual vocation; and will ſtill do it in a more publick manner at the laſt day. John, the maſter of thoſe men, who put the queſtion to Chriſt, had acknowledged him under this character, John iii. 29. and therefore they ought to own it as belonging to him; ſo that the argument upon it came with the greater force to them. By the children of the bride-chamber are meant the diſciples, who were the friends of the bridegroom, as John alſo ſays he was; and therefore rejoiced at hearing his voice, as theſe did, and ought to do; their preſent ſituation, having the preſence of Chriſt the bridegroom with them, required mirth and not mourning, John, their maſter, being witneſs. The alluſion is to a nuptial ſolemnity, which is a time of joy and feaſting, and not of ſorrow and faſting; when both bride and bridegoom have their friends attending them, who uſed to be called בני החופה, the children of the bride-chamber. The bride had her maidens waiting on her; and it is ſaid [i], "ſhe did "not go into the bride-chamber but with them; "and theſe are called, בני חופתא, the children of "the bride-chamber." So the young men that were the friends of the bridegroom, which attended him, were called by the ſame name; and, according to the Jewiſh canons, were free from many things they were otherwiſe obliged to: thus it is ſaid [k]; "the bridegroom, his friends, and all "בני חחופה, the children of the bride-chamber, are "free from the booth all the ſeven days;" that is, from dwelling in booths at the feaſt of tabernacles, which was too ſtrait a place for ſuch feſtival-ſolemnities. And again, "the bridegroom, his "friends, and all בני החופה, the children of the "bride-chamber are free from prayer and the phy"lacteries;" that is, from obſerving the ſtated times of attending to theſe things, and much more then were they excuſed from faſting and mourning; ſo that the Phariſees had an anſwer ſufficient to ſilence them, agreeable to their own traditions. Give me leave to tranſcribe one paſſage more, for the illuſtration of this text [l]. "When R. Lazar ben "Arach opened, in the buſineſs of Mercava, (the "viſions in the beginning of Ezekiel) Rabban Jo"chanan ben Zaccai alighted from his aſs; for he "ſaid it is not fit I ſhould hear the glory of my "creator, and ride upon an aſs: they went, and "ſat under a certain tree, and fire came down "from heaven and ſurrounded them; and the mi"niſtring angels leaped before them, כבני חופה, "as the children of the bride-chamber rejoice before "the bridegroom." The time of Chriſt's being with his diſciples, between his entrance on his public miniſtry, and his death, is the time here referr'd to, during which the diſciples had very little care and trouble: this was their rejoicing time, and there was a great deal of reaſon for it; they had no occaſion to faſt and mourn; and indeed the Jews themſelves ſay [m], that "all faſts ſhall ceaſe in "the days of the Meſſiah; and there ſhall be no "more but good days, and days of joy and re"joicing, as it is ſaid, Zech. viii. 19." But the time will come when the bridegroom will be taken away from them; in a forcible manner, and put to death, as he was; and then ſhall they faſt and mourn, and be in great diſtreſs, as John's diſciples now were, on account of their maſter being in priſon.

Ver. 16. No man putteth a piece of new cloth, &c.] Theſe words are, by Luke, ch. v. 36. called a parable, as are thoſe in the following verſe; and both are commonly interpreted of the unreaſonableneſs and danger of putting young diſciples upon ſevere exerciſes of religion, as faſting, &c. and it is true, that young converts are to be tenderly dealt with, as they are by Father, Son, and Spirit, as the diſciples were by Chriſt, and the firſt Chriſtians were by the Apoſtles: and ſome things in theſe parables may ſeem to agree; as that theſe auſterities ſhould be repreſented as new, and as burdenſome and troubleſome, and the diſciples as weak, and eaſily ſtaggered: but then there are others that will not bear; as that the diſciples ſhould be compared to old garments, and old bottles; when they were young converts, and men renewed by the ſpirit and grace of God, and had on the beautiful robe of Chriſt's righteouſneſs; and that ſuch ſevere exerciſes, under the notion of religion, ſhould be ſignified by new wine, which generally deſigns ſomething pleaſant and agreeable: nor were the diſciples unable to bear ſuch ſeverities, who very probably had been trained up in them, and been uſed to them before their converſion; and could now as well have bore them as John's diſciples, or the Phariſees, had they been proper and neceſſary; but the true reaſon why they were not required of them, was not their weakneſs, or danger of falling off, and periſhing, of which there were none; but becauſe it was unſuitable to their preſent ſituation, the bridegroom being with them. But our Lord, in this parable of putting a piece of new, or undreſſed cloth, ſuch as has never paſſed through the fuller's hands, and ſo unfit to mend with, unto an old garment, refers not only to the faſtings of the Phariſees, but to their other traditions of the elders, which they held; as ſuch that reſpected their eating, drinking, and converſing with other perſons mentioned in the context, and which obſervances they joined with their moral performances; on account of which, they looked upon themſelves as very righteous perſons, and all others as ſinners: and to expoſe their folly, Chriſt delivers this parable. Wherefore, by the old garment, I apprehend, is meant their moral and legal righteouſneſs, or their obedience to the moral and ceremonial laws, which was very imperfect, as well as impure, and might be rightly called filthy rags; or be compared to an old worn-out garment, filthy and loathſome, torn, and full of holes, which can't keep a perſon warm, nor ſkreen him from the weather, and ſo old that it can't be mended. And by the piece of new cloth, or garment, put unto it, or ſewed upon it, are intended the traditions of the elders, theſe men were ſo fond of, concerning eating, and drinking, and faſting, and hundreds of other things, very idle and trifling, and which were new and upſtart notions. Now, by putting, or ſewing the new cloth to their old garment, is deſigned, their joining their obſervance of theſe traditions to their other duties of religion, to make up a juſtifying righteouſneſs before God; but in vain, and to no purpoſe. Their old garment of their own works, in obedience to the laws of God, moral and ceremonial, was full bad enough of itſelf; but became abundantly worſe, by joining this new piece of men's own deviſing to it; for that which is put in to fill it up, taketh from the garment, and the rent is made worſe: their new obedience to the traditions of men, making void the law of God, inſtead of mending, marred their righteouſneſs, and left them in a worſe condition than it found them: and beſides, as it is in Luke, the piece that was taken out of the new, agreeth not with the old; there being no more likeneſs between the obſervance of the commandments of men, and obedience to the laws of God, than there is between a piece of new undreſſed cloth, that has never been waſhed and worn, and an old worn out garment. Much ſuch a fooliſh part do thoſe men under the Goſpel diſpenſation act, who join the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, or a part of it, with their own, in order to make up a juſtifying righteouſneſs before God; for Chriſt's righteouſneſs, is the only juſtifying righteouſneſs; it is whole and perfect, and needs nothing to be added to it, nor can it be parted, any more than his ſeamleſs coat was; nor a piece taken out of it: nor is there any juſtification by works, either in whole or in part; the old garment of man's righteouſneſs muſt be thrown away, in point of juſtification; it can't be mended in ſuch a manner; and if any attempts are made in this way, the rent becomes worſe: ſuch perſons, inſtead of being juſtified, are in a worſe condition; for they not only ſet up, and exalt their own righteouſneſs, which is criminal, but diſparage the righteouſneſs of Chriſt as imperfect, by joining it to theirs; and whilſt they fancy themſelves in a good ſtate, are in a moſt miſerable one; harlots and publicans being nearer the kingdom of heaven than theſe, and enter into it before them; ſelf-righteous perſons are more hardly, and with greater difficulty convinced, than ſuch ſinners. Moreover, nothing is more diſagreeable than ſuch a patch-work; Chriſt's righteouſneſs and a man's own, bear no likeneſs to one another; and ſuch a patched garment muſt ill become the character and dignity of a ſaint, a child of God, an heir of heaven.

---

[i] Zohar in Gen. fol. 6. 4.

[k] T. Bab. Succa, fol. 25. 2. & Hieroſ. Succa, fol. 53. 1. Maimon. Succa, c. 6. §. 3.

[l] T. Hieroſ. Chagiga, fol. 77. 1.

[m] Maimon. Hilchot Taaniot, c. 5. §. 19.

Ver. 17. Neither do men put new wine into old bottles, &c.] As in the former parable, our Lord expoſes the folly of the Scribes and Phariſees, in their zealous attachment to the traditions of the elders; ſo in this, he gives a reaſon why he did not call theſe perſons by his Goſpel, who were ſettled upon the old principle of ſelf-righteouſneſs, but ſinners, whom he renews by his Spirit and grace: for by old bottles are meant, the Scribes and Phariſees. The alluſion is to bottles, made of the ſkins of beaſts, which in time decayed, waxed old, and became unfit for uſe: ſuch were the wine-bottles, old and rent, the Gibeonites brought with them, and ſhewed to Joſhua, Joſh. ix. 4, 13. and to which the Pſalmiſt compares himſelf, Pſal. cxix. 83. and which the Miſnic doctors call חמתות, and their commentators [o] ſay, were, נודות של עור, bottles made of ſkin, or leather, and ſo might be rent. Of the uſe of new and old bottles, take the following hint out of the Talmud [p]. "The bottles of the Gentiles if ſcraped and חדשים new, they are free "for uſe; if ישנים old, they are forbidden." Now the Scribes and Phariſees, may be ſignified by theſe old bottles, being natural men, no other than as they were born; having never been regenerated, and renewed in the ſpirit of their minds; in whom the old man was predominant, were mere formal profeſſors of religion, and ſelf-righteous perſons: and by new wine is meant, either the love and favour of God compared to wine, that is neat and clean, becauſe free from hypocriſy in him, or motives in the creature; to generous wine, for its chearing and reviving effects; and to new wine, not but that it is very ancient, even from everlaſting, but, becauſe newly manifeſted, in effectual vocation and converſion: or the Goſpel is ſignified by wine, for its purity, good flavour, and pleaſant taſte; for its generous effects, in reviving drooping ſpirits, refreſhing weary perſons, and comforting diſtreſſed minds; and by new wine, not that it is a new doctrine, an upſtart notion, for it is an ancient Goſpel, but becauſe newly and more clearly revealed by Chriſt and his apoſtles: or the bleſſings of grace which ſpring from the love of God, and are manifeſted in the Goſpel, ſuch as pardon of ſin, reconciliation and atonement, juſtifying and ſanctifying grace, ſpiritual joy and peace, and the like. Now as the new wine is not put into old bottles, elſe the bottles break, and the wine runneth out, and the bottles periſh: ſo the love of God, the Goſpel of the grace of God, and the bleſſings of it, are not received and retained, nor can they be, by natural men, by ſelf-righteous perſons: they don't ſuit and agree with their old carnal hearts and principles; they ſlight and reject them, and let them run out, which proves their greater condemnation. But they put new wine into new bottles, and both are preſerved. By new bottles are meant, ſinners, whom Chriſt calls by his grace, and the Spirit regenerates and renews, who are made new creatures in Chriſt; who have new hearts, and new ſpirits, and new principles of light, life, love, faith, and holineſs, implanted in them; who have new eyes to ſee with, new ears to hear with, new feet to walk with, to and in Chriſt, new hands to work and handle with, and who live a new life and converſation. Now to ſuch as theſe, the love of God is manifeſted and ſhed abroad in their hearts; by theſe, the Goſpel of Chriſt is truly received and valued, and theſe enjoy the ſpiritual bleſſings of it; and ſo both the doctrine of the Goſpel, and the grace of God, are preſerved entire, and theſe perſons ſaved in the day of Chriſt.

Ver. 18. While he ſpake theſe things unto them, &c.] To the Scribes and Phariſees, and to John's diſciples, concerning, and in vindication of his, and his diſciples, eating and drinking with publicans and ſinners, and their not faſting as others did; and while he ſpake theſe parables, to expoſe the folly of ſelf-righteous perſons, and juſtify his own conduct, in calling ſinners to repentance, behold, there came a certain ruler and worſhipped him. This man, as both Mark and Luke ſay, was named Jairus; and was a ruler, not of the Sanhedrim, or leſſer conſiſtory, but of the ſynagogue that was at Capernaum; and whom the Jews call, ראש הכנסת, the head of the ſynagogue. Mark ſays, he was one of the rulers: not that there were more rulers than one, in one ſynagogue [q]: but as in great cities, ſo it is likely in Capernaum there were more ſynagogues than one, of which he was one of the rulers: ſo we read of ראשי כנסיות [r], heads, or rulers of ſynagogues. As this is one miſtake, ſo 'tis another to ſay, that Dr. Light-

---

[o] Jarchi & Bartenora in Miſn. Celim, c. 24. §. 11. & Negaim, c. 11. §. 11.

[p] T. Bab. Avoda Zara, fol. 33. 1.

[q] Vid. Rhenferd. de decem otioſis diſſert. 2. c. 7.

[r] T. Bab. Gittin, fol. 60. 1.

Lightfoot ſpeaks of this ruler, as the ſame with the miniſter of the congregation; when both here, and in the place referred to, he manifeſtly diſtinguiſhes them; as do the Jews: for, by this ruler, as their commentators [s] ſay, "the neceſſary affairs of the "ſynagogue were determined, as who ſhould diſ-"miſs with a prophet, who ſhould divide the "ſhema, and who ſhould go before the ark." Whereas the buſineſs of חזן הכנסת, the miniſter of the ſynagogue, was to bring in and out the ark, or cheſt, in which was the book of the law; and particularly, when the high-prieſt read, or pronounced the bleſſings, he took the book, and gave it to the ruler of the ſynagogue; and the ruler of the ſynagogue gave it to the ſagan, and the ſagan to the high-prieſt [t]. The doctor makes indeed, שליח הצבור, the meſſenger of the congregation, to be the ſame with the miniſter of the ſynagogue, and which is his miſtake; for theſe were two different officers [u]: the former was the lecturer, or preacher; and the latter, a ſort of a ſexton to keep the ſynagogue clean, open and ſhut the doors, and do other things before mentioned. This Jairus, was a man of great power and ſignificancy; who in ſuch a very humble manner, proſtrated himſelf at the feet of Jeſus, and expreſſed ſuch ſtrong faith in him; ſaying, my daughter is even now dead, but come and lay thine hand upon her, and ſhe ſhall live. Luke ſays, ſhe was his only daughter; and Mark calls her his little daughter: though both he and Luke ſay, ſhe was about twelve years of age, and that with ſtrict propriety, according to the Jewiſh canons, which [w] ſay; that "a daughter, from the day of her birth, un-"til ſhe is twelve years compleat, is called, קטנה, a "little one—and when ſhe is twelve years of age, "and one day and upwards, ſhe is called, נערה, a "young woman." Her caſe ſeems to be differently repreſented; Mark ſays, ſhe was at the point of death, or in the laſt extremity; and Luke, that ſhe lay a dying; but Matthew here ſays, that ſhe was even now dead, which may be eaſily reconciled: for not to obſerve, that αρτι, ſignifies near, and the phraſe may be rendered, ſhe is near dead, or juſt expiring, the caſe was this; when Jairus left his houſe, his daughter was in the agony of death, juſt ready to give up the ghoſt; ſo that he concluded, by the time he was with Jeſus, ſhe had made her exit; as it appears ſhe had, by a meſſenger, who brought the account of her death, before they could get to the houſe. The ruler's addreſs to Chriſt on this occaſion, is a very conſiderable, though not ſo great an inſtance of faith as ſome others; that he, who was a ruler of a ſynagogue ſhould apply to Chriſt, which ſort of men were generally moſt averſe to him; that he ſhould fall down and worſhip him, if not as God, ſince as yet he might be ignorant of his deity, yet behaved with the profoundeſt reſpect to him, as a great man, and a prophet; that he ſhould come to him when his child was paſt all hope of recovery; yea, when he had reaſon to believe, ſhe was actually dead, as ſhe was; that even then, he ſhould believe in hope againſt hope: he affirms, that he really believed, that if Chriſt would but come to his houſe, and lay his hand upon her, an action often uſed in grave and ſerious matters, as in bleſſing perſons, in prayer, and in healing diſeaſes, ſhe would certainly be reſtored to life again.

Ver. 19. And Jeſus aroſe and followed him, &c.] Immediately, without delay, or any more ado: he did not upbraid him with the treatment, he and his followers met with, from men of his profeſſion; who caſt out of their ſynagogues ſuch, who confeſſed him to be the Meſſiah: nor does he take notice of any weakneſs in his faith; as that he thought it neceſſary he ſhould go with him to his houſe, when he could as well have reſtored his daughter to life, abſent, as preſent; and that he ſhould preſcribe a form of doing it, by laying his hands upon her. Theſe things he overlooked, and at once got up from Matthew's table, and went along with him, and ſo did his diſciples, to be witneſſes of the miracle; and according to the other Evangeliſts, a large multitude of people beſides; even a throng of them, led by curioſity to ſee this wondrous performance.

Ver. 20. And behold a woman which was diſeaſed, &c.] This affair happened in the ſtreets of Capernaum, as Chriſt was going from the houſe of Matthew the publican, to the houſe of Jairus the ruler of the ſynagogue, which were both in this city. This poor woman's caſe was a very diſtreſſed one; ſhe had been attended with an iſſue of blood twelve years: it was an uncommon flux, of a long ſtanding, was inveterate, and become incurable; though ſhe had not been negligent of herſelf, but had made uſe of means, applied herſelf to regular phyſicians, had took many a diſagreeable medicine, and had ſpent all her ſubſtance in this way; but inſtead of being better, was worſe, and was now given up by them, as paſt all cure. This woman might be truly called, זבה גדולה [x], the greater profluvious woman, in the language of the doctors; for if one that had a flux but three days was called ſo, much more one that had had it twelve years. She having heard of Jeſus, and his miraculous cures, had faith given her to believe, that ſhe alſo ſhould receive one from him; wherefore ſhe came behind him, through modeſty, being aſhamed to come before him, and tell him her caſe, eſpecially before ſo many people; and fearing leſt if her caſe was known, ſhe ſhould be thruſt away, if not by Chriſt, yet by the company; ſhe being according to the law an unclean perſon, and unfit for ſociety: and touched the hem of his garment; which was the, ציצת, or fringes, the Jews were obliged to wear upon the borders of their garments, and on it a ribband of blue; ſee Numb. xv. 38. Deut. xxii. 12. in both which places Onkelos uſes the word כרוספדין, the ſame with κρασπεδον, uſed here, and in Mark vi. 56. and rendered hem. The Jews placed much ſanctity in the wear and uſe of theſe fringes; and the Phariſees, who pretended to more holineſs than others, enlarged them beyond their common ſize: but it was not on account of any peculiar holineſs in this part of Chriſt's garment, that induced this poor woman to touch it; but this being behind him, and more eaſy to be come at, ſhe therefore laid hold on it; for it was his garment, any part of it ſhe concluded, if ſhe could but touch, ſhe ſhould have a cure. However, we learn from hence, that Chriſt complied with the rites of the ceremonial law in apparel, as well as in other things.

Ver. 21. For ſhe ſaid within herſelf, &c.] That is, ſhe thought within herſelf, ſhe reaſoned the matter in her mind, ſhe concluded upon it, and firmly believed it; being ſtrongly impreſſed and influenced by the Spirit of God, and encouraged by inſtances of cures ſhe had heard were performed by perſons only touching him; ſee Luke vi. 9. if I may but touch

---

[s] Jarchi & Bartenora in Miſn. Yoma, c. 7. §. 1. & Sota, c. 7. §. 7.

[t] Miſn. Sota, c. 7. §. 7. & Bartenora in ib.

[u] Vid. Rhenfurd, diſſert. 1. p. 81, &c.

[w] Maimon. Hilchot Iſhot, c. 2. §. 1. & Bartenora in Miſn. Nidda, c. 5. §. 6.

[x] Ib. Iſſure Bia, c. 6. §. 7, 8. & in Miſn. Nidda, c. 4. §. 7.

touch his garment. The Arabic verſion reads it, the hem of his garment, as before; but is not ſupported by any copy, nor by any other verſion: her faith was, that if ſhe might be allowed, or if ſhe could by any means come at him, to touch any part of his garment, ſhe ſhould have a cure: I ſhall be whole, or, I ſhall be ſaved; that is, from her diſeaſe, from which ſhe could have no deliverance, by the advice and preſcriptions of all her former phyſicians, and by all the means ſhe had made uſe of.

Ver. 22. But Jeſus turned him about, &c.] Knowing what was done behind him, that virtue was gone out of him, that the woman had touched him, and was healed; which is a clear proof of his omniſcience, and ſo of his deity: not that he was angry with her for touching him, though ſhe was an impure woman; for though men and garments were defiled by the touch of a profluvious [x] perſon; yet ſuch was the power and holineſs of Chriſt, that as he could not be defiled by any ſuch means, ſo hereby at once, this woman's impurity was alſo removed: but Chriſt turned about to obſerve and point out the woman, and her cure, to the company; not for the ſake of his own honour, but for the glory of God, the commendation of the woman's faith, and chiefly for the ſtrengthening the faith of Jairus, with whom he was going to raiſe his daughter from the dead: and when he ſaw her. The other Evangeliſts, Mark and Luke, record, that Jeſus enquired who touched him, and what anſwer Peter and the diſciples made to him; and how he looked around, and very likely faſtened his eyes upon the woman; when ſhe perceiving that ſhe could not go off undiſcovered, came trembling to him, fell down before him, and told him the whole matter: and then he ſaid, daughter be of good comfort, thy faith hath made thee whole. He addreſſed her in a kind and tender manner, calling her daughter; an affable, courteous way of ſpeaking, uſed by the Jewiſh doctors [y], when ſpeaking to women: which ſhewed his affection, and beſpoke his relation; and bidding her take heart and be of good chear, ſince he meant not to blame her, for what ſhe had done, but to commend her faith in him, whereby ſhe had received a cure: meaning, not that there was ſuch virtue in her faith as to effect ſuch a cure; but that he, the object of her faith, had performed it for her: and the woman was made whole from that hour; her diſeaſe immediately left her, and from that time forward, was no more troubled with it: the cure was ſo effectual, and ſo perfect, that the diſorder never returned more.

Ver. 23. And when Jeſus came into the ruler's houſe, &c.] Both Mark and Luke relate, how that before this, whilſt they were in the way, and juſt as Chriſt had done ſpeaking to the poor woman, that news was brought to the ruler, that his daughter was actually dead, and therefore need not give Jeſus any further trouble; when Chriſt encouraged him not to be caſt down at the tidings, but believe, and ſhe ſhould be reſtored again; and that he ſuffered none to follow him, but Peter, James, and John: and ſaw the minſtrels, or pipers; how many there were, is not known: 'tis certain there were more than one; and it was a rule with the [z] Jews, that “ the pooreſt man in Iſrael (when his wife “ died) had not leſs, משני חלילים, than two pipes, “ and one mourning woman.” And ſince this was a daughter of a ruler of the ſynagogue that was dead, there might be ſeveral of them. Theſe inſtruments were made uſe of, not to remove the melancholy of ſurviving friends, or allay the grief of the afflicted family; but, on the contrary, to excite it: for the Jewiſh writers ſay [a], theſe pipes were hollow inſtruments, with which they made a known ſound, לעורר הבכיה והאבל, to ſtir up lamentation and mourning; and for the ſame purpoſe, they had their mourning women, who anſwered to the pipe; and by their diſheveled hair, and doleful tones, moved upon the affections, and drew tears from others; and very likely are the perſons, that Mark ſays, wept and wailed greatly. Sometimes trumpets were made uſe of on theſe mournful occaſions [b]; but whether theſe were uſed only for perſons more advanced in years, and pipes for younger ones, as by the Heathens [c], at leaſt, at ſometimes, is not certain. And the people making a noiſe; the people of the houſe, the relations of the deceaſed, the neighbours, who came in on this occaſion; and others, in a ſort of tumult and uproar, hurrying and running about; ſome ſpeaking in the praiſe of the dead, others lamenting her death, and others preparing things proper for the funeral; all which ſhew, that ſhe was really dead: among theſe alſo, might be the mourners that made a noiſe for the dead; “ for ſince mourning was for the honour of “ the dead, therefore they obliged the heirs to hire “ mourning men, and mourning women, to mourn “ for the ſame [d].”

Ver. 24. And he ſaid unto them, give place, &c.] Depart, be gone; for he put them out of the room, and ſuffered none to be with him, when he raiſed her from the dead, but Peter, James, and John, and the father and mother of the child, who were witneſſes enough of this miracle. For the maid is not dead, but ſleepeth: not but that ſhe was really dead; and Chriſt ſignifies as much, when he ſays, ſhe ſleepeth; a phraſe that is often uſed in [e] Talmudic writings, for one that is dead: but Chriſt's meaning is, that ſhe was not ſo dead as the company thought; as always to remain in the ſtate of the dead, and not to be reſtored to life again: whereas our Lord ſignifies, it would be ſeen in a very little time, that ſhe ſhould be raiſed again, juſt as a perſon is awaked out of ſleep; ſo that there was no occaſion to make ſuch funeral preparations as they did. The Jews ſay [f] of ſome of their dead, that they are aſleep, and not dead: it is ſaid, Iſa. xxvi. 19. Awake and ſing, ye that dwell in the duſt. “ Theſe, ſay “ they, are they that ſleep and die not; and “ ſuch are they that ſleep in Hebron, for they “ לאו מתין אלא דמיכין, do not die, but ſleep—the “ four couples in Hebron (Adam and Eve, &c.) “ they ſleep, but are not dead.” And they laughed him to ſcorn; they mocked at his words, and had him in the utmoſt contempt, as a very weak ſilly man; taking him either to be a madman, or a fool; knowing that ſhe was really dead, of which they had all the evidence they could have; and having no faith at all in him, and in his power to raiſe her from the dead.

Ver. 25. But when the people were put forth, &c.] Either out of the houſe or room, by Chriſt, or, at leaſt, by his orders: which was done, partly becauſe he was deſirous it might be kept a ſecret, as much as poſſible, and to ſhew, that he did not affect popular applauſe; and partly, becauſe they were unworthy to be admitted ſpectators of ſuch a wondrous action, who had treated him with ſo much ſcorn and contempt; he went in; not alone, but with his three diſciples, Peter, James, and John, who were taken in to be witneſſes of this reſurrection, and the parents of the child; who were ſo very ſollicitous for its life, under whoſe power ſhe was, and to whom ſhe was to be reſtored: and took her by the hand; juſt as one would do to awake another out of ſleep; and, perhaps, in compliance with her father's requeſt, to lay his hand upon her: and though the touch of a dead body, according to the law, Numb. xix. 16. was defiling; yet this did not defile him, any more than his touching the leper, or the profluvious woman's touching his clothes; for theſe actions produced ſupernatural effects, which came not under the cognizance of the law. His taking her by the hand, was not all that he did, but he called, as to a perſon aſleep, and ſaid unto her theſe words, Talitha cumi, as recorded by Mark, and are alſo in Munſter's Hebrew goſpel of Matthew; and which, in the Syriac language, ſignify, maiden ariſe; and immediately, directly, as ſoon as ever he had thus ſaid, the maid aroſe, as out of a ſleep; ſhe revived, her ſoul came to her again, and ſhe got off of the bed, and walked about houſe, and food was ordered to be given to her. All which moſt fully demonſtrated that ſhe was really reſtored to life; which was as clear a caſe, as that before ſhe was really dead.

---

[x] Miſn. Oholot, c. 1. §. 5. & Zabim, c. 2. §. 4. & 3. 1, 2, 3. & 4. 5. & 5. 1.

[y] Miſn. Yadaim, c. 3. §. 1.

[z] Miſn. Cetubot, c. 4. §. 4. Maimon. Iſhot, c. 14. §. 23.

[a] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Sabbat, c. 23. §. 4.

[b] Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 77. 4.

[c] Vid. Kirchman. de funer. Roman. l. 2. c. 5.

[d] Maimon. Hilch. Ebel, c. 12. §. 1.

[e] T. Hieroſ. Beracot, fol. 6. 1. Avoda Zara, fol. 42. 3. Bereſhit Rabba Paraſh. 91. fol. 79. 3.

[f] Zohar in Exod. fol. 62. 4.

Ver. 26. And the fame hereof went abroad into all that land.] For though he ſtrictly charged the parents, as the other Evangeliſts ſay, that they ſhould tell no man what was done, he not affecting the applauſe of men; yet it was not poſſible the thing ſhould be entirely concealed; ſince there was ſuch a number of people, not only relations, but neighbours, who full well knew, and were aſſured ſhe had been dead: when theſe ſaw her alive, walk about, eat and drink, and converſe with them, they muſt be perſuaded of the miracle, and relate it wherever they came; ſo that the fame of it could not but be ſpread all over the country, in which Capernaum was.

Ver. 27. And when Jeſus departed thence, &c.] From the houſe of Jairus, to another in the ſame city; two blind men followed him: very cloſely, by the direction of others, having heard of the miracle juſt now performed by him; and from thence concluded, he was able to reſtore them to their ſight; crying and ſaying, with great faith and fervour, with much importunity, and frequently repeating the following words, thou ſon of David, have mercy on us. Whence it appears, that they firmly believed, and were fully perſuaded, that he was the true Meſſiah; for the ſon of David, was a known character of the Meſſiah among the Jews: nothing was more common than to call him by this title, without any other additional epithet; ſee the note on Matt. i. 1. and ſince it had been propheſied of the Meſſiah, that he ſhould open the eyes of the blind, Iſa. xxxv. 5. and xlii. 7. they might be greatly encouraged to hope and believe, they ſhould obtain mercy from him in this reſpect.

Ver. 28. And when he was come into the houſe, &c.] In which he dwelt, whilſt at Capernaum: for he took no notice of them by the way; but though they followed him cloſe, and cried vehemently, he did not ſtop to ſpeak to them, or give them a cure, according to their requeſt, but went on his way; which he did, partly to avoid the populace, and that he might not be ſeen by men, in what he did, and partly to try their faith, and the conſtancy of it. The blind men came to him; being directed by others, into what houſe he went, and where he was, and very probably with the leave of Chriſt: and Jeſus ſaith unto them, believe ye that I am able to do this? That is, to have mercy on them, as they requeſted, by curing them of their blindneſs; which, though not expreſſed, is implied, and is the thing deſigned: this queſtion is put, not as being ignorant of, or as doubting their faith in him, which they had expreſſed, in calling him the ſon of David; and had ſhewn the firmneſs and conſtancy of it, by following him, though he took no notice of them; but partly, for the further trial of their faith, and to bring them to a more open profeſſion of it, as to this particular, his power to cure them of their blindneſs; and partly, for the ſake of thoſe that were in the houſe: they ſaid unto him, yea, Lord. They firmly believed he had power to do it, they had not the leaſt doubt and heſitation in their minds about it; for though their bodily eyes were at preſent dark, the eyes of their underſtandings were enlightened, to ſee and know Jeſus to be the true Meſſiah, David's ſon, and Lord.

Ver. 29. Then touched he their eyes, &c.] Not but that he could have reſtored ſight to them, without touching their eyes, by a word ſpeaking, or by the ſecret communication of his power; but he might do this as a ſign of his favour, and kindneſs to them, and of his will to cure them; as alſo in compliance with their weakneſs, who might expect ſome manual operation upon them; ſaying, according to your faith be it unto you: not that faith in his perſon and power, was the cauſe or condition of this cure, or the rule and meaſure according to which Chriſt proceeded; but the ſenſe is, that as they had believed, he was able to heal them, accordingly, a cure ſhould be effected; which, upon his ſo ſaying, they immediately found performed in them.

Ver. 30. And their eyes were opened, &c.] Some copies read, immediately; and ſo do the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions: and this was certainly the true, and real matter of fact, that as ſoon as Chriſt had touched their eyes, and ſaid the above words, their ſight was perfectly reſtored to them; and they had a clear, full, and true ſight of objects, as men have, whoſe viſive faculty is in its full ſtrength and vigour, and their eyes open: and Jeſus ſtraitly charged them, ſaying, ſee that no man know it. This was a very ſtrict charge, and according to the ſignification of the word here uſed, it was given with great auſterity of countenance, and ſeverity of expreſſion, in a very rough and threatning manner; which Chriſt might be the rather induced to, becauſe he had given ſuch like orders already, and they had not been obſerved: the reaſons for concealing the miracle, are not very obvious; it ſeems likely, that with the ſame view he took no notice of theſe blind men in the ſtreet, but went into an houſe, and cured them; which ſeems to be, to ſhun all appearance of vain glory, or ſeeking popular applauſe, that he gave theſe orders; or it may be, he did not chuſe to be made more known by this miracle, or at this time, or by theſe men: he might foreſee that it would be attended with ill conſequences; either the more to irritate the reſentments of ſome perſons againſt him; or to put others on doing things, which were diſagreeable to him; as ſetting him up for a temporal prince among them, being David's ſon.

Ver. 31. But they when they were departed, &c.] That is, out of the houſe where they received their cure, and out of the city; for it appears by what follows, they went into other parts, where it is probable they might originally belong; they ſpread abroad his fame in all that country. This they did, not in contempt of Chriſt and his orders; but rather ther out of gratitude to their benefactor, and through an honeſt zeal to ſpread his honour and glory: though they are not to be commended for diſregarding the command of Chriſt; for, not our affection, but Chriſt's will, is to be the rule of our actions.

Ver. 32. As they went out, &c.] The Syriac verſion reads it, when Jeſus went out; to which agrees the Arabic, againſt all the copies: for not he, but the men who had been blind, and now had their ſight reſtored, went out from the houſe where Jeſus was; which circumſtance is mentioned, and by it the following account is introduced, partly to ſhew how buſy Chriſt was, how he was continually employed in doing good, and that as ſoon as one work of mercy was over, another offered; and partly, to obſerve how cloſely and exactly the prophecies of the Old Teſtament were fulfilled; in which, as it was foretold, that the eyes of the blind ſhould be opened; ſo likewiſe, that the tongue of the dumb ſhould ſing, Iſa. xxxv. 5, 6. Behold, they brought to him a dumb man poſſeſſed with a devil. The word ſignifies one that is deaf, as well as dumb; as does the Hebrew word חרש, often uſed by the Jewiſh writers, for a deaf and dumb man; one, they ſay [g], that can neither hear nor ſpeak, and is unfit for ſacrifice, and excuſed many things: and indeed theſe two, deafneſs and dumbneſs, always go together in perſons, who are deaf from their birth; for as they cannot hear, they cannot learn to ſpeak: but this man ſeems to be dumb, not by nature, but through the poſſeſſion of ſatan; who had taken away, or reſtrained the uſe of his ſpeech, out of pure malice and ill-will, that he might not have the benefit of converſation with men, nor be able to ſay any thing to the glory of God. This man did not come of himſelf to Chriſt, perhaps being unwilling, through the power and influence the devil had over him; but his friends, who were concerned for his welfare, and who were thoroughly perſuaded of the power of Chriſt to heal him, by the miracles they had ſeen, or heard performed by him, brought him to him; and no doubt, expreſſed their deſire, that he would caſt out the devil, and cure him, which he did.

Ver. 33. And when the devil was caſt out, the dumb ſpake, &c.] The cauſe of his dumbneſs being removed, the effect ceaſed, and the man ſpake as he did before, and as other men do; and this was done, according to the Perſic verſion, as ſoon as Chriſt ſaw him; the devil not being able to bear his preſence, much leſs withſtand his power: but as ſoon as Chriſt had ſet his eyes upon the man poſſeſſed by him, and had given him orders to be gone, he immediately went out, and the man was reſtored to his ſpeech again; and the multitudes marvelled, ſaying, it was never ſo ſeen in Iſrael. The vaſt crowds of people, who were alarmed with the former miracles of Chriſt, and came along with the friends of the dumb man, when they heard him ſpeak ſo ſuddenly and plainly, and with ſo much freedom, nothing being ſaid or done to him, were ſurprized; and declared very frankly, that though many wonderful things had been done in Iſrael, in times paſt, by Moſes, Elijah, Eliſha, and others, yet never were ſuch things ſeen, or heard, or known of, as were done by Chriſt: referring not to this miracle only, but to all the reſt he had juſt wrought; as curing the woman of her bloody iſſue, raiſing Jairus's daughter from the dead, reſtoring ſight to the two blind men, and now caſting out a dumb devil.

Ver. 34. But the Phariſees ſaid, &c.] Who were the ſworn enemies of Chriſt, and were filled with envy at him, and malice againſt him: theſe men could not bear, that ſo much honour and glory ſhould be given to Chriſt; and therefore ſaid, he caſteth out the devils through the prince of the devils: they could not deny matter of fact, that he had caſt out a devil; nor could they ſay he had done an ill thing in ſo doing; they could not but own that it was a preternatural action, more than human; nor could they contradict what the multitude ſaid, that no ſuch thing had been ever ſeen, or known, in Iſrael: but that Chriſt might not have the glory of the action, and to fix a mark of infamy upon him, fooliſhly impute it to a diabolical influence, as if one devil would eject another; and to Chriſt's familiarity with, and the aſſiſtance he had from, not a common devil, but the prince of them. In Beza's moſt ancient manuſcript, and in ſome others, this whole verſe is wanting; and were it not for the general conſent of copies, one ſhould be tempted to think theſe words were not ſaid at this time, becauſe Chriſt returns no anſwer to them; and what is obſerved by Luke, ch. xi. 15. as following this miracle, is the ſelf-ſame as was ſpoken by Chriſt, in Matt. xii. 24, 25. and where this paſſage is more thoroughly conſidered.

Ver. 35. And Jeſus went about all the cities and villages, &c.] He did not confine himſelf, and his acts of kindneſs and compaſſion, to his own city Capernaum, but he took a circuit throughout all Galilee; and not only viſited their larger and more principal cities and towns, but their villages alſo; doing good to the bodies and ſouls of men in every place, and of whatever ſtate and condition. Teaching in their ſynagogues; which were places of publick worſhip, where prayer was made, the law and the prophets were read, and a word of exhortation given to the people; and which, it ſeems, were in villages, as well as in cities and towns: and indeed it is a rule with the Jews [h], that "in what "place ſoever there are ten Iſraelites, they ought "to build a houſe, to which they may go to "prayer, at all times of prayer; and ſuch a place "is called בית הכנסת, a ſynagogue." And hence we often read, of [i] בית הכנסת של כפרים, the ſynagogue of villages, as diſtinct from the ſynagogues of cities and walled towns; which confutes a notion of the learned Dr. Lightfoot [k], who thought there were no ſynagogues in villages. Now wherever Chriſt found any of theſe, he entered into them, and taught the people publickly, preaching the goſpel of the kingdom; the good news and glad tidings of peace and pardon, reconciliation and ſalvation, by himſelf the Meſſiah; all things relating to the Goſpel diſpenſation; the doctrines of grace, which concern both the kingdom of grace and glory; particularly the doctrine of regeneration, and the neceſſity of having a better righteouſneſs than that of the Scribes and Phariſees; the one as a meetneſs, the other as a title to eternal happineſs: and healing every ſickneſs, and every diſeaſe among the people. As he preached wholeſome doctrine for the good of their ſouls, for their ſpiritual health, and the cure of their ſpiritual maladies; ſo he healed all ſorts of diſeaſes, the bodies of men were incident to, that were brought unto him; and by his miracles confirmed, as well as recommended the doctrines he preached.

---

[g] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Trumot, c. 1. §. 2. T. Bab. Chagiga, fol. 2. 2.

[h] Maimon. Hilchot Tephilla, c. 11. §. 1.

[i] T. Bab. Megilla, fol. 26. 1. & Gloſſ. in ib. Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Megilla, c. 3. §. 1. & Maimon. Hilch. Tephilla, c. 11. §. 16.

[k] In Mark i. 38. & Chorograph. ad Matt. c 98.

Ver. 36. But when he ſaw the multitudes, &c.] As he took his circuit through the ſeveral cities, towns, and villages, he made his obſervations upon the large numbers that flocked to his miniſtry, and ſeemed to be deſirous of ſpiritual inſtructions, in what an unhappy and melancholy ſituation they were; and he was moved with compaſſion on them: his bowels yearned for them, he was touched with a feeling of their infirmities, as the merciful high-prieſt, the good ſhepherd, and faithful prophet; being heartily concerned for the ſouls of men, their comfort here, and everlaſting happineſs hereafter: becauſe they fainted; being fatigued and tired, not in their bodies, through journeying from place to place, to hear the word, but in their minds; being burdened and wearied with the various traditions and doctrines of the Scribes and Phariſees: and were ſcattered abroad; thrown and toſſed about, and divided through the different ſects of religion among them; no due care was taken of them, to gather and keep them together, and feed them with wholeſome doctrine; but were as abjects, outcaſts, that no man regarded, and in great danger of the loſs and ruin of their immortal ſouls; being as ſheep without a ſhepherd; that was good for any thing, or did the office and duty of a ſhepherd to them: the Scribes and Phariſees were ſhepherds indeed, ſuch as they were, but very bad ones; like the ſhepherds of Iſrael of old, who fed themſelves, and not the flock; who ſtrengthened not the diſeaſed, nor healed the ſick, nor bound up that which was broken; nor brought again that which was driven away, nor ſought that which was loſt: but on the contrary, cauſed them to go aſtray from mountain to hill; whereby they forgot their reſting-place, in the Meſſiah promiſed them, and who was now come.

Ver. 37. Then ſaith he unto his diſciples, &c.] His heart being drawn out, and filled with pity to theſe poor people, upon obſerving the miſerable and ſad condition they were in; he turns himſelf to his diſciples, whom he was about to call, and ſend forth in a more publick manner to preach the Goſpel, of which we read in the following chapter: and in order to quicken them to this ſervice, and engage their hearts in it, ſays unto them, the harveſt truly is plenteous; meaning the large number of God's elect, which were in theſe cities, towns, and villages, and in other places: not that theſe were maturely prepared by any thing in themſelves, or done by them, for the grace of God; and much leſs ripe for the kingdom of glory, and therefore called an harveſt: but as there are the appointed weeks of the harveſt, or a ſet time for the harveſt to be gathered in, ſo there is a certain fixed time, ſettled in the counſel, and by the purpoſe of God, for the effectual vocation and converſion of his elect; and this time being come, with reſpect to theſe in Galilee, and other parts, Chriſt calls them an harveſt; and becauſe of their number, a large, or plenteous one. But the labourers are few; goſpel miniſters; whoſe calling is a laborious one; whoſe buſineſs is to labour in the word and doctrine; to be conſtant in prayer; to give up themſelves to meditation and reading; to ſtudy to ſhew themſelves workmen; to preach the word in ſeaſon, and out of ſeaſon; and diligently diſcharge the ſeveral duties of their office, to the glory of Chriſt, and the good of ſouls: but ſuch painful and laborious miniſters, who are willing to ſpend, and be ſpent for Chriſt and immortal ſouls, have been but few in all ages; generally ſpeaking there are more loiterers than labourers.

Ver. 38. Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harveſt, &c.] By the Lord of the harveſt, is either meant God the father, whoſe are all the elect, who has a hearty concern for them, and will have them all gathered in, not one of them ſhall be left; or the Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, who has the care and charge of the whole election of grace; and who as he muſt, he will bring them all in; and who, has power of ſending forth labourers, as the following chapter ſhews; and ſo this is a proof of prayer being made to Chriſt; that he will ſend forth labourers into his harveſt. This is the petition the diſciples of Chriſt were put upon making to the lord of the harveſt, on conſideration of the preſent condition, multitudes of ſouls were in: they could not make, qualify, and ſend out miniſters themſelves; this is not man's work, but God's: he only is able to furniſh with miniſterial gifts, to work upon, and powerfully incline the hearts of men to this ſervice, to call and ſend them forth into it, and to aſſiſt and ſucceed them in it. The perſons deſired to be ſent, are labourers; faithful, diligent, and induſtrious preachers of the Goſpel; ſuch as lay out themſelves, their time, talents, and ſtrength, in their maſter's ſervice; and don't indulge themſelves in ſloth and idleneſs: the place they are deſired to be ſent into is, into the harveſt; into the field of the world, where God's elect lie, and there labour in preaching the Goſpel; hoping for a divine bleſſing, and an almighty power to attend their miniſtrations, for the converſion of ſinners, and edification of ſaints. The requeſt the diſciples are directed to make, concerning theſe perſons for this work is, that the Lord of the harveſt would ſend, or thruſt them forth; implying power and efficacy, and authority, on the part of the ſender; and backwardneſs on the part of thoſe that are ſent, through modeſty; a ſenſe of the greatneſs of the work, and of their own unworthineſs and unfitneſs for it. Very opportunely did our Lord move his diſciples to put up this petition, and was done, no queſtion, with a view to, and to prepare for, his miſſion of the twelve to preach the Goſpel, of which there is an account in the next chapter.

CHAP. X.

Ver. 1. AND when he had called to him his twelve diſciples, &c.] Theſe perſons had been for ſome time called by the grace of God, and were already the diſciples of Chriſt, and ſuch as were more familiar and intimate with him, than others, that went by that name. They had ſat down at his feet, and had received of his words; they had heard his doctrines, and had ſeen his miracles, and had been by him training up for publick work; but as yet had not been called and ſent forth to enter on ſuch ſervice: but now all things being ready, they being properly inſtructed, and the time for the converſion of a large number of ſouls being up, he called them together privately; and gave them a commiſſion to preach the Goſpel, ordained them miniſters of the word, and inſtalled them into the office of apoſtleſhip. The number twelve, is either in alluſion to the twelve ſpies that were ſent by Moſes into the land of Canaan; or to the twelve ſtones in Aaron's breaſt-plate; or to the twelve twelve fountains the Iſraelites found in the wilderneſs; or to the twelve oxen on which the molten ſea ſtood in Solomon's temple; or to the twelve gates in Ezekiel's temple; or rather, to the twelve patriarchs, and the tribes which ſprung from them; that as they were the fathers of the Jewiſh nation, which was typical of God's choſen people; ſo theſe were to be the inſtruments of ſpreading the Goſpel, not only in Judea, but in all the world, and of planting Chriſtian churches there. And that they might appear to come forth with authority, and that their doctrine might be confirmed, he gave them power againſt unclean ſpirits, to caſt them out; or over all devils, as Luke ix. 1. It was uſual with the Jews, to call a dæmon or devil, רוח טומאה, an unclean ſpirit; eſpecially ſuch as frequented burying-places: ſo in one place[l], an unclean ſpirit is interpreted by the Gloſs, רוח שדים, the ſpirit of the dæmons, or devils; and in another[m] place, שד בית הקברות, the dæmon of the graves; where necromancers ſought to be, that theſe ſpirits might be their familiars, and aſſiſt them in their enchantments: accordingly the devils are here called, unclean ſpirits; being in themſelves, in their own nature unclean, and being the cauſe and means of defiling others, and delighting in impure perſons, places, and things. There were many of theſe ſpirits, who, becauſe of the great impiety of the Jews, the prevalence of magic arts among them, and by divine permiſſion, had at this time taken poſſeſſion of great numbers of perſons; whereby Chriſt had an opportunity of giving proof of his deity, of his being the Meſſiah, the ſeed of the woman, that ſhould bruiſe the ſerpent's head, by his ejecting them; and of confirming the miſſion of his diſciples, and eſtabliſhing the doctrine preached by them, by giving them power and authority over them, to caſt them out alſo: and whereas various diſeaſes frequently followed and attended ſuch poſſeſſions; he likewiſe gave them power to heal all manner of ſickneſſes, and all manner of diſeaſes, as he himſelf had done. The expreſſions are very full and ſtrong, and include all ſorts of maladies incident to human bodies, either of men or women; all diſtempers natural or preternatural, curable or incurable, by human methods: ſo that at the ſame time they were ſent to preach the Goſpel, for the cure of the ſouls of men, they were empowered to heal the diſeaſes of their bodies; and which one ſhould think, could not fail of recommending them to men, and of ingratiating them into their affections.

Ver. 2. Now the names of the twelve apoſtles are theſe, &c.] This is the firſt time theſe diſciples are called apoſtles, they were learners before; now being inſtructed, they are ſent forth to preach publickly, and therefore are called apoſtles, or meſſengers, perſons that were ſent: ſo the elders of the prieſthood are called, שלוחי בית דין, the apoſtles, or meſſengers of the Sanhedrim[n], to whom the high-prieſt were delivered, before the day of atonement. So ſix months in the year, שלוחים, apoſtles, or meſſengers, were ſent by the[o] Sanhedrim, throughout all the land of Iſrael, and to the captive Jews in other parts, to give notice of the new moon; in alluſion to which, the diſciples might be ſo called. It was proper to give the names of them, for the truth of the hiſtory, and confirmation of it; for the ſake of the perſons themſelves, and the honour done them; and for the excluſion and detection of falſe apoſtles. The firſt, Simon, who is called Peter; his pure Hebrew name was, שמעון, Simeon, as he is called, Acts xv. 14. but in the then Jeruſalem dialect, and in Rabbinical language, this name is frequently read and pronounced, סימון, Simon, as here: we often read of R. Simon, and of R. Juda bar Simon, in both Talmuds[p]. This apoſtle is alſo called Peter, to diſtinguiſh him from Simon the Canaanite, and which ſignifies a ſtone, or rock, in alluſion to the object of his faith, and the ſteadineſs of it. He is ſaid to be the firſt; not that he was the head of the reſt of the apoſtles, or had any primacy, dominion, and authority over them; but becauſe he was firſt called, and was the firſt that was to open the door of faith to the Gentiles: but chiefly he is ſaid to be ſo for orders ſake; for, ſome one in the account muſt be named firſt, and he as proper as any: and Andrew his brother; who was called at the ſame time with him, and therefore are put together. This name is alſo to be met with in the Talmudic writings; ſee note on Matt. iv. 18. James the ſon of Zebedee, and John his brother; theſe two were called next and together, and therefore are placed in this order: the former is ſo called, to diſtinguiſh him from another James, the ſon of Alpheus, after mentioned; and the latter is the beloved diſciple; theſe were ſurnamed Boanerges, that is, ſons of thunder.

Ver. 3. Philip and Bartholomew, &c.] The firſt of theſe was called next; his name is a Greek one, which his parents, though Jews, might take from the Greeks that dwelt among them; ſee John xii. 20, 21. mention is made of one R. Phelipi, and Phulipa, in the Jewiſh writings[q]. The latter of theſe, Bartholomew, is conjectured, by Dr. Lightfoot, to be the ſame with Nathanael, he being called next in order after Philip; and that his name was Nathanael, בר תלמי, Bar Talmai, or the ſon of Talmai, or Ptolomy; a name once common to the kings of Egypt: ſo Talmai, king of Geſhur, is by the Septuagint, in 2 Sam. iii. 3. and xiii. 37. called Tholmi, and in 1 Chron. iii. 2. Tholmai: hence it appears, that Bartholomew is no other than Bartholmi, or the ſon of Tholmi. We read of one R. Jonathan, בן אבטולמוס, ben Abtolemus, in the Talmud[r], whether the ſame name with this, may be conſidered. Thomas, and Matthew the publican: by the other Evangeliſts Matthew is mentioned firſt; but he being the writer of this Goſpel, puts Thomas firſt, which is an inſtance of his modeſty; and alſo calls himſelf the publican, which the other do not: this he mentions, to magnify the grace of God in his vocation. The Jews[s] ſpeak of מתאי, Matthai, or Matthew, as a diſciple of Jeſus. Thomas, was ſometimes called Didymus; the one was his Hebrew, the other his Greek name, and both ſignify a twin, as it is very likely he was: mention is made of R. Thoma, or Thomas bar Papias, in a Jewiſh writer[t]. Next follow, James the ſon of Alpheus, and Lebbeus, whoſe ſurname was Thaddeus: the former of theſe is ſo called, to diſtinguiſh him from James, the ſon of Zebedee. This is the James, who was the brother of our Lord, Gal. i. 19. and is called James the leſs, Mark xv. 40. Alpheus his father, is the ſame with Cleopas, Luke xxiv. 18. or Cleophas, John xix. 25. The Hebrew name, חלפי, which often occurs among the Jews[u], may be pronounced either Chlophi, or Alphi, or with the Greek termination Cleopas, or Alpheus. The latter of this pair of apoſtles, is the ſame perſon with Jude, the writer of the epiſtle, which bears that name, and was the brother of James, with whom he is coupled: he was called Lebbeus, either from the town of Lebba, a ſea-coaſt town of Galilee, as Dr. Lightfoot thinks; or from the Hebrew word, לבי, my heart, as others, either for his prudence, or through the affections of his parents to him; as the Latins call one they love, meum corculum, my little heart; or from לביא, a lion, that being the motto of the tribe of Judah. His ſurname Thaddeus, is thought by ſome to be a deflexion of Jude, or Judas, and as coming from the ſame root, ידה, which ſignifies to praiſe, or give thanks; or from the Syriack word, תד, a breaſt, and may be ſo called for the ſame reaſon as he was Lebbeus. Frequent mention is made of this name, תדאי, Thaddai, or Thaddeus, among the Talmudic [w] doctors. The Jews themſelves ſpeak [x] of one תודה, Thodah, as a diſciple of Jeſus, by whom no doubt they mean this ſame diſciple. Euſebius [y] mentions one Thaddeus, as one of the ſeventy diſciples, who was ſent to Agbarus, king of Edeſſa, who was healed and converted by him. This Agbarus, is reported to have wrote a letter to Jeſus Chriſt, deſiring him to come and cure him of his diſeaſe; to which Chriſt is ſaid to return an anſwer, promiſing to ſend one of his diſciples, who ſhould do it; and that accordingly after Chriſt's death, Thomas ſent this Thaddeus to him.

---

[l] T. Bab. Chagiga, fol. 3. 2.

[m] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 65. 2.

[n] Miſn. Yoma, c. 1. §. 5.

[o] Miſn. Roſhhaſhana, c. 1. §. 3. & Maimon. & Bartenora in ib.

[p] T. Hieroſ. Shekalim, fol. 46. 4. Bab. Sabbath, fol. 55. 1. & Bava Kama, fol. 47. 2.

[q] Maſſechet Sopherim, c. 21. §. 7. Bereſhit Rabba, §. 71. fol. 63. 4.

[r] T. Bab. Nidda, fol. 19. 1.

[s] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 43. 1.

[t] Juchaſin, fol. 105. 2.

[u] Echa Rabbati, fol. 58. 4. Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 60. 4. Juchaſin, fol. 92. 1.

Ver. 4. Simon the Canaanite, and Judas Iſcariot, &c.] This is the laſt couple, for they are all mentioned by pairs, becauſe they were ſent forth by two and two, as the Evangeliſt Mark ſays, ch. vi. 7. The former of theſe is called Simon the Canaanite, to diſtinguiſh him from Simon Peter, before mentioned; not that he was a Canaanite, that is, an inhabitant of the land of Canaan, a man of Canaan, as a certain woman is called a woman of Canaan, Matt. xv. 22. for all the diſciples of Chriſt were Jews; though in Munſter's Hebrew goſpel he is called, שמעון הכנעני, Simeon the Canaanite, or of Canaan, as if he belonged to that country; nor is he ſo called from Cana of Galilee, as Jerom and others have thought; but he was one of the קנאים, Kanaim, or Zealots; and therefore Luke ſtiles him, Simon called Zelotes, ch. vi. 15. and Acts i. 13. The Kanaites, or Zelotes, were a ſett of men, who, in imitation of Phinehas, who ſlew Zimri and Cozbi in the very act of uncleanneſs, when they found any perſons in the act of adultery, idolatry, blaſphemy, or theft, would immediately kill them without any more ado: this they did, from a pretended zeal for the honour and glory of God; nor were they accountable to any court of judicature for it; yea, ſuch an action was highly applauded, as a very laudable one [z]: under this ſpecious name of Zealots, innumerable murders, and moſt horrible wickedneſs were committed, both before, and during the ſiege of Jeruſalem, as Joſephus [a] relates. Now Simon was one of this ſect before his converſion, and ſtill retained the name afterwards. Judas, the laſt of the twelve, is called Iſcariot; concerning which name, the notation of it, and the reaſon of his being ſo called, many are the conjectures of learned men: ſome think that he belonged to the tribe of Iſſachar, and that he is called from thence, איש ישכר, a man of Iſſachar, as a certain man is, in Judges x. 1. others, that he takes his name from the place he belonged to, and that he was called, איש קריות, a man of Keriot. A place of this name is mentioned, Joſh. xv. 25. and ſome manuſcripts and copies in ſome places read Judas απο Καρυωτȣ, of Caryot. Caryota is ſaid [b] to be a plain of the city of Jericho, about eighteen miles from Jeruſalem, which abounded in palm-trees, called קורייטי, Caryotæ, of which mention is made in the [c] Talmud, and other writers [d]. Others think he is ſo called, from the Syriac word, סכריוטא, ſecariota, which ſignifies a purſe, or bag, becauſe he carried the bag. Some copies read it, σκαριωτες, ſcariotes: others are of opinion, that he is ſo called, from the manner of death he died, which was ſtrangling: for אסכרא, Iſcara, a word often uſed in the [e] Talmudic writings, ſignifies ſtrangling; and is accounted by the Jews the hardeſt of deaths, and an evil one; and which ſeems to bid fair for the true reaſon of his name: however, it is mentioned here, as elſewhere, to diſtinguiſh him from Jude, or Judas, the true and faithful apoſtle of Chriſt; for this was he, who alſo betrayed him; that is, Chriſt, as the Perſic verſion reads it; and which is mentioned, not only for further diſtinction's ſake, but to his great reproach. We learn from hence, that in the pureſt ſociety on earth, there has been an impure perſon; nor can it therefore be expected, it ſhould be otherwiſe in the beſt of churches, in the preſent ſtate of imperfection; yea, that a man may have the higheſt gifts and attainments, as Judas had, miniſterial gifts, and power of performing miracles, and yet be a vile perſon.

Ver. 5. Theſe twelve Jeſus ſent forth, &c.] And no other but them, under the character of apoſtles. Theſe had been with him a conſiderable time, to whom he had been gradually communicating ſpiritual knowledge; and by the benefit of private conference with him, and the obſervation they had made upon his doctrine and conduct, were greatly qualify'd for publick uſefulneſs: wherefore he gives them a commiſſion, furniſhes them with power and authority; and ſends them forth from him by pairs, that they might be aſſiſting to one another, and bear a joint teſtimony to the Goſpel they preached; but before he ſent them forth from his preſence, he gave them ſome directions where they ſhould go, and to whom they ſhould miniſter, and where not: and he commanded them, as their Lord and Maſter; he gave them ſtrict orders, which he expected them to comply with, and cloſely enjoined them, as they muſt anſwer it to him again, ſaying, go not into the way of the Gentiles; meaning, not the cuſtoms and manners of the Heathens, they were to avoid; but that they were not to ſteer their courſe, or take their journey towards them: they were not, as yet, to go among them, and preach the Goſpel to them; the calling of the Gentiles was not a matter, as yet, ſo clearly revealed and known, nor was the time of their vocation come: beſides, it was the will of God, that the Goſpel ſhould be firſt preached to the Jews, to take off all excuſe from them, and that their obſtinacy and perverſeneſs in rejecting Jeſus as the Meſſiah, might manifeſtly appear; and ſince Chriſt himſelf was the miniſter of the circumciſion, he would have his apoſtles, for the preſent, whilſt he was on earth, act agreeable to the character he bore, that there might be an entire harmony in their conduct. And into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not: the word any is ſupplied, and that very rightly; for, not the city of Samaria, the metropolis of that country, as the Arabic verſion reads it, is only meant, but any, and every city of the Samaritans: not that it was ſtrictly unlawful and criminal to go thither; for, he himſelf went into one of their cities, and ſo did his apoſtles, John iv. 4, 5. 8. Luke ix. 52. and after his death preached the Goſpel there; but he judged it not proper and expedient at this time, and as yet, to do it; that is, not before their preaching it to the Jews; for there was a very great hatred ſubſiſting between the Jews and the Samaritans, inſomuch that they had no converſation with each other in things civil or religious. The Samaritans, tho' they boaſted of their deſcent from Jacob, were a mungrel ſort of people, partly Jews, and partly Gentiles, a mixture of both; and therefore are diſtinguiſhed from both: and tho' they had, and held the law, and five books of Moſes, yet corrupted them in many places, to ſerve their purpoſe, and countenance their religion, particularly their worſhipping at mount Gerizzim; on which account they were looked upon by the Jews as apoſtates, idolaters, and even as heathens [f], and are therefore here joined with them; and to ſhun giving offence to the Jews, ſeems to be the reaſon of this prohibition; ſee the note on John iv. 20.

---

[w] T. Hieroſ. Celaim, fol. 27. 2. Sabbat, fol. 6. 1. Erubim, fol. 23. 3. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 123. 1. & Erubim, fol. 71. 2. Juchaſin, fol. 81. 1. & 105. 2. & 108. 1.

[x] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 43. 1.

[y] Eccl. Hiſt. l. 1. c. 12, 13.

[z] Miſn. Sanhedrim, c. 9. §. 6. & Bartenora, in ib. T. Avoda Zara, fol. 36. 2. Maimon. Iſſure Bia, c. 12. §. 4, 5, 6. 14. & Sanhedrim, c. 18. §. 6. & Obede Cochabim, c. 2. §. 9. Philo de Monarchia, l. 1. p. 818.

[a] De Bello Jud. l. 5. c. 1, 2. & 6. 1. Vid. Abot R. Nathan, c. 6. fol. 3. 2.

[b] Vid. Wolfii Heb. Bibl. p. 410.

[c] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 50. 2. & Avoda Zara, fol. 14. 2.

[d] Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 13. c. 4.

[e] T. Bab Beracot, fol. 8. 1. & Sabbat, fol. 33. 1. Sota, fol. 35. 1. Peſachim, fol. 105. 1. Taanith, fol. 19. 2. & 27. 2. Yebamot, fol. 62. 2.

Ver. 6. But go rather to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael.] To whom he himſelf was ſent, ch. xv. 24. By the houſe of Iſrael is meant the whole Jewiſh nation; for though this phraſe, when diſtinguiſhed from the houſe of Judah, deſigns only the ten tribes; yet here it intends all the Jews, then living in the land of Judea, among whom there were ſome of all the tribes: and by the loſt ſheep of this houſe, are meant either all the people of the Jews in general, who were wandring, and were loſt in error and ſin, and to whom the external miniſtry of the Goſpel came; or rather the elect of God among them, for whoſe ſake particularly the apoſtles were ſent unto them. Theſe are called ſheep, becauſe they were choſen of God, and given to Chriſt to be redeemed, looked up, ſought out, and ſaved by him; and loſt ones, not only becauſe loſt in Adam, and by their own tranſgreſſions, ſo that neither they themſelves, nor any mere creature, could ſave them from eternal ruin and deſtruction; but alſo, becauſe they were made to go aſtray, and were loſt thro' the negligence and errors of their paſtors, the Scribes and Phariſees: and this character is the rather given of them, partly to reflect upon the characters of the ſhepherds of Iſrael; and partly to magnify the grace of God, in having regard to ſuch ruined and miſerable creatures; and alſo to excite the compaſſion and diligence of the apoſtles, to preach the Goſpel to them: reſpect ſeems to be had to Jer. l. 6.

Ver. 7. And as ye go, &c.] Thro' the cities of Judea, and the ſtreets thereof, from one city to another, from place to place; for theſe were itinerant preachers, who were not to abide long in any place, but to move about, that the Goſpel might be ſpread all over the land, and the loſt ſheep in every corner be ſought out and found. Preach, ſaying, the kingdom of heaven is at hand. This was to be the ſubject-matter of their miniſtry, which they were to proclaim aloud in every place; and which is expreſſed in the ſame words with which John the Baptiſt, and Chriſt himſelf, began their miniſtry, Matt. iii. 2. and iv. 17. which ſhews the entire harmony, and ſtrict agreement, there were between them; for the meaning of the phraſe, ſee note on Matt. iii. 2. The Cambridge copy reads, repent, for the kingdom, &c.

Ver. 8. Heal the ſick, &c.] For ſo he had given them power to do, and this both for the confirmation of their doctrine, and the recommendation of them to men; for nothing could more evidently prove their miſſion to be divine, and their doctrine from heaven, or be more acceptable to men, than to heal their ſick friends and relations, who were given up by phyſicians, and incurable by the art of man; and to do this without the uſe of medicines, either by a word ſpeaking, or by laying on of their hands, or by anointing with oil, joined with prayer; and particularly to cleanſe the lepers, of which there were many in Iſrael, who otherwiſe could not get rid of that diſorder, and by the law were deprived of many privileges, and advantages, which others enjoyed; and eſpecially to raiſe the dead, which had never been done before the times of Chriſt, ſince the days of Elijah and Eliſha; and which muſt be allowed by all men to be more than human, and to require the arm of almighty power: and laſtly, to caſt out devils, the ſworn enemies of mankind, and who had taken poſſeſſion of the bodies, as well as ſouls of multitudes in the Jewiſh nation; all which they are ordered to do, without taking any thing of the people, for ſo doing: freely ye have received, freely give; which refers both to the working of miracles, and preaching of the Goſpel. As they had theſe miraculous gifts freely imparted to them by Chriſt, they had them not of themſelves, nor did they procure them at any charge, or expence of theirs, or purchaſe them with their money, as Simon Magus impiouſly propoſed to the apoſtles; ſo they were freely to make uſe of theſe wonderful powers, they were poſſeſſed of, for the relief of the diſtreſſed, without inſiſting upon, or receiving any thing for the ſame; a practice which was formerly diſapproved and condemned in Gehazi, the ſervant of Eliſha: and with reſpect to the Goſpel, as the knowledge of it was freely communicated to them by Chriſt, and gifts qualifying them for the preaching of it, were of his mere grace and goodneſs beſtowed upon them, ſo they were to diſpenſe it without making a gain of godlineſs, or diſcovering in the leaſt an avaricious diſpoſition. Our Lord ſeems to have reſpect to a rule frequently inculcated by the Jews concerning teaching their oral law [g]; which is this; "in the place where they teach the written law for a reward, it is lawful to teach it for " a reward; but it is forbidden to teach the oral
" law for a reward, as it is ſaid, behold, I have
" taught you ſtatutes and judgments, even as the
" Lord my God commanded me, &c. Deut. iv. 5.
" As I have בחנם, freely learned, and ye have
" alſo בחנם, freely learnt of me; ſo when ye
" learn poſterity, למדו בחנם כמו שלמדתם ממני,
" teach them freely, as ye have learnt of me." Now what the Jews ſay of their traditions, Chriſt applies to the Goſpel; in diſpenſing of which he would not have his diſciples come behind them; but as they had freely received the Goſpel from his lips, ſo they would as freely, as well as faithfully, make it known to others; and which no ways contradicts the maintenance of the Goſpel-miniſters by the people; only forbids amaſſing wealth and riches by it, or preaching for ſordid gain, or filthy lucres ſake: for otherwiſe it is Chriſt's own ordinance, that the preachers of the Goſpel ſhould live by it;

---

[f] T. Hieroſ. Shekalim, fol. 46. 2. Bartenora in Miſn. Taharot, c. 5. §. 8.

[g] Maimon. Talmud Tora, c. 1. §. 7. T. Bab. Nedarim, fol. 36. 2. & 37. 1. & Becorat, fol. 29. 1. Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Nedarim, c. 4. §. 3. & in Pirke Abot. c. 4. §. 5.

it; and which is confirmed in the following verſes.

Ver. 9. Provide neither gold, nor ſilver, nor braſs, &c.] That is, not any ſort of money, as both Mark and Luke expreſs it: for money was then coined, as now, of theſe three ſorts of metals, and which include all kind of money; ſo that they were not to provide, get, prepare, or take along with them for their journey, as not gold, nor ſilver, or any parcel of this ſort of money, which might be of conſiderable importance, and laſting conſequence to them; ſo neither braſs-money, as, half-pence, and farthings, the leaſt, and moſt inconſiderable: they were forbidden to carry any of either ſort in their purſes; or, as it may be rendered, in, or within your girdles; in which travellers, among the Jews, uſed to carry their money; and who, in their travelling-dreſs, might not go into the temple, and are thus deſcribed [h]; "a man may not go into the mountain "of the houſe with his ſtaff, or with his ſhoes on, "nor בפונדתו, with his girdle. The פונדא, phunda, Maimonides ſays [i], is an inner garment, wore to keep off ſweat from other garments, to which were ſewed hollow things like purſes, in which a man put what he pleaſed; tho' other [k] interpreters ſay it is, אזור חלול שנותנין בו מעות, a hollow girdle, in which they put their money; and ſo the Romans [l] had uſed to do; and ſo do the Turks [m] to this day; to which practice the alluſion is here.

Ver. 10. Nor ſcrip for your journey, &c.] This the Jews call תרמיל, tarmil; and which their commentators [n] ſay, is a large leathern bag, in which ſhepherds and travellers put their food, and other things, and carried with them, hanging it about their necks; ſo that the diſciples were neither to carry money with them, nor any proviſions for their journey: neither two coats; one to travel in, and another to put on, when they came to their quarters: they were not allowed change of raiment; either becauſe ſuperfluous, or too magnificent to appear in, or too troubleſome to carry: nor ſhoes, only ſandals, as Mark ſays; for there was a difference between ſhoes and ſandals, as appears from the caſe of the plucking off the ſhoe, when a man refuſed his brother's wife [o]: if the ſhoe was plucked off it was regarded; but if the ſandal, it was not minded: this was the old tradition, though cuſtom went againſt it. Sandals were made of harder leather than ſhoes [p], and ſometimes of wood covered with leather, and ſtuck with nails, to make them more durable [q]; tho' ſometimes of bulruſhes, and bark of palm-trees, and of cork [r], which were light to walk with. "Says R. Bar bar Chanah [s], I ſaw "R. Eleazar of Niniveh go out on a faſt-day of "the congregation, בסנדל שעם, with a ſandal "of cork." Of what ſort theſe were, the diſciples were allowed to travel with, is not certain: nor yet with ſtaves; that is, with more than one ſtaff, which was ſufficient to aſſiſt them, and lean upon in journeying: for, according to Mark, one was allowed; as tho' they might take a travelling-ſtaff, yet not ſtaves for defence, or to fight with; ſee Matt. xxvi. 55. Now theſe ſeveral things were forbidden them, partly becauſe they would be burdenſome to them in travelling; and partly becauſe they were not to be out any long time, but were quickly to return again; and chiefly to teach them to live and depend upon divine providence. Now, ſince they were to take neither money, nor proviſions with them, and were alſo to preach the Goſpel freely, they might reaſonably aſk how they ſhould be provided for, and ſupported: when our Lord ſuggeſts, that they ſhould not be anxiouſly concerned about that, he would take care that they had a ſuitable ſupply; and would ſo influence and diſpoſe the minds of ſuch, to whom they ſhould miniſter, as that they ſhould have all neceſſary proviſions made for them, without any care or expence of theirs: for the workman is worthy of his meat; which ſeems to be a proverbial expreſſion, and by which Chriſt intimates, that they were workmen, or labourers in his vineyard, and they, diſcharging their duty aright, were entitled to food and raiment, and all the neceſſaries of life: this to have, was their due; and it was but a piece of juſtice to give it to them, and on which they might depend. So that this whole context is ſo far from militating againſt a miniſter's maintenance by the people, that it moſt ſtrongly eſtabliſhes it; for if the apoſtles were not to take any money or proviſions with them, to ſupport themſelves with, it clearly follows, that it was the will of Chriſt, that they ſhould live by the Goſpel, upon thoſe to whom they preached, as the following words ſhew: and tho' they were not to make gain of the Goſpel, or preach it for filthy lucres ſakes; yet they might expect a comfortable ſubſiſtence, at the charge of the people, to whom they miniſtred, and which was their duty to provide for them.

Ver. 11. And into whatſoever city or town ye ſhall enter, &c.] As Chriſt had inſtructed them in what manner they were to travel, ſo he directs them where to go, and who to aſk for, and take up their abode with, in the ſeveral towns and villages to which they ſhould come; that as ſoon as they had entered any town or village, they ſhould, in the firſt place, enquire, who in it is worthy; not of them, as the Arabic verſion reads, nor of the Goſpel they preached, or of the grace of God, of which no man is worthy: and beſides, who could anſwer to ſuch a queſtion when aſked? Who in any town, or city, could tell who in it were worthy of Chriſt, of his Goſpel, and miniſters, to which they were all equally ſtrangers before they came among them? Nor does it mean a man famous for piety and religion, or one that feared God, and was a worſhipper of him, but an hoſpitable man; one that was very liberal; who was willing and ready to entertain ſtrangers; for ſuch a man they would want, having neither money nor food: and ſo the ſame word, זכה, in the Hebrew language, ſignifies to be worthy, and to give alms; becauſe an eleemoſynary man, or a man given to alms, was reckoned by the Jews a very worthy man: they thought giving of alms to be a matter of merit. Chriſt here ſpeaks in the language of the maſters of Iſrael; take an inſtance or two: "ſaith "R. Jona, bleſſed is the man that giveth to the poor; "it is not written ſo, but bleſſed is he that conſider- "eth the poor: he looks upon him, how he may "לזכות עמו, give alms to him." And a little after,

---

[h] Miſn. Beracot, c. 9. §. 5.
[i] In ib. & Celim. c. 29. 1. & Sabbat, c. 10. 3.
[k] Bartenora & Yom Tob in ib. Gloſſ. in T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 62. 2. & in Sabbat, fol. 92. 1. & 113. 1. & 120. 1. & Nedarim, fol. 55. 2.
[l] Gracchus apud A. Gell. Noct. Attic. l. 15. c. 12. Sueton. in Vita Vitellii, c. 16.
[m] Bobovius de Peregr. Meccan. p. 14.
[n] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Sheviith, c. 2. §. 8. & in Celim. c. 16. 4. & 24. 11. & Negaim, c. 11. §. 11.
[o] T. Hieroſ. Yebamot, fol. 12. 3. T. Bab. Yebamot, fol. 102. 1. & Menachot, fol. 32. 1.
[p] Gloſſ. in T. Bab. Yebamot, fol. 101. 1. & Bartenora in Miſn. Yebamot, c. 12. §. 1.
[q] Miſn. Yebamot, c. 12. §. 2. Maimon. Bartenora in Sabbat, c. 6. §. 2. & Edayot, c. 2. §. 8.
[r] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 78. 2. Gloſſ. in ib. Maimon. Hilch. Shebitat Aſhur, c. 3. §. 7.
[s] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 78. 2. Juchaſin, fol. 81. 1.

ter, "God hath ſet one againſt the other, that when "evil comes to thy friend, thou may'ſt ſee how "לזכות בו, to do thine alms to him, and nouriſh "him, ſo that thou may'ſt receive the gift of its "reward." Again, ſo a man ſays to his neighbour, זכי בי, give alms unto me: and afterwards, in the ſame place, 'tis ſaid, זכי בהדיא איתתא, give alms unto that woman [t]. Now, it was ſuch a worthy generous man, that was beneficent to the poor, and kind to ſtrangers, that the apoſtles were to enquire out, wherever they came; and having found ſuch a perſon, they were to continue with him: and there abide till ye go out; of that city or town, to another city or town: for to be often changing houſes would bring upon them an ill character, as if they were difficult to be pleaſed, not content with the proviſion made for them; and would look as if they ſought to ſerve their own bellies, and gratify their appetites, more than to do good to the ſouls of men; and beſides, moving from the houſe of a bountiful man, might bring ſome reproach upon his character, as if he had not uſed them well, and therefore left him. In ſhort, Chriſt's meaning is, that he would not have his diſciples be difficult, and dainty, or fickle, and inconſtant, but be content with ſuch things they ſhould have provided for them; and not ſeek for other, and better quarters, nor fear being troubleſome where they were.

Ver. 12. And when ye come into an houſe, &c.] Or the houſe; that is, the houſe of an hoſpitable man, when, upon enquiry, found out: ſalute it; meaning the inhabitants of it; or, as the Perſic verſion reads, thoſe of the houſhold, eſpecially the maſter of the family. Some copies add, ſaying, peace be to this houſe, as in Luke x. 5. and ſo read the Vulgate Latin, and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel; and is a very juſt, and proper explanation of ſaluting: for the uſual form of ſalutation among the Jews was in ſuch words; of which ſee the note on Matt. v. 47. by which is meant all kind of happineſs, and proſperity, temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal.

Ver. 13. And if the houſe be worthy, &c.] If the family, and particularly the maſter of it, appeared to be civil, courteous, friendly, and hoſpitable, upon ſuch a ſalutation, and ready to receive and embrace them, and provide for them, let your peace come upon it, or it ſhall come upon it; the imperative for the future, which is not unuſual; and ſo read the Syriac and Vulgate Latin. The ſenſe is, the peace the apoſtles wiſhed for, in their form of ſalutation, ſhould come, and abide on the family; for not the Goſpel of peace, and the preaching of it, are here meant, but the ſalutation itſelf, or the things deſired in it, which ſhould be granted, and the houſe be bleſſed for their ſake, and as a reward of their generoſity, and hoſpitality: but if it be not worthy; does not prove to be what it was ſaid to be, and they expected; namely, to be generous, liberal, and beneficent; but, on the contrary, uncivil and churliſh, ſhould neglect their ſalutation, diſcover an unwillingneſs to receive them, and turn their backs upon them: let your peace return to you, or it ſhall return to you; the happineſs wiſhed for ſhall not come upon them, and the prayers and good wiſhes of the apoſtles ſhall be void, and of none effect, with reſpect to that family, but ſhould be made good to themſelves; and they ſhould be directed to another houſe, where they ſhould find perſons more generous and free to entertain them.

Ver. 14. And whoſoever ſhall not receive you, &c.] Into their houſes, and refuſe to entertain them, and provide for them in a friendly manner; nor hear your words, ſlight their ſalutations, make no account of, but deſpiſe their good wiſhes for their welfare; and alſo treat with contempt the doctrines of the Goſpel preached by them; and either would not attend on their miniſtry, or if they did, give no credit to what they ſhould ſay, but deride and reject them. When ye depart out of that houſe, or city; to another houſe, or to another city, being obliged to remove, through their contemptuous rejection of them; ſhake off the duſt of your feet. So Paul and Barnabas did at Antioch in Piſidia, when the Jews contradicted and blaſphemed the Goſpel preached by them, raiſed a perſecution againſt them, and expelled them out of their coaſts, Acts xiii. 51. which ceremony was ordered by Chriſt to be obſerved even to the cities of Judea, that ſhould deſpiſe and reject the miniſtry of his apoſtles; and that either to ſhew that they did not come to them with worldly views, with any deſign to amaſs riches and wealth to themſelves, for they would not ſo much as carry away with them the duſt on their feet, but it was purely with a view to their welfare, both ſpiritual and temporal; or to teſtify that they had been among them, and that that very duſt they ſhook off their feet would riſe up in judgment againſt them, and declare that the Goſpel had been preached among them, and they had rejected it, which will be an aggravation of their condemnation; or rather to obſerve to them, that ſuch was their wickedneſs, that even the duſt of their country was infected thereby, and therefore they ſhook it off, as tho' it defiled them, as the duſt of an Heathen country was thought by the Jews to do; ſo that by this action they ſignified that they would have nothing more to do with them, or ſay to them, and that they looked upon them as impure and unholy, as any Heathen city or country. There ſeems to be an alluſion to ſome maxims and cuſtoms of the Jews, with reſpect to the duſt of Heathen countries. "On account of "ſix doubts, they ſay [u], they burn the firſt offering, for a doubt of a field in which a grave might "be, and for a doubt עפר הבא מארץ העמים, of the "duſt which comes from the land of the Gentiles, &c." On which Bartenora has this note; "all duſt which "comes from the land of the Gentiles, is reckoned "by us as the rottenneſs of a dead carkaſs; and of "theſe two, the land of the Gentiles, and a field "in which is a grave, it is decreed that they "defile by touching, and by carrying." Again [w], "the duſt of a field in which is a grave, and the "duſt without the land (of Iſrael) which comes "along with an herb, are unclean." Upon which Maimonides makes this remark, "that the duſt of "a field that has a grave in it, and the duſt which "is without the land of Iſrael, defile by touching "and carrying; or if, when it hangs at the end of "an herb, when they root it out of the duſt of "ſuch a field, it is unclean." Hence they would not ſuffer herbs to be brought out of an Heathen country into the land of Iſrael, leſt duſt ſhould be brought along with them. "A Miſnic doctor "teaches [x], that they don't bring herbs from without the land (of Iſrael into it) but our Rabbins "permit it; what difference is there between them? "Says R. Jeremiah, they take care of their duſt; "that is, the difference between them." On that clauſe, they take care of their duſt, the Gloſs is, "leſt "there ſhould be brought with it מגוש ארץ העמים, "any

---

[t] Vajikra Rabba, §. 34. fol. 173. 3, 4. & 174. 4. Midraſh Kohelet, c. 11. 1. fol. 82. 2.

[u] Miſn. Taharot, c. 4. §. 5. Vid. c. 5. 1. & Maimon. & Bartenora in ib.

[w] Miſn. Oholot. c. 17. §. 5.

[x] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 12. 1.

“ any of the duſt of the land of the Gentiles, which “ defiles in the tent; and pollutes the purity of the “ land of Iſrael.”

Ver. 15. Verily, I ſay unto you, &c.] This was not all the puniſhment that ſhould be inflicted on ſuch deſpiſers of the Goſpel of Chriſt, and the miniſters of it; as not to enjoy that peace and proſperity wiſhed for by the apoſtles, and to be declared to be on an equal foot with Heathen cities and countries; but they were to ſuffer everlaſting puniſhment in the world to come; which is here aſſerted by Chriſt in the ſtrongeſt manner, ſaying; it ſhall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrha, in the day of judgment, than for that city. The inhabitants of the land of Sodom and Gomorrha are the rather mentioned, becauſe, as they were very notorious and abominable ſinners, ſo their temporal puniſhment was well known, exemplary and awful, tho' not that, but their future damnation is here regarded, of which the Jews made no doubt; for they ſay[y], “ the men of Sodom have no part in the “ world to come; as it is ſaid, Gen. xiii. 13. the “ men of Sodom were wicked, and ſinners, before the “ Lord exceedingly: they were wicked in this world, “ and ſinners in the world to come;” meaning, that by this paſſage is deſigned their double puniſhment in this, and the other world. But though their puniſhment was very tremendous, and they will ſuffer alſo the vengeance of eternal fire, as Jude ſays; yet, their puniſhment will be milder, and more tolerable, than that of the inhabitants of ſuch a city, that rejects the Goſpel of the grace of God: as there are degrees in ſinning, for all ſins are not alike, as the Stoicks ſay; ſo there will be degrees in ſuffering: the ſins of thoſe that are favoured with the Goſpel, are greater than thoſe who only have had the light of nature, and ſo their torments will be greater. The inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrha, though they ſinned againſt the light of nature, deſpiſed the advice and admonitions of Lot, and ill treated the angels, yet will be more mildly puniſhed than the wicked Jews, who rejected Chriſt, and his Goſpel, and deſpiſed his apoſtles, and miniſters; becauſe they ſinned not againſt ſo much light, and ſuch means of grace, and knowledge, as theſe did; ſee Lam. iv. 6. which is thus paraphraſed by the Targumiſt, and may be aptly applied to the Jews in Chriſt's time: “ the ſin of the congregation of my “ people is greater than the ſin of Sodom, which “ was overturned in a moment; and there dwelt “ no prophets in it to propheſy, and turn it to re- “ pentance.” The time referred to, ſignified by the day of judgment, reſpects not the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, which was a very ſevere judgment on that people, but the general judgment, at the end of the world, which is appointed and fixed by God, tho' unknown to angels and men. The phraſe is Jewiſh, and often to be met with in their writings, who uſe it in the ſame ſenſe; particularly in the book of Zohar[z], mention is made of יומא דדינא, the day of judgment, when there will be no pollution in the ſanctuary.

Ver. 16. Behold, I ſend you forth, as ſheep among wolves, &c.] This, and the following verſes, chiefly reſpect the troubles, afflictions, perſecutions, and ſufferings which ſhould befal the apoſtles after the death and reſurrection of Chriſt; when their commiſſion was enlarged, and they afreſh ſent out by Chriſt to preach his Goſpel; of which he gives a faithful account before-hand, that they might be prepared for them, and not be ſurprized when they came upon them. He compares them to ſheep, becauſe they were meek and humble in their ſpirits, harmleſs, and inoffenſive, in their lives and converſations; were weak, and unable to protect themſelves, and were ſent out by him unarmed and defenceleſs; and their oppreſſors and perſecutors to wolves, becauſe fierce and furious, voracious and ravenous, cruel and hurtful, as theſe creatures are, eſpecially to ſheep; wherefore Chriſt gives them this wholeſome advice, be ye therefore wiſe as ſerpents, and harmleſs as doves. Much ſuch an expreſſion as this God is repreſented as ſaying of Iſrael[a]: “ Says R. “ Judah, in the name of R. Simon, the holy bleſſed “ God ſaid, concerning Iſrael, with me they are, “ תמימים כיונים, harmleſs as doves; but among “ the nations of the world they are, ערומים כנחשים “ ſubtle as ſerpents.” The ſerpent is a very ſharpſighted, cunning creature, and uſes various arts and ſtratagems for its own preſervation, and eſpecially of its head; and is ſo far to be imitated by the followers of Chriſt, as to make uſe of all proper methods to preſerve themſelves from the inſults and rage of men, and not expoſe themſelves to unneceſſary dangers: and, as much as in them lies, they ſhould be careful to give no juſt occaſion of offence, or irritate, and provoke them to uſe them ill, and to avoid all ſnares and traps that are laid for them; and, at the ſame time, maintain the innocence and harmleſſneſs of the dove, being free from all wicked cunning and craftineſs, without rancor, malice, and wrath; not meditating and ſeeking revenge, but meek and humble in their deportment, leading inoffenſive lives, and proceeding in the courſe of their vocation, tho' liable to many inſults, and much oppreſſion.

Ver. 17. But beware of men, &c.] Of theſe men, comparable to wolves, before ſpoken of: the phraſe is ſomewhat uncommon and emphatical, and deſigns not merely wicked men in common, the men of the world, and enemies of the Goſpel; but chiefly ſuch of them as were men of note and authority, eccleſiaſtical and civil governors of the people, the Scribes, Phariſees, Elders, and Chief-prieſts, and other rulers; and the advice to the apoſtles is, to take care how they came into their company, and put themſelves into their hands, who would ſeek all opportunities and occaſions againſt them, and uſe their power and intereſt to do them hurt: for they will deliver you up to the councils, or ſanhedrim, of which there were three ſorts; the greater, which conſiſted of ſeventy-one perſons, and was only held in Jeruſalem; the leſſer one, which was made up of twenty-three members, and was kept in every place where there were an hundred and twenty Iſraelites; and the third, where there was not that number, and was a triumvirate, or a bench of three judges only[b]. And they will ſcourge you in their ſynagogues; where the triumvirate, or bench of three judges kept their court; under whoſe cognizance were pecuniary judgments, and ſuch as related to thefts, damages, reſtitutions, raviſhing, and enticing of virgins, and defamation; alſo to plucking off of the ſhoe, and refuſing a brother's wife, to the plant of the fourth year, ſecond tithes whoſe price is unknown, holy things, and the eſtimations of goods; to theſe belonged alſo laying on of hands, the beheading of the heifer, and, among the reſt, מכות בשלשה, ſcourging was by the bench of three[c]. The manner of performing it was this[d]: “ they bind both his hands to a pillar, here and “ there; and the miniſter of the ſynagogue takes

---

[y] Miſn. Sanhedrim, c. 11. §. 3. Hieroſ. Sanhedrim, fol. 29. 3.

[z] In Gen. fol. 13. 3. & 16. 1.

[a] Shirhaſhirim Rabba, c. 2. 14. fol. 12. 1.

[b] Maimon. Hilch. Sanhedrim, c. 1. §. 3, 4.

[c] Miſn. Sanhedrim, c. 1. §. 1, 2, 3.

[d] Maimon. Hilch. Sanhedrim, c. 16. §. 8, 9, 10, 11. Miſn. Maccot, c. 3. §. 12, 13, 14.

“hold of his clothes, and if they are rent, they are rent; and if they are ripp'd in the ſeam, they are ripp'd till his breaſt is uncovered; for he is not to beat him on his clothes, as it is ſaid, he ſhall beat him, but not his clothes: and a ſtone is placed behind him, on which the miniſter that ſcourges ſtands, and a whitleather whip, in his hand, doubled two and two with four, and two laſhes of an aſs's hide, going up and down: the breadth of the whip was an hand's breadth, and the length of it, ſo as to reach to the navel, and the handle of the whip, by which he took hold, was the length of an hand; and he lifts up the whip with both his hands, and ſtrikes with one hand, with all his might; and gives him the third part of his ſtripes before, upon his breaſt, between his paps, and two thirds behind him; one third upon this ſhoulder, and the other upon the other ſhoulder. He that ſcourges neither ſtands, nor ſits, but bows; as it is ſaid, the judge ſhall cauſe him to lie down, and to be beaten before his face; for the eyes of the judge ſhall be upon him, that he don't look upon any thing elſe, and ſmite him from thence; for no two ſtrokes are as one: the greateſt of the judges reads all the time he is ſcourging, viz. theſe paſſages; if thou wilt not obſerve to do all the words of this law, &c. and the Lord will make thy plagues wonderful, &c. and he intends to finiſh the verſes with the ſtripes; but if he does not finiſh, he returns to the beginning of the ſcripture, and reads, and returns, and reads until the whole ſcourging is over: and the ſecond of the judges numbers the ſtripes; and the third ſays to the miniſter ſtrike: every time he ſtrikes, 'tis at his orders he ſtrikes.” Now, as this puniſhment was inflicted by the Chazan, or miniſter of the ſynagogue, who was a ſort of ſexton, ſo it was done in the ſynagogue itſelf: and according to our Lord's predictions here, and in Matt. xxiii. 34. as the former of theſe, delivering up to councils, had its accompliſhment in part, in the apoſtles, Acts iv. and v. ſo the latter, ſcourging in their ſynagogues, was fulfilled both by Paul, Acts xxii. 19. and xxvi. 11. and upon him, 2 Cor. xi. 24. Epiphanius tells [e] us of one Joſeph, a Jew, who was caught by the Jews reading the Goſpels in his own houſe; upon which they dragg'd him away, and had him to the ſynagogue, and there ſcourged him. Now, as theſe things did not befal the apoſtles till after the death of Chriſt, it's clear that the context refers not to their firſt, but to an after miſſion.

Ver. 18. And ye ſhall be brought before governors, &c.] Meaning Roman governors; ſo Paul was had before Gallio, Felix, and Feſtus; for judgments relating to life and death were to be taken away, and were taken away from the Jewiſh ſanhedrim; and, as they themſelves ſay [f], forty years before the deſtruction of the ſecond temple, which was much about the time of Chriſt's death: ſo that what power they had, was only with regard to leſſer matters, and to inflict leſſer puniſhments, as beating and ſcourging: if they ſought to take away life, they were obliged to bring the cauſe before the governors of the Roman provinces, who are here intended: and kings for my ſake; as Herod, Agrippa, Nero, Domitian, and others, before whom one or other of the apoſtles were brought; not as thieves, or murderers, or traitors, and ſeditious perſons, or for having done any wrong or injury to any man's perſon or property; but purely for the ſake of Chriſt, for the profeſſion of their faith in him, and for preaching his Goſpel; of all which they had no reaſon to be aſhamed, nor were they: for a teſtimony againſt, or to them, and the Gentiles; that is, that thereby they might have an opportunity of bearing a teſtimony to the truths of the Goſpel, which would be either to the conviction and converſion of many Gentiles, as well as Jews; or would be a teſtimony which would ſtand againſt them another day, both againſt the Jews, who charged, and accuſed them, and brought them before the Heathen kings and governors, to puniſh them with death; and againſt thoſe Gentile magiſtrates, and others, who ſhould join with them in rejecting the Goſpel, and putting them to death for preaching it: ſo that they ſhould have no pretext or excuſe; ſince the Goſpel had been faithfully and clearly preached to them, and they had deſpiſed it, and evil treated the miniſters of it. This confirms what is before obſerved, that this paſſage refers to an after miſſion.

Ver. 19. But when they deliver you up, &c.] The apoſtles hearing that they ſhould be delivered up to councils, and brought before governors and kings, might be under ſome concern how they ſhould behave, and what they ſhould be able to ſay in vindication of themſelves and truth, before ſuch great perſons; they not being uſed to converſe with men in ſuch high ſtations: they were illiterate men, and of no elocution; men of mean birth, low life, moſt of them poor fiſhermen; and might fear, on theſe accounts, that the Goſpel would ſuffer for want of abler perſons to defend it before the great ones of the earth. Now, in order to remove theſe their fears and objections, and to ſtrengthen and comfort their minds, our Lord bids them, when this would be their caſe, that the Jews would deliver them to the Roman magiſtrates, to take no thought how, or what ye ſhall ſpeak; not to be anxiouſly concerned, neither as to the matter, or manner of what they ſhould ſay in their defence: they ſhould have no occaſion, as orators do, to take pains, and rack their thoughts, to prepare a ſtudied, elaborate oration, dreſſed with all the flowers of rhetorick, filled with the moſt moving and powerful arguments, and clothed with diction of the ſtricteſt propriety and elegance; for they ſhould want neither words, nor things; they ſhould have arguments put into their mouths, and helped to proper language to expreſs them in: for it ſhall be given you in the ſame hour, what ye ſhall ſpeak; immediate aſſiſtance ſhould be afforded them either by his father, or himſelf; or rather, the bleſſed Spirit, who would ſuggeſt unto them, at once, things the moſt proper to be ſaid, and help them to deliver them in the moſt proper manner: and thoſe are the moſt convincing arguments, and that the beſt elocution, which the Spirit of God helps men to; theſe vaſtly exceed all the art of men, and ſtrength of nature. This was greatly verified in Peter and John, two poor fiſhermen, when before the council, and in Stephen the protomartyr.

Ver. 20. For it is not ye that ſpeak, &c.] Not but that they were to ſpeak the words, and did; but then both the things they ſpoke, and the very words in which they ſpoke them, were not of themſelves, but were ſuggeſted and dictated by the Spirit of God; for as the preparation of the heart in them, ſo the anſwer of the tongue by them, were both from the Lord: the Spirit, he was the efficient cauſe, they were only inſtruments; for not they of themſelves ſpoke; or not ſo much they, but the Spirit of your father, which ſpeaketh in you, or by you: what they ſhould ſay was not to be dictated by their own ſpirit or natural underſtanding, nor by an angel, but by the Spirit of God; called the Spirit of their father, becauſe he proceeds from him, is of the ſame nature with him, and is the reaſon of his being given to them: and this character of him might ſerve to ſtrengthen their faith in the expectation of him, and in the aſſiſtance promiſed, and to be had by him; ſince he was the Spirit of him, who ſtood in the relation of a father to them, and bore a paternal affection for them.

---

[e] Contra Hæreſ. l. 1. Hæreſ. 30.

[f] Hieroſ. Sanhedrim, fol. 18. 1. & 24. 2. Juchaſin, fol. 26. 2. & 51. 1. Maimon. Hilch. Sanhedrim, c. 14. §. 13.

Ver. 21. And the brother ſhall deliver up the brother to death, &c.] Chriſt having fortified the minds of his diſciples by the foregoing promiſes of divine influence and aſſiſtance, proceeds to open more largely and particularly the ſorrows, troubles, and afflictions they muſt expect would attend the faithful miniſtration of his Goſpel; as, that the true followers of Chriſt ſhould not only be perſecuted and betrayed, and delivered up into the hands of the civil magiſtrate, by perſons that were ſtrangers to them; and but even by their neareſt relations, brethren, whom the nearneſs of blood ſhould oblige to the tendereſt regards to each other, to the ſecuring of property and preſerving of life: theſe ſhould deliver up thoſe that were ſo nearly related to them in the bonds of conſanguinity, into the hands of perſecuting men in power, in order to be put to death; than which ſcarce any thing can be more barbarous and unnatural, tho' the next inſtances exceed it: and the father the child, and the children ſhall riſe up againſt their parents, and cauſe them to be put to death. The father, laying aſide his natural affection for his child, whom he has begotten, and brought up, and has took ſo much care of, and delight in, and perhaps his only one, his ſon and heir; and yet, profeſſing a faith different from his, ſuch is his blind zeal and bigotry, that, breaking thro' all the ties of parental relation and affection, he delivers him up into the hands of wicked magiſtrates, to put him to death: and, on the other hand, children, forgetting the bonds they are in, and the obligations they lie under to their aged parents, riſe up againſt them, and either with their own hands murder them, or appear as witneſſes againſt them, and give their hearty conſent to the taking away of their lives; even of them who have been the means and inſtruments of bringing them into the world, and of bringing them up in it. This ſhews the ſad corruption of human nature, its enmity to the Goſpel of Chriſt, and the inveterate malice and hatred of ſatan againſt Chriſt, and his intereſt. Something like this is ſaid by the Jews themſelves, as what ſhall be in the times of the Meſſiah; for a little before his coming, or in the age in which the ſon of David comes, they ſay, "the ſon ſhall deal baſely by his father, the daughter ſhall riſe up againſt her mother——a man's enemies ſhall be of his own houſhold; the face of that generation ſhall be as the face of a dog; and the ſon ſhall not reverence his father[e]."

Ver. 22. And ye ſhall be hated of all men for my name ſake, &c.] This is more particularly directed to the apoſtles themſelves, as what is ſaid before regards the followers of Chriſt in general; for this was to be the lot of the apoſtles, that they ſhould not only be ill treated in common with others, by their near friends and relations, whoſe love would be turned into hatred to them, but ſhould be the butt and mark of the malice and wrath of all men; that is, of moſt men, or of the far greater part of the Jews, even of all wicked men who diſbelieved and rejected the Meſſiah: for that the words are not to be underſtood in the utmoſt latitude, without any reſtriction, is certain; ſince there would be ſome who would be converted, and believe in Chriſt thro' their miniſtry, and conſequently would love, eſteem, and honour them as their ſpiritual fathers and guides, and as the diſciples and apoſtles of Chriſt. This hatred they ſhould be expoſed to, would not be on account of any ill will to their perſons; or becauſe of any evil or immorality committed by them; but purely, and alone, for the name of Chriſt, in whom they believed, by which they were called, of which they made a profeſſion, and zealouſly preached: which conſideration, as it muſt needs ſecure peace and tranquillity in their breaſts; ſo for their further encouragement, 'tis added, but he that endureth to the end, ſhall be ſaved: which words ſuggeſt, that the tribulations and perſecutions of the diſciples of Chriſt, thro' the hatred of wicked men againſt them, ſhall not laſt always; there will be an end to them; reſpecting either the end of time and life, or the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, when theſe their enemies would be cut off, or removed, and be capable of giving them no farther trouble: and that ſuch perſons are happy, who patiently endure the hatred of men, and all manner of perſecution, for Chriſt's ſake; who are not moved by the afflictions they ſuffer, but ſtand faſt in the faith, hold faſt the profeſſion of it, go on in their chriſtian courſe, and hold out to the end; for ſuch ſhall be ſaved, not only with a temporal ſalvation, as the Chriſtians were at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, but with an eternal one.

Ver. 23. But when they perſecute you in this city, &c.] Or any city into which they went, and preached the Goſpel; and would not ſuffer them to go on in their work, they were not to deſiſt, but to go elſewhere, where they might hope for a better reception, and a longer continuance, and ſo of doing more good: flee ye into another; not ſo much for their own ſafety, tho' this, according to the circumſtances of things, is lawful, but for the further ſpreading of the Goſpel. The exhortation is not to take methods to avoid perſecution, or to make an eſcape from it, but to perſeverance under it: the ſenſe is, they were not to be diſcouraged, and to leave off, becauſe of perſecution in one place, but to perſiſt in the miniſtration of the Goſpel, by carrying it to other cities; and it ſeems to be a ſpur to them to make haſte, and fulfil their office of preaching the Goſpel, in the land of Judea: nor need they fear going on too faſt, leſt they ſhould have no places to preach in; for verily I ſay unto you, this is a certain and indiſputable truth not to be called in queſtion, being ſtrongly affirmed by truth itſelf, ye ſhall not have gone over the cities of Iſrael, or finiſhed them; that is, their tour through them, and their miniſtry, or the preaching of the Goſpel in them, till the ſon of man be come; which is not to be underſtood of his ſecond coming to judgment, but either of his reſurrection from the dead, when he was declared to be the ſon of God, and when his glorification began; or of the pouring forth of the Spirit at the day of Pentecoſt, when his kingdom began more viſibly to take place, and he was made, or manifeſted to be the Lord and Chriſt; or of his coming to take vengeance on his enemies, that would not have him to rule over them, and the perſecutors of his miniſters, at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem.

Ver. 24. The diſciple is not above his maſter, &c.] So far from it, that he is inferior to him; as in knowledge, ſo in reputation and character; and can't expect the ſame honour to be given him, and the ſame reſpect ſhewn to him, as to his maſter; and therefore if his maſter is not uſed with that decency, and in that becoming manner he ought to be, he muſt not think it any hardſhip if he is treated in the ſame way. Our Lord hereby intends to fortify the minds of his diſciples againſt all the reproach and perſecution they were to meet with from the world, by obſerving to them the treatment he himſelf met with; wherefore, if he who was their maſter, a teacher that came from God, and taught as never man did, and was worthy of the utmoſt deference that could be paid, was maligned and evilly treated by men, it became them who were his diſciples, to look for, and patiently bear ſuch indignities; ſince they could expect no better uſage, than he himſelf had: the ſame doctrine is ſuggeſted in the next clauſe, nor the ſervant above his Lord; and both ſeem to be proverbial expreſſions. The Jews have a ſaying [h] much like unto them, אין העבד זכה מרבו, no ſervant is worthier than his maſter; and Chriſt might make uſe of ſuch common, well-known expreſſions, that he might be the more eaſily underſtood, and in the moſt familiar manner convey what he intended, into the minds of his diſciples; as, that ſince he was their Lord, and they were his ſervants, if his ſuperior character and dignity did not ſecure him from the obloquy and inſults of men, it could not be thought by them, who were inferior to him, that they ſhould eſcape them.

---

[e] Miſn. Sota, c. 9. §. 15.

Ver. 25. It is enough for the diſciple that he be as his maſter, &c.] A diſciple ſhould think himſelf very well off, be entirely ſatiſfied, yea, abundantly thankful, if he meets with no worſe treatment than his maſter; if he has the ſame honour done him his maſter has, this is more than could be expected by him; and if he has the ſame ill uſage with his maſter, he need not wonder at it, but ſhould ſolace himſelf with this conſideration, that it is no other, nor worſe than his maſter had before him: and the ſame is equally true in the other caſe, and the ſervant as his Lord: theſe expreſſions, as before, were proverbs, or common ſayings among the Jews, which our Lord choſe to make uſe of, and adapt to his preſent purpoſe; דיו לעבד שיהא, vel להיות כרבו, it is enough for the ſervant, that he be as his maſter, is a ſaying often to be met with in their writings [i]; which our Lord applies, and reaſons upon, in the following manner: if they have called the maſter of the houſe Beelzebub, how much more ſhall they call them of the houſhold? By the maſter of the houſhold, he means himſelf, who is maſter of the family both in heaven and in earth; who is ſon over his own houſe, the high-prieſt over the houſe of God, the Lord and governor of all the houſhold of faith; who takes care of, provides for, and protects all that are of God's houſhold: and yet, tho' in ſuch an high office, and of ſuch great uſefulneſs, he did not eſcape the ſevereſt laſhes of the tongues of the wicked Jews; who called him by the moſt opprobrious names they could think of, and among the reſt Beelzebub; ſee Matt. xii. 24. Luke xi. 15. This was the God of the Ekronites, 2 Kings i. 2. The word ſignifies a maſter-fly, or the Lord of a fly; and ſo the Septuagint there call him Βααλ μυιαν, Baal the fly, the God of the Ekronites. And this idol was ſo called, either becauſe it was in the form of a fly; or elſe from the abundance of flies about it, by reaſon of the ſacrifices which it was not able to drive away; and therefore the Jews contemptuouſly gave it this name. They obſerve [k], that in the temple, notwithſtanding the multitude of ſacrifices offered up there, there never was ſeen a fly in the ſlaughter-houſe: or elſe this deity was ſo called from its being invoked to drive away flies, and the ſame with Myiodes, the God of flies, mentioned by Pliny [l], or Myagros, which the ſame author [m] ſpeaks of; ſo Jupiter was called απομυιος, a driver away of flies; as was alſo Hercules [n]; and were worſhipped by ſome nations on this account. In moſt copies, and ſo in the Arabic verſion, it is read Beelzebul; that is, as it is commonly rendered, the Lord of dung, or a dunghill God; and it is generally thought the Jews called the God of the Ekronites ſo, by way of contempt; as it was uſual with them to call an idol's temple זבול, Zebul, dung, and worſhipping of idols מזבל, dunging [o]: but I muſt own, that I ſhould rather think, that as Beelſamin, the God of the Phœnicians, is the ſame with Beelzebul, the God of the Ekronites, ſo it ſignifies the ſame thing: now בעל שמין, Beelſamin, is the Lord of the heavens, and ſo is Beelzebul; for, זבול, Zebul, ſignifies heaven; ſo the word is uſed in Hab. iii. 11. the ſun and the moon ſtood ſtill, זבלה, in their habitation; by which, as a Jewiſh [p] writer obſerves, הרצן בו השמים is meant the heavens; for they are the habitation of the ſun and moon: ſee alſo Iſ. lxiii. 15. and ſo among the ſeven names of the heavens, reckoned up by them, this is accounted one [q]. Now as the Jews looked upon all the deities of the Gentiles, as dæmons, or devils; and ſince Beelzebub was the chief of them, they thought they could not fix upon a more reproachful name, to give to Chriſt, than this: and our Lord ſuggeſts, that ſince the great maſter of the family was called in ſuch an abuſive manner, it ſhould be no cauſe of ſtumbling and offence, if thoſe of a lower claſs in a family ſhould be ſo ſtigmatized: if Chriſtians are called by ever ſuch hard names, even devils, they ſhould not be diſturbed at it; ſince their Lord and Maſter was called the prince of them.

Ver. 26. Fear them not therefore, &c.] That is, be not afraid of men, and of their reproaches and revilings; which our Lord intimates would do them no more hurt, than they did him, and which in a little while would be all wiped away: time would bring all things to light, when the wickedneſs of of theſe men would be diſcovered, their evil deſigns ſeen through; which were now covered with the ſpecious pretences of ſanctity, and zeal for religion, and the glory of God; and the innocence and integrity of him and his diſciples, would he made manifeſt. There is no need to refer this to the great day of account, when every ſecret thing ſhall be brought to light; but it chiefly regards the times when the Goſpel ſhould be more publickly known, and embraced, and ſhould prevail againſt all the oppoſition made unto it; and then all theſe reproachful names and characters would be ſeen plainly to ariſe from ſpight and malice: to which may be applied thoſe proverbial ſayings in common uſe, for there is nothing covered, that ſhall not be revealed, and hid, that ſhall not be known. Men may cover their malice and wickedneſs, for a while, under the beſt of names, but e'er long it will all be revealed to their great ſhame and reproach: the innocence of the followers of Chriſt may, for ſome time, lie out of ſight, and they may be traduced as the worſt of men; but in proceſs of time things take another turn, and their characters appear in quite another light: and ſo it is with the Goſpel preached and profeſſed by them, which though ſometimes it is little known, lies hid, and is covered with diſgrace; yet in the Lord's own time its light breaks forth, power attends it, and it is made manifeſt to the conſciences of men.

---

[h] T. Hieroſ. Maaſer Sheni, fol. 55. 1. [i] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 58. 2. Bereſhit Rabba, fol. 43. 3. Juchaſin, fol. 93. 1. Tserot Hammor, fol. 64. 2. Aben Ezra in Hoſ. i. 2. [k] Pirke Abot, c. 5. §. 5. [l] Nat. Hiſt. l. 29. c. 6. [m] Ib. l. 10. c. 28. [n] Pauſanias, l. 5. p. 313. & l. 8. p. 497. Clement. Alex. ad Gentes, p. 24. [o] T. Hieroſ. Beracot, fol. 13. 2. [p] R. Sol. Urbinas in Ohel Moed, fol. 100. 1. [q] T. Bab. Chagiga, fol. 12. 2.

Ver. 27. What I tell you in darkneſs, &c.] Hence Chriſt proceeds to encourage his diſciples to an open, plain, and faithful miniſtration of the Goſpel, not fearing the faces and frowns of men. For with reſpect to the Goſpel, his meaning is, that what was hid and covered ſhould not remain ſo, but ſhould be revealed, and made known, and they were the perſons who were to do it; and it was with that view that he had communicated it to them: and whereas he had told them it in darkneſs; not in a dark and obſcure manner; for tho' he ſpoke in parables to others, yet to them he made known the myſteries of the kingdom of heaven: and if at any time he delivered parables, or dark ſayings, to them, he would afterwards, or when alone, explain them to them; but his meaning chiefly is, that what he communicated to them in private houſes, when they were by themſelves, and no one ſaw, or heard them, and ſo were in darkneſs with reſpect to others, that ſpeak ye in light; openly and publickly in the ſynagogues and temple, in the high places of the city, ſtreets, or fields, wherever there is a concourſe of people; hide and conceal nothing, but ſpeak out all clearly, diſtinctly, fully, without the leaſt reſerve, or throwing any obſcurity on it, which may cover the true ſenſe of it from the view of the people. And what ye hear in the ear, or is whiſpered to you by me, as your maſter. Chriſt alludes to the cuſtom of the Jewiſh doctors, who had each an interpreter, into whoſe ear he uſed to whiſper his doctrine, and then the interpreter delivered it to the people: ſo it is ſaid [s], "Rab came to the place of "R. Shilla, and he had no ſpeaker to ſtand by him; "wherefore Rab ſtood by him, and explained." The Gloſs upon it is, "an interpreter ſtands before "a doctor whilſt he is preaching, and the doctor "לוחש לו, whiſpers to him in the Hebrew tongue, "and he interprets it to the multitude in a tongue "they underſtand." Again [t], "they ſaid to Judah bar Nachmani, the interpreter of Reſh Lekiſh, "ſtand for a ſpeaker for him." The Gloſs upon it is, "to cauſe his expoſition to be heard by the "congregation, שילחוש לך, which he ſhall whiſper "to thee." Now it was abſolutely requiſite, that the ſpeaker, or interpreter, ſhould faithfully relate what the doctor ſaid; ſometimes, it ſeems, he did not: 'tis ſaid [u] in commendation of the meekneſs of R. Aba, "that he delivered one ſenſe, and his "ſpeaker ſaid another, and he was not angry." The Gloſs ſays, "his ſpeaker was, he that interpreted "to the multitude what he לוחש לו, whiſpered to "him in the time of preaching." Sometimes one doctor is ſaid to whiſper in the ear of another, when he inſtructed him, or informed him of any thing. R. Jochanan [w] whiſpered R. Joſhua באודניה, in his ear. The Jews have a notion that the law was given this way; ſo they interpret the eloquent orator in Iſ. iii. 3. [x] this is he to whom it is fit to deliver the words of the law, שניתנה בלחש, which was given by whiſpering; and ſo, it ſeems, the Goſpel was in like manner delivered by Chriſt to his diſciples. It was reckoned a very great honour, and a token of magiſterial dignity, to have one to whiſper in the ear to, and ſpeak for them. So to one that related his dream, that he ſaw an aſs ſtanding at his pillow, and braying, anſwer is made, thou ſhalt be a king, that is, the head of a ſchool; and a ſpeaker, or an intepreter ſhall ſtand by thee [y]. Our Lord very juſtly takes upon him the character of a doctor, maſter, and dictator, and ſolemnly charges his diſciples, clearly, loudly, and faithfully to declare what he ſuggeſted to them. That preach ye, ſays he, upon the houſe tops; for the roofs of their houſes were not ridged, but plain, and flat, upon which they could ſtand or walk; and battlements were made about them to prevent their falling off, according to the law in Deut. xxii. 8. Here many religious actions were performed: here Peter went up to pray, Acts x. 9. and here perſons ſometimes ſat and read: hence that paſſage in the Miſna [z], if any one קורא בראש הגג, was reading on the top of a roof, and the book is rolled out of his hand, &c. and ſometimes they made their proclamations from hence of their feſtivals and ſolemn days, and particularly of their ſabbath; which was done by the ſound of a trumpet, that the people might ceaſe from work in the fields, and ſhut up their ſhops in the city, and light up their lamps. This proclamation, by the ſound of a trumpet, was made ſix times by the chazan, or miniſter of the congregation, from an houſe top; and, 'tis ſaid, that there was, גג מיוחד בגובה העיר, a peculiar roof in the higheſt part of the city, and from the middle of it he blew the trumpet [a]. In alluſion to this, our Lord orders his diſciples to blow the trumpet of the everlaſting Goſpel; and loudly proclaim to all, the truths and myſteries of grace, which he had made known to them.

Ver. 28. And fear not them which kill the body, &c.] This is a periphraſis of bloody perſecutors, who, not content to revile, ſcourge, and impriſon, put the faithful miniſters of Chriſt to death, in the moſt cruel and torturing manner; and yet are not ſo to be feared and dreaded by them, as to diſcourage and divert them from the performance of their important work and office; for, as Luke ſays, ch. xii. 9. after that they have no more that they can do. This is all they are capable of doing, even by divine permiſſion, when they are ſuffered to run the greateſt lengths in violence againſt the ſaints; this is the utmoſt of their efforts, which ſatan, and their own wicked hearts can put them upon, or is in the power of their hands to perform: and the taking away of the lives of good men is of no diſadvantage to them; but ſends them the ſooner out of this troubleſome world to their father's houſe, to partake of thoſe joys that will never end; ſo that they have nothing to fear from their moſt implacable enemies; but ſhould boldly and bravely go on in their maſter's ſervice, openly, freely, faithfully, and fully diſcharging the work they were called unto: for, the loſs of a corporal life is no loſs to them, their ſouls live after death, in eternal happineſs; and in a little time God will raiſe up their bodies, and re-unite them to their ſouls, and be for ever happy together. A noble argument this, which our Lord makes uſe of, to engage his diſciples to a publick and diligent miniſtration of the Goſpel, in ſpight of all oppoſers; who when they have vented all their malice, can only take away a poor, frail, mortal life; and which,

---

[s] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 20. 2.

[t] T. Bab. Sanhed. fol. 7. 2.

[u] T. Bab. Sota, fol. 40. 1.

[w] T. Hieroſ. Kidduſhin, fol. 65. 4.

[x] T. Bab. Chagiga, fol. 14. 1.

[y] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 56. 1.

[z] Erubin, c. 10. §. 3.

[a] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 35. 2. & Gloſſ. in ib.

if they did not, in a little time would ceaſe in courſe: but are not able to kill the ſoul; which is immortal, and can't be touched by the ſword, by fire, and faggot, or any inſtruments of violence: it is immortal, it ſurvives the body, and lives in a ſeparate ſtate, enjoying happineſs and bliſs, whilſt the body is in a ſtate of death: but rather fear him which is able to deſtroy both body and ſoul in hell. This is a deſcription of God, and of his power, who is able to do that which men are not: all that they can do, by divine permiſſion, is to kill the body; but he is able to deſtroy, that is, to torment and puniſh both body and ſoul in hell, in everlaſting burnings; for neither ſoul nor body will be annihilated; tho' this he is able to do. As the former clauſe expreſſes the immortality of the ſoul, this ſuppoſes the reſurrection of the body; for how otherwiſe ſhould it be deſtroyed, or puniſhed with the ſoul in hell? Now this awful being which is able to hurl, and will hurl all wicked and ſlothful, unfaithful and unprofitable, cowardly and temporizing ſervants and miniſters, ſoul and body, into the lake which burns with fire and brimſtone, is to be feared and dreaded; yea, indeed, he only is to be feared, and to be obeyed: cruel and perſecuting men are not to be feared at all; God alone ſhould be our fear and dread: though the argument ſeems to be formed from the leſſer to the greater; yet this is the ſenſe of the word rather, that God is to be feared, not chiefly and principally only, but ſolely; and in ſome verſions that word is left out, as in the Arabic, and Ethiopic, and in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel.

Ver. 29. Are not two ſparrows ſold for a farthing? &c.] A farthing, with the Jews, was a very ſmall coin; according to them it contained four grains of ſilver [b]; was the ninety-ſixth part of a ſela, or ſhilling [c]; and ſometimes they make it to be of the ſame value with an Italian farthing: for they ſay [d], it is of the value of eight prutahs; and a prutah is the eighth part of an Italian farthing: it is uſed proverbially to ſignify a very little thing in the Miſna [e]; "if of a command, which is light כאיסר, as a farthing, which Bartenora explains a very little thing, the law ſays, that it may be well with thee, much more of the weighty commands in the law." Hence, in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel, it is rendred by טבע קטון, a little piece of money; and this was the common price of two ſparrows. Our Lord appeals to his diſciples, for the truth of it, as a thing well known: according to the queſtion in Luke, five ſparrows were ſold for two farthings, which makes them ſomewhat cheaper ſtill. This ſhews they were of little account. And one of them ſhall not fall on the ground without your father: ſome copies add, which is in heaven; meaning, that one of them ſhould not be ſhot, or be killed, without the knowledge, will, and pleaſure of God. The deſign of Chriſt is to aſſert the doctrine of providence, as reaching to all creatures and things, even the moſt minute and worthleſs: he inſtances not in men, nor in the beaſts of the field, but in the fowls of the air, and in thoſe of the inferior ſort, and more uſeleſs, in ſparrows, yea in little ſparrows; as the word may be rendered; whoſe price was ſo low, that two are obliged to be put together to fetch the leaſt ſum of money currant: and yet the providence of God is concerned with each of theſe; ſo that not one of them is taken in a ſnare, or killed with a ſtone, or ſhot flying, or ſitting, but by the will of God: from whence it may be ſtrongly concluded, that nothing comes by chance; that there is no ſuch thing as contingency with reſpect to God, tho' there is to men, with reſpect to ſecond cauſes; that all things are firmly ordained by the purpoſe of God, and are wiſely ordered by his providence: and our Lord's further view is, from this conſideration, to animate his diſciples to a free, open, and conſtant preaching of his Goſpel, not regarding their lives for his ſake; for ſince their heavenly father, in his providence, takes care of the meaneſt, even of the moſt irrational creatures, ſo that the life of one of them is not taken away without his will, much more will he take care of them; nor could their valuable lives be loſt without his will and pleaſure. Much ſuch a way of arguing is uſed by the Jews, who [f] ſay, צפור מבלעדי שמיא לא יבדא כל שכן בר נשא, a bird without God does not periſh, much leſs a man; or, as it is elſewhere [g] expreſſed, "a bird without God is not hunted, or taken, how much leſs does the ſoul of a man go out of him." And again [h], "a bird without God does not fly away, much leſs the ſoul of a man." Two birds, or ſparrows, as the word may be rendered, in Lev. xiv. 4. were uſed in cleanſing the leper; one was killed, and the other let looſe into the open field: and though it might be a contingent thing with men which was killed, and which preſerved, yet not with God; and ſome think the alluſion is here to that caſe.

Ver. 30. But the very hairs of your head are all numbred.] A proverbial expreſſion, ſhewing the perfect knowledge God has, and the exquiſite care he takes, in providence, of all his creatures, particularly men, and eſpecially his dear children and faithful miniſters; as not a ſparrow, ſo not a ſingle hair of a man's head falls to the ground without the knowledge, and will of God; a way of ſpeaking ſometimes uſed to ſignify, that not the leaſt hurt or damage ſhould befal a perſon; ſee 1 Sam. xiv. 45. 2 Sam. xiv. 11. Acts xxvii. 34. and the phraſeology of the text was in uſe, and very well known by the Jews; for ſo they repreſent God ſpeaking [i]; "do not I number all the hairs of every creature?" As our Lord applies this particularly to his diſciples, his ſenſe is, that they had no reaſon to be afraid of men, or fear any thing that ſhould befal them, for their bearing a faithful teſtimony to him; for, their valuable lives were under the ſpecial and peculiar care of divine providence; not only the days, months, and years of their lives were with God, and put down in his book of purpoſes and decrees, which could neither be ſhortened nor lengthened; and not only the more principal, and even all the members of their bodies were written in his book of providence, and a ſingular care taken of them; but even their very excreſcencies, the more minute parts, and which were of no great account with them, the hairs of their head, even all of them, were not only known, but numbred, taken account of; yea, the thing was done already, it was not to be done; a very ſtrong way of ſetting forth the doctrine of divine providence: a doctrine which the Jews were not unacquainted with, who ſay [k]; "that the events of man, and accidents which come upon him, הכל בידי שמים, are all by, or in the hands of God;" and [l] that "nothing is by chance, but all things are בכונת, with deſign;" or, as they elſewhere ſay, "a man does not hurt his finger below, but they proclaim concerning it above;

---

[b] Maimon. in Miſn. Peah, c. 8. §. 1.
[c] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Maaſer Sheni, c. 4. §. 3.
[d] Ib. in Miſn. Eracin, c. 8. §. 1.
[e] Cholin, c. 12. §. 5.
[f] T. Hieroſ. Sheviith, fol. 38. 4.
[g] Bereſhit Rabba, fol. 69. 3.
[h] Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 81. 2. & Midraſh Eſther, fol. 89. 3.
[i] Peſikta, fol. 18. 4. apud Druſium in loc.
[k] Piſke Toſaphot ad Cetubot, art. 119.
[l] Kimchi in Pſ. civ. 4.
[m] T. Bab. Cholin, fol. 7. 2.

that is, as the Gloſs explains, it יזרו עליו, it is decreed concerning it; which comes very near to the phraſe here uſed.

Ver. 31. Fear ye not therefore, &c.] Neither be afraid of men, nor diſtruſt the providence of God; for if that reaches to the meaneſt of creatures, ſparrows, and to that which is of leaſt account with men, the ſingle hair of a man's head; much more muſt it regard the lives of men, and ſtill more, ſuch uſeful lives as thoſe of the diſciples were, who were called to, and employed in preaching the everlaſting Goſpel; a work which ſo much concerned the glory of God, the intereſt of Chriſt, and the good of immortal ſouls: ye are of more value than many ſparrows. Two of them were worth no more than a farthing; there muſt be a great multitude of them to be mentioned with any man: and indeed there is no compariſon between the whole ſpecies of them, and the life of a ſingle man, and much leſs between them, and the apoſtles of the lamb. Any man is more valuable, as a man, than many ſparrows, and much more a chriſtian man, and ſtill more, an apoſtle: the argument then is, that if God takes care of ſparrows, and is concerned for their lives, much more will he take care of his faithful miniſters, and not ſuffer their lives to be taken away, till they have done the will, and work of their Lord.

Ver. 32. Whoſoever therefore ſhall confeſs me before men, &c.] The confeſſion of Chriſt here, more eſpecially deſigned, does not ſo much intend, tho' it may include, that which is leſs public, and is neceſſary to be made by every believer in Chriſt: for it is not enough to believe in him, with the heart, but confeſſion of him muſt alſo be made with the mouth; and which lies in aſcribing their whole ſalvation to him, giving him the glory of it; declaring their faith in him to others, and what he has done for their ſouls; and ſubjecting themſelves to his ordinances, and joining in fellowſhip with his church and people: which confeſſion, as it ought to be both by words and deeds, and to be hearty and ſincere, ſo likewiſe viſible, open, and before men. This, I ſay, may be included in the ſenſe of theſe words; but what they chiefly relate to, is a confeſſion of Chriſt by his miniſters, in the public preaching of the Goſpel; who ought openly, and boldly, to acknowledge, and declare, that Chriſt is truly and properly God, the eternal ſon of God, the only mediator between God and men, the ſaviour and redeemer of loſt ſinners; thro' whoſe blood alone is the forgiveneſs of ſins, according to the riches of grace; by whoſe righteouſneſs only men can be juſtified before God; and by whoſe ſacrifice and ſatisfaction, ſin is only expiated; that he died for, and in the room and ſtead of his people, roſe again for their juſtification, aſcended to heaven in their name, is ſet down at the right hand of God, and ever lives to make interceſſion for them, and will come again, and judge both quick and dead: ſuch a free and open confeſſion of Chriſt ought to be made by all his miniſters, before men, and in ſpight of all the rage and oppoſition of earth and hell; and ſuch ſhall not fail of being taken notice of, and requited by Chriſt; for he himſelf ſays, him will I confeſs alſo before my father which is in heaven: as he has a perfect knowledge of them, and bears an affectionate love to them; ſo he'll openly own, and acknowledge them, as his miniſters, and ſpeak in the praiſe and commendation of their works and labours; tho' they have been performed thro' the gifts, grace, and ſtrength, which he has communicated to them: he'll introduce them into his father's preſence, and recommend them to him, to be honoured, bleſſed, and glorified by him.

Ver. 33. But whoſoever ſhall deny me before men, &c.] Deny that he is a diſciple of Chriſt, and that Chriſt is his Lord and maſter, act contrary to him, deliver things repugnant to his mind and will; which for a diſciple to do to his maſter, was a very heinous crime, with the Jews: "if, ſay they [n], "Rabbi Jochanan, יכפור, deny Rabbi Eleazar, his "diſciple, he will not deny Rabbi Jannai, his maſter." Some regard may be had here to Peter's after denial of Chriſt; and this proviſo be ſuppoſed, except he repent, as he did. Moreover, to deny Chriſt, is to drop, or oppoſe any of thoſe truths which regard his perſon, office, and grace; or to hide and conceal them from men, thro' fear, ſhame, or cowardice of mind: and even not to confeſs him, thro' fear of men, is interpreted, by Chriſt, a denial of him; and ſuch who deny him in any form and ſhape, either by words or deeds, him, ſays he, will I alſo deny before my father which is heaven; he'll deny them to be diſciples, or that they belong to him; he'll deny that he ever knew them, loved, or approved of them; he'll declare, in the preſence of his father, his diſapprobation of them, his indignation againſt them, that they are workers of iniquity; yea, he'll do more, he'll baniſh them from his preſence, and ſend them into everlaſting burnings.

Ver. 34. Think not ye that I am come to ſend peace on earth, &c.] The Jews had a notion of great outward peace and proſperity in the days of the Meſſiah; which was grounded on ſeveral prophecies of the Old Teſtament, not rightly underſtood by them; and the diſciples of Chriſt had imbibed the ſame notion: wherefore our Lord thought fit to let them know the contrary; and that they muſt not expect outward eaſe, and quiet, and worldly tranquillity would attend their miniſtry: for tho' he came to be a peace-maker between God and ſinners, by the blood of his croſs; and was both the author and donor of ſpiritual peace to his people; and the Goſpel he brought with him, and ſent them to preach, was the Goſpel of peace; which, accompanied with his power, would produce peace in the conſciences of men; and be the means of cultivating and maintaining peace among the ſaints; yet peace on earth, in a temporal ſenſe, whether in the world in general, or in Judea in particular, muſt not be expected as the conſequence of his coming; ſo far from it, that he ſubjoins, I came, not to ſend peace, but a ſword. By the ſword may be meant the Goſpel, which is the means of dividing and ſeparating the people of Chriſt from the men of the world, and from their principles and practices, and one relation from another; as alſo of diviſions, diſcords, and perſecutions ariſing from it: not that it was the intention, and deſign of Chriſt, in coming into the world, to foment and encourage ſuch things; but this, thro' the malice and wickedneſs of men, was eventually the effect and conſequence of his coming; ſee Luke xii. 51. where, inſtead of a ſword, it is diviſion; becauſe the ſword divides aſunder, as does the ſword of the Spirit, the word of God.

Ver. 35. For I am come to ſet a man at variance againſt, &c.] Or to divide a man from his father. Here our Lord opens and explains what he means by the ſword, inteſtine diviſions, domeſtic broils, family differences, as well as ſuch as appear in towns, cities, and kingdoms, which are exemplified by other inſtances following; and the daughter againſt againſt her mother, and the daughter-in-law againſt her mother-in-law: the caſe is this, a father believing in Chriſt, embracing his Goſpel, and ſubmitting to his inſtitutions, is contradicted, oppoſed, and perſecuted by his own ſon, and a mother by her own daughter; in both which relations, natural affection knit them together; and the mother-in-law by her daughter-in-law, who before lived together in the moſt peaceable, kind, and tender manner: which muſt be imputed, not to Chriſt, and the doctrines of Chriſt, and the natural tendency of them, embraced by the father, the mother, and mother-in-law; but to the natural enmity of the ſon, the daughter, and the daughter-in-law, to every thing divine, ſpiritual, and evangelical, or vice verſa.

---

[n] Juchaſin, fol. 80. 2.

Ver. 36. And a man's foes ſhall be they of his own houſhold.] His children, and his ſervants, ſuch that he has either begotten and brought up, or are daily fed at his table, and maintained by him. This, with the former inſtances, are borrowed from Micah vii. 6. and the times of the Goſpel are ſet forth in the ſame diſmal and black characters, as thoſe in which the prophet lived; and much ſuch a deſcription do the Jews themſelves give, of the times of their expected Meſſiah; which agreeing in words, as well as things, I can't forbear tranſcribing. "The government ſhall be turned to hereſy (Sadduciſm) and there will be no reproof; the ſynagogue ſhall become a brothel-houſe, Galilee ſhall be deſtroyed, and Gablan ſhall be laid waſte, and the men of the border ſhall wander from city to city, and ſhall obtain no mercy; the wiſdom of the Scribes ſhall ſtink, and they that fear to ſin ſhall be deſpiſed, and truth ſhall fail; young men ſhall turn pale, or put to ſhame the faces of old men, and old men ſhall ſtand before young men; the ſon ſhall deal baſely with his father, the daughter ſhall riſe up againſt her mother, and the daughter-in-law againſt her mother-in-law, and the enemies of a man ſhall be they of his own houſe; the face of that generation ſhall be as the face of a dog, and the ſon ſhall not reverence his father[o]." All which characters, how exactly they agreee with the generation in which Chriſt lived, is eaſy to obſerve.

Ver. 37. He that loveth father or mother more than me, &c.] The deſign of theſe words, is not at all to leſſen the due affection of children to their parents; or to detract from the reſpect and eſteem, in which they ought to be had by them: it is the duty of children, to love, honour, and obey them, who have been the means of bringing them into the world, and of bringing them up in it; nor do any of the doctrines of Chriſt break in upon the ties and obligations of nature, or in the leaſt ſet aſide any of the duties of natural religion: but the intent of this paſſage is, to ſhew, that as Chriſt is infinitely above all creatures, he is to be loved above the neareſt and deareſt relations and friends; being God over all bleſſed for ever, and alſo the Saviour and Redeemer; which itſelf, makes him more amiable and lovely than a common parent. That man therefore, that prefers father and mother to Chriſt, and their inſtructions, and orders, to the truths and ordinances of Chriſt; who, to pleaſe them, breaks the commands of Chriſt, rejects his Goſpel, and either denies him, or does not confeſs him, our Lord ſays, is not worthy of me; or, as in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel, he is not ראוי לאותי, fit for me: it is not fit and proper, that ſuch a perſon ſhould name the name of Chriſt, or be called by his name, and ſhould be reckoned one of his diſciples; he is not fit to be a member of the church of Chriſt on earth, nor for the kingdom of heaven, but deſerves to be rejected by him, and everlaſtingly baniſhed his preſence: for otherwiſe, no man, let him behave ever ſo well, is worthy of relation to Chriſt, and intereſt in him; or of his grace, righteouſneſs, preſence, kingdom and glory. The ſame is the ſenſe of the following clauſe, and he that loveth ſon or daughter more than me, is not worthy of me: whoever, to gratify a child, drops the profeſſion of Chriſt, renounces his Goſpel, and neglects his commands, it is not proper and convenient that he ſhould bear the name of Chriſt, be accounted one of his, or be treated as ſuch, but all the reverſe.

Ver. 38. And he that taketh not his croſs, &c.] By the croſs, which was a Roman puniſhment, whereby malefactors were put to death, are meant all ſorts of afflictions, reproaches, perſecutions, and death itſelf; and particularly the ill-will, hatred, and perſecution, of near relations and friends, which muſt be expected by ſuch, who bear a faithful teſtimony for Chriſt. Every miniſter of Chriſt, or profeſſor of his name, has his own croſs, his own particular afflictions, appointed by God, and laid on him by Chriſt, and which he ſhould chearfully take up, and patiently bear, for his ſake. The alluſion is to the cuſtom of perſons ſentenced to be crucified, to carry their own croſs, as Chriſt did his, and Simon the Cyrenian for him; and which our Lord here may have a reſpect unto, as well knowing what death he was to die, and that ſome of his diſciples alſo would die the ſame death: wherefore Chriſt ſays, and followeth after me; led on by his example, to preach, or profeſs the Goſpel, ſubmit to the ordinances of it, and chearfully ſuffer for the ſake of it, when called to it. If a man, who would be thought to be a diſciple of Chriſt, is not willing to do all this, but, in order to avoid it, complies with his friends, conforms to the world, and turns his back on Chriſt; of ſuch an one he may well ſay, he is not worthy of me; it is not convenient that he ſhould ſtand among his diſciples and followers.

Ver. 39. He that findeth his life ſhall loſe it, &c.] That man that ſeeks to preſerve his life, and the temporal enjoyments of it, by a ſinful compliance with his friends and the world, and by a denial of Chriſt, or non-confeſſion of him; if he is not, by the providence of God, deprived of the good things of life, and dies a ſhameful death, both which are ſometimes the caſe of ſuch perſons; yet he is ſure to loſe the happy and eternal life of his ſoul and body, in the world to come: ſo that the preſent finding of life, or the poſſeſſion of it, on ſuch ſinful terms, will in the iſſue prove an infinite and irreparable loſs unto him. On the other hand, Chriſt obſerves, he that loſeth his life for my ſake, ſhall find it. That man that is willing to forego the preſent advantages of life, to ſuffer reproach and perſecution, and lay down his life chearfully for the ſake of Chriſt and his Goſpel, for the profeſſion of his name, rather than drop, deny, conceal, or neglect any truth and ordinance of his, ſhall find his ſoul poſſeſſed of eternal life, as ſoon as ſeparated from his body; and ſhall find his corporal life again, in the reſurrection morn, to great advantage; and ſhall live with Chriſt in ſoul and body, in the utmoſt happineſs, to all eternity.

Ver. 40. He that receiveth you, receiveth me, &c.] This is ſaid to comfort the diſciples, leſt they ſhould conclude from this account of the ſorrows, afflictions, ons, and perſecutions they were to meet with, that there would be none that would receive them and their meſſage; Chriſt therefore ſuggeſts, that there would be ſome, that would embrace the Goſpel preached by them, and receive them kindly into their houſes, and entertain them in a very hoſpitable manner: and, for the encouragement of ſuch perſons, who would riſque their own goods and lives by ſo doing, he lets them know, that receiving of his diſciples, was interpreted by him, a receiving of himſelf; and what they did to them, would be taken as kindly, as if done to him perſonally; and, in like manner, would it be underſtood and accepted by his father; and he that receiveth me, receiveth him that ſent me. To which agrees, what the Jews ſay [p] of the angel, in Exod. xxiii. 22. If thou ſhalt indeed obey his voice, and do all that I ſhall ſpeak: who obſerve, that it is not written, that he ſhall ſpeak, but that I ſhall ſpeak; intimating, that אם מקבלין אתם הימנו כאלו לי אתם מקבלים, if ye receive him, it is all one as if you received me: and the whole of this accords with a common ſaying among [q] them, ששלוחו של אדם כמותו, that a man's meſſenger is as himſelf. The Jew [r] therefore, has no reaſon to reproach Chriſt and his followers as he does, as if it was the ſenſe of theſe words of Chriſt, and which the Chriſtians give of them, that Chriſt and his twelve apoſtles were but one perſon.

---

[o] Miſn. Sota, c. 9. §. 15. T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 97. 1. Zohar in Num. fol. 102. 3. & Raya Mehimna in ib. in Lev. fol. 28. 2. Shirhaſhirim Rabba, fol. 11. 4. Derech Eretz Zuta, fol. 19. 4.

Ver. 41. He that receiveth a prophet in the name of a prophet, &c.] By a prophet is meant, not one that foretells things to come, but a preacher of the Goſpel; for as propheſying ſometimes ſignifies preaching, ſo a prophet deſigns a miniſter of the word: and to receive him, is not only to embrace his doctrine, but to entertain him in a kind, and generous manner; and he that does this, in the name of a prophet, not as coming in the name of another prophet, but upon this account, and for this conſideration, becauſe he himſelf is a prophet; ſo the phraſe, לשם, in the name, or on the account of any thing, is often uſed in the Miſnic writings [s]: he that regards ſuch a perſon, and ſhews him reſpect, by an hoſpitable entertainment of him; not becauſe he may be related to him after the fleſh; or becauſe he may be a man of good behaviour, of a ſingular diſpoſition and temper, of much learning and eloquence, of great natural parts and abilities; but becauſe he is a faithful miniſter of the Goſpel; he ſhall receive a prophet's reward: either a reward from the prophet himſelf, who ſhall interpret the ſcriptures to him, preach the Goſpel to him, lead him more fully into the truths of it, and guide him to the true, and more clear and diſtinct ſenſe of the ſacred writings; which is an ample reward for his kind entertainment of him: or elſe, that reward which God has appointed, prepared, and promiſed, to them who receive his prophets; and which indeed is no other, than what the prophets themſelves ſhall receive, even the reward of the inheritance, the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world, a reward of grace, and not of debt; ſince both, in their way, ſerve the Lord Chriſt. And he that receiveth a righteous man, in the name of a righteous man. He that is kind and liberal to any good man, whether he is a miniſter of the Goſpel or not, who appears to have the work of grace upon his ſoul, and is juſtified by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and expects eternal life on that account; if he ſhows reſpect to him, purely becauſe he has the image of Chriſt enſtamped on him, and the righteouſneſs of Chriſt imputed to him, and not on any natural, worldly, or civil accounts, he ſhall receive a righteous man's reward; either from the good man himſelf, who will not fail to pray for his benefactor, to wiſh him well, and give him all the aſſiſtance he can in his chriſtian courſe; to exhort, comfort, inſtruct him as much, and as far as his chriſtian experience will furniſh him with; or elſe the ſame reward of grace the righteous man himſelf ſhall have, namely, eternal life, as God's gift, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

Ver. 42. And whoſoever ſhall give to drink unto one of theſe little ones, &c.] Our Lord gradually deſcends from prophets to righteous men, and from righteous men, to thoſe of the loweſt form and claſs among them; who have the leaſt meaſure of grace, and ſhare of ſpiritual light, and knowledge; who are outwardly the pooreſt, meaneſt, and moſt contemptible in the eyes of the world; and are little, even the leaſt of ſaints, in their own eſteem and account: whoſoever takes notice but of one of theſe, receives him into his houſe, and gives him a cup of cold water only, is regarded, a phraſe uſed to expreſs the leaſt favour, or benefit whatever. "So "ſays [t] Maimonides, one that calls to his friend to "dine with him, and he refuſes, and ſwears, or "vows, that he ſhall not enter into his houſe, nor "will he give him to drink, טפת צונן, a drop of "cold water, &c." Moreover, this is ſaid to prevent any objection, on account of the mean and low condition perſons may be in, to their relieving neceſſitous objects; for every one is capable of doing this, and if they can do no more, 'tis accepted. Now whoſoever takes notice of, and ſhews favour to the meaneſt of Chriſt's people, though it be but beſtowing ſo ſmall a benefit as a cup of cold water; yet, if it is done in the name of a diſciple, or becauſe that poor perſon is a diſciple of Chriſt, verily, ſays Chriſt, I ſay unto you, he ſhall in no wiſe loſe his reward: it will be obſerved another day by Chriſt, who takes what is done to the leaſt of his brethren, as done to himſelf. The Jews ſay many things in praiſe of hoſpitality, to תלמיד חכם, a diſciple of a wiſe man; and obſerve [u], that he that hoſpitably entertains ſuch an one in his houſe, and cauſes him to eat and drink, and partake of the goods of his houſe, there is reaſon to believe, he ſhall be much more bleſſed than the houſe of Obed Edom was for the ark's ſake, which neither eat, nor drank with him; and which may be compared with this paſſage.

CHAP. XI.

Ver. 1. AND it came to paſs, &c.] In the courſe of things, and as before determined and reſolved on, that when Jeſus had made an end of commanding his twelve diſciples; when he had given them a commiſſion to preach the Goſpel, had finiſhed all his inſtructions, he thought fit to give them, and orders he enjoined them, relating to that work; as where they ſhould go, what they ſhould ſay, how they ſhould behave, and what treatment they ſhould meet with; and had given them all proper advice and encouragement, he departed thence, from the place where he then was:

---

[p] Shemot Rabba Paraſh. 32. fol. 135. 3.

[q] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 34. 2. Kidduſhin, fol. 41. 2. 42. 1. & 43. 1. Bava Metzia, fol. 96. 1.

[r] R. Iſaac Chizzuk Emuna, par. 2. §. 14. p. 404.

[s] Miſn. Zebachim, c. 1, §. 1. 2. 3. 4. & 4. 6. & 6. 7. & 7. 1, 2, 3, 4.

[t] Hilchot Nedarim, c. 8. §. 10.

[u] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 63, 2. & 64. 1.

he did not deſiſt either from the miniſtry of the word, or from working of miracles, but went out into other parts of the country, to teach and to preach in their cities: meaning either in the cities of the Jews, or in the cities of his diſciples; and theſe, either the cities they belonged to, from whence they came, namely, the cities of Galilee; for the diſciples were Galileans, and in which parts Chriſt now was; or elſe the cities where he ſent them to preach firſt, and then came himſelf, and confirmed their doctrine by his own miniſtry and miracles.

Ver. 2. Now when John had heard in the priſon, &c.] The perſon here ſpoken of, is John the Baptiſt, the forerunner of Chriſt, who was now in the priſon of Machærus; being put there by Herod, for his reproving him for taking Herodias, his brother Philip's wife; and whilſt he was there, an account was brought him by his own diſciples, ſee Luke vii. 18. of the works of Chriſt, the miracles he wrought; as the healing of the centurion's ſervant, the raiſing from the dead the widow's ſon of Naim, and the like: upon hearing of which, he ſent two of his diſciples, who might be the moſt prejudiced againſt Chriſt, becauſe of the increaſe of his followers, and the decreaſe of their maſter's; and becauſe he did not live ſuch an auſtere life as John did; and who, notwithſtanding all that they had heard, and their maſter had told them of Jeſus, were not eaſily perſuaded that he was the true Meſſiah. Moreover, two of them were ſent, both becauſe it was more honourable to Chriſt, and that they might be proper witneſſes of what they ſaw and heard; and ſince it was not ſo much for himſelf, as for the ſake of his diſciples, that theſe meſſengers were ſent.

Ver. 3. And ſaid unto him, &c.] By the diſciples he ſent: this was the meſſage they came with, and this the queſtion they were to aſk, and did, art thou he that ſhould come? A periphraſis of the Meſſiah, well known to the Jews; for he had been ſpoken of frequently in the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, as the Shiloh, the Redeemer, the Prophet, and King that ſhould come; particularly, by this circumlocution, reference ſeems to be had to Hab. ii. 3. It ſhall ſurely come, כי בא יבא, which may be rendered, for he that cometh, or is to come, ſhall come. So that the queſtion in plain terms is, whether he was the Meſſiah? John could not be ignorant of this, who had ſeen the Spirit of God deſcending on him at his baptiſm, heard a voice from heaven, declaring him the ſon of God; and had ſo often pointed him out to others, and had born frequent teſtimonies that he was the Lamb of God, and Bridegroom of his church: wherefore this queſtion was put, not upon his own account, but his diſciples, that they might have from the mouth of Chriſt a full and ſatisfactory anſwer, which would remove all their doubts and ſcruples, and attach them to Chriſt, now he was about to die, and leave them, than which nothing was more deſirable to him. Though ſome have thought, that John's faith was ſomewhat ſlackened; and through his long impriſonment, he began to doubt whether he was the Meſſiah or no: and others have been of opinion, as particularly Dr. Lightfoot, that the reaſon of this meſſage was, neither the ignorance and unbelief of John, or his diſciples; but that John, with the reſt of the Jews, having a notion of a temporal kingdom, and hearing of the mighty works of Chriſt, wonders that he himſelf was not delivered out of priſon by him, grows impatient upon it, and aſks, if he was the Meſſiah? And if he was, why did he ſuffer his forerunner and chief miniſter, to lie in priſon? or do we look for another, to releaſe me, and ſet up this kingdom?

Ver. 4. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, &c.] Not by an expreſs declaration, that he was the Meſſiah that was to come, and they were not to look for any other; but he bids them go, and ſhew John again, thoſe things which ye do hear and ſee. Chriſt would have them go back to John in priſon, and relate to him the doctrines which they had heard preached by him to the poor; and the miracles which they had ſeen with their own eyes, then wrought by him; as well as many others, which were atteſted to them by credible witneſſes; for there were at that time about Chriſt, that had infirmities, plagues, and evil ſpirits, and that were blind, and he inſtantly cured them in their preſence; ſee Luke vii. 21.

Ver. 5. The blind receive their ſight, &c.] Our Lord here, has reference to ſeveral prophecies concerning the Meſſiah, in Iſa. xxxv. 6. and lxi. 1. and which having their accompliſhment in him, John and his diſciples might eaſily and ſtrongly conclude, that he was he that was to come, and that they ſhould not look for another. The ſeveral things here mentioned, were not all done at this time, but were what theſe diſciples had ſufficient and authentic evidence of; ſight was reſtored to the blind before them then; and no doubt they were informed of the two blind men, that had their eyes opened, Matt. ix. 30. and the lame walk; as did the man ſick of the palſy, who was brought to him on a bed, carried by four men, but went away himſelf, with his bed upon his ſhoulders, Matt. ix. 2, 6, 7. the lepers are cleanſed; as the poor man was, that was full of leproſy, and who was cured by Chriſt, by touching him, Matt. viii. 3. and the deaf hear; as did the man, into whoſe ears Chriſt put his fingers and ſaid, Ephphatha, be opened, Mark vii. 33, 34, 35. and the dead are raiſed; as were Jairus's daughter, Matt. ix. 18. and the widow's ſon of Naim, Luke vii. 15. and the poor have the Goſpel preached unto them: by the poor are meant, either the preachers of the Goſpel; for ſo the words may be rendered, the poor preach the Goſpel: and ſuch were the apoſtles of Chriſt; they were poor with reſpect to the things of this world; they were chiefly fiſhermen; and, with reſpect to human literature, they were unlearned men, had no ſtock or furniture of acquired learning, and were mean, abject, and contemptible, in the ſight and opinion of men; and yet Chriſt called, qualified, and ſent them forth to preach the Goſpel. Or elſe, the hearers of it are deſigned; who were alſo the poor of this world, made a very low figure in life, and had but a ſmall ſhare of knowledge and underſtanding, and ſo were deſpiſed, and reckoned as curſed by the Scribes and Phariſees: or they were ſuch, who were poor in ſpirit, or ſpiritually poor; who ſaw their ſpiritual poverty, bewailed and acknowledged it, and ſought after the true riches of grace, and glory in Chriſt. Now theſe, as they had the Goſpel preached to them more fully and clearly, with more power and authority, and ſo as it never was before or ſince, ſo they received it, as Tremellius from the Syriac reads the text, readily and willingly, joyfully and gladly, with faith and love; and were, as it may be alſo rendered, evangelized by it, or thrown into a goſpel mould and frame: which may be ſaid to be done, when a man has a ſpirit of liberty, in oppoſition to a ſpirit of bondage; when he lives by faith on Chriſt alone; when his comforts don't ſpring from his works, but from Chriſt; when the love and grace of God influence his repentance and obedience; when a man has a ſpirit of meekneſs and of love to the ſaints, is of a forbearing and forgiving ſpirit; when he is deſirous of performing all duties both to God and man, and yet depends upon none of them, but upon Chriſt alone, for ſalvation.

Ver. 6. And bleſſed is he whoſoever ſhall not be offended in me.] The Jews were offended at Chriſt's parentage and birth, at the poverty of his parents, and at the manner of his birth, by a virgin; and at the place of his birth, which they thought to be Galilee; at his education, becauſe he had not learnt letters, and was brought up to a mechanic employment; at his mean appearance in his publick miniſtry, in his own perſon, and in his attendants; his company and audience being the poorer ſort, the more ignorant, and who had been looſe and ſcandalous perſons, publicans and ſinners; at the doctrines he preached, particularly, which reſpected his own deity and eternity, the diſtinguiſhing grace of God, and living by faith upon his fleſh and blood. The diſciples of John alſo were offended in him, becauſe he and his diſciples did not faſt, and lead ſuch an auſtere life as they and their maſter did; becauſe of the meanneſs and obſcurity of Chriſt's kingdom; the impriſonment of John, and the many reproaches, afflictions, and perſecutions, which did, and were likely to attend a profeſſion of Chriſt: this our Lord knew, and had a peculiar reſpect to them in theſe words; but happy are thoſe perſons, who notwithſtanding all theſe difficulties and diſcouragements, are ſo far from ſtumbling at Chriſt, and falling from him, that they heartily receive him and believe in him, make a profeſſion of him, and hold it faſt; greatly love, highly value, and eſteem him, and are willing to part with all, and bear all for his ſake: theſe are bleſſed, notwithſtanding all their ſufferings for him even now; for they have ſpiritual peace, joy, and comfort in their ſouls, and ſhall be happy in the full enjoyment of him to all eternity.

Ver. 7. And as they departed, &c.] That is, the meſſengers of John, Luke vii. 24. when they returned to their maſter, to give an account to him of what they had heard and ſeen, Jeſus began to ſay unto the multitudes concerning John; he took this opportunity before the whole company, who had heard what paſſed in converſation between him and the diſciples of John, to ſay ſome things concerning his character and miniſtry: and which he did, partly to rectify and remove any wrong opinion they might have conceived of him, from this meſſage of his, as if he had retracted his former ſentiments concerning Chriſt, at leaſt was wavering and doubtful about him; and partly, to put them in mind of their former zeal and attachment to John's miniſtry, when they went out in large bodies to attend upon it, and to revive a good opinion of him; and ſignifies, that they would do well to aſk themſelves, what views they had in attending on him, and how they came to grow indifferent to ſo great a man: and Chriſt, by giving an account of his character and office, confirms his own Meſſiahſhip; and this commendation of John, he choſe to enter into, after the departure of his meſſengers, leſt what he ſaid of him, ſhould be interpreted as mere flattery: what went ye out in the wilderneſs to ſee? This refers to Matt. iii. 5. where we read, that great numbers from Jeruſalem, Judea, and the country round about Jordan, went out into the wilderneſs of Judea, where John came preaching, to hear him, and be baptized by him; and our Lord aſks, what was it that led ſuch multitudes of them into the wilderneſs? What did they expect to ſee there? A reed ſhaken with the wind? This may either refer to John's geſture in preaching, who might wave to and fro as a reed does, when ſhaken by the wind; and Chriſt's queſtion is, did ye go out only to ſee and obſerve the preacher's geſture, to ſee him move his body to and fro? Was it not to hear his doctrine, and receive benefit for your ſouls? And did you not? Wherefore, you ought ſtill to retain a valuable reſpect for him. Or this may regard their opinion of him; and the ſenſe of the interrogation is, when you firſt went out to him, did you take him to be an unſtable, inconſtant man? Like a reed ſhaken with every wind! If you did, you were miſtaken; he was firm and ſtable in his ſentiments and miniſtry, his preaching was not yea and nay, his doctrine was all of a piece; he ſtood to it, that he was not the Meſſiah, but his forerunner; the teſtimony he bore was always alike, conſiſtent with himſelf, and he is the ſame man now he ever was. The Jews uſe this compariſon of a man to a reed, in a ſenſe juſt the reverſe, and make it to ſignify conſtancy, and not inconſtancy, as well as tenderneſs, in oppoſition to roughneſs, ſeverity, and ſtubborneſs. "Let a man, "ſay they [w], be always רך כקנה, tender as a reed, "and let him not be hard and ſtubborn as a cedar: "when the four winds of the world go out, the "reed goes and comes with them; and when the "winds are ſtill, the reed ſtands in its place." So they obſerve [x], that it is ſaid, that the Lord ſhall ſmite Iſrael, as a reed is ſhaken in the water, 1 Kings xiv. 15. which they interpret by way of bleſſing. "As a reed, ſay they, ſtands in a place of water, "its body waves about, and its roots are many; "and though all the winds in the world come and "blow upon it, they can't move it out of its place, "but it goes and comes with them; and when the "winds are ſtill, the reed ſtands in its place."

Ver. 8. But what went ye out for to ſee? &c.] Since it can't be thought it was to ſee the reeds in the wilderneſs blow to and fro by the wind, or a man like one of them, either in geſture or doctrine; was it to ſee a man clothed in ſoft raiment? In raiment made of ſoft materials, as fine wool, cotton, ſilk, &c. ſuch as Mecænas wore, and who was therefore called Malacinus [y]: one finely dreſſed, and richly apparelled, draws the eyes of perſons to him; but ſuch an one is not to be expected in a wilderneſs: and if the Jews went out to ſee ſuch a perſon, they were greatly diſappointed; for John's raiment was of camel's hair, undreſſed, and he had a leathern girdle about his loins; and as for his diet, it was locuſts and wild honey: no, behold they that wear ſoft clothing, or as Luke ſays, are gorgeouſly apparelled; to which he adds, and live delicately, are in king's houſes, or courts; not in a deſert, where John came preaching, nor in a priſon, where he now was: he was no light, inconſtant, flattering perſon, as generally courtiers are; had he, he would not have been in a priſon; it was for his uprightneſs and faithfulneſs, in reproving Herod the king, that he was in ſuch a place and condition. Thus from his very garb and diet, his character is vindicated from the charge of levity and change.

Ver. 9. But what went ye out for to ſee? &c.] Since it was not any thing ſo mean as a ſhaking reed, or ſo grand as a man in gay clothing, pray what was it you went out to ſee? A prophet? This was the truth of the matter, they expected to ſee a prophet, and they believed he was one; this was the common

---

[w] Derech Eretz, fol. 18. 1.

[x] T. Bab. Taanith. fol. 20. 1.

[y] Alex. ab Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 5. c. 18.

mon voice of the people; all held John to be a prophet. This made Herod afraid to put him to death, and the Phariſees to ſpeak againſt his baptiſm: now, though this was giving him a great character, to believe and own him to be a prophet, yet it did not come up to his full character. Yea, I ſay unto you, and more than a prophet: when they ſaw him, they ſaw not only a prophet, but one that was greater, and more excellent than any of the prophets that went before him: they propheſied of the Meſſiah at a diſtance, and in words not ſo clear, and eaſy to be underſtood; they ſpoke of him as to come, but he pointed him out with his finger, and declared that he was come; he ſaw him himſelf, and ſhewed him to others; he ſaw the Spirit of God deſcending on him, and he himſelf baptized him; his office, as the harbinger of Chriſt, and the adminiſtrator of the ordinance of baptiſm to him, gave him a preference to all the prophets; and was ſuch an one, as never any man was veſted with but himſelf.

Ver. 10. For this is he of whom it is written, &c.] Mal. iii. 1. Behold I ſend my meſſenger before thy face, which ſhall prepare thy way before thee. That theſe words belong לעולם הבא, to the world to come, or the times of the Meſſiah, that is, the goſpel diſpenſation, the Jews[z] themſelves own; but as to the particular perſon meant by the meſſenger, or angel, becauſe they are not willing to acknowledge the right perſon, are at the utmoſt loſs. Jarchi makes him to be the angel of death, who is to deſtroy the wicked; Aben Ezra conjectures it may be Meſſiah the ſon of Joſeph, who they fancy will come before Meſſiah the ſon of David. Kimchi thinks an angel from heaven is deſigned; and Abarbinel Malachi himſelf: but the more ancient ſenſe of the ſynagogue was, that the ſame perſon is meant, as in ch. iv. 5. under the name of Elijah the prophet; and ſome have thought, that Elijah the Tiſhbite himſelf, is intended; though others think, that ſome great prophet of equal degree with him, and who is called by his name, is what the prophecy has regard unto[a]; which laſt, is the true ſenſe of the paſſage: nor ſhould it be once called in queſtion, when our Lord himſelf has applied it to John the Baptiſt; to whom the things ſaid in it, perfectly agree. He was an angel, not by nature, but by office; a meſſenger ſent by God, before the face of the Meſſiah; ſix months before him: ſuch a ſpace of time he was born before him; and ſuch a ſpace of time he entered on his publick miniſtry before him; and prepared his way before him, by preaching the doctrine of repentance, adminiſtring the ordinance of baptiſm, pointing at the Meſſiah, and exhorting perſons to believe on him. All which, proves him to be, what Chriſt ſays he was, more than a prophet.

Ver. 11. Verily I ſay unto you, &c.] What Chriſt had before ſaid, he proved from a teſtimony of ſcripture; what he was about to ſay, depending on his word, he aſſeverates in the moſt ſolemn manner; among them that are born of women, there hath not riſen a greater than John the Baptiſt. The phraſe, them that are born of women, is a periphraſis, of men born into the world by ordinary generation; ſee Job xiv. 1. and the ſenſe is, that of all the prophets that have been in the world, ſince the beginning of it, Moſes himſelf not excepted, there has not been raiſed up by God, a greater prophet than John, the firſt adminiſtrator of baptiſm; were but conſidered, the uncommoneſs of his birth, his being filled with the Holy Ghoſt from his mother's womb, his exemplary life, the excellency of his doctrine; and eſpecially, his work and office, as the harbinger of Chriſt, and the preparer of his ways. Notwithſtanding, he that is leaſt in the kingdom of heaven, is greater than he; which is to be underſtood, not of Chriſt, who was younger in age, and a junior preacher, and leſs in the eſteem of the Phariſees, being greater than he, in nature and office; nor of the ſaints in heaven, where he that was leaſt, the meaneſt, and moſt abject, when on earth, is more happy than John, who was then in priſon; nor of all the believers under the goſpel diſpenſation; but of the apoſtles of Chriſt, and the leaſt among them, who were then the kingdom of heaven, or the viſible goſpel church ſtate. Theſe had a better opportunity of converſing with Chriſt, and of ſeeing and hearing the things they did, than John had; they had the power of performing miracles, which John had not; were immediately ſent forth by Chriſt, to preach the Goſpel, and had a clearer inſight into the truths of it, than John; eſpecially, after the Holy Ghoſt was in ſuch an extraordinary manner poured forth upon them, on the day of Pentecoſt: particularly after the death and reſurrection of Chriſt, they were able to preach him, not only as come in the fleſh, but as having ſuffered and died, and obtained eternal redemption; they could ſpeak of his blood being ſhed, of his righteouſneſs being wrought out, and of his ſacrifice and ſatisfaction as made, which John could not; and beſides, were more ſucceſsful in the converſion of ſinners, both Jews and Gentiles, than ever he was. The compariſon does not lie ſo much between their perſons, as their ſeveral different degrees of light and doctrine.

Ver. 12. And from the days of John the Baptiſt until now, &c.] From the time that he began to preach, to the then preſent time, the kingdom of heaven, the Goſpel, and the miniſtry of it, firſt by John, then by Chriſt and his apoſtles, ſuffereth violence; or comes with force, and power upon the ſouls of men: it was attended with the demonſtration of the Spirit, and of power; as appeared by its being the means of quickening perſons that were dead in treſpaſſes and ſins; enlightning the blind; cauſing the deaf to hear; melting and ſoftning hearts of ſtone; making, of enemies, friends to God and Chriſt; turning men from the power of ſatan unto God; ſetting at liberty ſuch as were ſlaves and vaſſals, to their own corruptions; and, in a word, in being the power of God unto ſalvation, to many ſouls: and which was further ſeen, in the manner it did all this; ſuddenly, ſecretly, powerfully, and effectually, and yet not againſt the wills of men; and by ſuch inſtruments as the apoſtles were, poor, ſinful, mortal men; deſpiſed by the world, and attended with oppoſition and perſecution: or ſuffers violence; which may be underſtood, either of the vaſt numbers, that preſſed and crouded to hear the Goſpel preached: great numbers followed John, when he firſt began to preach, and baptize; ſtill a greater number followed Chriſt, ſome to hear his doctrine, others to ſee his miracles, others to behold his perſon, others out of ſelfiſh ends; and ſome behaved rudely and indecently: or of the ardour and fervency of ſpirit, which appeared in ſome, to the miniſtry of John and Chriſt, and in their deſires and expectations of the kingdom of the Meſſiah: or of the Goſpel's ſuffering violence by the perſecutions of its enemies, oppoſing and contradicting it, reproaching it, intimidating the profeſſors of it, and ſeeking to take away the life of Chriſt, the great ſubject of it: and the violent take it by force; meaning either publicans, and harlots, and Gentile ſinners; who might be thought to be a ſort of intruders: or rather the ſame perſons, as being powerfully wrought upon under the miniſtry of the Goſpel; who were under violent apprehenſions of wrath and vengeance, of their loſt and undone ſtate and condition by nature; were violently in love with Chriſt, and eagerly deſirous of ſalvation by him, and communion with him; and had their affections ſet upon the things of another world: theſe having the Goſpel preached to them, which is a declaration of God's love to ſinners, a proclamation of peace and pardon, and a publication of righteouſneſs and life by Chriſt, they greedily catched at it, and embraced it.

---

[z] Bemidbar Rabba, §. 15. fol. 219. 4.

[a] Vid. Pocock in Mal. iii. 1.

Ver. 13. For all the prophets and the law propheſied until John.] Theſe words are to be conſidered in connexion with ver. 11. and are a further proof of John's being greater than any of the prophets; becauſe all the inſpired writers and prophets, who were before him, propheſied of the Meſſiah as to come; and either ſpoke of him in obſcure terms, or repreſented him under dark ſhadows and figures: whereas John ſpake of him as already come, and in plain terms, and directed to his very perſon; and ſince his time, there have been no prophecies concerning the Meſſiah and his kingdom; viſion and prophecy are now ſealed up; all which are acknowledged by the Jews themſelves, who [b] ſay, כל הנביאים כולן לא נתנבאו אלא לימות המשיח, all the prophets did not propheſy but to, or of the days of the Meſſiah. This was the ſubject, and theſe the limits of their prophecies; for they own [c], that “ from the day that the temple was deſtroyed, “ בטילה נבואה מן הנביאי, prophecy was taken “ away from the prophets.” Since that time, they confeſs they have had no prophet [d], and that they are not able to obſerve their ſigns.

Ver. 14. And if ye will receive it, &c.] The words carry in them ſome ſuſpicion of unbelief and hardneſs of heart, as though they would not receive it: however, whether they would or no, it was a certain truth, that this ſame perſon, John the Baptiſt, is Elias, which was for to come; who was appointed by God to come, and was propheſied of, Mal. iv. 5. that he ſhould come; and even according to the doctrine of the Scribes and Rabbins, he was expected to come before the Meſſiah; only they in general thought, that Elijah the Tiſhbite, in perſon, was meant; though ſome, as before obſerved [e], were of opinion, that ſome great prophet, equal to Elijah, and endued with the ſame ſpirit, is intended; and which is true of John the Baptiſt, who came in the ſpirit and power of Elias, Luke i. 17. And, as it was uſual with the Jews [f], to call Phinehas by the name of Elias, and Elias Phinehas, becauſe of his zeal for the Lord of hoſts; for the ſame reaſon may John be called by the ſame name, there being a great reſemblance between Elias and him; in their temper and diſpoſition; in their manner of clothing, and auſtere way of living; in their very great piety and holineſs; in their courage and integrity, in reproving vice; and in their zeal and uſefulneſs in the cauſe of God, and true religion: in reſpect to which, Chriſt muſt be here underſtood, when he affirms John to be Elias; not Elias in perſon, but he that was intended by Elias, that was ſaid ſhould come: hence here is no contradiction to the words of the Baptiſt, in John i. 21. when he ſays, that he was not Elias; for the Jews, who put the queſtion to him, whether he was Elias, or no? meant whether he was Elias in perſon, Elias the Tiſhbite, or no; and ſo John underſtood them, and very honeſtly and ſincerely replies, he was not: but he does not deny that he was intended by this Elias, that was propheſied ſhould come; yea, he ſays ſuch things as might induce them to believe he was that perſon; hence, Chriſt, and he, ſay nothing contrary to, and irreconcileable, as the Jew [g] ſuggeſts, with each other.

Ver. 15. He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.] A way of ſpeaking uſed by Chriſt, when any thing ſerious, and of great importance, was delivered; and which required attention, and was not eaſily underſtood: and ſuch were the ſeveral things he had mentioned in this context; as that John was more than a prophet, more excellent than all the prophets; that the law and prophets were now at an end, and that John was Elias; which things, if rightly underſtood, would ſerve greatly to ſettle their judgment, with reſpect to himſelf as the Meſſiah: but his words imply, that every one had not ſpiritual ears and underſtandings, to hear and take in things of ſuch an high nature, and excellent uſe; none but thoſe to whom they were given; and ſuch ought to attend to them, and ſeriouſly weigh and conſider the importance of them. The phraſe is to be met with in Jewiſh writings, where it is thus expreſſed [h]; “ He that hears let him hear, and he “ that underſtandeth let him underſtand;” ſee Matt. xxiv. 14.

Ver. 16. But whereunto ſhall I liken this generation? &c.] The men of that age, the ſtubborn and perverſe Jews; who were pleaſed with nothing, with no man's miniſtry, neither with John's, nor with Chriſt's, but found fault with whatever they heard, or ſaw done: it is like unto children ſitting in the markets, and calling to their fellows: that is, the caſe of ſuch perſons, may be fitly repreſented by children in a publick market, calling to their companions, to pipe or mourn with them, and who are ſo moroſe and ſullen as to do neither: for the men of that generation, are not the good natured children, that called to their fellows, and were willing to join in innocent diverſions and exerciſes; but rather John the Baptiſt, Chriſt and his diſciples, who may be compared to children, for their harmleſneſs and ſimplicity; and are repreſented as ſitting in markets, places of concourſe, where much people met together; which may intend the ſynagogues and temple, and other publick places, which they made uſe of to publiſh their doctrines in, to preach to, and exhort the people; and as calling to their fellows, to their cotemporaries, to thoſe of their own nation, by the external miniſtry of the word.

Ver. 17. And ſaying, we have piped unto you, and ye have not danced, &c.] The alluſion is to Jewiſh children, who having ſeen their parents and friends at their feſtivals and weddings, ſome play upon the pipe, and others dance to them, mimicked the ſame in their diverſions; and alſo having obſerved at funerals, the mourning women, making their doleful ditties, and others anſwering to them, acted the part of theſe perſons, expecting their fellows would make their reſponſes, but did not: hence the complaint, we have mourned unto you, and ye have not lamented. The different characters of John and Chriſt, are here ſet forth, by piping and mourning. The character and miniſtry of Chriſt and his diſciples, by piping; by which is meant, the clear, comfortable, and joyful miniſtry of the Goſpel; which is delightful muſic to a ſenſible ſinner; and may be compared to it, for diſtinction of ſounds, harmony, and agreement, being charming and delightful; its notes are all grace, mercy, love, liberty, peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, and free ſalvation; and it is very powerful and engaging, it quickens and animates, attracts, allures and charms. The character and miniſtry of John, is ſignified by mourning: his life was a very auſtere one; he and his diſciples faſted oft; he appeared in a very coarſe habit; his ſpeech was rough, his voice thundering; his doctrine was the doctrine of repentance, and he uſed very ſevere threatenings, in caſe of impenitence: on the other hand, by the fellows to whom they piped, or miniſtred, in their different miniſtrations, are meant, the Scribes and Phariſees; who were neither affected to, nor with, either of them: as for John, he was too auſtere for them; they did not like his garb, nor his diet; nor did his doctrine or baptiſm pleaſe them; nor were they wrought upon, or brought to repentance by his miniſtry; they did not lament, weep, or ſhed one tear, but ſat unmoved, like ſtocks and ſtones, under thoſe awful ſtriking diſcourſes, on mournful ſubjects, delivered by him: nor were they pleaſed with the free conduct, and pleaſant converſation of Chriſt; nor did they dance, or rejoice, at the good news and glad tidings of grace and ſalvation, which were brought by him: of ſuch froward, peeviſh ſpirits they were, that neither John, nor Chriſt, could pleaſe them: they were a true picture and emblem of many perſons, who like neither law nor Goſpel, but are moroſe, ſullen, and quarrelſome, let them hear what they will; as Solomon ſays, If a wiſe man contendeth with a fooliſh man, whether he rage or laugh, there is no reſt, Prov. xxix. 9. Upon which the Talmudiſts [i] comment, and illuſtrate it in this manner, and produce a proverbial ſaying, much like this in the text. "Says God, I was angry with Ahaz, "and I delivered him into the hands of the kings "of Damaſcus; he ſacrificed and burnt incenſe to "their Gods, 2 Chron. xxviii. 22. I played with "Amaziah, and I gave the kings of Edom into his "hands; he brought their Gods and worſhipped "them, 2 Chron. xxv. 14. Says R. Papa, this is "what men ſay, or it is a common proverb, "בכיי ליה למר דלא ידע חייכי ליה למר דלא ידע, "they weep to a man who takes no notice of it, they "laugh to a man who does not obſerve it; woe to "that man, who knows not the difference between "good and evil."

---

[b] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 34. 2. Sabbat, fol. 63. 1. Sanhedrim, fol. 99. 1.

[c] T. Bava Bathra, fol. 12. 1.

[d] Abarbinel in Dan. fol 63. 4.

[e] Vid. Pocock. not. in porta Moſis, p. 219.

[f] Baal Hatturim, in Num. xxv. 12. Kimchi in 1 Chron. ix. 20. Targum Jon. in Exod. vi. 18.

[g] R. Iſaac Chizzuk Emuna, par. 1. c. 39. & par. 2. c. 15.

[h] Zohar in Num. fol. 60. 3.

Ver. 18. For John came neither eating nor drinking, &c.] This and the following verſe, are an explanation of the foregoing parable; and this ſhews, that John and his diſciples, are the perſons that mourned, of which his auſtere life was a proof: for when he came, being ſent of God, and appeared as a publick preacher, he was neither eating nor drinking; not that he did not eat or drink at all, otherwiſe he could not have lived, and diſcharged his office: but he eat ſparingly, very little; and what he did eat and drink, was not the common food and drink of men; he neither eat bread, nor drank wine, but lived upon locuſts and wild honey; he excuſed all invitations to people's houſes, and ſhun'd all feaſts and entertainments; he abſtained from all free and ſociable converſation with men, in eating and drinking: and though the Scribes and Phariſees, pretended to much abſtinence and frequent faſtings, yet they did not care to follow his very ſevere way of living, and lament, in anſwer to his mournful ditty; but in a calumniating way, they ſay he hath a devil; is a demoniack, a madman, one that is unſociable and melancholy; under a deluſion of ſatan, and influenced by him to abſtain from proper food and company of men, under a pretence of religion.

Ver. 19. The Son of man came eating and drinking, &c.] Meaning himſelf, who eat and drank as men uſually do, lived in the common way of life, was free and ſociable, went to feaſts, entertainments, and weddings, when he was invited; and was affable, courteous, and friendly in his deportment, to all men; and they ſay, behold a man gluttonous, a voracious man, an epicurean, one that indulges his appetite to a very great degree, and in a ſcandalous manner; a wine-biber, a common tipler, one that drinks to exceſs; whom the Rabbins call [k], גרגרן, who is one they ſay, that drinks up his cup at one draught; one that is given to wine, and is greedy of it: a friend of publicans and ſinners; ſuch as are openly and notoriouſly wicked; and loves their company, for the ſake of tipling with them; and encourages them in their revelling and drunkenneſs; a very black charge this! But wiſdom is juſtified of her children; either the wiſdom of God, in making uſe of miniſters of a different diſpoſition and deportment, whereby ſome are gained, and others left inexcuſable: or the Goſpel, in which there is ſuch a diſplay of divine wiſdom, which is vindicated from the charge of licentiouſneſs, by the agreeable lives and converſations of the children of God: or rather Chriſt himſelf, who is the wiſdom of God; and in whom are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge; who, however he may be traduced by ignorant and malicious men, yet will be acquitted from all ſuch charges, as here inſinuated, by all the true ſons of wiſdom; or by ſuch, who are made wiſe unto ſalvation. We may learn from hence, that no ſort of preachers and preaching, will pleaſe ſome men; that the beſt of Goſpel miniſters may be reproached as libertines, or madmen; and that they will be ſooner, or later, juſtified and cleared from all ſuch aſperſions.

Ver. 20. Then began he to upbraid the cities, &c.] When he had ſent forth his diſciples to preach, and had been in theſe ſeveral cities hereafter mentioned himſelf, and had taught and preached in them, and confirmed his doctrine by many wonderful works; when he had obſerved how ill they had uſed both John and himſelf, repreſenting the one as having a devil, and the other as a licentious perſon; when they could not be pleaſed with the miniſtry of the one, nor of the other, he very ſeaſonably and righteouſly, began to reproach them with their ungenerous treatment of him, their ingratitude to him, their unbelief in him, the hardneſs and impenitence of their hearts; which could not be moved to repent of their evil ways, and believe in him, and acknowledge him as the Meſſiah, by all the inſtructions he gave them, and miracles he wrought among them: for the cities he has a view to, were ſuch, wherein moſt of his mighty works were done; the moſt for number, and the greateſt in their kind; as particularly at Capernaum; where he cured the centurion's ſervant, recovered Peter's wife's mother from a fever, healed the man ſick of a palſy, raiſed Jairus's daughter from the dead, made whole the woman that had a bloody iſſue, opened the eyes of two blind men, and caſt out a devil from a dumb man, poſſeſſed with one: all theſe, and more, he did in this one city, and therefore he might juſtly upbraid them, becauſe they repented not: not becauſe they did not commend him, and ſpeak well of his works, for he ſought not his own glory, but their good: all he did was, in order to bring men to repentance of their ſins, and faith in himſelf, that they might be ſaved.

---

[i] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 103. 1.

[k] T. Bab. Peſachim, fol. 86. 2. Betza, fol. 25. 2.

Ver. 21. Wo unto thee Chorazin, &c.] Though many of Chriſt's mighty works were done in this place, yet mention is made of it no where elſe, but here; whether it was a ſingle city, or a country, is not eaſy to determine: the word, חורשין, Choraſin, ſignifying woody places, Dr. Lightfoot [l] conjectures, it might include Cana, in which Chriſt wrought his firſt miracle, and a ſmall adjacent country, ſituated in a wood, and be ſo called from thence; and Origen [m] reads it, χωρα Ζιν, the region of Zin: wo unto thee Bethſaida. This was the city of Andrew and Peter, John i. 44. ſee the note there; ſo that as bad as it was, ſome perſons were called out of it by the grace of God, and to the high office of apoſtleſhip; and which makes that grace in ſuch the more diſtinguiſhing: for if the mighty works which were done in you, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in ſackcloth and aſhes. Theſe words are to be underſtood in a popular ſenſe, as Grotius obſerves, and expreſs what was probable, according to an human judgment of things; and the meaning is, that if the inhabitants of Tyre and Sidon, had had the advantages of Chriſt's miniſtry, and of ſeeing his miracles, as the inhabitants of Chorazin and Bethſaida had, it looks very likely, or one would be ready to conclude, eſpecially from many coming out of theſe parts, to attend on Chriſt's miniſtry, Mark iii. 8. and from the converſion of ſome of them in after times, Acts xxi. 3, 4. they would have repented of their ſins; at leaſt, in an external way, ſignified by ſackcloth and aſhes, which were outward ſigns of repentance; ſee Iſa. lviii. 5. Jer. vi. 26. And which, if it had been only performed in ſuch a manner, by the inhabitants of Chorazin and Bethſaida, would have ſaved them from temporal judgments, which their ſins now called for. The words are an hyperbolical exaggeration of the wickedneſs of thoſe cities, like to Ezek. iii. 5, 6, 7. ſhewing, that they were worſe than the Tyrians and Sidonians; an heatheniſh and idolatrous people, who lived very profligate and diſſolute lives, in all intemperance, luxury and impiety; and therefore would be puniſhed in a ſeverer way: neither this paſſage, nor what follows, can be any proof of God's giving ſufficient grace to all men alike, which in ſome is effectual to converſion, and in others not, but of the contrary; ſince the men of Tyre and Sidon had not the ſame means, or the ſame grace, as the inhabitants of the other cities, if the mighty works done among them, are to be called ſo; or that man has a power to repent of himſelf, in a ſpiritual and evangelical way; or that outward means, as doctrines and miracles, are ſufficient to produce ſuch a repentance, without efficacious and unfruſtrable grace; ſince only an outward repentance is here ſuppoſed, ſuch as that of Ahab, and of the Ninevites.

Ver. 22. But I ſay unto you, &c.] What may be depended upon as true, and which ſhall certainly come to paſs, however the inhabitants of theſe cities might flatter themſelves; or in whatſoever light they might look upon their neighbours, the Tyrians and Sidonians; and fancy themſelves to be the favourites of heaven, and theſe as the moſt execrable of creatures; it ſhall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of judgment, than for you. Their puniſhment in another world, will be more mild and moderate; they will not have ſuch ſevere ſtings of conſcience, nor have reaſon to make ſuch bitter reflections on themſelves, as thoſe will, who have had the advantages of a Goſpel revelation: all ſins are not alike, nor will the puniſhment of them be the ſame; there will be degrees of torments in hell, and which the juſtice of God requires. Theſe words ſuppoſe, that the men of Tyre and Sidon will be puniſhed, for their many abominable ſins, committed againſt the law and light of nature; but that the inhabitants of Chorazin and Bethſaida, having rejected the Meſſiah, and the doctrines of the Goſpel, againſt all the evidence of miracles, and convictions of their own minds, and probably, ſinned the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt; as their ſins are aggravated, their condemnation will be the greater, and their puniſhment the more intolerable.

Ver. 23. And thou Capernaum, &c.] This city is ſingled out from all the reſt, and ſpoken to particularly, becauſe of its peculiar advantages: which art exalted unto heaven; which has reſpect to the very great privileges this place enjoyed, it being the city where Chriſt choſe to dwell, and for a time fixed his abode in; where he firſt began to preach, and where ſuch a train of miracles were done; a particular enumeration of which, has been before given: as alſo it may refer to the ſituation of the place, which was very high and lofty, ſo that it ſeemed to reach unto heaven; for the account that R. Benjamin Tudelenſis [n] gives of it is, that "Capernaum, which is, by interpretation, the village of " comfort, at firſt ſight looks to be, מקום על כרמלי, " a place higher than mount Carmel." And Nonnus on John vi. 59. calls it, βαθυκρηπιδι καφαρναυμ, which the interpreter renders, the land of Capernaum founded on high. But notwithſtanding all this, ſhalt be brought down to hell; meaning, it ſhould be attended with very humbling providences, be reduced to a very low condition, ſee Iſa. xiv. 15. be deſtroyed and laid waſte, as a city, as it was in the times of Veſpaſian; and the inhabitants of it, not only puniſhed with temporal, but everlaſting deſtruction; for if the mighty works which have been done in thee, had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day. The ſenſe of theſe words, is the ſame with that of ver. 22. only this may be obſerved, that whereas Capernaum was ſuperior in privileges and advantages, than the other cities, and yet acted the vile and ungrateful part it did; ſo that its impenitence and unbelief, were the more aggravated; hence a ſtill viler ſett of men are pitched upon, even the men of Sodom, to make the compariſon of them with: for as wicked as the men of that place were, who were ſo infamous for their unnatural luſts; yet if they had enjoyed ſuch a miniſtry as Chriſt's, and had had ſuch miracles wrought among them, for the atteſtation of the doctrines taught them, in all human probability, they would have repented of their flagitious crimes; at leaſt in an external way, in ſuch a manner as to have eſcaped that dreadful judgment, which laid their city, and ſeveral adjacent ones in aſhes; and ſo would have continued a city until this day. The phraſe remained, is Jewiſh, and is uſed of Sodom by the Rabbins, who ſay [o], that "Abraham was ninety nine " years of age when he was circumciſed, and then " was the overthrow of Sodom; which was fifty one " years, after the generation of the diviſion (of the " people and languages,) and near fifty two years; " but Zoar remained one year, אחר ישוב סדום, " after

---

[l] Chorogr. Cent. in Matth. p. 84. Vol. 2.

[m] Philocalia, p. 109.

[n] Itinerarium, p. 37.

[o] Juchaſin, fol. 8. 1.

“ after Sodom remained.” According to the Jews, it ſtood but fifty-two years at moſt [p]: and they have a notion, that Sodom and Gomorrha will be built again in the future ſtate [q], or world to come, the times of the Meſſiah.

Ver. 24. But I ſay unto you, &c.] Capernaum, and the inhabitants thereof, as before, to Chorazin and Bethſaida. It ſhall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom, in the day of judgment, than for thee: tho' the puniſhment of the men of Sodom will be very great, their iniquities being horridly dreadful and enormous, yet more eaſy to be born than the vengeance, which, in the laſt and general judgment, will fall upon ſuch, who have had the means of grace, and have deſpiſed them; eſpecially ſuch as had the perſonal preſence, miniſtry, and miracles of Chriſt among them, as the Capernaites had. Such a way of expreſſing and ſetting forth the ſeverer puniſhment of others, by that of Sodom, is not unuſual in the Old Teſtament; ſee Lam. iv. 6. nor in Jewiſh writers, who ſay [r], that “ the Iſraelites were fit “ for, or deſerved, לעונש יותר חמור מעונש סדום,
“ a far more heavy puniſhment, than the puniſhment of “ Sodom; becauſe they abounded with prophets,
“ riſing early, and ſending them, but they did not “ hearken; whereas Sodom had no hands ſtayed
“ on her, or prophets to warn them.”

Ver. 25. At that time Jeſus anſwered, and ſaid, &c.] The time referr'd to is, when the diſciples returned to him, and gave him an account of the ſucceſs of their miniſtry, Luke x. 21. who ſay nothing of the converſion of ſinners, but of the ſpirits being ſubject to them; and may alſo refer to the ſeveral things ſpoken of in the context: it was at that time when Chriſt ſpoke to the multitude about John, and the excellency of his miniſtry, which yet was ineffectual to great numbers, who for a while attended on it; and when he took notice to the people, how he himſelf, as well as John, was rejected and vilified by the Phariſees, and received by publicans and ſinners; and when he upbraided Chorazin, Bethſaida, and Capernaum, for their impenitence and unbelief: taking occaſion from hence, he anſwered and ſaid; an Hebrew way of ſpeaking, uſed when nothing goes before, to which what is ſaid can be an anſwer; ſee Job iii. 2. I thank thee, O father, Lord of heaven and earth. This is an addreſs to God, by way of thankſgiving; glorifying and praiſing him, confeſſing and acknowledging his wiſdom, power, grace, and goodneſs, diſcovered in the things he after mentions: ſo far was he from being diſcouraged and dejected at the poor ſucceſs of the ſeventy; at his ill treatment by the Phariſees; and at the general impenitence and unbelief of the cities, where he preached, and wrought his miracles; that he is abundantly thankful, and admires the diſtinguiſhing grace of God in the calling of a few in thoſe places. This addreſs is made to God as a father, as his father, his own father; for he was the only-begotten of him, and dearly beloved by him: this epithet he makes uſe of, to ſhew the near relation he ſtood in to him, and the freedom he could uſe with him: he alſo addreſſes him as the Lord of heaven and earth; he being the maker, upholder, and governor of both, and which he fills with his preſence; the one is his throne, and the other is his footſtool. This he mentions to ſhew the ſovereignty of his father, in the converſion of men; and that it was not for want of power in him, that there were no more wrought upon under the miniſtry of John, himſelf, and his diſciples. The things he expreſſes his thankfulneſs for, follow; becauſe thou haſt hid theſe things from the wiſe and prudent. The things he means, are the doctrines of the Goſpel; ſuch as reſpect himſelf, his perſon, as God, and the ſon of God; his office, as Meſſiah, Redeemer, and Saviour; and the bleſſings of grace, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation by him. The perſons from whom theſe things were hid, are the wiſe and prudent; in things worldly, natural, and civil; men of great parts and learning, of a large compaſs of knowledge, having a conſiderable ſhare of ſagacity, penetration, and wiſdom; or, at leaſt, who were wiſe and prudent in their own conceits, as were the Scribes and Phariſees, and the ſchools of Hillell and Shammai, the two famous doctors of that day: and indeed the people of the Jews in common were ſo; who thus applaud themſelves at the eating of the paſſover every year, and ſay, כלנו חכמים כלנו נבונים כלנו יודעים את התורה, we are all wiſe, we are all prudent, we all underſtand the law [s]; the ſame is elſewhere [t] ſaid, of all Iſrael; in their opinion they were ſo, yet the things of the Goſpel are hidden from them. God may be ſaid to hide theſe things, when either he does not afford the outward revelation of the Goſpel; or, if he does, it is given forth in parables; or he does not give along with it the light of his ſpirit and grace, but leaves men to their own darkneſs and blindneſs; ſo that they cannot ſee, perceive, and underſtand the beauty, glory, excellency, and ſuitableneſs of the doctrines of it. Now when Chriſt confeſſes this, or gives thanks to God for it, it is a declaration that God has done ſo, and denotes his acquieſcence in it; and is not properly a thankſgiving for that; but rather, that foraſmuch as he has thought fit, in his infinite wiſdom, to take ſuch a method, he has been pleaſed to make a revelation of theſe things to others: and haſt revealed them unto babes; fooliſh ones, comparatively ſpeaking, who have not thoſe natural parts, learning, and knowledge others have, that wiſdom and prudence in worldly and civil things; and are ſo in their own account, and in the eſteem of the world; and who are as babes, helpleſs, defenceleſs, and impotent of themſelves, to do, or ſay any thing that is ſpiritually good, and are ſenſible of the ſame: now to ſuch ſouls God reveals the covenant of his grace, Chriſt, and all the bleſſings of grace in him, the myſteries of the Goſpel, and the unſeen glories of another world. The veil of darkneſs and ignorance is removed from them; ſpiritual ſight is given them; theſe things are ſet before them; they ſee a glory and ſuitableneſs in them; their deſires are raiſed after them; their affections are ſet on them; their hearts are impreſſed with them; and they are helped to view their intereſt in them. The Jews themſelves have a notion, that in the days of the Meſſiah, children and babes ſhall have knowledge of divine things. “ Says Simeon ben Jochai [u], it is “ not the pleaſure of God that wiſdom ſhould be “ ſo revealed to the world; but when it is near the “ days of the Meſſiah, even רביי דעלמא, little “ children, or the babes that are in the world, ſhall
“ find out the hidden things of wiſdom, and know
“ thereby the ends, and the computations of times;
“ and at that time it ſhall be revealed to all:” and there is more truth in what they own elſewhere [w], than they themſelves are aware of, when they ſay, that “ from the day that the temple was deſtroyed,

---

[p] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 11. 2. & Gloſſ. in ib. Jarchi in Gen. xix. 20.

[q] Shemot Rabba, §. 15. fol. 101. 3.

[r] Tzeror Hammor, fol. 82. 1.

[s] Haggada Shel Peſach, p. 5. Ed. Ritangel.

[t] Tzeror Hammor, fol. 135. 1.

[u] Zohar in Gen. fol. 74. 1.

[w] T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 12. 2.

“ prophecy has been taken away from the prophets, and given לשוטים ולתינוקות, to fools “ and babes.”

Ver. 26. Even ſo, father, for ſo it ſeemed good in thy ſight.] Or ſo is the good will, or pleaſure before thee: thus, יהי רצון מלפניך, let it be the good will before thee, or in thy ſight, O Lord, is a phraſe often to be met with in the Jews forms of prayer[x]. Here the word deſigns the ſovereign counſel and purpoſe of God, to which, and to which only, our Lord refers the different diſpenſations of God towards the ſons of men: this is a reaſon which ought to ſatisfy every one, and is better than ten thouſand others that can be thought of, or deviſed by men. This difference among men, with reſpect to the Goſpel-revelation, cannot be owing to natural ſagacity, prudence, and penetration; for theſe things are with thoſe from whom it is hid; nor to any worthineſs in thoſe to whom it is revealed; for they are the poor, the baſe, the fooliſh things of this world, and even things that are not; nor to any foreſight of their making a better uſe and improvement of ſuch a revelation, but to the good-will and pleaſure of God only.

Ver. 27. All things are delivered unto me of my father, &c.] This is to be underſtood of Chriſt, as mediator; for, as God, nothing was delivered to him; he had all things, all perfections, power, and glory his father has; and is to be conſidered in the utmoſt extent: all perſons are delivered to him, angels and men; good angels are delivered to him, to be confirmed in him, as their head, and to be made uſe of by him; ſpirits, evil ſpirits, which were ſubject to his diſciples, are under him, and at his command, and diſpoſal; and their ſubjection to his diſciples, is owing to his power over them, which he communicated to them; all the elect of God are delivered to him, to be kept and ſaved by him; all the babes and little ones, to whom it was the father's will to reveal the myſteries of grace, were his care and charge; all power in heaven, and in earth, are given unto him; and all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge are hid with him, which are diſtributed to any of the ſons of men; all the bleſſings of grace, and the promiſes of the everlaſting covenant, and all the glory and happineſs of his people, are put into his hands: and no man knoweth the ſon, but the father; the tranſcendent glories and perfections of his nature, as the ſon of God; nor the whole of his work and office, as mediator; or all that is committed to his charge, as ſuch; all that he was to do, and ſuffer, for his people; all that he had done for them, and ſhould communicate to, and beſtow upon them. Neither knoweth any man the father, ſave the ſon; his eſſence and glory, his mind and will, his purpoſes and decrees, his counſels and covenant; the grace and love of his heart to his choſen people; what he has prepared and laid up for them, and will make them partakers of to all eternity; and he to whomſover the ſon will reveal him; both himſelf, and his father, and the grace and glory of each, which he does by his Spirit; who is a Spirit of wiſdom and revelation in the knowledge of him; and which entirely depends on his own ſovereign will and pleaſure.

Ver. 28. Come unto me, &c.] Chriſt having ſignified, that the knowledge of God, and the myſteries of grace, is only to be come at thro' him; and that he has all things relating to the peace, comfort, happineſs, and ſalvation of men in his hands, kindly invites and encourages ſouls to come unto him for the ſame: by which is meant, not a local coming, or a coming to hear him preach; for ſo his hearers, to whom he more immediately directed his ſpeech, were come already; and many of them did, as multitudes may, and do, in this ſenſe, come to Chriſt, who never knew him, nor receive any ſpiritual benefit by him: nor is it a bare coming under the ordinances of Chriſt, ſubmiſſion to baptiſm, or an attendance at the Lord's ſupper, the latter of which was not yet inſtituted; and both may be performed by men, who are not yet come to Chriſt: but it is to be underſtood of believing in Chriſt, the going out of the ſoul to him, in the exerciſe of grace on him, of deſire after him, love to him, faith and hope in him: believing in Chriſt, and coming to him, are terms ſynonymous, John vi. 35. Thoſe who come to Chriſt aright, come as ſinners, to a full, ſuitable, able, and willing Saviour; venture their ſouls upon him, and truſt in him for righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation, which they are encouraged to do, by this kind invitation; which ſhews his willingneſs to ſave, and his readineſs to give relief to diſtreſſed minds. The perſons invited, are not all the individuals of mankind, but with a reſtriction, all ye that labour, and are heavy laden; meaning, not theſe who are labouring in the ſervice of ſin and ſatan, are laden with iniquity, and inſenſible of it: theſe are not weary of ſin, nor burden'd with it; nor do they want, or deſire, any reſt for their ſouls: but ſuch who groan, being burdened with the guilt of ſin upon their conſciences, and are preſſed down with the inſupportable yoke of the law, and the load of human traditions; and have been labouring till they are weary, in order to obtain peace of conſcience, and reſt for their ſouls, by the obſervance of theſe things, but in vain. Theſe are encouraged to come to him, lay down their burdens at his feet, look to, and lay hold by faith on his perſon, blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice; when they ſhould enjoy that true ſpiritual conſolation, which could never be attained to by the works of the law. And I will give you reſt; ſpiritual reſt here, peace of conſcience, eaſe of mind, tranquillity of ſoul, through an application of pardoning grace, a view of free juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and full atonement of ſin by his ſacrifice; and eternal reſt hereafter, in Abraham's boſom, in the arms of Jeſus, in perfect and uninterrupted communion with Father, Son, and Spirit. The Jews ſay[y], that מנוחת תורה, the law is reſt; and ſo explain Gen. xlix. 15. Pſ. xxiii. 2. Dan. xii. 13. of it: but a truly ſenſible ſinner enjoys no reſt, but in Chriſt; it is like Noah's dove, which could find no reſt for the ſoles of its feet, until it returned to the ark; and they themſelves expect perfect reſt in the days of the Meſſiah, and call his world מנוחה, reſt[z].

Ver. 29. Take my yoke upon you, &c.] The phraſe is Rabbinical. The Jewiſh doctors often ſpeak[a] of עול מלכות שמים, the yoke of the kingdom of heaven, and of perſons taking it upon them; and which they exhort to, and expreſs in much ſuch language as here[b]; קבילו עלייכו עול מלכותא קדישא, take upon you the yoke of the holy kingdom, every day. They diſtinguiſh this from the yoke of the law, and ſay[c], “ a man muſt firſt take upon him the yoke “ of the kingdom of heaven, and after that take “ upon him the yoke of the commandment.” Their ſenſe I take to be this, that a man muſt firſt make a profeſſion of his faith in the God of Iſrael, and then live conformably to his law: agreeable to this, Chriſt exhorts ſuch perſons who come to him for reſt and happineſs, to profeſs their faith in him, to embrace the doctrines of the Goſpel, to ſubmit to his ordinances, and to walk according to thoſe laws, commands, and orders, which he, as king of ſaints, has made, and requires obedience to: ſo thoſe who come to him for life, and believe in him, as the Saviour of their ſouls, tho' they are not to truſt in, and depend upon any duties performed by them; yet they are not to ſit ſtill, or lay aſide the performance of good works, or live a licentious courſe of life, but are always to be doing the will and work of their Lord. And this he calls his yoke, in diſtinction from the yoke of the law of Moſes, and of the traditions of the elders. And learn of me, for I am meek, and lowly in heart: reſpect ſeems to be had to Zech. ix. 9. where ſuch characters as theſe are given of the Meſſiah. The meekneſs, humility, and lowlineſs of Chriſt appear in his aſſumption of human nature; in his ſubjection to his father; in the whole of his deportment and converſation among men; in his ſubmiſſion to the ordinance of baptiſm; in the whole courſe of his obedience to God, and in his ſufferings and death: and he is to be imitated herein, by all his followers, who may learn many excellent things from his example, as well as from his doctrine; and particularly, that whereas, tho' he was ſo great a perſon, yet condeſcended to perform every duty with readineſs and chearfulneſs, his diſciples ſhould not think it below them to conform to every ordinance of his, to every branch of his will; for he has ſet them an example, that they ſhould tread in his ſteps, and walk even as he has walked. There never was ſuch an inſtance of humility, and lowlineſs of mind, as Chriſt; nor is there any example ſo worthy of our imitation as his. The Jews have a ſaying [d], "for "ever let a man ענוותו כהילל, be meek as Hillell, "and let him not be wrathful as Shammai:" which two men were preſidents of their univerſities about the times of Chriſt. But our Lord ſays, learn of me, not of Hillell, or any of your doctors, and ye ſhall find reſt unto your ſouls; referring to Jer. vi. 16. and which ſhews the reſt he ſpeaks of, in the preceding verſe, to be not a corporal, but a ſpiritual one; and which is to be enjoyed in, though not for the obſervance of Chriſt's commands; whoſe ways are ways of pleaſantneſs, and all whoſe paths are peace.

---

[x] Seder Tephillot, fol. 4. 2 & 5. 1. & paſſim. Ed. Amſterdam.

[y] Tzeror Hammor, fol. 39. 3.

[z] Ib. fol. 150. 2.

[a] T. Hieroſ. Beracot, fol. 4. 1. Bab. Beracot, fol. 61. 2. Zohar in Lev. fol. 46. 4. Caphtor, fol. 44. 2. Tzeror Hammor, fol. 2, 2.

[b] Zohar in Num. fol. 51. 2. Caphtor, fol. 48. 2.

[c] Miſn. Beracot, c. 2. §. 2. T. Hieroſ. Beracot, fol. 4. 2.

Ver. 30. For my yoke is eaſy, and my burden is light.] Chriſt calls a profeſſion of faith in him, and ſubjection to his ordinances, a yoke, in alluſion to the law of Moſes, and in diſtinction from it; and a burden, with reſpect to the very heavy ones the Scribes and Phariſees laid upon the ſhoulders of the people, obliging them to a ſtrict obſervance of them; tho' of a different nature from either of them; for his commandments are not grievous, hard and heavy to be born, as theirs were, but eaſy and light: not that they are ſo to unregenerate men, or are eaſily performed by the ſtrength of nature, and power of mens free-will; but they are good and amiable, and lovely in their own nature, and are chearfully complied with, and abundance of ſpiritual pleaſure and delight is enjoyed in them by believers, when they have the preſence of God, the aſſiſtance of his ſpirit, and the diſcoveries of his love. Moreover, the commands of Chriſt, and the ordinances of the Goſpel, ar eſo in compariſon of the law of Moſes; which required perfect obedience, but gave no ſtrength to perform, and threatned with condemnation and death, in caſe of the leaſt failure; and of the numerous, and ſome very ſevere rites and uſages of the ceremonial law; and of the bulky and heavy traditions of the elders, and ordinances of men.

CHAP. XII.

Ver. 1. AT that time Jeſus went on the ſabbath-day thro' the corn, &c.] That is, the corn-fields, as the other Evangeliſts expreſs it. It being on a ſabbath-day, it is very probable, that Chriſt and his diſciples were going to ſome publick place of worſhip, the way to which lay through ſome fields of corn, which were now ripe: for Luke ſays, it was on the ſecond ſabbath after the firſt, or rather the firſt ſabbath after the ſecond; that is, the firſt ſabbath after the ſecond day of the paſſover, when the ſheaf of the firſt-fruit was offered, and harveſt was begun. And his diſciples were an hungred; it being in the morning before they had broke their faſt; and this circumſtance is mentioned, to ſhew the reaſon of the following action, and to excuſe it: at which the Phariſees were ſo much offended, and of which they accuſed them, as having done what was very criminal: and began to pluck the ears of corn, and to eat; Luke adds, rubbing them in their hands; and ſo here in the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions, 'tis rendered, they began to rub: as they paſſed along, they plucked off the ears of corn, either barley or wheat, and rubbed them in their hands, to get the grain clear of the huſk, or beard, and eat them; contenting themſelves with ſuch mean and unprepared food, when the Jews on that day fed on the beſt of dainties [e].

Ver. 2. But when the Phariſees ſaw it, &c.] Who went along with him, or followed him, being employed to make obſervation on his words and actions, they ſaid unto him; Luke ſays, unto them, the diſciples: it ſeems, they took notice of this action both to Chriſt and his diſciples, and firſt ſpoke of it to the one, and then to the other, or to both together: behold thy diſciples do that which it is not lawful to do upon the ſabbath-day! they mention it with aſtoniſhment, and indignation. What they refer to, is not their walking on the ſabbath-day: this they might do, according to their canons, provided they did not exceed two thouſand cubits, which were a ſabbath-day's journey [f]: nor was it their paſſing thro' the corn-fields; though, according to them [g], "it was not lawful for a man to viſit his gardens, "ושדותיו, or his fields, on the ſabbath-day, to ſee "what they want, or how the fruits grow; for "ſuch walking is to do his own pleaſure." But this they knew was not the caſe of Chriſt, and his diſciples, who were not proprietors of theſe fields: nor was it merely their plucking the ears of corn, and rubbing and eating them, which were not their own, but another man's; for this, according to the law, in Deut. xxiii. 25. was lawful to be done: but what offended the Phariſees was, that it was done on a ſabbath-day, it being, as they interpret it, a ſervile work, and all one as reaping; though, in the law juſt mentioned, it is manifeſtly diſtinguſhed from it. Their rule is [h], "he that reaps (on the ſab-"bath-day) ever ſo little, is guilty (of ſtoning) הוא."

---

[d] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 30. 2.

[e] Vid. Maimon. Hilch. Sabbat, c. 30. §. 7, 8, 9, 10.

[f] Ib. c. 27. §. 1.

[g] R. Moſes Kotzenſis Mitzvot Tora prec. neg. 65.

[h] Maimon. Hilch. Sabbat, c. 8. §. 3. & 7. 1.

" ותולש תולדה קוצר הוא, and plucking of ears of " corn is a derivative of reaping;" and is all one as it's primitive, and puniſhable with the ſame kind of death, if done preſumptuouſly: ſo Philo the Jew obſerves [i], that the reſt of the ſabbath not only reached to men, bond and free, and to beaſts, but even to trees, and plants; and that ȣ ερνος ȣ κλαδου, αλλ' ȣδε πεταλον εφειται τεμειν, it was not lawful to cut a plant, or branch, or ſo much as a leaf, on a ſabbath-day: and it may be what might make this offence of the diſciples the more henious, was, that they plucked theſe ears, and eat them, and ſo broke their faſt before morning-prayer; for a man might not eat any thing on a ſabbath-day until morning-prayers were ended in the ſynagogue, nor indeed on any other day; for they uſed not to eat bread till after they had offered the daily ſacrifice; which was about the third hour of the day, or nine o'clock in the morning; nor did they eat till the fourth hour, or ten o'clock [k].

Ver. 3. But he ſaid unto them, have ye not read, &c.] If they had not read the ſcriptures, they were very unfit perſons either to be teachers, or cenſurers of others, and muſt have been very ſlothful and negligent; and if they had, they could not but have obſerved the caſe of David, which Chriſt produces in vindication of his diſciples: what David did when he was an hungred; which was the caſe of the diſciples, and is therefore mentioned; it being alſo the circumſtance which could, and did excuſe what was done by David and his men: and the Jews themſelves own, that in caſe of hunger the ſhew-bread might be eaten, by thoſe that were not prieſts; not only that which was removed from the table, but that which was upon it; yea, even when there was none to put in its room [l]; and that David was in the utmoſt diſtreſs, and therefore deſired it, and it was granted him on that account. They repreſent him as thus ſaying to the prieſt [m], "when he found " there was none but ſhew-bread, give it me, that we " may not die with hunger; שספק נפשות דוחה שבת, " for danger of life drives away the ſabbath;" which perfectly agrees with our Lord's argument, and juſtifies the apoſtles conduct: and this was not a ſingle fact of David's, but of others alſo; and they that were with him; for tho' in 1 Sam. xxi. 1. he is ſaid to be alone, and no man with him; yet this muſt be underſtood either comparatively, having but very few with him, and which were as none, conſidering his dignity; or thus, though none came with him to Ahimelech, pretending to the prieſt, he had a ſecret affair of the king's to tranſact; and therefore had left his ſervants in a certain place, and deſires bread for himſelf and them; concerning whom, the prieſt and he diſcourſes, as may be ſeen in the place referr'd to: ſo that tho' no man was with him at the prieſt's houſe, yet there were ſome with him, and who partook with him in eating of the ſhew-bread.

Ver. 4. How he entred into the houſe of God, &c.] Not the temple, which was not then built; but the tabernacle, which was then at Nob, the city of the prieſt's, and which probably adjoined to Ahimelech's houſe: and did eat the ſhew-bread; for that this is meant by the hallowed bread, in 1 Sam. xxi. 6. is certain; though R. Joſeph Kimchi [n] thinks it was the bread of the thank-offering; to which R. Levi ben Gerſom [o] ſeems to incline: but the general ſenſe of the Jewiſh doctors [p] is, that it was the ſhew-bread; and which is very clear from that text, and is rightly affirmed by Chriſt; which was not lawful for him to eat, neither for them which were with him, but only for the prieſts; ſee Lev. xxiv. 9. and ſo the Jews ſay that this bread אסור לזרים, is forbidden to ſtrangers [q]; that is, to any but the prieſts, which, after the burning of the frankincenſe, was divided equally among them: that courſe of prieſts that came into the ſervice had ſix cakes, and that which went out ſix; tho' the high-prieſt had a right to half himſelf, but he did not uſe to take it, it being judged not to his honour to do ſo [r]. No hint is here given, nor in the hiſtory, in 1 Sam. xxi. that it was on the ſabbath-day that David came to Ahimelech, and eat the ſhew-bread; but this is obſerved, and diſputed, by the Jewiſh writers. Some indeed are in a doubt about it; but others [s] readily give into it, that it was on the ſabbath-day, which he choſe to flee in, for the greater ſafety and preſervation of his life: and indeed it ſeems reaſonable it ſhould be on that day; ſince on that day only the ſhew-bread was removed from the table, and other loaves put in the room. One of their writers [t] ſays, " that ſhew-bread was not to be eaten, but on " the day, and night of the ſabbath day, and " on the going out of the ſabbath-day; and on " the going out of the ſabbath David came there." Now our Lord's argument ſtands thus, that if David, a holy, good man, and the men that were with him, who were men of religion and conſcience, when in great diſtreſs, through hunger, eat of the ſhew-bread, which was unlawful for any to eat of but prieſts, the high-prieſt himſelf aſſenting to it; then it could not be criminal in his diſciples, when an hungred, to pluck, rub, and eat a few ears of corn, which were lawful for any man to eat, even tho' it was on the ſabbath-day: and for the further vindication of them, he adds,

Ver. 5. Or have ye not read in the law, &c.] Numb. xxviii. 9. by which law the prieſts were obliged, every ſabbath-day, to offer up two lambs for a burnt-offering; to which were annexed many ſervile works, as killing the ſacrifice, flaying it, cutting it in pieces, and laying it on the altar, cutting of wood, and putting that in order, and kindling the fire: from all which, it might be obſerved, how, that on the ſabbath-days, the prieſts in the temple profane the ſabbath, and are blameleſs. There were many things, which, according to the Jewiſh canons, the prieſts might do on the ſabbath-day; particularly they might ſlay the ſacrifice: it was a rule with them, דחתה שחוטה את שבת, that ſlaying drives away the ſabbath [u]. They might alſo knead, make, and bake the ſhew-bread on the ſabbath-day: their general rule was, as R. Akiba ſays, that what was poſſible to be done on the evening of the ſabbath, did not drive away the ſabbath; but what was not poſſible to be done on the ſabbath-eve, did drive away the ſabbath [w]: ſo they might kill the paſſover, ſprinkle its blood, wipe its inwards, and burn the fat on the ſabbath-day [x], with many other things. What exculpated theſe men, was, that what they did was done in the temple, and for the ſervice of it, upon which an emphaſis is put; and agrees with their canons, which ſay, that there is no prohibition in the ſanctuary; איסור שבות במקדש התר הוא, that which is forbidden

---

[i] De Vita Moſis, l. 2. p. 657. [k] Vid. Targum in Eccl. x. 17. Maimon. Hilch. Tephilla, c. 6. §. 4. [l] R. David Kimchi in 1 Sam. xxi. 5. [m] Laniado Cli Jaker, fol. 227. 2. [n] Apud R. David Kimchi in 1 Sam. xxi. 6. [o] In ib. [p] T. Bab. Menachot, fol. 95. 2. R. David Kimchi, Abarbinel & Laniado in 1 Sam. xxi. 6. [q] Laniado & Abarbinel in ib. [r] Maimon. Hilch. Tamidin, c. 4. §. 12. 14. [s] Bemidbar Rabba Paraſh 23. fol. 231. 9. Laniado Cli Jaker, fol. 226. 4. & 227. 2, 3, 4. & Jelammedenu in ib. [t] R. Iſaiah in 1 Sam. xxi. 5. [u] T. Bab. Menachot, fol. 72. 2. [w] Miſn. Menachot, c. 11. §. 3. [x] Miſn. Peſachim, c. 6. §. 1. Maimon. Peſach. c. 1. §. 18.

bidden to be done on the ſabbath, is lawful to be done in the ſanctuary[y]: and whereas it might be objected to the diſciples of Chriſt, that they were not prieſts; and what they did was not in the temple, but in the fields; to this it is replied, in the following words;

Ver. 6. But I ſay unto you, &c.] Who Chriſt knew would be ready to object, as above, and therefore prevents them, by ſaying, that in this place is one greater than the temple; meaning himſelf, who was the Lord and Proprietor of the temple, and in his human nature the antitype of it; ſee John ii. 19. and was infinitely more ſacred than that. Some copies read μειζον, ſomething greater; referring either to the human nature of Chriſt, in which the Godhead dwells bodily, and ſo infinitely greater than the temple; or to the health of his diſciples, which was in danger, thro' hunger; or to the miniſtry of the apoſtles, which, by ſatisfying nature, they were more capable of performing; either of which was of more moment than the ſacrifices and ſervice of the temple. Chriſt's argument is, that if the temple, and the ſervice of it, excuſed the prieſts from blame, in doing things in it on the ſabbath-day, which otherwiſe might not be done; then much more might his preſence, who was greater than the temple, excuſe his diſciples from blame in this action of rubbing and eating the ears of corn; which was done to ſatisfy hunger, and to render them the more capable of performing their miniſterial function; and which was of more importance than the ſervice of the prieſts.

Ver. 7. But if ye had known what this meaneth, &c.] The paſſage of ſcripture in Hoſ. vi. 6. I will have mercy, and not ſacrifice; of the ſenſe of which, ſee the note on ch. ix. 13. ye would not have condemned the guiltleſs. Our Lord taxes the Phariſees both with ignorance of the ſcriptures, in which they pretended to be very knowing, and took upon them to be the interpreters of; and with inhumanity, for condemning innocent perſons, the apoſtles, for rubbing a few ears of corn, for the refreſhment of nature; which they would never have done, had they underſtood the word, and will of God; who prefers acts of humanity, compaſſion, and mercy, to the obſervance of rites and ceremonies; or had they the common affections of human nature, and thoſe bowels of compaſſion which one man ought to ſhew to another.

Ver. 8. For the ſon of man is Lord even of the ſabbath-day.] By the ſon of man is meant, not any man, as ſome have thought; for no mere man is Lord of any law, moral or ritual, natural or poſitive; or has a power of diſpoſing of it, and diſpenſing with it at pleaſure; but Chriſt himſelf; which is the conſtant ſenſe of this phraſe in the New Teſtament, and is a character of the Meſſiah in the Old, Dan. vii. 13. who, as he was the inſtitutor of the ſabbath among the Jews, that being a ritual, and of mere poſitive inſtitution, could diſpenſe with it, and even abrogate it at his pleaſure. The Jews ſo far agree to this, that he that commanded the law of the ſabbath, could diſpenſe with it: they ſay[z], that "the day on which Jericho was taken was the ſabbath-day; and that tho' they ſlew and burnt on the ſabbath-day, מי שצוה על השבת צוה לחלל שבת, he that commanded the obſervation of the ſabbath, commanded the prophanation of it." And ſince Chriſt is greater than the temple, and has all the perfections of the divine nature in him, is equal to the father in power and glory; and even as mediator, has all power in heaven and earth given him; ſo as he is Lord of all other things, he is of the ſabbath, and has a power of diſpenſing with it, and even of aboliſhing it; ſee Col. ii. 16, 17. and ſince the Lord of the ſabbath, had a power of diſpenſing with it, and made uſe of it in the caſes of David and his men, and of the prieſts in the temple formerly; the Phariſees ought not to think it ſtrange, that the ſon of man, who is eqaully Lord of the ſabbath, diſpenſed with it in his diſciples now.

Ver. 9. And when he was departed thence, &c.] From the corn fields, where the diſciples had plucked the ears of corn, and this converſation paſſed between Chriſt and the Phariſees about the violation of the ſabbath, he went into their ſynagogue; not on the ſame ſabbath-day, as one might be led to conclude from the account of this Evangeliſt, but on another ſabbath, as Luke expreſſes it, ch. vi. 6. He might indeed directly go into one of their ſynagogues the ſame day, where he and his diſciples ſeem to have been going, and ſtay in the city the week following; and then, as it is ſaid in Mark iii. 1. he entered again into the ſynagogue; not being afraid of the Phariſees, who ſought an advantage againſt him; nor deterr'd by them from doing good to men; and willing to take another opportunity of expoſing their ignorance and malice.

Ver. 10. And behold, there was a man which had his hand withered, &c.] Or dry; the juices were dried up, the nerves and ſinews contracted, ſo that it was of no manner of uſe to him: Luke ſays, it was his right hand, which was ſo much the worſe; and means not only his hand, but the whole arm. Such a caſe is mentioned in the Talmud[a], "it happened to one, שיבשה זרועו, that his arm was dry, or withered." Jerom ſays[b], in the Goſpel which the Nazarenes and Hebionites uſed, this man is ſaid to be a plaiſterer, and ſo might poſſibly come by his misfortune thro' his buſineſs; and being a man that got his bread by his hand-labour, the caſe was the more affecting. This account is introduced with a behold; it being remarkable that ſuch a caſe ſhould offer ſo opportunely, of ſhewing his divine power in healing ſuch a diſorder; and of his authority, as the ſon of man, over the ſabbath; and of putting to ſilence his enemies, the Phariſees: and who, upon ſeeing ſuch an object, put the following queſtion to him; and they aſked him, ſaying, is it lawful to heal on the ſabbath-day? and which was put, not for information ſake, as willing to be inſtructed in this point; for their determinations were, that healing was not lawful on ſuch a day; nor were any means to be made uſe of for that purpoſe: if a man received a cure accidentally, it was very well; but no methods were to be taken with intention: as for inſtance[c]; "if a man had an ailment in his throat, he might not gargle it with oil, but he might ſwallow a large quantity of oil, ואם נתרפא נתרפא, and if he was healed, he was healed, (i. e. it was very well, it was no breach of the ſabbath) they may not chew maſtick, nor rub the teeth with ſpice, on the ſabbath-day, בזמן שמתכוין לרפואה, when it is intended for healing; but if it is intended for the ſavour of his mouth, it is free." There are ſeveral things they allowed might be done on the ſabbath; but then they did not reckon them to come under the notion of healing. "Three[d] things R. Iſhmael bar Joſe ſaid he had heard from R.

---

[y] Ib. §. 16. & Hilchot Sabbat, c. 21. §. 27.

[z] R. David Kimchi in Joſh. vi. 11.

[a] T. Hieroſ. Yoma, fol. 40. 1.

[b] In loc.

[c] Maimon. Hilchot Sabbat, c. 21. §. 24.

[d] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 84. 1. Vid. Miſn. Yoma, c. 8. §. 7.

“ Matthia ben Charaſh; they might let blood for the ſtrangury on the ſabbath-day; one that was bit by a mad dog, they might give him hog's liver to eat; and he that had an ailment in his mouth, they might put ſpice to it on the ſabbath-day: but the wiſe men ſay of theſe, that there is not in them משום רפואה, any thing of medicine.” Indeed, in caſe of extreme danger of life they did admit of the uſe of medicine, by the preſcription of a phyſician [e]. “Danger of life drives away the ſabbath; wherefore, if there is any danger in a ſick perſon, it is lawful to kindle a fire for him, &c. and they may kill, and bake, and boil: and though there may be no apparent danger, only a doubt of danger; as when one phyſician ſays there is a neceſſity, and another phyſician ſays there's none, they may profane the ſabbath for him.” Hence it is very clear with what view the Phariſees aſked Chriſt this queſtion; and that it was, as the Evangeliſt ſays, that they might accuſe him; either of cruelty and weakneſs, ſhould he anſwer in the negative, that either he was not able to heal the poor man before him, or wanted compaſſion; or ſhould he anſwer in the affirmative, as they expected, and act upon it, then they might have wherewith to charge him before the ſanhedrim as a violater of the ſabbath, and of their canons concerning it.

Ver. 11. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] Well knowing their intentions, and alſo their uſages and cuſtoms, which he was able to produce and object to them; in which, thro' covetouſneſs, they ſhewed more regard to their beaſts, than they did humanity to their fellow-creatures: what man ſhall there be among you, that ſhall have one ſheep, and if it fall into a pit on the ſabbath-day, will he not lay hold on it, and lift it out? Chriſt appeals to them in a caſe which was uſually done among them, and which, without delay, no man would ſcruple to do; tho' their preſent rule of direction, in ſuch a caſe, is this [f]: “if a beaſt fall into a ditch, or a pool of water, if food can be given it, where it is, they feed it till the going out of the ſabbath; but if not, bolſters and pillows may be brought, and put under it, and if it can come out, it may come out:” and which is elſewhere [g] a little differently expreſſed; “if a beaſt fall into a ditch, or pool of water, it is forbidden a man to bring it out with his hand; but if he can give it food where it is, it may be fed till the going out of the ſabbath:” which ſeems to have been made ſince the times of Chriſt, and in oppoſition to this obſervation of his.

Ver. 12. How much then is a man better than a ſheep? &c.] As a rational creature muſt be better, and more excellent, than an irrational one, more care is to be taken of, and more mercy ſhewn unto, the one, than the other: even the health of a man is preferable to the life of a beaſt; and if it is lawful to give food to a beaſt, and make uſe of means for its relief, and for the lifting it up out of a ditch, when fallen into it on the ſabbath-day; wherefore it is lawful to do well on the ſabbath-days, to men; to do acts of beneficence and humanity to them, among which muſt be reckoned healing of diſeaſes and infirmities: and particularly, if it is lawful to take a ſheep out of a ditch on the ſabbath-day, it muſt be right to reſtore to a man the uſe of his hand on ſuch a day; and eſpecially to one that gets his bread by his hand-labour, as it is very likely this man did. This was ſuch a ſtrong way of arguing, that the Jews could not well object to it; and it appears, that they were confounded and put to ſilence; for, as Mark obſerves, they held their peace: and indeed they allow of every thing to be done where life is in danger, tho' not otherwiſe: they ſay [h], “they may take care of the preſervation of life on the ſabbath; and if he is prepared for it, lo! this is praiſe-worthy, and there's no need to take a licence from the ſanhedrim: as when a man ſees a child fallen into the ſea, he may ſpread a net, and bring him out; and if he is prepared for it, lo! this is praiſe-worthy, and there is no need to take a licence from the ſanhedrim, tho' he was fiſhing: if he ſees a child fallen into a ditch, he may rake into the mud, and bring him out; and if he is prepared for it, lo! this is praiſe-worthy, and there is no need to take a licence from the ſanhedrim, though he had ſet a ladder ready.” It is ſaid of Hillell [i], that “he ſat by a window to hear the words of the living God, from the mouth of Shemaia and Abtalion; and they ſay that that day was the evening of the ſabbath, and the winter ſolſtice, and the ſnow deſcended from heaven; and when the pillar of the morning aſcended, (when it was day-light) Shemaia ſaid to Abtalion, brother Abtalion, all other days the houſe is light, but to-day it is dark, perhaps 'tis a cloudy day: they lift up their eyes, and ſaw the form of a man at the window; they went up, and found upon him ſnow the heighth of three cubits; they broke thro' and delivered him; and they waſhed him, and anointed him, and ſet him over againſt his dwelling, and ſaid, very worthy is this man להלל עליו את שבת to profane the ſabbath for him.” And if it was lawful to dig a man out of the ſnow, and do theſe ſeveral things for him on the ſabbath-day, why not cure a man of a withered hand, and eſpecially when done by a word ſpeaking, and without any labour?

Ver. 13. Then ſaith he to the man, &c.] That is, after he had looked round about upon them, to obſerve their countenances; and what anſwer they would make to his arguments; and with anger for their inhumanity and cruelty; being grieved for the hardneſs of their hearts, i. e. their unmercifulneſs to their fellow-creatures, and the ſtupidity and blindneſs of their minds, being ignorant of the ſcriptures, and of the ſabbath, the nature, uſe, and Lord of it; which things are obſerved by the Evangeliſt Mark; then, in a commanding authoritative way, almighty power going along with his word, he ſays to the man who ſtood forth before him, and the Phariſees, ſtretch forth thine hand, which was before contracted and ſhrivel'd up; and he ſtretched it forth with all the eaſe imaginable, and was not only able to do this, but to make uſe of it any way; for it was reſtored whole like as the other; his left hand, which had never been damaged. This was an inſtance of Chriſt's power; a proof of the lawfulneſs of healing on the ſabbath-day; and a rebuke to the Phariſees for their cruelty and uncharitableneſs. This man was an emblem of the inability of men to do any thing that is ſpiritually good, and of the power and efficacy of divine grace to enable perſons to ſtretch out their hands, and do things which they of themſelves are not equal to.

Ver. 14. Then the Phariſees went out, &c.] Of the ſynagogue, being, as Luke ſays, filled with madneſs, at the unanſwerableneſs of his arguments; and becauſe of the violation of the ſabbath, as they they thought; and, moſt of all, becauſe of the miracle wrought by him; and which was ſo glaring a proof of his being Lord of the ſabbath, and could not fail of creating him eſteem among the people: and held a counſel againſt him, how they might deſtroy him. Mark ſays, the counſel was held by them with the Herodians; of whom, ſee the note on Matt. xxii. 16. who, tho' they differed from them both in religion and politicks, yet might be thought very proper perſons to adviſe with about this matter; and eſpecially, as they might have a greater intereſt at court, than they had. Nor did they ſcruple to enter into ſuch a conſultation, tho' on the ſabbath-day, and about the taking away of the life of an innocent perſon; which ſhews what ſeared conſciences, and hard hearts they had, and how full of hypocriſy they were.

---

[e] Kotſenſis Mitzvot Tora pr. neg. 65. Maimon. in Miſn. Sabbat, c. 18. §. 3.

[f] Maimon. Hilchot Sabbat, c. 25. §. 26.

[g] Kotſenſis Mitzvot Tora pr. neg. 65.

[h] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 84. 2.

[i] Ib. fol. 35. 2.

Ver. 15. But when Jeſus knew it, &c.] Their conſultation againſt him, as he did, not by any diſcovery made to him by men, but as the omniſcient God; he withdrew himſelf from thence; from the ſynagogue and city, where he was, to the ſea of Galilee, and his diſciples with him, as Mark obſerves; not through fear, but becauſe his time was not yet come, that he muſt ſuffer and die for his people; he had ſome other work to do firſt, and therefore rightly and wiſely provides for his ſafety. And great multitudes followed him; from Galilee, Judea, Jeruſalem, Idumea, and from beyond Jordan; and were joined by another multitude of people, who came from about Tyre and Sidon, as Mark relates; ſo that his departure was not ſo very private; nor was he forſaken by the common people, tho' the Phariſees were ſo offended with him. And he healed them all; that ſtood in need of healing, as many as had plagues and unclean ſpirits; practiſing agreeable to his doctrine, that it was lawful to do good on the ſabbath-day, and to heal the bodies, as well as the ſouls of men.

Ver. 16. And charged them that they ſhould not make him known.] This charge was given, either to the multitude that followed him, and were healed by him, that when they returned to the reſpective places from whence they came, they would not make it known to his enemies, where he was, and what he had done to them; being neither deſirous of popular applauſe and glory, nor willing to provoke them more, nor to fall into their hands as yet; or elſe, as Mark ſeems to intimate, to the unclean ſpirits, that they would not declare who he was, the ſon of God, they confeſſed him to be: and very likely it was given to both, and that they ſhould neither tell where he was, nor who he was; and this charge was a very ſevere one; for the word ſignifies a charge with threatnings, ſhould they not obſerve his orders.

Ver. 17. That it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by Eſaias the prophet, ſaying.] Iſ. xlii. 1, 2, 3, 4. not that Chriſt gave the above charge with this view, that this paſſage in Iſaiah might have its accompliſhment: but this is an obſervation of the Evangeliſt, that what was now done by Chriſt, by his private departure from the Phariſees, being unwilling to irritate them more; by his preaching to the Idumeans, Tyrians, and Sidonians; by healing their diſeaſes, and ſhunning all oſtentation and popular applauſe; and prohibiting to tell who and where he was, was a fulfilling of this prophecy; in which the holy Spirit foreknowing the diſpoſition and actions of Chriſt, predicted them: which, when conſidered, muſt be looked upon as a very large proof of the truth of his being the Meſſiah. For that this prophecy belongs to the Meſſiah, is owned by the Jews themſelves[k].

Ver. 18. Behold, my ſervant whom I have choſen, &c.] Theſe are the words of God the father, ſpeaking to the church, concerning Chriſt, as mediator; who, as ſuch, is God's ſervant, employed by him, and obedient to him, in the work of man's ſalvation; and is a righteous, faithful, prudent, and diligent one; whom he, from all eternity, had choſen to this ſervice, and in the fulneſs of time ſent him to do it, and ſupported and upheld him in it; for 'tis whom I uphold, in the Hebrew text. My beloved, in whom my ſoul is well pleaſed; who always was the object of his love, not only as his own and only-begotten ſon, but as in his office-capacity, as mediator; in regard to which he was his elect, as it is in Iſaiah; and, as ſuch, he was always delighted in his perſon, well-pleaſed with his office, and the diſcharge of it; and which he declared more than once by a voice from heaven, as at his baptiſm, and at his transfiguration on the mount: I will put my ſpirit upon him; as he did without meaſure, whereby he was abundantly qualified for his whole work, and particularly for preaching the Goſpel, being richly anointed with gifts and graces, above his fellows; of which the deſcent of the holy Spirit upon him, as a dove, at his baptiſm, which immediately preceded his public miniſtry, was a ſymbol. And he ſhall ſhew judgment unto the Gentiles; meaning, not the general judgment, at the laſt day, which is committed to him; nor the laws of juſtice and equity; but the Goſpel, which is the produce of the God of judgment; beſt informs the judgment of men about the buſineſs of ſalvation; gives an account of the righteous procedure of God in juſtifying ſinners, by the righteouſneſs of his ſon; and teaches men to live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly: this Chriſt brought forth, and ſhewed, at this time, to the Heathens, the Idumeans, Tyrians, and Sidonians; who flocked unto him; whereby this part of the prophecy had its fulfilment: in the Hebrew 'tis, he ſhall bring forth; that is, out of his heart and mouth, and is the ſame as ſhew here.

Ver. 19. He ſhall not ſtrive, &c.] Or contend in a wrangling way, as the diſputers of this world do about words to no profit, and for the ſake of victory only, and popular applauſe, but ſhall chuſe rather to withdraw, than to carry on a controverſy to a great length, to little purpoſe; or, as men litigate a point in a court of judicature, where one is plaintiff, and the other defendant. In the Hebrew text it is, he ſhall not cry; he ſhall not act the part of a plaintiff; he ſhall not complain, or bring in any charge, or accuſation againſt any, but chuſe rather to ſuffer wrong, than to contend: thus צעקה ſignifies ſuch a cry, as is a complaint of injuſtice, Iſ. v. 7. and צועק, a plaintiff, one that brings an action againſt another[l]: but Chriſt did not ſo, he would not accuſe to the father, nor complain againſt his moſt implacable enemies, but left that to Moſes, in whom they truſted; nor cry, or, as in the Hebrew text, lift up; that is, his voice, in a clamorous way, uſing reviling and opprobrious language, or menaces and threatnings; but, on the contrary, he ſilently put up all abuſes, and patiently bore every affront, and behaved peaceably, quietly, committing himſelf and cauſe to a righteous God. Neither ſhall any man hear his voice in the ſtreets; or, as in the Hebrew text, nor cauſe his voice to be heard in the ſtreet: the ſenſe is the ſame, and the meaning is, that he ſought not worldly honour, popular applauſe, and to be ſeen of men; he did nothing in an oſtentatious way, ſaid nothing in his own commendation, was never heard to praiſe himſelf, and choſe that others ſhould be ſilent concerning him: for this does not ſo much regard the lowneſs of his voice, as if that was not ſo ſonorous as to be heard without doors, when he preached within, as his modeſt mein and ſuitable deportment; nor the places where he uſually miniſtred, which was ſometimes in the ſtreet, as well as in an houſe, or on a mountain, or by the ſea-ſide, or in the temple, and the ſynagogues. The Ethiopic verſion here is very wrong, no man ſhall hear his voice in the ſynagogues; for his voice was often heard there.

---

[k] Targum & Kimchi in loc. Abarbinel Maſhmia Jeſhua, fol. 9. 1, 2. & 10. 1, 2. & 21. 2. & in Iſ. fol. 64. 3, 4. R. Iſaac Chizzuk Emuna, p. 299.

[l] Vid. Cocc. Heb. Lex. in rad. צעק.

Ver. 20. A bruiſed reed ſhall he not break, &c.] Various are the thoughts of interpreters, about what is meant by this, and by the ſmoaking flax ſhall he not quench. Some think the Scribes and Phariſees are deſigned, whoſe power Chriſt could eaſily cruſh, and their wrath and fury reſtrain, but would not, till the time of his vengeance was come. Others, that the publicans and ſinners are intended, of whoſe converſion and ſalvation there were more hope than of the Scribes and Phariſees; and which Chriſt greatly ſought after, and therefore cheriſhed and encouraged them in his miniſtry and converſation. Some are of opinion, that ſuch who have fallen into ſin, and are under great decays of grace, are meant, whom Chriſt has compaſſion on, ſuccours, and reſtores: but rather young converts, ſuch as are under firſt awakenings, are here pointed at; who, like to a bruiſed reed, or broken one, one that is in ſome meaſure broke, near being broken to pieces, are wounded in their ſpirits, have their hearts broken and contrite, under a ſenſe of their ſinfulneſs, vileneſs, weakneſs, and unworthineſs; whom Chriſt is ſo far from breaking and deſtroying, that he binds up their broken hearts, heals their wounds, and reſtores comforts to them: and who are like to ſmoaking flax, or, as the Syriac reads it, שרגא דמטפטף, a ſmoaking lamp; to which the Arabic and Perſic verſions agree; meaning the wick of the lamp, which being juſt lighted, ſeems ready to go out, having ſcarce any light, only a little fire in it, which makes it ſmoke: ſo theſe have but little light of knowledge, faith, and comfort, and a great deal of darkneſs and infirmity; only there's ſome warmth in their affections, which go upwards like pillars of ſmoke, perfumed with frankincenſe; and ſuch Chriſt is ſo far from neglecting, and putting out, that he blows up the ſparks of grace into a flame, and never utterly leaves the work, till he ſends forth judgment into victory; that is, till he ſends forth the Goſpel into their hearts, accompanied with his mighty power, in the light and comfort of it; which informs their judgments, enlightens their underſtandings, bows their wills, raiſes their affections, ſanctifies their ſouls, works effectually in them, under the influence of his ſpirit and grace, to the carrying on of the work of grace in them to the end; and making them victorious over all their enemies, and more than conquerors, thro' him that has loved them. The Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes the words thus; "the meek, who are as a bruiſed reed, " he will not break; and the poor, who are as an " obſcure lamp, he will not quench."

Ver. 21. And in his name ſhall the Gentiles truſt.] The former part of the text is omitted, he ſhall not fail, nor be diſcouraged, till he have ſet judgment in the earth; but is inſerted in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel; and which ſome underſtand of the bruiſed reed, and ſmoaking flax, and others of Chriſt; the latter ſenſe is to be preferr'd. The paſſage, here cited, is ſomewhat different in Iſaiah; for there it is, and the iſles ſhall wait for his law; but the difference, at leaſt, in ſenſe, is not ſo great as it may appear at firſt ſight: for, איים, as Grotius obſerves, does not always ſignify iſlands, but nations, and countries, that are upon the continent, Gen. x. 5. and ſo may be rightly rendered here, the Gentiles, or nations; and by the name of Chriſt is meant his Goſpel: ſee Acts ix. 15. which Iſaiah calls his law; that is, his doctrine, the doctrine of righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation by him, which is the ground and foundation of hope, and truſt in him; and they that wait for it, may be truly ſaid to hope, or truſt in it. This began to have its accompliſhment in the Idumeans, Tyrians, and Sidonians, now attending on the miniſtry of Chriſt; and has had a greater accompliſhment ſince; the Goſpel having been preached in the Gentile world, both upon the main land, and in the iſles afar off; whereby multitudes have been brought to hope, and believe in Chriſt, as their ſaviour and redeemer.

Ver. 22. Then was brought unto him one poſſeſſed with a devil, &c.] About this time, or ſome little time after, when he was returned from the ſea of Galilee, and was come into a certain houſe; ſee Mark iii. 19. Matt. xii. 46. and xiii. 1. ſome perſons brought him a demoniack, in compaſſion to the poſſeſſed man, and being perſuaded of the power of Chriſt to heal him, by the late cures he had performed. A like inſtance we have in ch. ix. 32, 33, 34. and Luke xi. 14, 15. which had a like effect upon the people, and was cavilled at by the Phariſees in much the ſame way; and which cavils were anſwered in much the ſame words; and yet the caſe is not the ſame; for that man was only dumb, but this both blind and dumb; not by birth, or thro' the defect of nature, or by any natural diſtemper that had attended him, but thro' the malice of ſatan, by divine permiſſion; his blindneſs, and dumbneſs, were the effects of his being poſſeſſed with a devil, who had deprived him of his ſight, and ſpeech. The word rendered dumb, ſignifies both deaf and dumb, and anſwers to the Hebrew word חרש, which ſometimes[m] is uſed of a deaf man only, who can ſpeak, but not hear; and often of one that can neither ſpeak, nor hear; which is the caſe of ſuch as are born deaf: it ſeems as if this man could hear, tho' he could not ſpeak; ſince no mention is made of his want of hearing, or of Chriſt's reſtoring it to him; for it follows, and he healed him, inſomuch that the blind and dumb, both ſpake and ſaw. This he did, not by making uſe of medicines, but by a word ſpeaking, diſpoſſeſſing ſatan; ſo that the cauſe of blindneſs and dumbneſs being removed, the effects ceaſed, and the man was reſtored to his ſight, and ſpeech, as before. He had his ſight to behold his ſaviour, and a tongue to praiſe his name: ſo when men are turned from ſatan unto God, and are delivered from his thraldom and bondage, they are brought into marvellous light, and put into a capacity of ſhewing forth the praiſes of God.

Ver. 23. And all the people were amazed, &c.] At the cure; it was ſuch an inſtance of divine power, and ſo glaring a proof, that the perſon who wrought it was more than a man, and muſt be the Meſſiah. This is to be underſtood of the greater part of the people, not of every individual, and of the common people only; for it had a different effect upon the Phariſees, as hereafter appears; but in theſe it not only produced admiration, but conviction, faith, and confeſſion: and ſaid, is not this the ſon of David? or the Meſſiah; for בן דוד, the ſon of David is a character of the Meſſiah, well known among the Jews; ſee the note on Matt. i. 1. becauſe he was promiſed to David, was to be raiſed up of his ſeed, and to ſpring from his loins. This queſtion they put, not as doubting of it, but as inclining at leaſt, to believe it, if not as expreſſing their certainty of it: and is, as if they had ſaid, who can this perſon be but the true Meſſiah, that has wrought ſuch a miracle as this? for from his miracles they rightly concluded who he was; tho' the Jews ſince, in order to deprive Jeſus of this true characteriſtic of the Meſſiah, deny that miracles are to be performed by him [n].

---

[m] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Trumot, c. 1. §. 2.

Ver. 24. But when the Phariſees heard it, &c.] Very probably not the ſame that went out, and held a council againſt Chriſt to deſtroy him, ver. 14. but others that were come from Judea and Jeruſalem, and were with him in the houſe, and ſaw the miracle: theſe, when they heard what the people ſaid, and how ready they were to believe, and own Jeſus to be the Meſſiah, in order to prevent it, being filled with envy and malice, they ſaid, this fellow doth not caſt out devils but by Beelzebub, the prince of devils. They could not deny the miracle, or that it was one; but to deprive him of the glory of it, and even reproach him for it, and to bring him into contempt with the people, they not only ſpeak of him in a ſcornful manner, ȣτος, this ſorry man, this vile fellow; but aſcribe the miracle he wrought to familiarity with the devil, to diabolical influence and ſkill in magic art: they pretended he was in confederacy with ſatan, and was carrying on his intereſt; and therefore that he might gain credit and reputation, the prince of devils ſuffered the inferior ones to remove at his word: and of theſe their anceſtors, the Jews have learnt to fix this vile imputation, and blaſphemous piece of ſlander upon Chriſt; who, they ſay [o], brought enchantments, or witchcrafts, out of Egypt, in the cuttings of his fleſh, whereby he performed the things he did. Concerning Beelzebub, ſee the note on ch. x. 25. here called the prince of devils; it being a prevailing notion among the Jews, that there is one devil who is the head of all the reſt, and who is by them ſometimes called Aſmodeus: they ſay [p], when Solomon ſinned againſt the Lord, he ſent to him אשמדאי מלכא דשידי, Aſmodeus the king of the devils, and drove him from his throne, and ſo elſewhere [q]: and ſometimes Samael, who is ſtiled [r] Samael the prince, מלכא דשדים, the king of devils; and the angel Samael, the wicked, ראש כל השטנים, the head of all the ſatans, or devils [s]: and we often read [t] of שר הגיהנם, the prince of hell; by whom the ſame is meant, as here, by Beelzebub; for if any one devil is more wicked, odious, and execrable than the reſt, the chief of them may be thought to be ſo; for which reaſon he is here mentioned.

Ver. 25. And Jeſus knew their thoughts, &c.] He not only heard their blaſphemous words, but were privy to their ſecret thoughts; he knew their vile malicious intentions and deſigns, with what view they expreſſed themſelves in this manner, on purpoſe to reproach him, and ſet the people againſt him, contrary to the inward light of their minds, and dictates of their conſciences; who muſt, and did know the contrary of what they ſaid: and regarding the inward frame of their minds, as well as their words, and which is a proof of his omniſcience, and ſo of his deity, and conſequently of his Meſſiahſhip, ſaid unto them the following parables, as Mark calls them, ch. iii. 23. or proverbial expreſſions: every kingdom divided againſt itſelf is brought to deſolation; a government, in which there is a diſagreement between the chiefs of it, and the body of the people, or where one part is oppoſed to the other, or in which a civil and inteſtine war is begun and proſecuted, cannot continue in any comfortable ſituation, and flouriſhing ſtate, but muſt come to nothing: this is a maxim that has been ſo often fatally verified, that no one will doubt the truth of it; and the ſame holds true of leſſer communities, of cities, and families: and every city, or houſe, divided againſt itſelf, ſhall not ſtand. If citizens fall out with their magiſtrates, or one with another, and turn out, and disfranchiſe each other; and if the heads of families, and the reſpective branches thereof, quarrel with, and divide from one another, a diſſolution of the whole muſt enſue; and the ſame may be ſaid of the kingdom and government of ſatan. Theſe, 'tis very likely, were common ſayings among the Jews, and they might be very eaſily underſtood by them; and are very appoſitely produced by Chriſt to illuſtrate the preſent caſe, and confute the vile and blaſphemous ſuggeſtions of the Phariſees: a proverbial expreſſion, much like to theſe, is to be read in the writings of the Jews, כל בית שיש בו מחלוקת סופו ליחרב every houſe, in which there is a diviſion, at the end ſhall come to deſolation [u].

Ver. 26. And if ſatan caſt out ſatan, &c.] That is, if ſatan, the ſame with Beelzebub, caſts out the reſt of the ſatans, or other devils, of which he is the prince and head, he is divided againſt himſelf; he acts contrary to his own intereſt, which is to keep poſſeſſion of the bodies and ſouls of men; and conſequently it muſt, in courſe, be ſubverſive of his power and dominion: how ſhall then his kingdom ſtand? he'll never be able to maintain his authority, and keep up the ſhew of a government, as he does: for theſe words ſuggeſt, that there is a form of government among the devils, who are united in one body, under one head; and whoſe unity and concord is their greateſt ſtrength, as in all other governments. Our Lord's argument, and which is his firſt, for others follow, is, that ſince ſatan, who is ſo cunning and crafty, can never be thought to act ſuch an oppoſite part to himſelf, ſo ſubverſive of his kingdom and government; and which would give ſo much credit to Chriſt, and ſerve ſo much to ſtrengthen his intereſt, as to aſſiſt him in the caſting out of devils; the weakneſs, and maliciouſneſs of ſuch a ſuggeſtion, muſt be clear and evident to all.

Ver. 27. And if I by Beelzebub caſt out devils, &c.] As the Phariſees aſſerted, and would have the people believe; for this is not allowed, only for argument ſake ſuppoſed: by whom do your children caſt them out? meaning not the apoſtles and diſciples of Chriſt, the children of the Jews, to whom Chriſt gave a power of caſting out devils, and who had exerciſed it in his name; and therefore argues, if they in his name caſt out devils, why could he not do it himſelf, without the help of ſatan; wherefore theſe would be judges againſt them: but, no doubt, the Phariſees had no better opinion of the diſciples, and of their ejection of devils, than of Chriſt;

---

[n] Maimon. Hilch. Melacim, c. 11. §. 3. [o] T. Hieroſ. Sabbat, fol. 13. 4. T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 104. 2. [p] Targum in Eccl. i. 12. [q] T. Bab. Peſach, fol. 110. 1. Gittin, fol. 68. 1. & Raziel, fol. 41. 2. [r] Zohar in Deut. fol. 120. 3. [s] Debarim Rabba, fol. 245. 3. [t] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 52. 1. Imre Binah in Zohar in Gen. fol. 22. 3. [u] Derech Eretz, c. 5.

wherefore, it is not likely, that our Lord ſhould argue with them from hence: but rather, he means ſome among themſelves, who pretended to have a power of exorciſing and ejecting of devils, either in the name of Jeſus, as ſome of them did, Mark ix. 38. Acts xix. 13, 14. or in the name of their kings, righteous men, prophets and patriarchs, as Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob [w]; and which practice, perhaps, they took up and made pretenſions to, in imitation of Chriſt and his apoſtles; ſo as Chriſt healed men poſſeſſed of devils, they alſo affected to do the ſame. A ſtory is reported [x], "Concerning Ben Talmion, that a miracle was wrought by R. Eleazar bar Joſe, who healed a king's daughter at Rome, in whoſe body the devil entered, whoſe name was Ben Talmion; and they brought him (the Jew) to the king's treaſury, to take what he would, but he would take nothing from thence, but letters, in which were written the decrees they had decreed againſt Iſrael; and when he found them, he tore them to pieces, and there he ſaw the veſſels of the houſe of the ſanctuary, in the treaſury." Now ſince the Jews pretended to do theſe things, Chriſt aſks them, by whom they caſt out devils? Whether by the Spirit of God, or by Beelzebub? They would doubtleſs ſay by the former, and not the latter, which would ſhew their great partiality; for admitting that the like actions were done by them, as by him, why not by the ſame power? Why ſhould their ejection of devils be aſcribed to God, and his to Beelzebub? Therefore they ſhall be your judges; who will riſe up againſt you, and condemn you one day, for this unequal judgment you now paſs; and which was juſt the reverſe of the true ſtate of the caſe: for he caſt out devils by the Spirit of God, which they imputed to the aſſiſtance of Beelzebub; their children caſt out devils, or pretended to do ſo, and it was by the help of ſatan; and yet they aſcribed it to a divine power, even though they made uſe of the name of ſatan, under that of Beelzebub, or Aſmodeus, in their exorciſing, of which take the following form [y]. "By the authority of the glorious and fearful name, I adjure thee Aſmodeus, king of the devils, and all thy company, &c. that ye hurt not, nor put in fear, nor trouble ſuch an one, the ſon of ſuch an one; but that ye help him, and ſuſtain him (or deliver him) out of every diſtreſs and anguiſh, and from every evil thing, and from all diſeaſes, that enter into the two hundred and forty eight members, &c."

Ver. 28. But if I caſt out devils by the Spirit of God, &c.] As it was certain he did, from the nature, uſe, and deſign of ſuch miracles; and it could not be reaſonably thought, that ſatan would aſſiſt in what was ſo very oppoſite to his kingdom and intereſt, and was ſo ſerviceable to the cauſe and glory of Chriſt. All the three perſons had an hand in the miracles of the Meſſiah; they were done by Chriſt, in his Father's name, and by the power of the Spirit of God; from which, the following inference may be juſtly deduced, then the kingdom of God is come unto you: meaning, either the Meſſiah himſelf; or rather, his kingdom, the Goſpel diſpenſation, which both Chriſt and John, had declared to be at hand; of which, the performing of miracles, particularly the caſting out of devils, whereby the kingdom of ſatan was ſo much weakened, was a clear proof.

Ver. 29. Or elſe, how can any one enter into a ſtrong man's houſe, &c.] This is another argument of Chriſt's, proving that his caſting out of devils, could not be by ſatan, but by the Spirit of God; for if he did not act by any ſuperior power to ſatan's, and ſuch by which he was able to maſter, overcome, and bind him, he could never ſpoil his goods, as he did; or diſpoſſeſs devils out of the bodies, or ſouls of men: juſt as if a man ſhould enter into another man's houſe, who is ſtrong and robuſt, with a deſign to ſpoil his goods, who would never make uſe of the man himſelf to do it, and can never be thought to effect it, unleſs he has a power ſuperior to his, and uſes it; except he firſt bind the ſtrong man, and then he will ſpoil his houſe: by the ſtrong man, is meant the devil, ſee Iſa. xlix. 24, 25. who is powerful and mighty, as appears from his nature, being an angel, though a fallen one, excelling in ſtrength human creatures; from his names, ſuch as the roaring lion, the great red dragon, leviathan, &c. from the extent of his dominion, here called his houſe; which reaches to the whole poſſe of devils, and world of men; whence he is called the prince of the power of the air, and the prince of this world, and the God of it; and from his works and actions, in and over the bodies and eſtates of men, by divine permiſſion; which might be exemplified in the caſe of Job, and the demoniacks in the time of Chriſt; and in and over the ſouls of men, not only over wicked men, but men under a ſhew of religion, as antichriſt and his followers; yea, ſaints themſelves, and even over Adam in a ſtate of innocence: but Chriſt is ſtronger than he, and attacked him, and diſpoſſeſſed him of the bodies of men; and reſtraining him from doing them any hurt, enters into the ſouls of men, dethrones him, and leads him captive, who led others; and keeps him from doing them any damage; as he will in the latter day bind him and ſhut him up in priſon a thouſand years: and alſo ſpoils his goods, or veſſels, and his houſe; the palace of ſatan, by taking bodies and ſouls out of his poſſeſſion; by awakening the conſcience, enlightening the mind, working upon the affections, ſubduing the will, and implanting principles of grace and holineſs in the heart; and ſo making it a fit habitation for God, which ſpoils it for the devil: in all which, ſatan can never be thought to have any hand; and therefore the ſuggeſtion that Chriſt caſts out devils by his aſſiſtance, even out of the bodies of men, has no ſhew of reaſon in it.

Ver. 30. He that is not with me, is againſt me, &c.] Theſe words chiefly refer to ſatan, and are a further proof, that Chriſt did not caſt out devils by him; ſince they two are as much oppoſites, as can poſſibly be: ſatan is not on the ſide of Chriſt, but an adverſary to him; there is an original, and implacable enmity, between the ſerpent and the ſeed of the woman; there's an open war between them, and therefore one can't be thought to lend aſſiſtance to the other. They were concerned in different things, had different views and intereſts, and ſo took different methods; and he that gathereth not with me, ſcattereth: Chriſt is the good ſhepherd, that gathers his ſheep to himſelf, and into his fold, by the external miniſtry of the word, and internal efficacy of his grace; ſatan is the wolf, that catches and ſcatters the ſheep, and ſeeks to kill and deſtroy them: and ſince there is ſuch an open war proclaimed and carried on between Chriſt and the devil, none ought to be neutral; whoever is not on the ſide of Chriſt, is reckoned as an enemy; and whoever is not concerned by prayer or preaching, or other means to gather ſouls to his word and ordinances,

---

[w] Juſtin Martyr, adv. Tryphon. p. 311.

[x] In Gloſſ. in T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 57. 1. Meilah, fol. 17. 2.

[y] Raziel, fol. 41. 2.

nances, and to his church, and to himſelf, is deemed by him a ſcatterer of them.

Ver. 31. Wherefore I ſay unto you, &c.] This ſhews, that what follows is occaſioned by what the Phariſees had ſaid, concerning the miracles of Chriſt; imputing them to diabolical influence and aſſiſtance, when they were done by the Spirit of God, of which they themſelves were conſcious; all manner of ſin and blaſphemy ſhall be forgiven unto men: not unto all men, for there are ſome, who, as they are never truly convinced of ſin, and brought to repentance for it, ſo they never have the remiſſion of it; but to ſuch to whom God of his free grace has promiſed, and for whom he has provided this bleſſing, in the covenant of his grace; for whom the blood of Chriſt was ſhed, for the remiſſion of their ſins; and who, by the Spirit of God, are made ſenſible of them, and have repentance unto life given them, and faith in Chriſt, by which they receive the forgiveneſs of them: the ſenſe is, that all kind of ſin, whether committed more immediately againſt God, or man, the firſt or ſecond table of the law, or againſt any of the divine precepts; be they ſins ſmall or great, ſecret or open, ſins of heart, lip, or life, or attended with whatſoever aggravating circumſtances; and all kind of blaſphemy, or evil ſpeaking of men, or of angels, or of the name of God, but what is hereafter excepted, there is forgiveneſs of in the grace of God, through the blood of Chriſt, even for all ſorts of men and ſinners whatever. The Jews have a ſaying [z], "that God pardons all ſins, "חוץ מן הזמה, except laſciviouſneſs." But this is not excepted by Chriſt, only what follows, but the blaſphemy againſt the Holy Ghoſt, ſhall not be forgiven unto men: by which is meant, not every ignorant denial of, and oppoſition to his deity and perſonality; nor all reſiſtance of him in the external miniſtry of the word; nor every ſin that is knowingly and wilfully committed; but it is a deſpiteful uſage of the Spirit of grace, an oppoſing, contradicting, and denying the operations wrought, or doctrines revealed by him, againſt a man's own light and conſcience, out of wilful and obſtinate malice, on purpoſe to leſſen the glory of God, and gratify his own luſts: ſuch was the ſin of the Scribes and Phariſees; who, though they knew the miracles of Chriſt were wrought by the Spirit of God, yet maliciouſly and obſtinately imputed them to the devil, with a view to obſcure the glory of Chriſt, and indulge their own wicked paſſions and reſentments againſt him; which ſin was unpardonable at that preſent time, as well as under that diſpenſation then to come, when the Spirit of God was poured down in a more plenteous manner.

Ver. 32. And whoſoever ſpeaketh a word againſt the Son of man, &c.] By whom is meant, not any man, as Grotius thought, but the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, ſo often called the Son of man, on account of his human nature, in which he appeared in great meanneſs and obſcurity. Now many might, through ignorance of him, thinking him to be a mere man, and taking up with common fame, ſpeak evil of him, deny him to be the Meſſiah, reproach him for the meanneſs of his parentage and education, and for the freedom of his converſation with publicans and ſinners; and do many things contrary to his name, as Saul, whilſt a Phariſee did, and thought he ought to do; and yet be afterwards convinced of their miſtakes, and be brought to a ſenſe and acknowledgment of them, and obtain pardoning grace and mercy, as Saul did, though a blaſphemer; and who is an inſtance of what is here promiſed, it ſhall be forgiven him; through the grace of God, the blood and mediation of Chriſt, under the application of the bleſſed Spirit. But whoſoever ſpeaketh againſt the Holy Ghoſt, in the ſenſe before declared, it ſhall not be forgiven him: not becauſe the Holy Ghoſt is greater than Chriſt; or for want of efficacy in the blood of Chriſt; or becauſe God cannot pardon it; but becauſe ſuch perſons wilfully, maliciouſly, and obſtinately oppoſe the Spirit of God, without whom there can be no application of pardon made; and remain in hardneſs of heart, are given up to a reprobate mind, and die in impenitence and unbelief, and ſo there's no forgiveneſs for them, neither in this world, nor in the world to come; that is, they ſhall never be forgiven, ſee Mark iii. 29. The diſtinction here uſed, does not refer to a common one among the Jews, of the Jewiſh ſtate and the times of the Meſſiah; but to the preſent ſtate of life, and that which will be after, or upon death: and it does not ſuppoſe there may be forgiveneſs of other ſins, though not of this, in the other world; but ſtrikes at a notion the Jews had, that there are ſome ſins, which repentance and the day of atonement expiate in this life; but there are others, which repentance and the day of atonement do not expiate; and theſe a man's death expiates, or makes atonement for [a]. The form of confeſſion uſed by ſick perſons is the following [b]; "I confeſs before thee, O Lord our God, and the God of our fathers, that my cure is in thy hands, and my death is in thy hands; if it be thy good pleaſure, heal me with a perfect healing: but if I die, תהא מיתתי סליחה, let my death be for the pardon, forgiveneſs, and atonement of all the ſins, iniquities, and tranſgreſſions, which I have ſinned, acted perverſely in, and tranſgreſſed before thee; and give me my portion in paradiſe, and juſtify me in the world to come, which is hidden for the righteous." But the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt is ſuch, as is not forgiven, neither before, nor at, nor after death, nor by it: all ſins that are forgiven, are forgiven in this world, and that perfectly, and at once; and all that are forgiven in this world, there will be a manifeſtation and declaration of the pardon of them in another; but ſuch ſins as are not forgiven here, there will be no declaration of the pardon of them hereafter. In ſhort, the ſenſe is, that the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt never has forgiveneſs; it is not pardoned now, and conſequently there will be no declaration of the pardon of it hereafter. The Jews uſe the phraſe in the ſame ſenſe [c]; a certain ſick man ſaid to his ſon, "give me water, and ſuch certain food; but if not, I'll not forgive thee, neither in this world, nor in the world to come." That is, I'll never forgive thee.

Ver. 33. Either make the tree good, and his fruit good, &c.] That is, either aſſert them both good, or elſe make the tree corrupt, and his fruit corrupt: ſay they are both evil, for the contrary cannot be affirmed with any conſiſtency and propriety: the matter is eaſy to be determined, for the tree is known by his fruit; fruit will diſcover what a tree is, and accordingly judgment may be made. No man will ſay a tree is good, and its fruit corrupt; or ſay, that a tree is corrupt, and its fruit good: theſe are glaring contradictions, and can never be reconciled. The caſe Chriſt here puts, is a very eaſy and familiar one, and is obvious to common ſenſe: the application of it may be made, either to the foregoing inſtance of Chriſt's caſting out devils, which the Jews aſcribed to the help of ſatan; and then the ſenſe is, either ſay I am a good man, and do good works, or that I am an evil man, and do evil works: to ſay that I do good works, as the caſting out of devils, muſt be allowed to be, and yet am an evil man, and do this under ſatanical influence, is as great an inconſiſtency, as to ſay that a corrupt tree brings forth good fruit; either therefore condemn theſe miracles as evil actions, done by confederacy with ſatan; or if you will allow them to be good ones, as you do, aſcribe them to the Spirit of God; for theſe things may as eaſily be determined, as the cauſe by its effect, or as a tree is known by its fruit: or elſe this may be applied unto the Phariſees, who, though wicked men, pretended to do good works; and though they ſet up for men of religion and holineſs, yet did evil things, as their words and actions teſtified; particularly, the blaſphemy juſt now uttered by them, charging the miracles of Chriſt as done by the aſſiſtance of the devil, which diſcovered the malignity and rottenneſs of their hearts: and the meaning of Chriſt is, that they would either both ſay, and do, that which is right and good; or relinquiſh their pretenſions to the character of good and religious men: nothing can be concluded from hence in favour of free-will, or a power in the creature to make himſelf good; for the word make, here ſignifies to ſay, affirm, aſſert, and the like; ſee John v. 18. and viii. 53. and x. 33. Though it may be fairly inferred from hence, that a man muſt firſt be a good man, e'er he can perform good works, truly and properly ſo called; and that theſe are fruits and evidences of the inward real goodneſs of a man; which muſt be underſtood not of a few ſingle actions, but of the common, conſtant ſeries and courſe of life.

---

[z] Tanchuma apud Buxtorf. Heb. Florileg. p. 126.

[a] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 86. 1.

[b] Seder Tephillot, fol. 333. 2. Ed. Baſil. Vid. T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 60. 1.

[c] Sepher Chaſidim, num. 234.

Ver. 34. O generation of vipers, &c.] Though they boaſted of their being the ſeed of Abraham, yet their immediate anceſtors were no other than vipers, deceitful, hurtful, poiſonous creatures; and they were exactly like them: for though they made a fair ſhew in the fleſh, and outwardly appeared righteous, yet were inwardly full of the poiſon of wickedneſs, envy and malice; and which their peſtilential breath, their blaſphemy againſt the Spirit, fully diſcovered; and gave juſt cauſe and reaſon for ſo ſevere a reproof, and ſuch reſentment, as here made by Chriſt. How can ye, being evil, ſpeak good things? This is not to be expected, nor is it commonly and conſtantly done; an evil man may ſometimes ſpeak good things, or which ſeem to be ſo; but theſe are not his common talk; as he is, ſo, for the moſt part, is his language; his ſpeech bewrays him: and ſince theſe men were by nature evil, were deſtitute of the Spirit and grace of God, had no good thing in them, how ſhould any good thing come out of them? And ſince they were ſo full of wickedneſs, ſpite and malice, it is no wonder that they belched out ſuch blaſphemous expreſſions concerning the miracles of Chriſt; for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh: a phraſe much like this is uſed by the Septuagint, in Eccleſ. ii. 15. I ſpoke abundance, or much in my heart; διοτι ο αφρων εκ περισσευματος λαλει, for the fool out of abundance ſpeaketh: as there is abundance of folly in him, there is much delivered out by him; and where there is abundance of wickedneſs in the heart, if the grace of God is wanting to reſtrain it, much of it will come out by the lips; as is a man's heart, ordinarily is his language.

Ver. 35. A good man, out of the good treaſure of the heart, &c.] A good man, is a regenerated man, one that is renewed by the Spirit of God, a believer in Chriſt, a ſincere lover of him, and one that follows him, whereſoever he goes, and who has the grace of God implanted in him: for the good treaſure of the heart, is not what he is naturally poſſeſſed of, but what is put into him; and is no other than the ſuperabundant grace of God, or that grace for grace, which he has received out of Chriſt's fulneſs, and the rich experience of it he is bleſſed with: and may well be called a treaſure; for as a treaſure is a collection of riches, ſo this conſiſts of various graces, each of which is more precious than gold, ſilver, and precious ſtones; a good one, both from the quality and quantity of it; and of the heart, though this is left out in many copies, from the ſeat and ſubject of it; and out of this the gracious man bringeth forth good things; tells his experience, ſpeaks of what God has done for his ſoul; ſays many things to the glory of the grace of God; of the perſon, offices, blood, righteouſneſs, and fulneſs of Chriſt; and of the operations and influences of the bleſſed Spirit; and which are pleaſant, profitable, uſeful, and edifying to the ſaints: and an evil man, out of the evil treaſure bringeth forth evil things. The evil man, is a man as he was born; who is wholly fleſh, carnal, and in a ſtate of nature; deſtitute of the Spirit, and having no principle of grace in him: the evil treaſure, is the corruption of his nature, the deſperate wickedneſs of his heart, and thoſe ſwarms of luſts, and all manner of ſin that dwell there; from whence are continually proceeding evil and corrupt communications, which not only defile himſelf, but others; and among the reſt, not only vain words and unprofitable talk, but blaſphemies againſt God, Chriſt, and the bleſſed Spirit; all which men will be accountable for another day.

Ver. 36. But I ſay unto you, &c.] This form of ſpeaking is uſed, the more ſtrongly to aſſeverate the truth of what is after ſaid; and the rather, becauſe men are apt to indulge a liberty with their tongues; fancying no great crime is committed, when only words are ſpoken, and no facts done; that every idle word that a man ſhall ſpeak, they ſhall give account thereof in the day of judgment. By an idle word is meant, what the Jews call, שוחה קלה, light converſation, and דבר ביטל, vain diſcourſe, as the Hebrew Goſpel of Munſter reads it here; frothy language, unprofitable talk, which, though it does not directly hurt God or man, yet is of no uſe to ſpeaker or hearer; and yet even this, in the laſt general and awful judgment, if not forgiven, and repented of, muſt be accounted for; and much more ſuch horrid blaſphemies the Phariſees had vented againſt Chriſt, and the Spirit of Chriſt. The Jews [d] have a ſaying pretty much like this, "That even, על שוחה קלה, for any light converſation, which paſſes between a man and his wife, "he ſhall be brought to judgment."

Ver. 37. For by thy words thou ſhalt be juſtified, &c.] Theophylact ſeems to take theſe words to be a paſſage of Scripture cited by Chriſt, in proof of what he had ſaid, but does not point to any; nor is any ſuch Scripture to be found. They are rather proverbial expreſſions, in common uſe among the Jews; or refer to the uſual methods of proceeding in courts of judicature, upon the acknowledgments and confeſſions of perſons. "Says Reſh Lakiſh [e], "ſuch an one and ſuch an one, they juſtify; and "ſuch an one and ſuch an one, they condemn. R. "Eliezer replies, מדבריהן נזדכה פלוני, by their "words

---

[d] R. Jonah apud L. Capell. in loc.

[e] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 30. 1.

“ words ſuch an one and ſuch an one, are juſtified.” The Gloſs upon it is, “ upon hearing the differ- “ ence there is between them, and between their “ words, they are juſtified.” Our Lord's meaning is, that not only works and actions, but words of all ſorts, will come into account in the day of judgment, and will be evidences for, or againſt a man, to acquit or condemn him: and by thy words thou ſhalt be condemned; according to theſe, the ſentence of juſtification, or of condemnation, will be pronounced; as theſe will appear to be evidences for, or againſt a man's being in a ſtate of grace and righteouſneſs: thus for inſtance, a man that has ſpoken for Chriſt, and has freely confeſſed that all his hope of juſtification before God, and acceptance with him, is ſolely upon the account of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt imputed; ſuch a man will be declared a juſtified man, according to the tenour of his own words: on the other hand, a man that has ſpoken hard ſpeeches againſt Chriſt, and his righteouſneſs; declaring he has no dependance on it, expects no juſtification by it; he'll be convinced of theſe ungodly ſayings, and out of his own mouth will be condemned. Some have thought, that Chriſt here ſtrikes at a notion which obtained among the Jews, that little or no account would be taken of a man's words in the day of judgment, provided his life and actions were good, and regular; but whatever were the ſentiments of the Phariſees, or of any of Chriſt's preſent hearers, it is certain, that it is the opinion of Jewiſh writers, that words, as well as actions, will be accounted for hereafter: they ſay [f], “ When a man dies, he lifts up his eyes “ and ſees two come to him, and write before “ him all that he has done in this world, “ וכל כה דאפיק מן פומיה, and all that has proceed- “ ed out of his mouth, ויהיב דינא על כלא, and he “ gives an account for all; and a little after, “ כל אינון מלין, all the words of a man in this “ world, are prepared before him, and not one of “ them loſt; and in the hour he goes to his grave, “ they are all ſet before him.”

Ver. 38. Then certain of the Scribes and Phariſees anſwered, &c.] Not the ſame that charged him with caſting out devils, by the prince of devils; but others, that were preſent, as appears from Luke xi. 16. and who do not take upon them, to make a proper reply to what he had ſaid, or return an anſwer to that, but addreſs him on another account; being willing to divert the diſcourſe, and try what they could do with him in another, and more gentle and crafty way; ſaying, maſter, not fellow, magician, Samaritan, thou that haſt a devil, and caſts out devils by Beelzebub, and art a devil, and Beelzebub himſelf; but doctor, teacher, allowing him, at leaſt, in a flattering way, that he was an inſtructer of mankind, though they would not own him to be a prophet, unleſs he could give ſuch ſigns, as would make it appear he was one; hence they ſay, we would ſee a ſign from thee: that is, a ſign from heaven, as they deſired at another time, Matt. xvi. 1. and, as Luke ſays, they did now, ch. xi. 16. they had ſeen a ſign from him on earth, in the cure of the man that had a withered hand; and another, in diſpoſſeſſing the devil out of the man, that was blind and dumb; but theſe they looked upon rather as ſigns from hell, and done by confederacy with the devil; and therefore deſire, or rather in an imperious way, demand one from heaven, where they thought ſatan had not ſuch power, as on earth; and where there could not be ſuch colluſion and deception, as they wickedly imagined were in this laſt action: they ſeem to require ſome ſuch things to be done, as were on mount Sinai, at the giving of the law, when there were thunders and lightenings, and a thick cloud, and the voice of a trumpet, and ſome viſible appearances of the divine majeſty; and intimate, that if ſomething of this kind was done, if there was any viſible and miraculous appearance in the heavens, produced by him, they ſhould believe him to be the prophet that was ſpoken of, and the true Meſſiah; but if not, ſhould give no credit to him: however, this is to be learned from hence, that the Jews, in Chriſt's time, expected ſigns and wonders to be wrought by the Meſſiah, in proof of his being ſo, though now they reject them as needleſs [g].

Ver. 39. But he anſwered and ſaid unto them, &c.] Not to the Phariſees, who were unworthy of an anſwer from him; having, in ſuch an imperious manner, and with a ſole view to tempt him, and after ſuch miracles were wrought by him, required of him a ſign from heaven; but to the multitude, the throng of people gathered thick together on this occaſion, ſee ver. 45. and Luke xi. 29. he turns himſelf from the Scribes and Phariſees, to the common people, and ſays to them concerning the former, an evil and adulterous generation; not only in a ſpiritual ſenſe, being degenerated from the faith, religion, and piety of their anceſtors; but literally, which appeared not only in their poligamy, and frequent divorces on trivial occaſions, but by criminal converſation with other women; ſee John viii. 9. and this, with the Jews themſelves, is a character of the generation in which the Meſſiah comes: for they ſay [h], “ that juſt when the Meſ- “ ſiah comes, or in the age the Son of David comes, “ impudence ſhall be increaſed, corn and wine ſhall “ be dear, the government ſhall be hereticks, “ וועד יהיה לזנות, and the ſynagogue ſhall become a “ brothel houſe.” Their meaning is, that the chief magiſtrates ſhould be Sadducees, and thoſe that pretended to religion and holineſs, would be adulterers, which was now the caſe. Their writings [i] frequently ſpeak of the increaſe and abounding of adulteries, under the ſecond temple, and about this time; which obliged Jochanan ben Zaccai and the Sanhedrim, to leave off the uſe of the bitter waters. Seeketh after a ſign; this is perfectly Talmudic language, the language of the Jews [k]. “ The diſ- “ ciples of R. Joſe ben Kiſmai, aſked him, when “ the Son of David came? He replied, I am “ afraid, leſt תבקשו ממני אות, ye ſhould ſeek of “ me a ſign; they ſay unto him, we will not ſeek of “ thee a ſign.” This the Jews ſought of Chriſt, time after time; not content with one, ſought another, though ſuch wonderful ones were wrought, which moſt fully demonſtrated him to be the Meſſiah; and therefore he would not indulge this temper in them; but declared, that there ſhall no ſign be given to it, but the ſign of the prophet Jonas. Not that no miracles ſhould afterwards be wrought among them; for, after this, many wondrous works were done by Chriſt; but no ſuch ſigns ſhould be given they deſired, not one from heaven; but one particularly ſhould be given them, out of the earth, and ſhould be, not for their conviction, but condemnation; and would ſeem very much like that which was done to the prophet Jonas, or Jonah; for ſo is his name in the Hebrew language, the other being the Greek termination of it.

---

[f] Zohar in Num. fol. 53. 2.

[g] Maimon. Hilch. Melachim, c. 11. §. 3.

[h] Miſn. Sota, c. 9. §. 15. T. Bab. Sanhed. fol. 97. 1.

[i] Miſn. Sota, c. 9. §. 9. & Maimon. Hilch. Sota, c. 3. §. 19.

[k] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 98. 1. ſo מבקש סימן, ſeeketh a ſign, Shemot Rabba, Paraſh. 9. fol. 97. 2.

Ver. 40. For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, &c.] Or in the belly of a great fiſh, as is ſaid, Jonah i. 17. for that it was a whale, is not there ſaid, nor is it certain it was; nor from the ſmallneſs of its ſwallow, is it thought probable it ſhould; nor does the word here uſed, neceſſarily imply one, but ſome large fiſh; nor are there whales in the Phenician ſea: it might be a kind of a ſea dog, called Carcharias, and ſometimes Lamia, or Lamma, from its vaſt ſwallow; in which whole men, even in coats of mail, have been found. However, be it what it will, Jonas was three days and three nights in the belly of it; which agrees with the account in the abovementioned place, and is the ſign Chriſt ſpeaks of in the foregoing verſe; and a very great ſign and miracle it was, that being ſwallowed down by ſuch a fiſh, he ſhould remain in the belly of it three days and three nights, as one dead; for, without a miracle, he could not have lived an hour; and on the third day, as one raiſed from the dead, be caſt out of it upon the dry land; which was a very eminent type of the death, burial, and reſurrection of Chriſt, as appears by what follows. The Jews reckon up ſeveral wonders or miracles in this caſe of Jonah's; as that a fiſh was prepared to ſwallow him up, and he not drowned in the ſea; and that this was prepared for him from the creation of the world; that he ſhould be three days and three nights in the fiſh's belly, and be alive; and that he ſhould retain his ſenſes and his underſtanding, ſo as to be able to pray: they repreſent him alſo as if he was in the ſtate of the dead [l], and that the fiſh itſelf was dead, and was quickened again. According to Joſephus, after he had been carried 250 miles, in the Helleſpont of the Euxine ſea, he was caſt aſhore [m]. So ſhall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth. That Chriſt means himſelf by the Son of man, there is no reaſon to doubt; and his being laid in a tomb, dug out of a rock, is ſufficient to anſwer this phraſe, the heart of the earth, in diſtinction from the ſurface of it; but ſome difficulty ariſes, about the time of his continuing there, and the prediction here made agreeable to the type: for it was on the ſixth day of the week, we commonly call Friday, towards the cloſe, on the day of the preparation for the ſabbath, and when the ſabbath drew on, that the body of Chriſt was laid in the ſepulchre; where it lay all the next day, which was the ſabbath of the Jews, and what we commonly call Saturday; and early on the firſt of the week, uſually called Sunday, or the Lord's day, he roſe from the dead; ſo that he was but one whole day, and part of two, in the grave. To ſolve this difficulty, and ſet the matter in a clear light, let it be obſerved, that the three days and three nights, mean three natural days, conſiſting of day and night, or twenty four hours, and are what the Greeks call νυχθημερα, night-days; but the Jews have no other way of expreſſing them, but as here; and with them it is a well known rule, and uſed on all occaſions, as in the computation of their feaſts and times of mourning, in the obſervance of the paſſover, circumciſion, and divers purifications, that מקצת היום ככולו, a part of a day is as the whole [n]: and ſo, whatever was done before ſun-ſetting, or after, if but an hour, or ever ſo ſmall a time, before or after it, it was reckoned as the whole preceding, or following day; and whether this was in the night-part, or day-part of the night-day, or natural day, it mattered not, it was accounted as the whole night-day: by this rule, the caſe here is eaſily adjuſted; Chriſt was laid in the grave towards the cloſe of the ſixth day, a little before ſun-ſetting, and this being a part of the night-day preceding, is reckoned as the whole; he continued there the whole night-day following, being the ſeventh day; and roſe again early on the day, which being after ſun-ſetting, though it might be even before ſun-riſing, yet being a part of the night-day following, is to be eſteemed as the whole; and thus the Son of man was to be, and was three days and three nights in the grave; and which was very eaſy to be underſtood by the Jews; and it is a queſtion, whether Jonas was longer in the belly of the fiſh.

Ver. 41. The men of Nineveh ſhall riſe in judgment, &c.] Alluding either to the cuſtom and practice of witneſſes, who riſe up from their ſeats, and ſtand, when they give in their teſtimonies in a court of judicature; or elſe, referring to the time of the general reſurrection from the dead, at the laſt day, when theſe men ſhall riſe from the dead, and ſtand in judgment with this generation; ſhall riſe when they do, and ſtand before the judgment-ſeat together, and be againſt them, and ſhall condemn them; not as judges of them, but by their example and practices, which will be brought above-board, and obſerved as an aggravation of the guilt and condemnation of the Jews: ſo the lives and converſations of the ſaints condemn the wicked now, and will do hereafter: in this ſenſe the word is uſed in the Talmud [o]; where having related how Hillell, though a poor man, and R. Eleazar, though a rich man, ſtudied in the law, and Joſeph, though youthful, gay, and beautiful, withſtood the importunities of his miſtreſs, 'tis obſerved; that Hillell, מחייב, condemned the poor; and R. Eleazer ben Harſum condemned the rich; and Joſeph condemned the wicked: in like manner, the Ninevites will condemn the Jews, becauſe they repented at the preaching of Jonas; a mere man, a ſingle prophet, a ſtranger to theſe men, who only preached, and wrought no miracle among them, and his ſtay with them was very ſhort; whereas the men of this generation had the Son of God ſent to them, had the miniſtry of his apoſtles, and of John the Baptiſt, and a variety of miracles wrought among them; and all this for a ſeries and courſe of years, and yet remained impenitent: the chief aggravation of their impenitence, and what made it the more aſtoniſhing was, that ſo great a perſon was in the midſt of them; and behold, a greater than Jonas is here; meaning himſelf, who was greater in perſon, office, doctrine, miracles, life, obedience, ſufferings, death, and reſurrection from the dead. The Ninevites, though a Heatheniſh people, having but forty days allowed them to repent in, upon Jonas's preaching, repented immediately; whereas the Jews, though God's profeſſing people, and having forty years, from Chriſt's reſurrection, allowed them to repent in, yet did not at all; and though the repentance of the Ninevites was but an external one, in duſt and aſhes, yet it was what ſecured them from temporal ruin; as the Jews would have been ſaved from the deſtruction that came upon their temple, city and nation, had they repented, but as they did.

---

[l] R. David Kimchi & Jarchi, in Jonah i. 17. & ii. 1. Zohar in Exod. fol. 20. 3. & 78. 3.

[m] Antiqu. l. 9. c. 18.

[n] T. Hieroſ. Peſach. fol. 31. 2. T. Bab. Moed. Katon, fol. 16. 2. 17. 2. 19. 2. & 20. 2. Bechorot. fol. 20. 2. & 21. 1. Nidda, fol. 33. 1. Maimon. Hilch. Ebel, c. 7. § 1, 2, 3. Aben Ezra in Lev. xii. 3.

[o] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 35. 2.

Ver. 42. The queen of the ſouth, &c.] Called the queen of Sheba, 1 Kings x. 1. Sheba was one of the ſons of Joktan, a grandchild of Arphaxad, who ſettled in the ſouthern parts of Arabia: hence this queen is called the queen of the ſouth. Sheba, is by the Targumiſt [p], called Zemargad, and this queen, the queen of Zemargad: ſhe goes by different names. According to ſome, her name was Maqueda [q], and, as others ſay, Balkis [r]: a Jewiſh chronologer [s] tells us, that the queen of Sheba, who is called Nicolaa, of the kingdom of Jaman, or the ſouth, came to Solomon, to hear his wiſdom, and gave him much riches: and Joſephus [t] calls her, Nicaulis, queen of Egypt and Ethiopia; of whom it is here ſaid, that ſhe ſhall riſe up in the judgment with this generation, and ſhall condemn it: the meaning is, as before; that ſhe ſhall riſe from the dead, and ſtand as a witneſs againſt that generation at the day of judgment, and, by her example and practices, which will then be produced, condemn them, or aggravate their condemnation: for ſhe came from the uttermoſt parts of the earth; an hyperbolical expreſſion, meaning a great way off, from a far country, a very diſtant part of the world from Jeruſalem, לשמוע חכמת שלמה, to hear the wiſdom of Solomon; the very phraſe uſed by the above Jewiſh [u] writer. And behold, a greater than Solomon is here; one that was infinitely greater than Solomon was, in every thing; ſo particularly in that, in which he excelled others, and on the account of which, the queen of the ſouth came unto him, namely, wiſdom: for he is the wiſdom of God, in whom are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge. The Jews themſelves [w] own, that the king, meaning the Meſſiah, that ſhall be raiſed up of the ſeed of David, בעל חכמה יהיה יתר משלמה, ſhall be a greater maſter of wiſdom, or wiſer than Solomon. Now what an aggravation of the condemnation of the Jews will this be another day, that a Gentile woman, living in a foreign and diſtant land, ſhould, upon the fame of the wiſdom of Solomon, leave her own kingdom and country, and come to Jeruſalem, to hear his wiſe diſcourſes about things natural, civil, and moral; and yet the Jews, who had a greater than Solomon in the midſt of them, and had no need to take much pains to come to the ſight and hearing of him, yet rejected him as the Meſſiah, blaſphemed his miracles, and deſpiſed his miniſtry; though it was concerned about things of a ſpiritual and evangelic nature, and the eternal welfare of immortal ſouls.

Ver. 43. When the unclean ſpirit is gone out of a man, &c.] By the unclean ſpirit, is meant ſatan, the old ſerpent, the devil; who by the Jews, is wont to be called as here, רוח מסאבא, the unclean ſpirit [x]; and that, becauſe he is by ſin become ſo, though he was not ſo originally; is the cauſe of uncleanneſs in men, and delights in unclean perſons, places, and things: his going out of a man, is not to be underſtood of his being diſpoſſeſſed of the bodies of men; nor of the ejection of him, and his going by force, through the power of divine grace, out of the ſouls of men; but either of his leaving the Jews for a while, in ſome ſort, whilſt Chriſt and the Goſpel continued among them; and of his going out of the Scribes and Phariſees; not really, but putting on another form, appearing as an angel of light, and under the guiſe of holineſs and righteouſneſs: and ſo he may be ſaid to go out of men, when any outward reformation is made in them; and they take up a profeſſion of religion, though deſtitute of the grace of God: he walketh through dry places; referring to a prevailing notion, that unclean ſpirits walk in, and haunt, deſert and deſolate places; and may have regard to the Gentiles, among whom ſatan might go, ſeeking reſt and ſatisfaction among them, in their idolatries and other wickedneſs, till he was there alſo diſturbed by the Goſpel ſent among them: or by theſe dry places may be meant the ſaints, whom he takes his walks among, in order, by tempting, to diſtreſs them, being ſecure of phariſaical perſons: and theſe may be ſo called, not for what they are in themſelves; not becauſe the ſun of righteouſneſs ſhines upon them; or becauſe thirſty and deſirous of divine and ſpiritual things; much leſs as if they had no moiſture, ſince they have a well of living water in them, and are watered by the Lord; or were unfruitful, as dry places uſually are; but for what they were to the unclean ſpirit, there being nothing in their grace, and the exerciſe of it, and in their ſpiritual performances, grateful to him; nothing to quench his thirſt, and ſatisfy his ſinful appetite; nor were there in them the mire and dirt of iniquity to roll in, as in unregenerate perſons: wherefore he is repreſented, as ſeeking reſt, and findeth none: his view in walking in theſe places, or among ſuch perſons, is reſt; not the reſt of the ſaints, he ſeeks their diſturbance, but his own reſt; which is to do all the miſchief he can, by ſtirring up corruption, tempting to ſin, and diſcouraging the exerciſe of grace; but is not able to do ſo much miſchief he would, and ſo can't find the reſt he ſeeks for, nor ſatisfy his envious, ſpiteful, and malicious temper: and this being his caſe, it follows,

Ver. 44. Then he ſaid, I will return into my houſe, &c.] Into the land of Judea, particularly into the Scribes and Phariſees, outward profeſſors of religion; who, notwithſtanding their outward reformation, and great pretenſions to holineſs, are ſatan's houſe ſtill: he has a property in them, a claim upon them; and tho' he ſays, from whence I came out, yet he never really, and properly quitted it, only ſeemingly, and in appearance; and therefore his returning is only throwing off the guiſe, and reaſſuming his former character, as a vicious and unclean ſpirit. And when he is come, he findeth it empty; not empty of ſin: this puts me in mind of a paſſage in the Miſna [y], where it is ſaid, that on a faſt-day, "when they ſtand in prayer, they cauſe to "deſcend, or go before the ark, an old man, who "is uſed (to prayer,) whoſe children, וביתו ריקם, "and his houſe, are empty, ſo that his heart is per"fect in prayer," or entirely at leiſure for it. The commentators [z] on that phraſe, his houſe is empty, note, that he was empty of ſin, and free from it, and one concerning whom an evil report had not gone forth from his youth: but ſuch was not this houſe; it was empty of God, of the true knowledge of him, of the fear of him, and love to him; of Chriſt, of faith in him, affection for him, and hope on him; of the Spirit of God, and of his graces, and of ſpiritual, internal religion, and powerful godlineſs. Swept; not with the Spirit of grace convincing of ſin, righteouſneſs, and judgment; but with the beſom of an outward reformation: and garniſhed; not with internal grace, which makes ſaints all glorious within; but with ſecret luſts and corruptions, which rendered it an agreeable habitation for this unclean ſpirit; and at moſt, with ſome ſhew of morality, a little negative holineſs, or abſtinence from outward acts of ſin, an obſervance of ſome external rites and ceremonies, and a few hypocritical performances of faſting and prayer; which ſatan can very well bear with, ſo long as the heart is empty of ſpiritual grace, and till an opportunity offers of throwing off all appearance of good.

---

[p] In 1 Chron. i. 9. & 2 Chron. ix. 1. [q] Ludolph. Hiſt. Æthiop. l. 2. c. 3. & not. in Claud. Confeſſ. §. 1. [r] Pocock. Specimen Hiſt. Arab. p. 59. [s] Juchaſin, fol. 136. 1. [t] Antiqu. l. 8. c. 2. [u] Juchaſin, ib. [w] Maimon, Hilchot. Teſhuba, c. 9. §. 2. [x] Zohar in Gen. fol. 77. 2. [y] Taanith, c. 2. §. 2. [z] Maimon. & Bartenora in ib.

Ver. 45. Then goeth he, and taketh with himſelf ſeven other ſpirits, &c.] This is ſaid in alluſion to, and in imitation of the ſeven ſpirits before the throne; or may denote a large number of devils, ſeven being a number of perfection; or elſe the various corruptions of a man's heart, the ſwarms of internal luſts which are there ſtirred up by ſatan; more wicked than himſelf, as theſe are more pernicious to man, than the devil himſelf: and they enter in and dwell there; that is, though they were there before, now they exert and ſhew themſelves, and ſuch men appear to be under the power and government of them; when leaving their ſeeming religion and holineſs, they return like the dog to the vomit, and the ſwine to the wallowing in the mire. And the laſt ſtate of that man is worſe than the firſt; he becomes more wicked than ever he was, before he made pretenſions to religion; as ſuch apoſtates generally are more extravagant in ſinning, and are ſeldom or ever recovered by repentance, and their laſt end is eternal damnation; ſee 2 Pet. ii. 20, 21, 22. even ſo ſhall it be alſo unto this wicked generation. This parable fitly ſuited them, the Scribes and Phariſees, and the men of that generation, from whom in ſome meaſure the unclean ſpirit might be ſaid to depart through the doctrine, and miracles of Chriſt, to go into the Gentile world; but being followed there with the preaching of the Goſpel by the apoſtles, returns to the Jews, and fills them with more malice, blaſphemy, and blindneſs, than ever, which iſſued in their utter ruin and deſtruction; of which this parable may be juſtly thought to be prophetical.

Ver. 46. While he yet talked to the people, &c.] Upon theſe ſubjects, which ſo nearly concerned the Scribes and Phariſees, and which could not fail of drawing upon him their reſentment and ill-will. Behold his mother and his brethren: by his mother is meant Mary; but who are his brethren, is not ſo eaſy to ſay: ſome are of opinion, that Joſeph had children by Mary, who are here meant; but it is more generally believed, that theſe were either the ſons of Joſeph by a former wife, whoſe name is ſaid to be Eſcha; or rather, Mary's ſiſter's ſons, the wife of Cleophas, the couſin-germans of Chriſt, it being uſual with the Jews to call ſuch kindred brethren; and ſo they might be James, Joſes, Simon, and Judas: theſe ſtood without; for Chriſt was within doors, not in a ſynagogue, as Piſcator thought, but in an houſe; ſee ch. xiii. 1. and his mother and brethren ſtood without doors, either becauſe they could not get in for the throng of the people; or becauſe they would not, it not being proper to make all within acquainted with what they had to ſay to him: deſiring to ſpeak with him; not with a pure view to interrupt him in his work, or to divert him from it, leſt he ſhould over-ſpend himſelf; nor from a principle of ambition and vain glory, to ſhew that they were related to him, and that he was at their beck and command; but rather, to obſerve unto him the danger he expoſed himſelf to, by the freedom he took with the Phariſees in his diſcourſes, and probably to acquaint him with ſome conſpiracies formed againſt him.

Ver. 47. Then one ſaid unto him, &c.] Either one of his auditors, or, as the Ethiopic verſion has it, one of his diſciples: the other Evangeliſts intimate, that more than one acquainted him with it; which is eaſily reconciled: for, upon his mother and brethren calling to him, as Mark ſays they did; firſt one and then another, and more, might apprize him of it, and eſpecially as he did not immediately go out unto them. Behold, thy mother and thy brethren ſtand without, deſiring to ſpeak with thee: whether this meſſage was carried at the requeſt of the mother and brethren of Chriſt, and delivered in a ſimple manner, and with an honeſt intention; or whether it was officiouſly done, and with a deſign to interrupt him, and to try him, whether he would prefer his natural relations, and their ſociety and converſation, to the ſpiritual work in which he was engaged, in doing good to the ſouls of men, is not certain; the latter ſeems probable, from the following words, and conduct of Chriſt. Some copies read, deſiring to ſee thee.

Ver. 48. But he anſwered and ſaid unto him that told him, &c.] Of his mother and brethren being without doors, deſiring, and waiting to ſpeak to him, Who is my mother? and who are my brethren? Theſe queſtions are put, not as if he himſelf was ignorant who were his mother or his brethren; or as ſuggeſting as if he had none; or, as denying that theſe were in ſuch a relation to him; or, as caſting any ſlight upon them; or as intending to teach men diſreſpect to parents and kindred, according to the fleſh; but as diſpleaſed with the man, or men, for interrupting him in his work; and to let them know, that the buſineſs of his heavenly Father, was preferred by him to any his natural relations could have with him; and that he might have an opportunity of pointing out, who were his relations in a ſpiritual ſenſe.

Ver. 49. And he ſtretched forth his hand towards his diſciples, &c.] By whom are meant, not only the twelve, but all others preſent, who truly believed in him, both men and women; and who might ſit near him and together, and whom, by this motion of his hand, he pointed out as his ſpiritual relations, to the multitude that ſat round him: and ſaid, behold my mother, and my brethren; in whoſe hearts he was formed, and who were the children of God by adopting grace, and ſo his brethren; and were as dear to him, as his mother and brethren. It is reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that when he ſaid, behold my mother, and, as in the following verſe, ſiſter; he might ſtretch forth his hand particularly, toward the pious and religious women that believed in him, and miniſtered to him of their ſubſtance, who might be now preſent; ſuch as Mary Magdalene, Joanna the wife of Chuza, Herod's ſteward, and Suſanna, and others; ſince theſe are mentioned by Luke in the ſame chapter, in which this paſſage ſtands in his Goſpel; and when he ſaid, behold my brethren, he might point directly to the twelve, and the reſt of the men that believed in him, and followed him.

Ver. 50. For whoſoever ſhall do the will of my Father, &c.] This is not to be underſtood of a perfect obedience to the will of God, revealed in his righteous law; for ſince this cannot be performed by any mere man, no one could be in ſuch a ſpiritual relation to Chriſt: but of the obedience of faith to the will of God, revealed in the Goſpel; which is to believe in Chriſt, and have everlaſting life; ſee John vi. 40. This is the will of Chriſt's Father, which is in heaven, and which is good news from heaven, to ſinners on earth; and which Chriſt came down from heaven to do, and to declare to the children of men: ſuch as hear the word of God and do it, as Luke ſays, ch. viii. 21. that is, hear the Goſpel, underſtand and believe it, and become obedient to the faith of it; theſe are in this near manner related to Chriſt, evidentially and openly, as well as thoſe who were now preſent: the ſame is my brother, and ſiſter, and mother; as dear to me, as ſuch are to thoſe, to whom they ſtood thus related in the fleſh: and theſe natural relations, ſerve to convey ſome ideas of that relation, union, nearneſs, and communion, there are between Chriſt an his people; all theſe relative characters may be obſerved in the book of Solomon's Song, to which ou Lord may be reaſonably thought to have reſpect ſee Cant. iii. 11. and iv. 9, 10, 12. and v. 1, 2. anc viii. 1.

CHAP. XIII.

Ver. 1. THE ſame day Jeſus went out of the houſe, &c.] Where he had been preaching, and working miracles: where this houſe was, is not certain; it ſeems to have been in one of the cities of Galilee, probably Capernaum, ſince that was by the ſea coaſt: the reaſon of his going out of the houſe was, either to converſe with his mother and brethren, as they deſired; or to withdraw himſelf from company, and take ſome refreſhment by the ſea-ſide; or becauſe it would not hold the people, and therefore he quitted it for a more convenient place. The time he went out of it, was the ſame day he had caſt the devil out of the man blind and dumb, and had delivered himſelf ſo freely concerning the Scribes and Phariſees, who had blaſphemouſly aſcribed that miracle to the aſſiſtance of ſatan; and the ſame day his mother and brethren came to ſee him, and ſpeak to him. And ſat by the ſea-ſide; either as weary, and for his refreſhment, or in order to preach to the people; for, Mark ſays, he began again to teach by the ſea-ſide, ch. iv. 1. This was the ſea of Galilee, ſometimes called the ſea of Tiberias.

Ver. 2. And great multitudes were gathered unto him, &c.] Some on one account, and ſome on another; ſome to ſee his perſon, others his miracles; ſome for healing for their bodies, and others for their ſouls; ſome for the loaves, and others to hear him preach; and of theſe there were ſeveral ſorts, as the following parable ſhews. So that he went into a ſhip; both for his own advantage, that he might not be crouded, and preſſed by the people, and have more room, and a freer air to ſpeak in, and for theirs, that they might both ſee and hear him better. And ſat, and the whole multitude ſtood on the ſhore; as was the then cuſtom of the Jewiſh doctors and hearers, the one to ſit, and the other to ſtand. See the note on ch. v. 1. Chriſt ſat upon the deck of the ſhip; or perhaps this ſhip was no other than an open boat, which was put to ſea, ſome little diſtance from the ſhore; upon which the people ſtood in great numbers, with much convenience and attention.

Ver. 3. And he ſpake many things unto them in parables, &c.] For the parables of the ſower, and the different ſorts of ground the ſeed fell in, of the wheat and tares, of the grain of muſtard-ſeed, of the leaven in three meaſures of meal, of the treaſure hid in a field, of the pearl of great price, of the net caſt into the ſea, and of the houſholder, were all delivered at this time. This way of ſpeaking by parables was much in uſe among the eaſtern nations, and particularly the Jews. R. Meir was very famous among them for this way of teaching: they ſay[a], "that when R. Meir died בטלו מושלי משלים, "they that were ſkilled in, and uſed parables, ceaſed." The commentators[b] on this paſſage ſay, "that he preached a third part tradition, and a "third part myſtical diſcourſe, ותילתא מתלי, and "a third part parables:" which method of diſcourſing was judged both pleaſant and profitable, and what ſerved to raiſe the attention of the hearer, and to fix what was delivered the more firmly in their minds: what was our Lord's reaſon for uſing them, may be ſeen in ver. 13. he begins with the parable of the ſower. The deſign of which is to ſet forth the nature of the word of God, the work and buſineſs of the miniſters of it, the different ſucceſs of the preaching of it, and the fruitfulneſs of it; and to ſhew when it is truly received, and the various degrees of fruit it produces; that the efficacy of it depends on the grace of God, which makes the heart good, and fit to receive it; and how few they be which hear the word to any ſpiritual advantage and benefit; and how far perſons may go in hearing, and yet fall ſhort of the grace of God; and therefore no dependance is to be had on the external hearing of the word. Behold, a ſower went forth to ſow; Luke adds, his ſeed; as does alſo Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel here; and Mark introduces the parable thus, hearken, behold; it being a matter of great importance and concern, which is expreſſed by this parable, it deſerves the moſt diligent attention. By the ſower, is meant the ſon of man, as may be learnt from the explanation of another parable, ver. 37. which is Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, who is often ſo called on account of his human nature; and may the rather be thought to be intended here, ſince the ſeed he ſowed is called his ſeed; meaning the Goſpel, of which he is the author, publiſher, ſum and ſubſtance; and ſince he is, by way of eminency, called ὁ σπειρων, the ſower; which muſt be underſtood of him as a prophet, or preacher of the word, who was eminently ſent of God, and richly qualified for ſuch an office, and was moſt diligent in it, and yet his ſucceſs was but ſmall. Indeed, every miniſter of the Goſpel may be called a ſower, who bears precious ſeed, ſows ſpiritual things, and though in tears, he ſhall not return empty, but ſhall reap in joy, and bring his ſheaves with him. This ſower went forth from his own houſe to his field; which, as applied to Chriſt, may intend his incarnation, his coming into this world by the aſſumption of human nature, his appearance in the publick miniſtry, in the land of Judea, and his going forth ſtill in his miniſters, and by his Spirit, in the preaching of the Goſpel; and, as applied to the preachers of the word, may be explained of their commiſſion, of their being ſent, and of their going forth into the field of the world, preaching the Goſpel every where. The end of the ſower's going forth is to ſow his ſeed: by his ſeed is meant the word, the word of God; ſee Mark iv. 14. Luke viii. 11. ſo called, becauſe of the choiceneſs and excellency of it in its ſelf, that grain which is reſerved for ſeed being uſually the beſt of the kind; and becauſe of its ſmallneſs, it being mean and contemptible in the eyes of thoſe, who know not the nature of it; and becauſe of the generative virtue it has, tho' not without a divine influence.

---

[a] Miſn. Sota, c. 9. §. 15.

[b] Jarchi & Bartenora in ib. e Talmud. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 38. 2.

Nor does it bring forth fruit, unleſs it is ſown in the heart, as ſeed in the earth; where its operation is ſecret, its growth and increaſe gradual, and its fruitfulneſs different. By ſowing, is meant, preaching; which, as ſowing, requires knowledge and ſkill, and an open and liberal hand; keeping back nothing that is profitable, a declaring the ſame doctrine in one place as another; and deſigns a conſtant miniſtration of it, notwithſtanding all diſcouragements, and a patient waiting for ſucceſs.

Ver. 4. And when he ſowed, &c.] Or, as he ſowed, as the other Evangeliſts; that is, whilſt he was ſowing, ſome ſeeds fell; either out of his hand, or out of the cart drawn by oxen: hence the [c] Talmudiſts diſtinguiſh between מפולת יד, the falling of the hand, or what falls out of the hand, and מפולת שוורים, the falling of the oxen, or what falls from them; where the Gloſs is, "in ſome places they ſow the "grain with the hand; and in other places they put "the ſeed on a cart full of holes, and oxen draw "the cart on the ploughed land, and it falls upon "it." By the way-ſide; by the common road, or private paths, which led thro' corn-fields, in which Chriſt and his diſciples walked, ch. xii. 1. and which being beaten and trodden hard, the ſeed muſt lie open on it, and ſo be liable to be trampled upon by men, or devoured by the fowls of the air; and deſigns ſuch hearers as are careleſs, negligent, and inattentive, who hear without underſtanding, judgment, and affection; ſee ver. 19. and the fowls came and devoured them; the other Evangeliſts ſay, the fowls of the air; and ſo the Vulgate Latin, and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel, and ſome copies; and mean the devils; ſo called, becauſe their habitation is in the air; hence they are ſaid to be the power of the air: and becauſe of their ravenous and devouring nature, their ſwiftneſs to do miſchief, and their flocking in multitudes, where the word is preached, to hinder its uſefulneſs, as fowls do, where ſeed is ſowing. Satan, and his principalities, and powers, rove about in the air, come down on earth, and ſeek whom they may devour, and often mix themſelves in religious aſſemblies, to do what miſchief they can; ſee Job i. 6, 7.

Ver. 5. Some fell upon ſtony places, &c.] Such a place as the Jews call חולסית, a barren, ſtony place, a place from whence, they ſay, they take ſtones, and בית סלע, and which אינו ראוי לזריעה, is not fit for ſowing[d]; and ſuch were thoſe places and ſpots of ground, that ſome of theſe ſeeds fell upon; and deſign ſuch hearers, in whom the natural hardneſs of their hearts continues, and who remain unbroken by the word, and are without any true ſenſe of ſin, and repentance for it. Where they had not much earth; to cover them and take root in: this is expreſſive of ſuch perſons who have ſlight convictions of ſin, and awakenings of the natural conſcience; ſome little, light, and ſpeculative notions of the word, in the underſtanding and judgment; ſome flaſhes of natural affection for it, and outward expreſſions of delight and pleaſure in it; ſome ſhew of grace, and a form of godlineſs, but no real heart-work. And forthwith they ſprung up, becauſe they had no deepneſs of earth; to ſtrike their roots downwards: and thro' the reflection of the heat, upon the rocks and ſtones, they quickly broke thro' the thin ſurface of the earth over them, and appeared above ground before the uſual time of the ſpringing up of ſeed: which may not only denote the immediate reception of the word by theſe hearers, and their quick aſſent to it; but their ſudden and haſty profeſſion of it, without taking due time to conſider the nature and importance thereof; and the ſeeming chearfulneſs in which they did both receive and profeſs it; though it was only outward and hypocritical, and more on account of the manner of preaching it, than the word itſelf, and thro' a ſelfiſh principle in them; and did not ariſe from any real experience of the power of it on their ſouls, or true ſpiritual pleaſure in it: nor could it be otherwiſe, ſince their ſtony hearts were not taken away, nor hearts of fleſh given them; wherefore the word had no place in them, and made no real impreſſion on them; they remained dead in treſpaſſes and ſins; the word was not the ſavour of life unto life unto them, or the Spirit that giveth life; they did not become living and lively ſtones; they continued as inſenſible as ever of their ſtate and condition by nature, of the exceeding ſinfulneſs of ſin, of the danger they were in, and of their need of Chriſt, and ſalvation by him; they were as hard, and obdurate, and as inflexible, as ever, without any real contrition for ſin, or meltings of ſoul thro' the influence of the love and grace of God; and as backward as ever to ſubmit to the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, being ſtout-hearted, and far from it; and being no more cordially willing to be ſubject to the ſceptre of his kingdom, or to ſerve him in righteouſneſs and holineſs, than they ever were; for the word falling upon them, made no change in them; their hearts were as hard as ever, notwithſtanding the ſeeming and haſty reception of it; tho' they did not refuſe to hearken to the word externally, did not put away the ſhoulder, or ſtop their ears, yet their hearts were ſtill like an adamant ſtone: nothing but the mighty power of God, and his efficacious grace, can break the rocky heart in pieces; or give an heart of fleſh, a ſenſible, ſoft, and flexible one, with which a man truly repents of ſin, believes in Chriſt, and becomes ſubject to him.

Ver. 6. And when the ſun was up, &c.] Some time, and its heat was increaſing, and it began to ſhine out hot, and beat with ſome vehemency and ſtrength; which may denote ſome ſore temptation, or ſevere affliction, or fiery trial of perſecution and tribulation; ſee ver. 21. for this is not to be underſtood of the glorious light of the Goſpel, which, tho' very comfortable and refreſhing, as well as illuminating to good men, is very diſtreſſing and tormenting to carnal minds; they cannot bear its truths and doctrines; this is the fire which comes out of the mouth of God's faithful witneſſes, and torments them that dwell on the earth, and devours their enemies, Rev. xi. 5—10. And it, moreover, like the ſun, has different effects on different objects; as the ſun hardens clay, and melts wax, ſo the Goſpel is to the hardening of ſome, and ſoftening of others; to the one it is the ſavour of life unto life, and to the other the ſavour of death unto death; but this cannot be intended, becauſe the word by theſe hearers is firſt received with joy. Nor is Chriſt the ſun of righteouſneſs meant, who ariſes with healing in his wings, and gives grace and glory to his people; but the ſun of perſecution and affliction, in which ſenſe the metaphor is uſed, in Cant. i. 6. the heat of which the church patiently bore, tho' ſhe was made black with it: but theſe hearers think it ſtrange that ſuch a fiery trial ſhould befal them; wherefore, as they take up their profeſſion in haſte, they as quickly drop it; ſee Rev. vii. 16. They were ſcorched, and becauſe they had not root, they withered away; they were offended with what they met with, for the ſake of Chriſt, and the profeſſion of his word; and therefore, not being rooted in him, nor in the love of God, nor having the root of the matter, true grace, in themſelves, or, as Luke ſays, lacked moiſture, of divine grace, of the dews and waterings of it, fell away finally and totally. This is no inſtance of the apoſtacy of real ſaints, or any proof of true believers falling away finally and totally; ſince theſe were not rooted, and grounded in the everlaſting and unchangeable love of God, were not intereſted in it, or were partakers of the effects of it; had they been ſo, they could never have been ſeparated from it; tribulation, diſtreſs, and perſecution could never have done it; none of theſe would ever have moved them; had they had the love of God ſhed abroad in their hearts, they would have gloried in tribulation: nor were they united to Chriſt, rooted and built up in him; had they, they would have continued to have derived life and nouriſhment from him; in him the life of believers is hid, and becauſe he lives they live alſo; as long as there is life in the root, the branches will not die; he is the root that bears the branches, the root of the righteous that yields fruit, and is never moved: nor had theſe the truth of grace, which is an incorruptible ſeed, a well of living water ſpringing up to everlaſting life; had they, they could never have withered away; to ſuch God gives more grace, he himſelf is as the dew unto them, and he waters them every moment.

---

[c] T. Bab. Bava Metzia, fol. 105. 2.

[d] T. Bab. Erachin, fol. 32. 1. & Gloſſ. in ib. & Bava Bathra, fol. 156. 2. & Gloſſ. in ib.

Ver. 7. And ſome fell among thorns, &c.] On a ſpot of ground which was full of the roots of thorns, and briars, which was not cleared of them as it ſhould be. We often read [e] of שדה שנתקוצה, a field cleared of thorns; but ſuch was not this piece of ground, it was over-run with them, not on the ſurface of the earth, but within it: for it follows, and the thorns ſprung up; naturally, being neither ſown nor planted; either before the ſeed, or, at leaſt, as ſoon; and however grew faſter and higher, and choked them; ſo that they came to nothing: hence the advice, ſow not among thorns, Jer. iv. 3. and a loſt kindneſs, or what is beſtowed in vain, is expreſſed in this proverbial manner [f], שקולה טיבותיך ושדיא אחיזרי, thy beneficence is taken away, and caſt among thorns: theſe point out ſuch hearers who ſeemed to be contrite, to have the fallow ground of their hearts broken up, their conſciences tender, and to have a true ſenſe of ſin, as well as to be outwardly reformed; and yet inwardly were full of the thorns of ſinful luſts, particularly of the cares of the world, the deceitfulneſs of riches, the luſts of other things, and the pleaſures of this life, which rendered the word uſeleſs and unfruitful; ſee ver. 22. all which are comparable to thorns: it is hardly poſſible to be in the midſt of, and meddle with theſe, without being ſcratched by them; they pierce, afflict, and wound, even where they have not their greateſt power and influence; and where they do prevail, and get the aſcendant, as they are fruitleſs themſelves, they make others ſo too; they choke the word, and make that, and all ordinances, and opportunities, uſeleſs, and unſerviceable. Thorns are a part of the earth's curſe for the ſin of man; and ſuch perſons in whom thorny cares and luſts prevail, as they are like unto the earth which beareth thorns, ſo as that, they are rejected, and nigh to curſing, whoſe end is to be burned in everlaſting flames of divine wrath and fury, Heb. vi. 8.

Ver. 8. But others fell into good ground, &c.] Not beaten and trodden by the feet of men, nor ſtony, nor thorny, but well broke up, manured, and tilled; which deſigns good, honeſt-hearted hearers, who become ſo by the ſpirit and grace of God; who hear with a ſpiritual underſtanding, experience, ſavour, and reliſh, what they hear; ſee ver. 23. and brought forth fruit, ſome an hundred fold, ſome ſixty fold, ſome thirty fold: ſome ſeeds produced an hundred, others ſixty, and others thirty. The firſt of theſe eſpecially was a large increaſe, but what was ſometimes had, and which Iſaac received in Gerar, in the land of the Philiſtines, Gen. xxvi. 12. and is what Pliny ſays [g] of Byzacium, a country of the Lybiphœnicians, that it yielded an hundred fold to its huſbandmen; and of ſuch fruitfulneſs was the land of Iſrael, of which the Jewiſh doctors ſay ſome things incredible: they tell us a ſtory [h] of "one "that ſowed a meaſure of vetches, or peaſe, "ועשה שלש מאות סאין, and it produced three "hundred meaſures; they ſay unto him, the Lord "hath begun to bleſs thee, &c." Here, in the parable, theſe various increaſes intend the different degrees of fruitfulneſs in gracious ſouls; for tho' the fruits of grace, in believers, are of the ſame quality, yet not of the ſame quantity. Some believers are grown to a greater maturity than others; ſome are but little children, ſome are young men, ſome are fathers.

Ver. 9. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear.] Not externally only, but internally; he that has ears given him to hear, ſo as to underſtand, let him make uſe of them, and ſeriouſly conſider of, and diligently attend to the uſe and importance of this parable. It is a way of ſpeaking uſed by Chriſt, when any thing of moment was delivered, and not ſo eaſy to be underſtood, on purpoſe to quicken the attention of his auditors, and ſtir up in them a deſire of underſtanding what was ſaid; which effect this had upon his diſciples; ſee Mark iv. 10. Luke viii. 9.

Ver. 10. And the diſciples came, and ſaid unto him, &c.] Not the twelve only, but others that were about him, as Mark ſays, who alſo were his diſciples, and believed in him: theſe, when he was alone, came nearer to him, who, whilſt he was preaching to the people, were at ſome little diſtance from him, either in the ſhip, or on the ſhore, tho' within the hearing of him, and addreſſed him after this manner; why ſpeakeſt thou unto them in parables? not that this way of ſpeaking was new and ſurprizing to them; but becauſe it was not eaſily underſtood, eſpecially not by the common people, without an explanation, which, as yet, Chriſt had not given: and indeed the parable was not underſtood by the diſciples themſelves; who put this queſtion, not only for the ſake of the multitude, but for their own alſo, hoping to be favoured with the meaning of it.

Ver. 11. He anſwered, and ſaid unto them, &c.] Chriſt was always ready to give an anſwer to his enquiring diſciples, concerning his miniſtry, and his conduct in it; which ſhews great reſpect to them, and condeſcenſion in him: becauſe it is given to you to know the myſteries of the kingdom of heaven: by the kingdom of heaven, is meant the Goſpel, which treats of the kingdom of heaven, and of things pertaining to it; of the ſaints meetneſs for it, which is the regenerating and ſanctifying grace of the Spirit; and of their right unto it, which lies in the juſtifying righteouſneſs of Chriſt. The myſteries of it intend the ſublime doctrines thereof; ſuch as relate to the Trinity of perſons in the Godhead, to the incarnation of Chriſt, and the union of the two natures, human and divine, in him, eternal predeſtination, redemption by Chriſt, ſatisfaction by his ſacrifice, juſtification by his righteouſneſs, and pardon thro' his blood, the reſurrection from the dead, &c. things, tho' clearly revealed, yet may have difficulties attending them, and which are not very eaſily ſolved: now to know and underſtand the great truths of the Goſpel, ſpiritually, ſavingly, and experimentally, is not from nature, or to be acquired by mens induſtry, but is the gift of God's grace, flowing from his ſovereign will and pleaſure; a favour which the diſciples of Chriſt, as a choſen people, receive from the Lord, and which is denied others: but to them it is not given; to the wiſe and prudent, to the Scribes and Phariſees, to the multitude, to the bulk and generality of the people, to the reſt that were blinded. Mark calls them them that are without; who are not in the number of God's elect, nor within the covenant of grace, nor among the diſciples of Chriſt; referring to a common way of ſpeaking among the Jews, who uſed to call the Gentiles, all without their land, they that are without; and indeed all within themſelves that deſpiſed the rules and judgment of the wiſe men[i]: but Chriſt here calls the wiſe men themſelves ſuch. Now our Lord, who was privy to the ſecret and ſovereign diſpenſation of God, who, of his own will and pleaſure, had determined to give a ſpiritual and ſaving knowledge of divine things to ſome, and deny it to others, made this the rule of his conduct in his miniſtry; that is to ſay, he preached in parables to ſome without an explication, whilſt he ſpoke plainly to others; and, if in parables, yet gave them an interpretation, and an underſtanding of them.

---

[e] Miſn. Sheviith, c. 4. §. 2. T. Hieroſ. Sheviith, fol. 34. 3. & 35. 1. T. Bab. Bechorot, fol. 34. 2.

[f] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 63. 2. Bava Kama, fol. 83. 1. Cetubot, fol. 53. 2. & Betza, fol. 29. 2.

[g] Nat. Hiſt. l. 5. c. 4.

[h] T. Hieroſ. Peah, fol. 20. 2.

Ver. 12. For whoſoever hath, to him ſhall be given, &c.] Whoever has the true grace of God implanted in him, has a ſaving knowledge of Chriſt, and a ſpiritual acquaintance with the doctrines of the Goſpel, ſhall have more grace given him; he ſhall grow in the knowledge of Chriſt, and the Spirit of truth ſhall lead him into all truth: and he ſhall have more abundance; of grace, light, knowledge, and experience: all grace ſhall be made to abound towards him; he ſhall be filled with all the fulneſs of God, and ſhall arrive to the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt; and his light ſhall ſhine more and more unto the perfect day. But whoſoever hath not; the truth of grace, nor a ſpiritual knowledge of Chriſt, nor any experience of the doctrines of the Goſpel, from him ſhall be taken away, even that he hath, or that which he ſeemed to have, as Luke expreſſes it; for every thing beſides true grace is a mere ſhow, and has no ſolidity in it; as natural parts, human learning, and a form of knowledge and of truth in the law, the national church-ſtate of the Jews, with all the outward privileges appertaining thereunto, all which may be here meant; and even ſpeculative notions of the Goſpel, the external gifts of the Spirit, the means of grace, the Goſpel of the kingdom of God, and the miniſtry of it, which in proceſs of time were wholly taken from theſe people.

Ver. 13. Therefore ſpeak I to them in parables, &c.] Becauſe it was the will and pleaſure of his father to give the knowledge of divine myſteries to ſome, and not to others; and becauſe even the outward good things they had, being wrongly uſed or abuſed, by them, would be taken away from them: and becauſe they ſeeing, ſee not: they ſaw Chriſt with their bodily eyes, but not with an eye of faith; they ſaw the miracles he did, but did not diſcern, at leaſt did not acknowledge the evidence of them, proving him to be the true Meſſiah. And hearing, they hear not, neither do they underſtand: they heard externally, but not internally; they heard the ſound of Chriſt's voice, but did not underſtand his words, even when he ſpake in the plaineſt and moſt intelligible manner; nor were they concerned to know the meaning of them: wherefore he ſpoke to them in this abſtruſe and parabolical way, that they might be what they really were, ſeers and not ſeers, hearers and not hearers, at leaſt not underſtanding ones; and that what he ſaid might remain ſealed and hidden to them, as the things contained in the ſealed book were to the Jews of old; the reaſon of which was, as a writer of theirs[k] ſays, and which agrees with our Lord's reaſon and conduct here, שהיו במשל וחידה, becauſe they were in parable and riddle.

Ver. 14. And in them is fulfilled the prophecy of Eſaias, &c.] In ch. vi. 9, 10. which ſaith, which runs, or may be read thus, by hearing ye ſhall hear, and ſhall not underſtand, and ſeeing ye ſhall ſee, and not perceive. The words are a prophecy concerning the people of the Jews, which began to be accompliſhed in the times of Iſaiah; and were again fulfilled in the times of ſome after prophets; and had been in part fulfilled under the more plain and eaſy miniſtry of Chriſt; and was to have a further accompliſhment under this parabolical way of preaching; as it alſo was to have, and had, a yet further completion under the miniſtry of the apoſtles; ſee Acts xxviii. 26, 27. Rom. xi. 8. and the Judicial blindneſs here predicted was to go on among them, until the land of Judea was utterly deſtroyed by the Romans, and the cities and houſes thereof left without any inhabitants; all which accordingly came to paſs: for that this prophecy refers to the times of the Meſſiah, and to the people of the Jews, is clear from this one obſervation made by Chriſt himſelf, that Eſaias foretold thoſe things when he ſaw the glory of the Meſſiah, and ſpake of him, John xii. 40, 41. and becauſe it was to have, and had, its accompliſhment over and over again in that people, therefore the word αναπληρȣται, which may be rendered is fulfilled again, is made uſe of. The ſenſe of the prophecy is, with reſpect to the times of the Meſſiah, that the Jews, whilſt hearing the ſermons preached by him, whether with, or without parables, ſhould hear his voice, and the ſound of it, but not underſtand his words internally, ſpiritually, and experimentally; and whilſt they ſaw, with the eyes of their bodies, the miracles he wrought, they ſhould ſee the facts done, which could not be denied and gainſayed by them, but ſhould not take in the clear evidence, full proof, and certain demonſtration given thereby, of his Meſſiahſhip. In the prophecy of Iſaiah, the words run in the imperative, hear ye, ſee ye, &c. but are here rendered in the future, ſhall hear, ſhall ſee, &c. which rendering of the words is ſupported and eſtabliſhed by the verſion of the Septuagint, by the Chaldee paraphraſe, and by many Jewiſh commentators[l]; who allow, that the words in Iſaiah may be ſo underſtood, which is ſufficient to vindicate the citation of them, by the Evangeliſt, in this form of them.

---

[i] Vid. T. Bab. Megilla, fol. 24. 2. & Gloſſ. in ib.

[k] Abarbinel in Iſ. 29, 11.

[l] In R. David Kimchi in Iſ. vi. 9.

Ver. 15. For this peoples heart is waxed groſs, &c.] Or fat, become ſtupid and ſottiſh, and without underſtanding; and ſo uncapable of taking in the true ſenſe and meaning of what they ſaw with their eyes, and heard with their ears; for they had their outward ſenſes of hearing and ſeeing, and yet their intellectual powers were ſtupified. And their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have cloſed; which is expreſſive of the blindneſs and hardneſs, which were partly brought upon themſelves by their own wilfulneſs and obſtinacy, againſt ſuch clear evidence as aroſe from the doctrine and miracles of Chriſt; and partly from the righteous judgment of God, giving them up, for their perverſeneſs, to judicial blindneſs and obduracy; ſee John xii. 40. and are in the prophet aſcribed to the miniſtry of the word; that being deſpiſed, was in righteous judgment, the ſavour of death unto death, unto them; and they under it, as clay, under the influence of the ſun, grew harder and harder by it, ſtopping their ears, and ſhutting their eyes againſt it: leſt at any time they ſhould ſee with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and ſhould underſtand with their heart; which may be underſtod either of God's intention, and view, in giving them up to judicial blindneſs, and hardneſs of heart, under ſuch miracles, and ſuch a miniſtry, as a puniſhment for their wilful contempt of them; that ſo they might never have any true ſight, hearing, and underſtanding of theſe things, and be turned from the evil of their ways, have repentance unto life, and remiſſion of ſins; which ſeems to be the ſenſe of the other Evangeliſts, Mark iv. 12. Luke viii. 10. John xii. 40. or, as if theſe people purpoſely ſtupified themſelves, ſtopped their ears, and pulled away the ſhoulder, and wilfully ſhut their eyes; fearing they ſhould receive ſome conviction, light, and knowledge, and be converted by the power and grace of God: and I ſhould heal them; or, as in Mark, and their ſins ſhould be forgiven them; for healing of diſeaſes, and forgiveneſs of ſins, are, in ſcripture-language, one and the ſame thing; and this ſenſe of the phraſe here, is juſtified by the Chaldee paraphraſe, which renders it, וישתבק להון, and they be forgiven, or it be forgiven them, and by a Jewiſh commentator on the place; who interprets healing, of the healing of the ſoul, and adds והיא הסליחה, and this is pardon[m].

Ver. 16. But bleſſed are your eyes, for they ſee, &c.] Which is to be underſtood both of corporal and intellectual ſight: it was their happineſs to ſee Chriſt in the fleſh, and converſe with him in perſon, be eye-witneſſes of his majeſty, and ſee with their own eyes the miracles performed by him, the proofs and atteſtations of thoſe doctrines they were to publiſh to all the world; and it was ſtill their greater happineſs, that they ſaw his glory, as the glory of the only-begotten of the father, full of grace and truth: many ſaw him in the fleſh, as they did, with their bodily eyes, but ſaw no beauty, nor comelineſs in him, nothing amiable and deſirable in him; but theſe ſaw his perſonal and tranſcendent glories, as the ſon of God, his fulneſs as mediator, his ſuitableneſs as a ſaviour and redeemer, and all the characters of the Meſſiah in him; and ſo believed, and were ſure that he was the Chriſt, the ſon of the living God: they ſaw Chriſt, not in the promiſe, as Abraham, and other patriarchs did; nor through types and ſhadows, as the ſaints of the Old Teſtament did; to them it was given to know and underſtand the myſteries of grace, reſpecting the perſon, offices, obedience, ſufferings, and death of Chriſt. And your ears, for they hear. This alſo muſt be underſtood of corporal and intellectual hearing, another branch of their preſent happineſs. They heard the words of truth from the lips of that great prophet, Moſes ſaid ſhould riſe up among them, like unto him, whom they ſhould hear: they heard, with their own ears, a voice from heaven, declaring him to be the beloved ſon of God, in whom he was well pleaſed. They heard the Goſpel preached by him, not only ſo as to be affected with it, and give their aſſent to it, but alſo to underſtand it ſpiritually, and experimentally, and to bring forth the fruit of it; and ſo were that ſort of hearers, ſignified by the good ground in the parable Chriſt had juſt delivered. The forms of ſpeech, in which the happineſs of the diſciples is here expreſſed, ſeem to be in common uſe with the Jews, when they would extol the peculiar attainments of a man, eſpecially in matters of wiſdom, knowledge, and underſtanding. Thus, it being told R. Jochanan ben Zaccai of ſome perſons that had expounded the work of Mercavah, that is, the beginning of Ezekiel's prophecy, and the myſterious paſſages in it, and what befel them, expreſſed himſelf thus concerning them[n]; "bleſſed are you, and bleſſed are your "children, אשרי עיני שכך ראו, and bleſſed are the "eyes that ſo ſee." And elſewhere[o] mention being made of a book of ſecrets delivered to Solomon, and which he had underſtanding of, 'tis ſaid, "אשרי עין שראה ואוזן ששמע, bleſſed is the eye that "ſees, and the ear that hears, and the heart that "underſtands, and cauſes to underſtand, the wiſ- "dom of it."

Ver. 17. For verily I ſay unto you, &c.] This is added for the further confirmation of what is before ſaid, concerning the happineſs of the diſciples, in ſeeing and hearing what they did: that many prophets, and righteous men; Luke ſays, ch. x. 24. kings have deſired to ſee thoſe things which ye ſee, and have not ſeen them, and to hear thoſe things which ye hear, and have not heard them. To ſee Chriſt in the fleſh, and have a clearer inſight into the knowledge of the myſteries of grace, were things very deſirable to men of the higheſt claſs in church and ſtate, and of the beſt characters, ſuch as Abraham, John viii. 56. Jacob, Gen. xlix. 18. David, Pſ. xiv. 7. Solomon, and the church in his time, Cant. viii. 1. Iſaiah, and the ſaints with him, Iſ. xxv. 9. with many others. Theſe indeed had a ſight of Chriſt, but a very diſtant one; they ſaw him afar off in the promiſes, and prophecies of him; and not very clearly, but through dark types and cloudy ſacrifices; whereas the diſciples ſaw him in perſon, heard him preach, took in the evidence of his miracles, and felt the power of his doctrines, and ſpiritually and ſavingly underſtood them. A way of ſpeaking, ſomewhat like this, ſtands in the Talmud[p]; "Many "have watched to expound in Mercavah (the begin- "ning of Ezekiel's prophecy) ולא ראו אותה מימיהם, "and have not ſeen it all their days."

Ver. 18. Hear ye therefore the parable of the ſower.] That is, the interpretation of the parable; for they had heard the parable before, and had deſired an explanation of it; which, tho' not mentioned by Matthew, is, by the other Evangeliſts, Mark iv. 10. Luke viii. 9. and ſince it was given to them to know the myſteries of the kingdom of heaven, therefore Chriſt calls upon them to atttend unto, and hear, ſo as to underſtand the ſpiritual meaning of this parable. Mark relates, that he moreover ſaid to his diſciples, at this time, know ye not this parable? Do ye not underſtand the meaning of it, ſo eaſy to be taken in? as it were reproving them for their dulneſs of hearing, notwithſtanding the grace given them, and the advantages they enjoyed: how then will ye know all parables? all that he had delivered, or was about to deliver at this time, or ſhould hereafter; which were of more difficult interpretation, and not ſo eaſy to be underſtood as this.

---

[m] R. David Kimchi in loc.

[n] T. Bab, Chagiga, fol. 14. 2.

[o] Sepher Raziel, fol. 34. 1.

[p] T. Bab. Megilla, fol. 24. 2.

Ver. 19. When any one heareth the word of the kingdom, &c.] Hence it appears, that by the ſeed in the parable is meant the Goſpel, called the word of the kingdom; becauſe it treats of the king Meſſiah, of his perſon, office, and grace; and of his kingdom, and the adminiſtration of it by him, under the preſent diſpenſation; of the kingdom of grace ſaints enjoy now, and of the kingdom of heaven they ſhall enter into hereafter, thro' the grace and righteouſneſs of Chriſt. Now ſuch a hearer of this word is here deſcribed, who hears it accidentally, and only externally; hears the ſound of it with his ears, and underſtandeth it not with his heart. He is one that is careleſs and inattentive, negligent and forgetful; has ſome ſlight notions of things as he hears, but theſe paſs away as they come; his affections are not at all touched, nor his judgment informed by them, but remains as ſtupid, and as unconcerned as ever; his heart is not opened to attend to, and receive the word, but continues hard and obdurate; and is like the common and beaten road, that is trodden down by every one, and is not ſuſceptible of the ſeed, that falls upon it. Then cometh the wicked one, ſatan, the devil, Mark iv. 15. Luke viii. 12. who is, by way of eminency, ſo called, being the firſt creature that became wicked, and the worſt that is ſo; who is entirely and immutably wicked; whoſe whole work and employment lies in wickedneſs; and who was the original cauſe of the wickedneſs that is among men, and which he is continually inſtigating and promoting: ſo the Jews frequently call [q] Samael, by whom they mean the devil, Samael, הרשע, the wicked. This evil ſpirit, as ſoon as ever he obſerves one hearing the word, eſpecially that has not been uſed to attend, comes immediately, and, as he is hearing, catcheth away that which is ſown in his heart; not the grace of God, which being once implanted in the heart, can never be taken away by ſatan; but the word which was ſown, not in his underſtanding, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, nor even in his affections, ſo as to love it, delight, and take pleaſure in it; much leſs in his heart, ſo as to become the engrafted word able to ſave, or ſo as to believe in it, and in Chriſt revealed by it; but in his memory, and that but very ſlightly neither; for the heart ſometimes means the memory; ſee Luke ii. 51. Beſides, the word only fell upon, not into his heart, as into the good ground, as the metaphor in the parable ſhews; and it made no impreſſion, nor was it inwardly received, but as ſoon as ever dropped, was catched away by the enemy; not by frightening him out of it, by perſecution, as the ſtony ground hearer; nor by filling the mind with worldly cares, as the thorny ground hearer; but by various ſuggeſtions and temptations, darting in thoughts, preſenting objects, and ſo diverted his mind from the word, and fixed his attention elſewhere; which is done at once, at an unawares, ſecretly, and without any notice of the perſon himſelf; ſo that the word is entirely loſt to him, and he does not ſo much as remember the leaſt thing he has been hearing: this is he which received the ſeed by the way-ſide; ſuch an hearer is comparable to ſuch ground, on whom the word has no more effect, than ſeed ſown upon a common beaten path.

Ver. 20. But he that received the ſeed into ſtony places, &c.] Such a hearer, who is like to the ſtony ground on which the ſeed fell, is one that is not an accidental hearer of the word, as the former, but a ſettled, conſtant hearer of it; and not one that is careleſs and negligent, but diligent and attentive, and has ſome underſtanding of what he hears; the ſame is he that heareth the word, and anon with joy receiveth it: he is one that not only conſtantly attends upon it, but he receives it; he gives an aſſent to it, he believes in it hiſtorically, makes a profeſſion of his faith in it, and holds it for a while, being under ſome convictions of the truth of it: and having ſome ſpeculative notions of it, and light in his underſtanding and judgment in it, he has ſome flaſhes of natural affection for it, and delivers ſome outward expreſſions of pleaſure and delight in it, like Herod, and the hearers of John the Baptiſt; but has no heart-work, and ſo is like to the rock and ſtony ground; the natural hardneſs of his heart continues, it remains unbroken by the word, without any true ſenſe of ſin, and repentance for it, and deſtitute of ſpiritual life, and of true faith, love, and joy: hence, as his profeſſion is taken up in haſte, immediately, upon a flaſh of affection, and a little head-knowledge, it does not laſt long, nor prove honourable.

Ver. 21. Yet hath he not root in himſelf, &c.] Nor in Chriſt; the word is not rooted in him, nor has he the root of the matter, or the truth of grace in him: but dureth for a while; a hearer of the word, a profeſſor of religion, ſhewing ſome outward reſpect to the word, and to the preachers of it: for when tribulation or perſecution ariſeth, becauſe of the word; which is often the caſe, and muſt be expected by thoſe who embrace the Goſpel, profeſs the name of Chriſt, and are willing to live godly in him. Tribulation may intend ſome leſſer and lighter troubles for the ſake of Chriſt, and his Goſpel; ſuch as the revilings and reproaches of men, loſs of character, and trade, &c. and perſecution may deſign ſomething more public and vehement; ſuch as confiſcation of goods, impriſonment, and danger of life, the moſt exquiſite tortures, and death in the moſt cruel form and ſhape; things very diſagreeable to fleſh and blood, and which can't be endured, and ſubmitted to, by perſons without a principle of grace, by one that has no root in himſelf. Luke calls this a time of temptation, or trial, as it is either way, both by private troubles, and more publick perſecutions: theſe try mens principles and profeſſions, and whether the truth of grace is in them or no; and where it is not in any perſon, by and by he is offended; at the croſs; he ſhrinks back from it, does not care to take it up, and follow Chriſt; but drops his religion, and the profeſſion of it; apoſtatizes, falls away, and comes to nothing.

Ver. 22. He alſo that received ſeed among the thorns, &c.] The hearer that is like to the thorny ground, on which the ſeed fell, is he that heareth the word; not a profane ſinner, nor a reviler of religion, or a perſecutor of the ſaints; but one that not only ſhews a love to the word, but who ſeems to have his heart broken under it, and by it, his conſcience tender, and his life outwardly reformed; one, who beſides his being a ſettled, diligent, underſtanding, and affectionate hearer of the word, and a believing receiver and profeſſor of it, ſeems to have a thorough work of grace upon him, to have the fallow ground of his heart ploughed up, and to be truly contrite; the thorns being under ground, and not yet to be ſeen, but afterwards appear: and the care of this world; not the care of another world, nor a care about ſpiritual things in this world, nor even a proper, laudable care of the things of this preſent life, but an anxious and immoderate care of them; which, as thorns, is very perplexing and diſtreſſing to the perſons themſelves, and is what is vain and fruitleſs. And the deceitfulneſs of riches; in oppoſition to ſome riches, the riches of grace and glory, which have no deceit in them: and not riches themſelves, bare worldly riches, but the deceitfulneſs of them, is here taken notice of; for riches often delude, and lead perſons out of the right way, out of God's way; cauſe them to err from the faith; they don't give the ſatisfaction they promiſe, and often don't continue, as is expected: and are as thorns, pungent to the owners of them, who pierce themſelves thro' with many ſorrows in acquiring and keeping them; and are frequently injurious to others, their fellow-creatures; and in the iſſue are uſeleſs and unprofitable, eſpecially with reſpect to the concerns of another world. Mark adds, and the luſts of other things; beſides riches; and Luke adds, and pleaſures of this life; meaning divers other worldly luſts and pleaſures, ſuch as the luſt of the fleſh, the luſt of the eyes, and the pride of life; which alſo, like thorns, are diſtracting and afflicting, ſooner or later; are vain, and unprofitable, and lead to deſtruction: and theſe are called the pleaſures of this life, in oppoſition to, and diſtinction from the pleaſures of that which is to come, which are real and laſting: the phraſe is Jewiſh[r]; “ ſays R. Judah, the prince, “ whoever takes upon him, תענוגי העולם הזה, “ the pleaſures of this world, to him are denied the “ pleaſures of the world to come: and whoever “ does not take upon him the pleaſures of this world, “ to him are given the pleaſures of the world to “ come.” Now theſe, all, and each of them, choke the word; by overſpreading all the powers and faculties of the ſoul, as thorns do a field; by overtopping the ſeed of the word, and by hiding it from the influences of the ſun of righteouſneſs, and rain of grace; and by attracting every thing in the heart to themſelves; and by bearing and preſſing down all thought, concern, and care for the uſe, fruitfulneſs, and increaſe of the word. And he becometh unfruitful; as in ſuch circumſtances he muſt needs be; or if there be any ſhew of fruit in outward reſpect to the word, in an hiſtorical faith of it, in an external profeſſion, and outward reformation, yet brings not fruit to perfection, as Luke ſays; theſe in proceſs of time ſhrivel up, wither away, and come to nothing.

---

[q] Sepher Bahir apud Zohar in Gen. fol. 27. 2. Debarim Rabba, fol. 145. 3.

Ver. 23. But he that received ſeed into the good ground, &c.] The hearer compared to good ground into which the ſeed fell, is he that heareth the word, and underſtandeth it; has a new and ſpiritual underſtanding given him, feels the power of it on his heart, enlightening and quickening him; has an application of it made to him by the Spirit of God, and can diſcern the worth and excellency of it, and diſtinguiſh it from all others; and, as Mark ſays, receives it; as the word of God, in faith, and with the love of it, and with all readineſs and meekneſs; and, as Luke obſerves, keeps it; holds it faſt againſt all oppoſition with great ſtruggling; will not part with it at any rate, nor depart from it in the leaſt, nor entertain any doubt about it; but abides by it, ſtands faſt in it, and is valiant for it: and this he does in, and with an honeſt and good heart; which no man naturally has; nor can any man make his heart ſo: this is the work of God, and is owing to his efficacious grace. This is an heart of fleſh, a new and right heart, and ſpirit; an heart to fear God, to love him, and to truſt in him; in which Chriſt dwells by faith; in which the Spirit of God has his temple; and in which every grace is implanted: and ſuch an one, as he hears with a ſtrict, and an honeſt intention, and in the exerciſe of grace; ſo he holds faſt the word he hears, underſtands and receives, with all faithfulneſs and honeſty: which alſo beareth fruit and bringeth forth, ſome an hundred fold, ſome ſixty, and ſome thirty: the fruit bore, and brought forth by ſuch an hearer, is the true fruit of grace and righteouſneſs, and is all from Chriſt, under the influences of the Spirit, thro' the word and ordinances, as means, and iſſues in the glory of God; and tho' not brought forth in the ſame quantity in all, yet is of the ſame quality; and is brought forth, as Luke ſays, with patience; conſtantly, and continually, in all ſeaſons, in old age, and even unto death; and is at laſt brought to perfection, holds, and remains unto the end.

Ver. 24. Another parable put he forth unto them, ſaying, &c.] Somewhat like the former, but with a different view: for whereas the deſign of the former was to ſhew the different ſorts of hearers that attend upon the miniſtry of the word, three parts in four being bad; this is to ſhew the difference of members in churches, ſome being comparable to good ſeed, and others to tares. The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man which ſowed good ſeed in his field: by the kingdom of heaven, is not meant the ultimate glory of the ſaints in heaven, or the ſtate of happineſs in the other world; for there will be no tares there; nor the Goſpel, and the miniſtration of it, but the Goſpel-diſpenſation, and times, and kingdom of the Meſſiah; or rather the Goſpel viſible church-ſtate on earth, called a kingdom, of which Chriſt is king, and in which the ſaints are ſubject to him; where proper laws are made for the orderly government of it, and proper officers appointed to explain, and put thoſe laws in execution; and which conſiſts of various perſons, united under one head, and independant of any other government: and it is ſtiled the kingdom of heaven, in diſtinction from the kingdoms of this world; the ſubjects of it are, or ſhould be, heavenborn ſouls; the word, laws, and ordinances of it are from heaven; and there is ſome reſemblance between a Goſpel church-ſtate and heaven, and it is very near unto it, and is even the ſuburbs of it: or elſe the king Meſſiah himſelf is intended, who is compared to a man, a ſower; and ſo it is explained, ver. 37. he that ſoweth the good ſeed is the ſon of man; which is a name and title of the Meſſiah, by which he is called both in the Old and New Teſtament; who, tho' the ſeed of the woman, yet was the ſon of man, as of Abraham, and David; and which denotes the truth, and yet the infirmity of his human nature: he is the ſower that went about preaching the Goſpel of the kingdom, in the Jewiſh world, or throughout Judea and Galilee, in his own perſon; and who alſo, by the miniſtry of his apoſtles, ſowed the ſeed of the word in the ſeveral parts of the world, which was made effectual for the beginning of a good work of grace on the ſouls of many; for by his field is meant the world, as appears from ver. 38. and means either the whole world, in which both good and bad men live and dwell; and is the field Chriſt is the proprietor of, both by creation, as God, and by gift, as mediator: or the church, the viſible Goſpel church-ſtate throughout the world; which is as a field well tilled and manured; and is Chriſt's by gift, purchaſe, and grace: and by the good ſeed ſown in it, are meant the children of the kingdom; as is ſaid, ver. 38. ſuch as have a good work begun in them, and bring forth good fruit in their lives and converſations.

---

[r] Abot R. Nathan, c. 28. Vid. Kimchi & Ben Melech in Pſ. xvi. 5. & Aben Ezra in Pſ. xix. 10.

Ver. 25. But while men ſlept, &c.] Good men, miniſters, and churches; whoſe caſe this ſometimes is to be aſleep in a ſpiritual ſenſe: and which ſleepineſs lies in a non-exerciſe of grace; in a ſluggiſhneſs to, and in duty; in a contentment in external exerciſes of religion; in luke-warmneſs about the cauſe of Chriſt; in an unconcernedneſs about ſins, of omiſſion and commiſſion; and in a willingneſs to continue in ſuch a ſtate: and which ariſes from a body of ſin and death; from worldly cares; wearineſs in ſpiritual duties; a ceſſation from ſpiritual exerciſes; an abſenting from ſpiritual company; oftentimes from outward eaſe, peace, and plenty; ſometimes from a long expectation of the bridegroom's coming, and the delay of it; and from its being a night-ſeaſon, a time of darkneſs and ſecurity: ſuch a caſe with the church, and good men, is very dangerous, as it expoſes to every ſin and ſnare; renders them liable to loſe the preſence of Chriſt, their livelineſs and comfort; and tends to poverty and leanneſs of ſoul: ſuch are in danger of being ſurprized with the midnight cry; and the churches are likely to be filled with hypocrites and hereticks: his enemy came; by whom is meant the devil, ver. 39. who is an enemy to Chriſt perſonal, and ſhewed himſelf to be ſo in his infancy, by ſtirring up Herod to ſeek his life; and, when grown up, by inſtigating the Jews to contrive his death; which they attempted by various methods, and which, at laſt, he compaſſed by Judas, and the Scribes and Phariſees: and alſo to Chriſt myſtical, to the church, and all true believers; whoſe adverſary he is, going about, like a roaring lion, ſeeking whom he may devour: the ſame came into the field, the world, and church in it; and ſowed tares among the wheat: by the wheat, is meant the ſame with the good ſeed, the children of God, true believers in Chriſt; who are comparable to wheat, for the choiceneſs of it, that being the choiceſt grain, ſo they are the choſen of God, and precious, and the excellent in the earth; and becauſe it dies before it riſes and ſprings up, ſo the ſaints do, and will do, both in a ſpiritual and corporal ſenſe; and becauſe of the purity and whiteneſs of it, ſo they are pure and white, being ſanctified by the Spirit, waſhed in the blood of Chriſt, and juſtified by his righteouſneſs; and becauſe of its ſubſtance, fulneſs, weight, and permanence, ſo they are filled from Chriſt's fulneſs, and with the fulneſs of God, and fruits of righteouſneſs, and remain, and can't be driven away as the chaff is, but continue to live, becauſe Chriſt their head lives; and becauſe of its gradual increaſe, ſo they increaſe in ſpiritual light, grace, and experience; and becauſe of the chaff that adheres to it, ſo ſin and corruption cleave to the ſaints in this life; and laſtly, becauſe it needs both the flail and the fan, ſo believers need chaſtiſements, afflictions, and corrections: by the tares ſown among them, are meant the children of the wicked one; ſatan, the enemy and adverſary, as in ver. 38. who are to be underſtood, not of profane ſinners; tho', theſe are the children of the devil; but of profeſſors of religion, men either of bad principles, or of bad lives and converſations; whom ſatan, by ſome means or another, gets into churches, and they become members thereof: at firſt they look like wheat, like true believers, have a ſhew of religion, a form of godlineſs, an appearance of grace, but are deſtitute of it; and prove tares, unfruitful, unprofitable, and of no account, yea hurtful, and whoſe end is to be burned. And went his way; ſomewhere elſe, to do more miſchief; and having done all he could at preſent here, undiſcovered; not taken notice of by miniſters and churches; they being all aſleep, and having loſt, in a great meaſure, the Spirit of diſcerning. The word ζιζανια, we render tares, and the Ethiopic verſion thiſtles, probably means the ſame the Jewiſh doctors call זונין, Zunin[s]; and which, they ſay, is a ſort of wheat, and not of a different kind from it; that when it is ſown it looks like wheat, and is ſown for it, but is changed in the earth, both as to its nature and form, and brings forth this kind. In the generation in which the flood was, they ſay[t], they ſowed wheat, and the earth brought forth זונין, ζιζανια, what we render tares, and bids fair to be what is here meant; and fitly expreſſes falſe profeſſors, nominal chriſtians, men of degenerate principles and practices: for not what we call tares or vetches, can be meant, which may be removed from the wheat without danger, but rather this degenerate wheat; or that wheat which is blaſted, and which may be obſerved ſometimes to grow upon the ſame root, and therefore can't be taken away, without rooting up the wheat alſo.

Ver. 26. But when the blade was ſprung up, &c.] That is, the blade of the wheat; which deſigns the taking up a profeſſion of religion on principles of grace, called a profeſſion of faith; and when right, it ſprings up from, and proceeds upon a work begun in the heart: and ſuch a profeſſion ought to be made by all that are partakers of the grace of God; and ought to be made both verbally, by a confeſſion of the mouth, and a declaration of the work of God upon the heart, and by deeds, by ſubmitting to the ordinances of the Goſpel; and ſhould be ſincere, and from the heart, and be viſible to men, and be held faſt unto the end, without wavering. And brought forth fruit; which intends not the converſion of ſinners, nor the performance of duties, nor the perfection of grace, but the firſt appearances of grace under a profeſſion; ſuch as ſorrow for ſin, after a godly ſort, fear and reverence of God, great humility, much ſelf-denial, ardent love to Chriſt, pantings and breathings after him, and communion with him, ſtrong affection for the people of God, ſome exerciſe of faith on Chriſt, zeal for his cauſe and intereſt, and a concern to honour and glorify God. Then appeared the tares alſo. They were not diſcernible for ſome time when they were firſt ſown; they looked like good ſeed when they firſt appeared among the people of God; they ſeemed to have the truth of grace, as others had; their blade of profeſſion, when it ſprung up, looked like that of true wheat; but were now diſcernible both by their unfruitfulneſs in their lives and converſations, and by their bad principles, which they now endeavoured to ſpread, to the hurt of the churches where they were: they always appeared to be what they were to God the ſearcher of hearts; but now, thro' the zeal of true converts, to which theſe oppoſed themſelves, and the fruitfulneſs of their lives, from which they were ſo very different, they became manifeſt to miniſters and churches.

---

[s] Miſn. Kilaim, c. 1. §. 1. & Trumot, c. 2. §. 6. & Maimon. in ib. T. Hieroſ. Kilaim, fol. 26. 4. Maimon. Hilch. Kilaim, c. 3. §. 3.

[t] Bereſhit Rabba, §. 28. fol. 23. 4.

Ver. 27. So the ſervants of the houſholder came, &c.] Chriſt is the houſholder; the houſe of which he is maſter is the church, called the houſhold of God, the houſhold of faith, the family in heaven, and in earth; in which houſe he bears and ſuſtains many relations, as thoſe of a ſon, a prieſt, a maſter, or governor. By the ſervants that came to him, are meant, not civil magiſtrates, who have nothing to do in the affairs of churches; nor the angels, tho' theſe are miniſtring ſervants to Chriſt, and will be employed by him, in the cloſe of time, to gather up the tares, bind them in bundles, and caſt them into the fire; but the miniſters of the Goſpel, the ſervants of Chriſt, and of the moſt high God, who are made uſe of in planting, and ſowing, and weeding his field, the church: theſe obſerving the tares, and fearing the danger the wheat was in by them, as well as troubled and ſurprized at the appearance and growth of them, came to him, and ſpread the caſe before him in prayer; and ſaid unto him, ſir, didſt thou not ſow good ſeed in thy field? from whence then hath it tares? Their manner of addreſs, calling him ſir, or lord, is expreſſive of their reverence of him, and obedience to him; and which is ſaid, not in word only, but in the ſincerity of their hearts, and under the influence of the Spirit of God. They aſcribe the field, the church, the good ſeed, converts that ſprung up in it, and the ſowing, or making of them ſuch, all to Chriſt, and not any of this kind, or any part of it to themſelves; though they were employed by him in tilling this field, in ſowing ſpiritual things to the ſaints, and were uſeful to them in their profeſſion of religion. Moreover, they intimate, that nothing but good could come from Chriſt; no bad ſeed, no tares could be of his ſowing; and declare their ignorance of the riſe of them; which ignorance was owing to their being aſleep, when the enemy ſowed them.

Ver. 28. He ſaid unto them, an enemy has done this, &c.] This is the anſwer of the houſholder to the queſtion of his ſervants. In the Greek text it is, an enemy man; and is ſo rendered in the ſeveral verſions; meaning, not that the enemy was a man; for he was the devil, as in ver. 39. but it is an Hebraiſm; ſuch as in Eſth. vii. 6. איש צר ואויב, the man adverſary and enemy is this wicked Haman; and ſignifies a certain enemy, and one indeed that is an implacable enemy to man. The ſervants ſaid unto him, wilt thou then that we go and gather them up? which words expreſs the concern of the miniſters of Chriſt for the true members of the church, comparable to wheat, leſt they ſhould receive any damage by the ill examples, and pernicious principles of evil men among them; alſo their deteſtation and abhorrence of men of wicked lives and erroneous principles; they can't bear them which are evil; likewiſe, they ſhew great regard to the glory of God, and intereſt of religion, and their readineſs to execute any orders Chriſt ſhould give them; but not willing to proceed of themſelves, aſk counſel and advice of him.

Ver. 29. But he ſaid, nay, &c.] The anſwer is in the negative; and which, if ſpoken to angels, is to be underſtood, that they ſhould not inflict puniſhments, or pour out their vials, as yet, on formal profeſſors, leſt the righteous ſhould ſhare in them; and if to magiſtrates, the ſenſe of it is, that they ſhould not perſecute with the ſword, or put men to death for heretical opinions; but if to miniſters of the word, which ſenſe I chuſe, the meaning is, that not every one ſuſpected to be a tare, or a nominal profeſſor, is to be removed from the communion of the church, becauſe there is often danger in ſo doing: leſt while ye gather up the tares, ye root up alſo the wheat with them: not that men of openly ſcandalous lives are to be tolerated in churches; they are to be withdrawn from, and put away; nor men of known, avowed, heretical principles; ſuch, after the firſt and ſecond admonition, are to be rejected: yet there may be ſuch in churches, not altogether agreeable in principle and practice, whoſe character and ſituation may be ſuch, that there is no removing them without offending ſome truly gracious, uſeful perſons, in whoſe affections they ſtand, who may be tempted, by ſuch a ſtep, to leave their communion; and ſo can't be done without a conſiderable prejudice to the church. The ſcope of the parable, and the deſign of our Lord in it, are chiefly to be attended to; which are to ſhew, that a pure and perfect church can't be expected in the preſent ſtate of things; and that ſaints ſhould not be immoderately uneaſy, but patiently bear ſuch exerciſes, until Chriſt's time is come to relieve them, when the tares and chaff ſhall be ſeparated from the wheat; when ſinners ſhall not ſtand in the congregation of the righteous, and there ſhall be no more a pricking briar, nor a grieving thorn in the houſe of Iſrael.

Ver. 30. Let both grow together until the harveſt, &c.] By the harveſt, is meant the end of the world, ver. 39. either of the Jewiſh world, the diſſolution of their church and ſtate, which was near; or of a man's life, which is the end of the world to him; or rather of this preſent world, the ſyſtem of the univerſe, of the material world, as to its preſent form and uſe, and of the inhabitants of it, and of time in it. Now the end of the world is compared to harveſt, becauſe the time of it is fixed and ſettled; tho' it is not known when it will be, yet it is as certain, as the time of harveſt; and becauſe as that is in the ſummer ſeaſon, in hot weather, ſo this will be a time of wrath, when the day of the Lord will burn like an oven; and as the harveſt-time is a time of hurry and labour, ſo will it be in the end of the world, eſpecially with the angels, who will be gathering the elect from the four winds, and all men, to appear before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt; and as at harveſt the corn is cut down, the fields cleared, and all brought home, ſo it will be at the end of the world; the ſickle will be thruſt in, and the earth reaped, the tares bound in bundles, and caſt into the fire, and the wheat gathered into the garner; and as the harveſt, as it falls out to be good or bad, is matter of joy or ſorrow, ſo will the end of the world be, joy to ſaints, who will then enter into the joy of their Lord, and be for ever with him, and ſorrow to the wicked, who will then go into everlaſting puniſhment. 'Till this time, wheat and tares are to grow together. The wheat, or true believers, grow in the exerciſe of grace, as of faith, hope, love, humility, &c. and in ſpiritual knowledge of the will of God, of the doctrines of Grace, and of Chriſt; which growth is owing to the dews of divine grace, to the ſun of righteouſneſs ſhining upon them, to the gracious influences of the bleſſed Spirit, and to the word and ordinances as means. The tares, or nominal profeſſors, may grow in riches, in credit, and reputation among men, and in ſpeculative knowledge; and oftentimes ſo it is, that they grow worſe and worſe, both in doctrinal and practical wickedneſs: when they are ordered to grow together, the meaning ing is, not that their growth is equal, or of the ſame kind, nor in the ſame way, nor in the ſame things; but this only notes the time and duration of their growth: nor is this ſuffered and permitted, becauſe of any love God has unto them, or any delight in, or approbation of them; but either becauſe they are not fully ripe for ruin; or for the exerciſe of the ſaints, and for their temporal and ſpiritual good; for it is entirely a tender regard to the wheat, and not to the tares, that they are ordered to grow together. And in the time of harveſt, I will ſay to the reapers, the angels, ver. 39. gather ye together firſt the tares; that is, formal profeſſors, hypocrites, and hereticks; whom he will have removed out of his kingdom, his church, his field, in the world: and this order ſhews, that the angels will have a perfect and exact knowledge of theſe perſons; and that their work will be to ſeparate them from the righteous; when the churches will be pure, and without ſpot, or wrinkle: and this will be done firſt; that is, theſe wicked men will be firſt removed out of the church, before their more ſevere puniſhment takes place: and bind them in bundles to burn them; which denotes the power of angels over theſe perſons, the certainty and inevitableneſs of their ruin, their aſſociation together, and their deſtruction in company with one another; which will be an aggravation of their miſery, which is expreſſed by burning with fire; not material, but metaphorical; the wrath of God, which will be a conſuming fire, and be everlaſting and unquenchable. But gather the wheat into my barn; meaning the kingdom of heaven, which is as a garner or repoſitory, in which none but wheat is put, and where it is ſafe and lies together: ſo none but righteous, pure, and undefiled perſons, are admitted into heaven; and being there, they are ſafe, and out of the reach of all enemies; and what adds to their happineſs is, that they are together, enjoying all ſatiety and fulneſs; and are in Chriſt's barn, or garner, which he has made, and prepared for their reception. The gathering of them into it, deſigns the introduction of the ſaints into heaven by angels, as their ſouls at death, and both ſouls and bodies, at the laſt day, when their happineſs will be perfect and compleat.

Ver. 31. Another parable put he forth unto them, ſaying, &c.] As the former parable ſets forth the condition of the Goſpel church ſtate until the end of the world; this expreſſes the ſmall beginnings of it, and the large increaſe and growth of it, and its great uſefulneſs to the ſaints. The kingdom of heaven is like to a grain of muſtard ſeed, which a man took and ſowed in his field; by the kingdom of heaven is meant, as before, the Goſpel diſpenſation, or the Goſpel church ſtate, and the miniſtry of the word, and adminiſtration of ordinances in it: by the grain of muſtard ſeed, either the Goſpel, or the people of God, or the grace of God in them; and by the man that took and ſowed it, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; and by his field, in which he ſowed it, the world, or his church throughout the world.

Ver. 32. Which indeed is the leaſt of all ſeeds, &c.] So muſtard with the Jews [v], is called מין זרעים, a kind of ſeeds; and being very ſmall, hence, כחרדל, as a grain of muſtard, is often uſed proverbially [w], for the leaſt thing, as it is by Chriſt, Matt. xvii. 20. Luke xvii. 6. Not but there are ſeeds leſſer than this; but the meaning is, that this is one of the leaſt of all ſeeds; or was the leaſt of ſeeds, which were commonly known in Judea; or the very leaſt which grew to the bigneſs this ſometimes did, and as here related. Now this is deſigned to expreſs the ſmall beginnings of the Goſpel diſpenſation, of the miniſtry of the word, of the grace of God in the hearts of his people, and of the ſmall number of them at firſt. The Goſpel, and the miniſtry of it, were like a grain of muſtard ſeed, little, mean, and contemptible; the author of it, Chriſt, was ſo to the Jews, in his birth, parentage, education, and outward appearance; the ſubject of it a crucified Chriſt, and ſalvation by him; and the doctrines out of the reach, and contrary to carnal reaſon; the preachers of it, were perſons of very mean and low life, few in number, weak, illiterate, and deſpicable, and the whole world againſt them; the circumſtances which attended the Goſpel, were very diſcouraging; it was charged with novelty, repreſented as contrary to common ſenſe, and the reaſon of mankind, and as opening a door to licentiouſneſs; and was followed with violent oppoſition and perſecution, wherever it went. The grace of God, which under the miniſtry of the word is implanted in the hearts of the Lord's people, is at firſt very ſmall, like a grain of muſtard ſeed; it is a day of ſmall things; faith in Chriſt is very weak and low, ſpiritual ſtrength ſmall, comfort little, experience of the love of God not large, light and knowledge in the doctrines of grace, but very obſcure and glimmering: the church of God, which ſprung up under the miniſtry of the word, and through the work of grace, upon the hearts of particular perſons, was like the ſmall grain of muſtard ſeed; the perſons of which it conſiſted, were but few in number, in Chriſt's time, and at his aſcenſion into heaven, and when the Goſpel was firſt preached among the Gentiles; and thoſe perſons which laid the foundation, and were at the beginning of the goſpel church ſtate, made a very contemptible figure, by reaſon of their outward poverty, and mean circumſtances in the world; and on account of the ſevere perſecutions which every where attended them; and alſo through the errors and hereſies introduced by evil men, that crept in among them. But when it is grown, it is the greateſt among herbs, and becometh a tree. Luke ſays, a great tree, ch. xiii. 19. for to ſuch a bigneſs did the muſtard-tree grow in the land of Judea, of which take the following inſtances [x]. "At Shichin "there was a muſtard-ſtalk, which had three "branches, and one of them was cut down, and "they covered a potter's booth with it; and found "in it, שלשת קבין של חרדל, three kabs of muſtard ſeed (elſewhere [y] it is ſaid, nine kabs.) Says "R. Simeon ben Chelphetha, I have one ſtalk of "muſtard ſeed in my field, and I go up to it, "כעולה בראש התאנה, as one goes up to the top of "a fig-tree." And though the muſtard-tree grew to this height and bigneſs, it was reckoned among herbs, as here by Chriſt; for they ſay [z], "they "don't put muſtard in a field of fruits, but in a "field of herbs." All which ſerve to illuſtrate and confirm, the account here given by Chriſt, and alluded to; and which expreſſes the very large growth and increaſe of the Goſpel, and the miniſtry of it; of the grace of God in the heart, and of the church of Chriſt, and his intereſt in the world: of the Goſpel, and the miniſtry of it, as to its large ſpread in the world; which at firſt was confined to the Jews, but was afterwards publiſhed to the Gentiles, and carried through the whole world; and in ages ſince, has made a conſiderable progreſs, particularly at the reformation; and will make a much greater one, towards the end of time: and of the grace of God in the heart, which gradually increaſes to a full aſſurance of underſtanding of hope, and of faith, and to the meaſure of the ſtature of the fullneſs of Chriſt: and of the church of Chriſt, and his intereſt in the world; both as to the large numbers it did conſiſt of in the times of the apoſtles, and ſince, and will more eſpecially hereafter; for the church will fill the earth, and the kingdoms of the world, will become the church, and all nations of the earth will flock unto it; the people of the Jews in general will be converted, and the fulneſs of the Gentiles will be brought in: as alſo with reſpect to the figure it will make, through the great perſonages, the kings and princes of the earth, that will be in it; the great power and authority the ſaints will then have; the peace and proſperity that will be enjoyed by them; the ſpirituality, holineſs, righteouſneſs, love, and unity, there will be among them; as alſo the preſence of God and of the Lamb, they will be favoured with; all which glory and happineſs, will be brought about by a plentiful effuſion of the Spirit, and by the glorious appearance of Chriſt. So that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof: by the birds of the air, ſome think angels are meant, compared to birds for their harmleſneſs and innocence; for their readineſs and ſwiftneſs to do the will of God; and for their warbling notes and tuneful ſongs of praiſe; and who may be called birds of the air, or heaven, becauſe of their habitation: now theſe delight to be in the church, to be under the ſhadow of the Goſpel miniſtry, and to look into the myſteries of it. Though rather, the ſaints and people of God are intended, who in ſcripture, are ſometimes compared to particular birds; as to the eagle, the dove, and ſparrow; and to birds in general, becauſe timorous, weak, and defenceleſs, are expoſed to danger, and wonderfully delivered, and are very ſubject to wander and go aſtray; and becauſe of their chirpings, and ſinging ſongs of praiſe to their God and Redeemer; and to birds of the air or heaven, becauſe they are heaven-born ſouls, are partakers of the heavenly calling, and are preſſing for, and ſoaring aloft towards the high calling of God in Chriſt: now the Goſpel miniſtry, and the Goſpel church ſtate, are very uſeful to theſe; they come thereunto willingly, and chearfully, deliberately, and with dependance on the grace and ſtrength of Chriſt; humbly, under a ſenſe of their own unworthineſs, and yet with joy and thankfulneſs; heartily, and with their faces thitherwards, and they alſo lodge therein. This is what they deſire, and their hearts are ſet upon; here they determine to be, and it is their happineſs to be here; the ſhadow of Goſpel ordinances is very delightful, very refreſhing, and very fruitful to them, and under which ſaints dwell with great ſafety; and what a coming of theſe birds will there be hither, and a tabernacling of them herein, at the latter day! which are greatly deſigned in this part of the parable.

---

[v] Miſn. Kilaim, c. 3. §. 2.

[w] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 31. 1. Megilla, fol. 28. 2. Nidda, fol. 66. 1.

[x] T. Hieroſ. Peah, fol. 20. 2.

[y] T. Bab. Cetubot, fol. 111. 2.

[z] Miſn. Kilaim, c. 2. §. 8.

Ver. 33. Another parable ſpake he unto them, &c.] To the diſciples and the multitude, and which was of the ſame kind, to the ſame purpoſe, and relating to the ſame ſubject as the former; the ſpread of the Goſpel, and the increaſe of it in the world. The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven. The word leaven, is every where elſe uſed in a bad ſenſe; and either deſigns immorality, as malice and wickedneſs, or falſe doctrine, ſuch as that of the Phariſees and Sadducees: but here it ſeems to be taken in a good ſenſe, and the Goſpel to be compared unto it; not for its diſagreeable qualities, but on account of its ſmall quantity; 'tis a little leaven that leavens the whole lump, and may expreſs as the grain of muſtard ſeed does, the ſmall beginnings of the Goſpel, and its meanneſs in the eyes of men; and on account of its piercing, penetrating, and ſpreading nature; ſo the Goſpel reaches the conſcience, pierces the heart, enlightens the underſtanding, informs the judgment, raiſes and ſets the affections on right objects, ſubdues the will, and brings down all towering thoughts, to the obedience of Chriſt, in particular perſons; and has penetrated and made its way, under divine influence, through towns, cities, kingdoms, and nations: alſo on account of its heating, ſwelling, and aſſimilating nature; ſo the Goſpel, where it takes place, warms the affections, cauſes the heart to burn within, inſpires with zeal for God, and Chriſt, and the Goſpel; it ſwells and fills churches with ſuch as ſhall be ſaved, and aſſimilates the ſeveral perſons it operates in, makes them like one another, one bread, one body, having like precious faith, knowledge, and experience, though in a different degree. Which a woman took and hid in three meaſures of meal. By the three meaſures of meal, are meant the elect of God; who, becauſe of their nature and quality, are compared to meal, or fine flour; and that becauſe of that of which it is made, wheat, to a corn of which Chriſt is compared, John xii. 24. and by whoſe grace the ſaints are what they are, juſtified, regenerated, and ſanctified; and on account of the manner it becomes ſo, as by grinding the wheat, ſiſting it when ground, and ſeparating it from the bran; all which, may expreſs the firſt convictions in the conſcience of awakened ſinners, the grace of God in converſion, and the ſeparation of them from the reſt of the world, in effectual vocation; as alſo by reaſon of its choiceneſs, purity, and goodneſs, the ſaints being choſen of God and precious, and being pure and ſpotleſs, through the grace and righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and being highly valued, and had in great eſteem by him; and becauſe of their quantity, are compared to three meaſures of meal. The meaſure here deſigned, is the Hebrew ſeah, which held a gallon and a half, and three of theſe made an ephah; and which is often rendered by the [a] Targumiſts, תלת סאין, three ſeahs, or meaſures, the very phraſe here uſed; and the reaſon why three are particularly mentioned is, becauſe ſuch a quantity uſed to be fermented and kneaded by women at one time; ſee Gen. xviii. 6. and for the further illuſtration of this, take the following paſſage out of the Talmud [b]. “The wiſe men ſay, that three women may be employed in one lump of dough; one may knead it, another may make it into loaves, and another may bake it——and it is a tradition, בחיטין שלשת קבין, that in wheat they uſe three kabs, or meaſures, and in barley four kabs.” Theſe meaſures, as here uſed parabolically, may deſign the ſmall number of God's elect; and as ſome have thought, may have reſpect to the three then known parts of the world, where they were, or ſhould be: by the woman that took and hid the leaven in theſe meaſures, is meant, either the church, ſometimes compared to a woman in ſcripture, Rev. xii. 1. or the miniſters of the Goſpel, wiſdom's maidens; or rather, Jeſus Chriſt, the wiſdom of God; ſee Prov. ix. 1, 2, 3. and the reaſon why a woman is mentioned is, becauſe it was, with the Jews, the work of women to ferment the flour, knead the dough, and make the bread: and this action of taking and covering the leaven in the meal, may denote the power of Chriſt, in opening the heart, and putting in the Goſpel, which unleſs he takes in hand, and uſes, is ineffectual; as alſo the paſſiveneſs of men, under the firſt workings of the Spirit of Chriſt upon their ſouls, by the Goſpel; and likewiſe, the ſecret and inviſible power of divine grace, operating by the miniſtry of the word, upon the heart. 'Till the whole was leavened: to be leavened by the Goſpel, is to be evangelized by it, to be brought into the life and liberty of it, to a Goſpel way of living by faith on Chriſt; to derive all peace, joy, and comfort from him, and not from any works of righteouſneſs; and to have a man's obedience influenced by the love of God, ſo as to do it chearfully, and without dependance on it. Now the Goſpel, where it has entrance and takes place, powerfully and effectually, continues to operate more or leſs, as the leaven in the meal, until the whole man, ſoul and body, all the faculties of the ſoul, and members of the body, are influenced by it; and will continue with power and efficacy in the world, and church, until all the elect of God are wrought upon by it, and are brought in. There is a late ingenious interpretation [c] of this parable, which, ſince the word leaven is elſewhere always uſed in a bad ſenſe, deſerves conſideration; according to which, this parable expreſſes not the ſpread of truth, but of error: by the woman is thought to be meant, the Apocalyptic woman, the woman ſpoken of in the Revelations, the whore of Rome, the mother of harlots; and the leaven which ſhe took, the leaven of falſe doctrine and diſcipline; by her hiding it, the private, ſecret, artful methods, falſe doctrines, and bad diſcipline were introduced, and the gradual progreſs thereof; and by the three meaſures of meal, the biſhops and doctors of the church, among whom this leaven was ſpread, and who was fermented with it; particularly thoſe three biſhops of Rome at firſt, Soſymus, John the faſter, and Boniface the third; which by degrees ſpread itſelf, until the whole Chriſtian world was affected with it; and for a long time lay hid and undiſcovered, till the Lord raiſed up Wiclef, John Huſs, Jerom of Prague, Luther, and other reformers. The reader may chuſe which interpretation he likes beſt.

---

[a] Targum Onkelos & Jarchi, in Exod. xvi. 36. & Targum Jon. in Ruth ii. 17.

[b] T. Hieroſ. Peſachim, fol. 30. 2.

Ver. 34. All theſe things ſpake Jeſus unto the multitude, &c.] In the hearing of his diſciples, whilſt in the ſhip, the multitude being on the ſhore, in parables; in the four foregoing ones; and without a parable ſpake he not unto them: not that he never had preached but in a parabolical way unto them, or that he never did afterwards uſe any other way of ſpeaking; for it is certain, that both before and after, he delivered himſelf plainly, and without figures: but the meaning is, that in that ſermon, and at that time, he thought fit to make uſe of no other method, as appears from the many other parables he afterwards delivered; and though he explained the meaning of ſome of them to his diſciples, at their requeſt, yet he diſmiſſed the multitude without any explication of them.

Ver. 35. That it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by the prophet, &c.] Not Iſaiah, as ſome copies in the times of Jerom read, but Aſaph, who is called Aſaph the Seer, 2 Chron. xxix. 30. which is all one as a prophet; viſion is one ſort of prophecy [d]; and there was ſuch a thing as propheſying with harps, pſalteries and cymbals, as well as in other ways, and with which Aſaph and his ſons are ſaid to prophecy, 1 Chron. xxv. 1, 2, 3. ſo that he is very rightly called a prophet by the Evangeliſt, who is cited, as ſaying, Pſal. lxxviii. 2. I will open my mouth in parables, I will utter things which have been kept ſecret from the foundation of the world: which Pſalm, though a hiſtory of the dealings of God with the people of Iſrael, and of the many deliverances wrought for them, yet as the [e] Jewiſh writers obſerve, contain many things in it, expreſſed in a parabolical and enigmatical way; ſuch as God's furniſhing a table in the wilderneſs, kindling a fire againſt Jacob, opening the doors of heaven, giving the corn of heaven, and angels food, and delivering his ſtrength into captivity; and beſides, the very hiſtorical facts recorded of the people of Iſrael, were types of things future under the Goſpel diſpenſation: now as Aſaph, by divine inſpiration, delivered theſe parables and dark ſayings, ſo Chriſt expreſſed the Goſpel, and the myſteries of it, in a parabolical way, which were hid in God, and under the ſhadows of the law; and ſo were kept ſecret from the beginning of the world, and from the multitude, though now made known to the apoſtles, and by them to others, according to the will of God.

Ver. 36. Then Jeſus ſent the multitude away, &c.] That his diſciples might have the opportunity of converſing with him alone, about the ſenſe of the parables he had delivered; and that he might inſtruct them by ſome others hereafter mentioned. And went into the houſe; left the ſhip in which he had been preaching to the multitude, came on ſhore, and returned to the houſe he came out of, ver. 1. and his diſciples came to him; and being alone, make an humble requeſt to him, ſaying, declare unto us the parable of the tares of the field: by which they mean, not a rehearſal of it, but an explication of the ſenſe and meaning of it: they aſk nothing about the parables of the muſtard ſeed and leaven, either becauſe they better underſtood them; or becauſe there were ſome things very remarkable and ſtriking in this, which made them very deſirous to be particularly informed of the ſeveral parts of it, and their meaning.

Ver. 37. He anſwered and ſaid unto them, &c.] Being very ready to anſwer their requeſt, and willing to communicate ſpiritual knowledge to them; thereby ſhewing great condeſcenſion, and humility in himſelf, and great affection to them: he that ſoweth the good ſeed, is the Son of man; he that is ſignified by the man that ſowed good ſeed in his field, is the Son of man; by whom he means himſelf, the ſeed of the woman, and the Son of David; who being anointed with the Holy Ghoſt without meaſure, went about Judea and Galilee, preaching the everlaſting Goſpel, to the converſion of ſinners, thereby making them good ſeed; though this may be underſtood of him, as including his apoſtles and miniſters, whom he makes uſe of as inſtruments for the good of ſouls, by preaching the Goſpel.

Ver. 38. The field is the world, &c.] That which is repreſented by the field, in which the good ſeed is ſown, is not only the land of Judea, where Chriſt preached in perſon, but the whole world, into which the apoſtles were afterwards ſent; or the church of Chriſt, in the ſeveral parts of the world: the good ſeed are the children of the kingdom; they which are deſigned by the good ſeed, are ſuch, for whom the kingdom of heaven is prepared, to whom it is bequeathed, and who are appointed to it; who are poſſeſſed of the kingdom of grace here, and are heirs of the kingdom of glory; and have both a meetneſs for it, and a right unto it, being the children of God by adoption, and that appearing by regeneration: but the tares are the children of the wicked one: the perſons intended by the tares, are ſuch profeſſors of religion, as both by their principles and practices, manifeſtly ſhew that they are of their father the devil; they reſemble and imitate him, and do his works; and plainly declare, that they were never born of God, and are in no better ſtate, though under a profeſſion, than openly profane and immoral perſons; and are more hurtful and ſcandalous to the intereſt of Chriſt, than ſuch are.

---

[c] Vid. Teelman. Specimen Explic. Parabolarum, p. 64, 65, 66, 67, 68.

[d] R. David Kimchi, Shoraſh. rad. חזה.

[e] Aben Ezra & Kimchi in loc.

Ver. 39. The enemy that ſowed them is the devil, &c.] He that is deſigned by the enemy, who ſowed the tares in the field among the wheat, is no other than the devil; the enemy of Chriſt, of mankind in general, of God's elect in particular, and the accuſer of the brethren; and his getting of hypocrites and hereticks into churches, is no ſmall proof of his implacable enmity to Chriſt and his intereſt; and ſhews what an adverſary he is to the peace, comfort, and fruitfulneſs of the churches of Chriſt. The harveſt is the end of the world; that which is meant by the harveſt, until which time wheat and tares, good and bad men, under a profeſſion of religion, are to be together, is the end of the world: meaning either the day of wrath and vengeance upon the Jewiſh nation; when thoſe that truly believed in Chriſt were ſeparated from the reſt, and that hypocritical generation of men were utterly deſtroyed: or elſe the day of judgment, the great and laſt day, when the heavens and the earth, and all that is therein, ſhall be burnt up; when the righteous will enter into life, and the wicked go into everlaſting puniſhment: and the reapers are the angels; the perſons ſignified by the reapers, who ſhall put in the ſickle, cut down the tares, bind them in bundles, and caſt them into the fire, and who ſhall gather the wheat into the barn; that is, who ſhall be the executors of God's wrath, upon wicked profeſſors of religion, and who ſhall be the means of introducing the ſaints into the heavenly kingdom, are the angels; the holy and elect angels, who are the miniſters of Chriſt, and miniſtring ſervants to them, who are the heirs of ſalvation; and are oppoſite to all ſecret and open enemies of Chriſt, and his people; and will be employed in the end of time, againſt the wicked, and for the righteous.

Ver. 40. As therefore the tares are gathered, &c.] As it is repreſented in the parable, that in the time of harveſt, the tares ſhall be gathered out from the wheat firſt; and being bound in bundles, ſhall be burnt in the fire, prepared for that purpoſe, ſo ſhall it be in the end of this world; hypocritical and heretical men, and all formal profeſſors, ſhall be gathered out from among the ſaints, and the ſeveral churches, among whom they have been; and ſhall be together caſt into everlaſting burnings, prepared for the devil and his angels, whoſe children they are.

Ver. 41. The Son of man ſhall ſend forth his angels, &c.] Meaning himſelf, whoſe miniſters the angels are; who wait upon him, and are at his beck and command; even the thouſand thouſands that miniſter unto him; theſe will be ſent forth by his orders, into the ſeveral parts of the world, where he has any churches, or an intereſt; and they ſhall gather out of his kingdom; the Goſpel church, over which Chriſt is king, where he rules and governs in the hearts of his people; and who are chearfully and willingly obedient to his laws, under the influence of his Spirit and grace: but all who are in the viſible Goſpel church ſtate, are not ſuch; ſome are wicked and rebellious, and though they are ſuffered to continue, yet not always; for if not removed by cenſures and excommunications, they will be at laſt by angels; who will ſeparate them from the ſaints: even all things that offend; who are ſcandals to Chriſt, his church, and Goſpel, by their wicked principles, or infamous practices; and who give offence, not only to God, and his righteous law, but lay ſtumbling blocks in the way of the children of God, and are the authors of diviſions and offences among them: and them that do iniquity; that do nothing elſe but iniquity; and who, though they profeſs to be religious perſons, are ſecretly, or openly, workers of iniquity; and are even doing iniquity, in and whilſt they are profeſſing religion.

Ver. 42. And ſhall caſt them into a furnace of fire, &c.] Not a material, but a metaphorical one; denoting the wrath of God, which ſhall fall upon wicked men, and abide upon them to all eternity: which is ſometimes called hell-fire, ſometimes a lake which burns with fire and brimſtone; and here a furnace of fire, expreſſing the vehemency and intenſeneſs of divine wrath, which will be intolerable; in alluſion either to Nebuchadnezzar's fiery furnace, or as ſome think, to the cuſtom of burning perſons alive in ſome countries; or rather, to the burning of chaff and ſtubble, and the ſtalks of any unprofitable things that grew in the field [f], for the heating of furnaces, and is the very language of the Jews, who uſed to compare hell to a furnace; ſo Gen. xv. 17. is paraphraſed by them [g]. “ And behold the ſun ſet, and there was darkneſs; “ and lo! Abraham ſaw until the ſeats were ſet, “ and the thrones caſt down; and lo! hell, which “ is prepared for the wicked in the world to come, “ כתנורא, as a furnace, which ſparks and flames “ of fire ſurrounded; דבגוה, in the midſt of which, “ the wicked fell, becauſe they rebelled againſt “ the law, in their life-time.” Which is expreſſed in much the ſame language, and conveys the ſame ideas as here; and no wonder is it that it follows, there ſhall be wailing and gnaſhing of teeth; declaring the remorſe of conſcience, the tortures of mind, the ſenſe of inexpreſſible pain, and puniſhment, the wicked ſhall feel; alſo their furious rage and black deſpair.

Ver. 43. Then ſhall the righteous ſhine forth as the ſun, &c.] The time referred to is, when the tares ſhall be ſeparated from the wheat; when they that offend and do iniquity, ſhall be gathered out of Chriſt's kingdom; when the wicked ſhall be caſt into hell: then the righteous, not who are ſo merely in their own apprehenſions, and in the judgment of others; nor by their obedience, legal or evangelical; but who are made ſo, by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt imputed to them: theſe, though they have been in this world loaded with reproaches, and attended with many afflictions and perſecutions; and have been deſpiſed for their poverty and meanneſs, and want of outward glory, honour, riches, and proſperity; ſhall now ſhine forth in the robe of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, in perfect holineſs of nature, in all felicity and proſperity of ſoul; and in the ſhining dazzling robes of glory, incorruption, and immortality, on their bodies; even as the ſun, having no ſpot in them, or upon them, and without any clouds of darkneſs: they will be as Chriſt himſelf the ſun of righteouſneſs, with whom, and in whoſe glory, they ſhall appear, both in ſoul and body, in the kingdom of their Father; meaning either the ſame with the kingdom of Chriſt, the Father's and his, being one and the ſame; or as diſtinct from Chriſt's, ſee ver. 41. the church, and the government of it in this world, in all ages of time, and eſpecially in the latter day, and during the thouſand years, Chriſt and his ſaints ſhall reign together, may be peculiarly called the kingdom of Chriſt; when it will be delivered to the Father, and God ſhall be all in all: ſo that the ultimate glory may, though not to the excluſion of the Son, be ſtiled the kingdom of the Father; of God, who is the Father of Chriſt and of his people; and which is obſerved, to aſſure the ſaints of their intereſt in it, right unto it, and certain enjoyment of it. Some copies read, the kingdom of heaven. Much the ſame images, here made uſe of, to ſet forth the glory of the ſaints, both in ſoul and body, in the world to come, are expreſſed by the Jews. "The "faces of the righteous, they ſay, [h] in time to come, "ſhall be, דומות לחמה, like to the ſun, and moon, "to the ſtars and planets, and lightenings, and "lilies, and to the lamp of the ſanctuary." And elſewhere [i] they obſerve, that "God, in time to "come, will beautify the body of the righteous, "as the beauty of the firſt man, when he entered "into paradiſe, according to Iſa. lviii. 11. and "that the ſoul, whilſt in its dignity, ſhall be ſuſtained with the ſuperior light, and be cloathed with "it; and when it ſhall enter into the body hereafter, it ſhall enter with that light; and then ſhall "the body ſhine, כזהר הרקיע, as the brightneſs of "the firmament; as is ſaid in Dan. xii. 3." And a little after [k] 'tis ſaid, that when "the ſoul goes out, "the body is left, which ſhall be there built again, "כנהרא דשמשא, as the light of the ſun, and as "the brightneſs of the firmament." Who hath ears to hear, let him hear; and ſeriouſly conſider of the ſeveral things ſaid in this parable, concerning the wheat and tares, the righteous and the wicked, as being matters of the greateſt moment and importance.

---

[f] Miſn. Sabbat. c. 3. §. 1. & Maimon. & Bartenora in ib.

[g] Hieroſ. Targum in Gen. xv. 17.

Ver. 44. Again the kingdom of heaven is like unto treaſure, &c.] By which is meant, not eternal life the incorruptible inheritance, riches of glory, treaſure in heaven; nor Chriſt, in whom are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge, and all the riches of grace and glory; but the Goſpel, which is a treaſure conſiſting of rich truths, comparable to gold, ſilver, and precious ſtones; of the moſt valuable bleſſings, and of exceeding great, and precious promiſes; and reveals the riches of God, of Chriſt, and of the other world; and is a treaſure unſearchable, ſolid, ſatisfying, and laſting: this is ſaid to be hid in a field. The Goſpel was in ſome meaſure hid, under the former diſpenſation, from the Old Teſtament ſaints; and for a long time was hid from the Gentile world; and is entirely hid from them that are loſt, who are blinded by the god of this world; and even from the elect of God themſelves, before converſion: this is ſometimes ſaid to be hid in God, in his thoughts, counſels, and purpoſes, and in the covenant of his grace; and ſometimes in Chriſt, who is the ſtore-houſe of truth, as well as of grace; and may be thought to be hid under the Moſaic œconomy, in the types and ſhadows of the ceremonial law: but here the field means the ſcriptures, in which the Goſpel lies hid; and therefore theſe are to be ſearched into for it, as men ſeek and ſearch for ſilver and hid treaſures, by digging into mines, and in the bowels of the earth: the which when a man hath found; either with, or without the uſe of means, purpoſely attended to, in order to find it; ſuch as reading, hearing, prayer, and meditation: for ſometimes the Goſpel, and the ſpiritual ſaving knowledge of it, are found, and attained to, by perſons accidentally, with reſpect to themſelves, though providentially, with reſpect to God; when they had no deſire after it, or ſearched for it, and thought nothing about it; though by others it is come at, in a diligent uſe of the above means: he hideth; which is to be underſtood not in an ill ſenſe, as the man hid his talent in a napkin, and in the earth; but in a good ſenſe, and deſigns his care of it; his laying it up in his heart, that he might not loſe it, and that it might not be taken away from him: and for joy thereof; for the Goſpel when rightly underſtood, brings good tidings of great joy, to ſenſible ſinners; goeth and ſelleth all that he hath, and buyeth the field: which is not to be interpreted literally and properly; though a man that knows the worth and value of the bible, rather than be without one, would part with all his worldly ſubſtance for one; but figuratively, and denotes the willingneſs of ſuch ſouls, who are led into the glory, fulneſs, and excellency of the word of God, the ſcriptures of truth, and of the immenſe treaſure of the Goſpel therein, to part with all that has been, or is dear unto them; with their ſins, and ſelf-righteouſneſs; with their good names and characters; their worldly ſubſtance, and life itſelf, for the ſake of the Goſpel, and their profeſſion of it: and may alſo deſign the uſe of all means, to gain a larger degree of light and knowledge in the Goſpel. It ſeems by this parable, according to the Jewiſh laws, that not the finder of a treaſure in a field, but the owner of the field, had the propriety in it; when it ſhould ſeem rather, that it ought to be divided. Such that have ability and leiſure, may conſult a controverſy in Philoſtratus [l], between two perſons, the buyer and ſeller of a field; in which, after the purchaſe, a treaſure was found, when the ſeller claimed it as his; urging, that had he known of it, he would never have ſold him the field: the buyer, on the other hand, inſiſted on its being his property; alledging that all was his, which was contained in the land bought by him.

Ver. 45, 46. Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchant man, &c.] This parable may be underſtood of Chriſt's ſeeking, finding, and purchaſing his elect: for, certain it is, that he has ſought after them; which implies, that they were loſt and going aſtray; expreſſes his great love to them, value for them, and deſire after them; in doing which, he took much pains, and uſed much diligence: and certain it alſo is, that he finds them in redemption, and in effectual vocation; and that they are to him a pearl of great price; as very precious to God, ſo highly eſteemed of by Chriſt, as his portion, his inheritance, and his jewels. He has alſo parted with all he had for the ſake of theſe perſons; he became poor, emptied himſelf of every thing, even gave himſelf a ranſom for them, and ſo made a purchaſe of them, with the price of his own blood: though to this ſenſe it may be objected, that it does not ſeem ſo agreeable, that Chriſt ſhould be compared to a merchant man, which better ſuits with thoſe that deal with him, than as he is concerned with them; nor does he ſeek after any other than his elect: whereas this merchant man is ſaid to be ſeeking goodly pearls; any pearls that were ſo: nor is Chriſt's finding his elect, a chance buſineſs; nor have they any intrinſic excellency in them, to denominate them pearls, but by his grace. The more common interpretation of it is, that it deſigns a ſenſible ſinner, ſeeking after the true way of ſalvation, and finding Chriſt, and parting with all for him: ſuch a man is a ſpiritual merchant, who trades in foreign parts, and in things of worth and value; and ſuch an one ſeeks after a variety of things, which at firſt ſight ſeem goodly, in order to obtain ſalvation by; as civility, morality, a legal righteouſneſs, faſting, watchings, prayer, a profeſſion of religion, and a ſubmiſſion to external ordinances; but at length finds Chriſt, the pearl of great price: who is of an unſpeakable brightneſs and glory, of intrinſic worth and value; who is inriching to thoſe that poſſeſs him, and precious to them that believe; and of ſuch a price, that no valuable conſideration can be given for him: wherefore ſuch a ſoul, is willing to part with all for him; with ſinful ſelf, and righteous ſelf; and with the honours, riches, and profits of this world; and buy him, his grace and righteouſneſs, without money, and without price. Though I rather think, that in connexion and agreement with the other parables, this is to be underſtood of ſuch, who are ſeeking after knowledge in every branch of it, natural, moral, and ſpiritual; and ſo may be compared to a merchant man, ſeeking goodly pearls; and who find the Goſpel, and prefer it to every thing elſe. Who when he had found one pearl of great price: for ſuch who ſeek after wiſdom and knowledge in the uſe of proper means, are like merchant men, that trade abroad, and for things of value; and theſe, under divine direction, find in the ſcriptures, and through the miniſtry of the word, and by prayer and ſtudy, the truths of the everlaſting Goſpel, reſpecting Chriſt, his perſon, office, grace, and righteouſneſs; which are equal to, yea tranſcend a pearl of the higheſt price; for their original, coming from a far country, from heaven; for their brightneſs, clearneſs, and perſpicuity; for their ornament and glory; for their firmneſs and ſolidity; for their virtue and value, to them that know the worth of them; and ſuch will buy, but not ſell them; reckon all things but loſs and dung, in compariſon of them; and will contend for them, and ſtand faſt in them.

---

[h] Vajikra Rabba, fol. 170. 1. Siphre apud Ceſeph Miſna in Maimon. Hilch. Teſhuba, c. 9.

[i] Midraſh hannealam apud Zohar in Gen. fol. 69. 1.

[k] Ib. fol. 70. 1. Vid. Midraſh Tillim. in Pſal. xi. apud Galatin. de Arcan. Cathol. ver. l. 12. c. 6. p. 712.

[l] De Vita Apollonii, lib. 2. c. 15.

Ver. 47. Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net, &c.] By which alſo is meant, the Goſpel, and the miniſtry of it. This may be compared to a net, for its meanneſs in the eſteem of men; being deſpicable, and of no account in the eyes of the world: and yet like a net, a piece of curious artifice and workmanſhip, being the produce of the grace of God; in which his manifold wiſdom is diſplayed, and is what angels deſire to look into: it is deſigned, and purpoſely contrived, for the gathering in of ſinners to Chriſt, and to his churches, though by accident, it has other uſes; ſuch as troubling of the world, as the net does the waters of the ſea, and drawing out the corruptions of the men of it, as that does weeds, ſtones, &c. and which, like a net, can do nothing of itſelf, unleſs caſt; and not then neither, unleſs ſucceeded with a divine bleſſing: that was caſt into the ſea; by the ſea is meant the world, ſo called, for the ſtorms and tempeſts of afflictions, and perſecutions the ſaints meet with, and for the continual troubles that are in it; for the reſtleſſneſs and inſtability of all things therein; for the dangers of it; and for its being the proper place and element of fiſhes, as the world is to the men of it. The caſting of it into the ſea, deſigns the opening of the Goſpel, and the unfolding the myſteries of it, and the preaching it in all the world; and ſuppoſes perſons qualified for it; ſuch were the patriarchs and prophets under the Old Teſtament; and particularly Chriſt, John the Baptiſt, and the apoſtles of Chriſt, and ſucceeding miniſters under the New Teſtament; and requires art, ſkill, and wiſdom, might and ſtrength, induſtry, diligence, and patience; and which is done at a venture, whether there are fiſh or no; and ſometimes ſucceeds, and ſometimes not: and gathered of every kind; the Perſic verſion adds, of animals; but much more agreeably Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel, and the Vulgate Latin, add, of fiſhes; and ſo ſome copies read. The preaching of the Goſpel, is the means of gathering ſouls to Chriſt, and into his churches; and thoſe that are gathered into a viſible Goſpel church ſtate, are of every kind, of all nations in the world, Jews and Gentiles; of all ranks and degrees of men, high and low, rich and poor, bond and free; of all ſorts of ſinners, and of men good and bad; ſome who have the truth of grace in them, and others that are only hypocrites; profeſs in words, and deny in works; have nothing more than a form of godlineſs, and a name to live, and are dead.

Ver. 48. Which when it was full, &c.] As the Goſpel, and the Goſpel church ſtate may be ſaid to be, when all the ends of the preaching of the word are anſwered; when all are called by the one, and into the other, that were deſigned to be called; when the fulneſs of the Gentiles ſhall be brought in, and all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved. They drew to the ſhore; which will be done, when the end of the world comes; then will an end be put to the Goſpel miniſtry, the net will be drawn to ſhore; the preaching of the Goſpel will ceaſe, and no more uſe be made of it: and ſat down; the miniſters of the word having done their work, enter into the joy of their Lord, and reſt from their labours: and gathered the good into veſſels, but caſt the bad away; as fiſhermen uſed to do; though this laſt office ſeems, by the application of the parable, to be what will be performed by angels; who, as many as they find to have a good work of grace wrought and finiſhed in their ſouls, they will gather into Chriſt's barn, into the everlaſting habitations, the manſions in Chriſt's Father's houſe, he is gone to prepare: but as for the bad, who ſhall appear to be deſtitute of the grace of God, and righteouſneſs of Chriſt, notwithſtanding their profeſſion of religion, they ſhall be rejected, as good for nothing, and ſhall be caſt into the lake which burns with fire and brimſtone.

Ver. 49. So ſhall it be at the end of the world, &c.] As the fiſherman, when he has drawn his net to ſhore, picks out the good fiſh, and puts them into proper veſſels, and caſts the dead, putrid, and uſeleſs fiſh away; ſo, at the cloſe of time, in the laſt day, the angels ſhall come forth out of heaven, from the preſence of God and Chriſt, and by his orders, as the judge of all the earth, and ſever the wicked from the juſt; with whom they have had not only civil converſation, but have been joined in a Goſpel church ſtate; but now theſe ungodly ſhall not ſtand in judgment with them; nor theſe ſinners, theſe hypocrites, in the congregation of the righteous: the one will be ſet at Chriſt's right hand, the other at his left; the one will go into life eternal, and the other into everlaſting puniſhment; and their ſeparation from one another will be for ever.

Ver. 50. And ſhall caſt them into the furnace of fire, &c.] See the note on ver. 42.

Ver. 51. Jeſus ſaith unto them, &c.] This is left out in the Vulgate Latin, and Ethiopic verſions, and in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel, and in ſome Greek Exemplars; though it is neceſſary to the connexion and ſenſe of the words: have ye underſtood all theſe things? All the parables Chriſt had delivered, beſides thoſe he had given a particular explanation of; as of the muſtard ſeed, and leaven, of the treaſure hid in the field, the pearl of great price, and the net caſt into the ſea: Chriſt's putting this queſtion to the diſciples, ſhews that the things delivered, had ſome difficulty in them; that they were of moment and importance to be underſtood; and how concerned he was, that they ſhould underſtand them; and how ready he was to communicate the knowledge of them, which he knew would be uſeful to them in their after miniſtrations: they ſay unto him, yea, Lord. This anſwer, which was truly and faithfully made, is a proof of their cloſe and ſtrict attention to the words of Chriſt; the quickneſs of their underſtandings at that time, being in a very ſpecial manner opened and illuminated by Chriſt; and which he knew, when he put the queſtion to them; but was willing to have it owned and expreſſed by themſelves, that he might have the opportunity of ſaying what follows.

Ver. 52. Then ſaid he unto them, &c.] Since the diſciples had ſuch a clear underſtanding of the above parables, and were by them, and by other things, ſo well furniſhed to preach the myſteries of the kingdom of heaven to others, Chriſt ſtirs them up by the following parable, to a diligent exerciſe of their gifts, and to a large, free, and chearful communication of their knowledge to others. Therefore every Scribe; meaning not legal ones, Scribes in the law of Moſes, a ſort of letter-men, often mentioned by the Evangeliſts, and the ſame with the lawyers, who were converſant with the letter of the law, and only underſtood that; as for the kingdom of heaven, they were ſo far from being inſtructed unto it, that they ſhut it up, and would neither go in themſelves, nor ſuffer others; but evangelical Scribes are here meant, ſee Matt. xxiii. 34. the preachers of the everlaſting Goſpel, now every one of theſe, which is inſtructed unto the kingdom of heaven, as each of them be more or leſs; that is, underſtands the nature of the Goſpel church ſtate, the diſcipline, laws, and rules of Chriſt's houſe, the doctrines of the Goſpel, the way and things pertaining to the kingdom of heaven; as Chriſt and his righteouſneſs, and the regenerating and ſanctifying grace of the Spirit: ſuch an one, is like unto a man that is an houſholder; that has an houſhold or family under his care, as the miniſters of the Goſpel have, and which is the church of God; called the houſhold of God, the houſhold of faith, a ſpiritual houſe, and a family; conſiſting of fathers, young men, and children; of which indeed Chriſt is properly the houſholder and maſter, but Goſpel miniſters are deputies and ſtewards under him, and under him preſide over the houſhold, and have the government of it, provide food for it, and protect and defend it; all which require large gifts and abilities, great love and affection, both to Chriſt and his people; much wiſdom, prudence, and knowledge; and great faithfulneſs and integrity, courage and firmneſs of mind. Which bringeth forth out of his treaſure, things new and old: by his treaſure is meant, either Chriſt, who is the great treaſury and ſtore-houſe of grace and truth; from whence his miniſters receive all their gifts, grace, light, and knowledge; or the word of God, the Scriptures of truth, by which the men of God are thoroughly furniſhed for every good work; or the treaſure of the Goſpel, which is put into their earthen veſſels, into their own hearts, and that ſtock of Goſpel knowledge and experience they are bleſſed with; a large competency of which, is neceſſary to theſe houſholders; ſince they are to give out, not niggardly, but largely, and plentifully, and in great variety. The Syriac verſion reads it, מן סימתה, out of his treaſures, and ſo may include them all. Things new and old: not the new Goſpel and the old law, for the law is not old, nor the Goſpel new: the Goſpel is much older than the law, being hid in God, and ordained before the world was, to our glory; and was even promulgated, long before the law was on mount Sinai: nor things out of the Old and New Teſtament, for the New Teſtament was not yet in being; though 'tis right, and is the buſineſs of Goſpel preachers, to bring forth ſuch truths and doctrines, as are contained in both: rather truths that are old in themſelves, but newly diſcovered to them may be intended, and every new acquiſition of knowledge and experience, added to the former ſtock and fund: the phraſe ſeems to denote the plenty and variety of Goſpel proviſions, which the miniſters of it are to bring forth, ſuited to the various caſes of ſuch who are under their care. The alluſion is either to a good provider for his family, who lays up ſtores for them of all ſorts, and upon proper occaſions brings them forth for their relief; or to the people under the law, bringing their offerings out of the fruits, both of the old and new year; concerning which, take the following rule[m]. "All offerings, both of the congregation and of a private perſon, came from the land (of Iſrael) and "without the land, מן החדש ומן הישן, from the new and from the old (i. e. from the new and old ſtock, the increaſe of the new and old year) except the ſheaf of the firſt-fruits, and the two "wave loaves; for they come only from the new, "and from the land of Iſrael." The place where fruits of any kind were laid up, were called a treaſure; hence it is ſaid[n], the palm-tree has its fallen fruits, which they don't bring לאוצר, into the treaſure; and it produces dates, which they put into the treaſure: perhaps ſome reference is had to Cant. vii. 13. where mention is made of fruits new and old, and which the Jewiſh writers[o] interpret of the words of the Scribes, and of the words of the law; the fruits new, are the words and ſayings of the Scribes, their doctrines and deciſions; and the old, are the words of the law; and one that was well verſed in both theſe, was with them a well inſtructed Scribe. Unleſs the alluſion ſhould rather be thought to be to old and new wine, ſee Luke v. 37, 38, 39. it being uſual to call a wine-cellar a treaſure[p], in which all ſorts of wine were kept; and a well inſtructed Scribe is full of matter, and like Elihu, his belly is as wine that has no vent, and is ready to burſt like new bottles, Job xxxii. 19. and like Jeremy, he is weary of forbearing, and cannot ſtay, Jer. xx. 9. and, like David, his heart endites a good matter, and his tongue is as the pen of a ready writer, Pſal. xlv. 1.

Ver. 53. And it came to paſs that when Jeſus had finiſhed theſe parables, &c.] Which he ſpoke both to the multitude from the ſhip, and to his diſciples in the houſe, he departed thence; from the houſe in which he was, and the city of Capernaum, where he had ſome time been.

---

[m] Miſn. Parah, c. 2. §. 1.
[n] Bemidbar Rabba, §. 3. fol. 180. 3.
[o] Targum in Cant. vii. 13. T. Bab. Erubim, fol. 21. 2. & Gloſſ. in ib.
[p] Bemidbar Rabba, §. 2. fol. 178. 2.

Ver. 54. And when he was come into his own country, &c.] Not where he was born, Bethlehem, for it is never obſerved, that he went thither; but where he was educated, and where his parents and near relations, according to the fleſh, lived; who had been ſome little time ago ſeeking for him, and deſirous of ſpeaking with him, even Nazareth: he taught them in their ſynagogue, it being the ſabbath-day; ſee Mark vi. 1. The Vulgate Latin, and all the Eaſtern verſions, the Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic, and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel read, in their ſynagogues; but as Nazareth was ſo mean and obſcure a place, it is not likely that there ſhould be in it more ſynagogues than one; and of no more do we read in Luke iv. 16, 20, 28. where an account is given of Chriſt's preaching in this place before this time. Inſomuch that they were aſtoniſhed; at the doctrines he taught, which were new and unheard of to them; and were delivered in ſuch a graceful manner, and with ſo much power and authority; and alſo at the miracles he wrought, in confirmation of what he delivered; and ſaid, whence hath this man this wiſdom and theſe mighty works? They knew his education, how that he had not been put to ſchool, had never learned letters of men, or received any inſtructions from their learned doctors; and therefore could not imagine, how he came by ſuch ſublime and divine knowledge, and by what power he performed ſuch wonderful things; looking upon him to be a mere man, and a very mean, and contemptible one: not knowing that he was the wiſdom of God, and the power of God; which had they been acquainted with, there would have been no room, nor reaſon, for ſuch queſtions.

Ver. 55. Is not this the carpenter's ſon, &c.] Meaning Joſeph, who was by trade a carpenter, and whoſe ſon Jeſus was ſuppoſed to be; and who very probably was now dead, which may be the reaſon he is not mentioned by name. The Greek word here uſed, ſignifies any mechanic, or artificer. The Syriac expreſſes it by a word, which ſignifies both a carpenter and a blackſmith; and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel renders it, בן נפחא, the blackſmith's ſon. But the generally received notion of the ancient Chriſtians is, that he was a carpenter, and that Jeſus was brought up to the ſame buſineſs, which lay in making plows and yokes[q]. This alſo appears, from the anſwer the Chriſtian ſchoolmaſter at Antioch, gave to Libanius the ſophiſter; who being big with expectation of Julian the apoſtate's getting the victory, aſked the ſchoolmaſter, what he thought the carpenter's ſon was doing? To which, after a ſhort pauſe, he replied; O ſophiſter! the Creator of all things, whom thou calleſt the carpenter's ſon, is making a coffin for Julian; who accordingly died in a few days after[r]. The Jews make mention of one Abba Joſeph, הבנאי, the builder, or carpenter[s]; but whether the ſame, is not certain. What they here ſay, was no doubt by way of deriſion and contempt; and yet the ſame phraſe is uſed by them of a perſon of great note and fame, for his wiſdom and knowledge: thus ſpeaking of a difficult point, they[t] ſay, "לית נגר ולא בר נגר, no carpenter, or ſmith, or a carpenter's ſon, can ſolve this; ſays R. Sheſheth, I am neither a carpenter, nor a carpenter's ſon, and I can ſolve it." The Gloſs upon it is, "a wiſe man, the ſon of a wiſe man." Is not his mother called Mary? Plain Mary, without any other title, or civil reſpect; a poor ſpinſtreſs, that got her bread by her hand labour: the Jews ſay[u], ſhe was a plaiter of women's hair, and treat her with the utmoſt ſcorn. And his brethren; not ſtrictly ſo, but either the ſons of Joſeph by a former wife; or Mary's, or Joſeph's brothers or ſiſters ſons, and ſo couſins to Chriſt; it being uſual with the Jews, to call ſuch, and even more diſtant relations, brethren: James; the ſon of Alpheus, or Cleophas, one of Chriſt's diſciples, Matt. x. 3. called the Lord's brother, Gal. i. 19. and the ſame that wrote the epiſtle that bears his name: and Joſes; or Joſeph, as the Vulgate Latin, and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel read; and which two names are one and the ſame: hence, in Talmudic writings, we often read of R. Joſe, who is the ſame with R. Joſeph[w]: this Joſes is, by Dr. Lightfoot, conjectured to be the ſame with Joſeph, called Barſabas, who was put in nomination for apoſtleſhip, after the death of Judas, Acts i. 23. And Simon; or Symeon, the ſon of Cleophas, who is ſaid[x] to ſucceed James, as biſhop of Jeruſalem, and to be Chriſt's couſin, being ſon of Cleophas, the brother of Joſeph, the ſuppoſed father of Chriſt: and Judas; the ſame that is called Lebbeus, and Thaddeus, Matt. x. 3. and the brother of James, Luke vi. 16. and the ſame that wrote the epiſtle that goes by his name. The Jews ought not to have made theſe remarks, ſince many of their great doctors were of mean parentage; as R. Zachariah was a butcher's ſon[y], and R. Jochanan a blackſmith's ſon[z]; hence that advice of R. Juda ben Bethira[a], "take heed that ye do not reproach the ſons of the common people, for from them comes forth the law."

Ver. 56. And his ſiſters, &c.] Whoſe names, according to Epiphanius[b], were Mary and Salome; whom he ſuppoſes were the daughters of Joſeph, by a former wife; but rather of Alpheus or Cleophas. Are they not all with us? Lived in the ſame town with them, were well known by them, and familiar with them. Whence then hath this man all theſe things? His wiſdom and his mighty works; for ſince he had not them from any of their ſchools, and nurſeries of learning, from their learned doctors and wiſe men; and could not have received them from his parents, and near relations, they could not deviſe from whence he ſhould have them.

Ver. 57. And they were offended in him, &c.] It was a ſtumbling to them, how he came by his wiſdom and power; ſince he had not theſe things from men of learning, and could not have them from his relatives: and therefore, rather than believe he had them of himſelf, or from God, they choſe to indulge at leaſt a ſuſpicion, that he had them from the devil, and ſo were offended in him: or this offence was taken at the meanneſs of his birth, parentage, and education, though without reaſon; for if without the advantage of an education, without human literature, and the inſtructions of men, he was able to expound the Scriptures, preach ſuch doctrine, and deliver ſuch words of wiſdom, and confirm all this by miracles, and mighty works, they ought to have conſidered him as a divine perſon, and all this, as a demonſtration of it, and of his having a divine miſſion at leaſt, and of his being raiſed up by God for extraordinary purpoſes. But Jeſus ſaid unto them; being unmoved at their offence in him, and contempt of him, which was no other than what he expected: a prophet is not without honour, ſave in his own country, and in his own houſe; which ſeems to be a proverbial ſpeech in common uſe, though I have not met with it in Jewiſh writings; ſhewing, that a prophet, or any teacher, or preacher, generally ſpeaking, is more eſteemed among ſtrangers, who have no perſonal pique, nor prejudices againſt him, and who judge of him, not by what he has been, but by his preſent abilities, doctrine, and conduct, than among his countrymen; who are apt to think meanly of him, becauſe familiarly acquainted with him, and knew, if not his vices, yet his infirmities, and envy him any ſuperior degree of honour to them, he has attained unto. I ſay, generally ſpeaking, for this is not always the caſe on either ſide; ſometimes a prophet is affronted and abuſed in ſtrange places, as Chriſt himſelf was; and ſometimes is received with eſteem and applauſe among his countrymen, relations and acquaintance; but this is rare and uncommon; the proverb reſpects what is uſually and ordinarily done, and the truth of it is eaſy to be obſerved.

---

[q] Juſtin Martyr. Dialog. cum Tryph. p. 316.

[r] Tripartit. Hiſt. l. 6. c. 44.

[s] Shemoth Rabba, §. 13. fol. 99. 2.

[t] T. Bab. Avoda Zara, fol. 50. 2.

[u] T. Bab. Sabbat. fol. 104. 2. Chagiga, fol. 4. 2. Sanhedrim, fol. 67. 1.

[w] Vid. Juchaſin, fol. 61. & 62.

[x] Euſeb. Eccl. Hiſt. l. 3. c. 11.

[y] Miſn. Sota, c. 5. §. 1.

[z] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 96. 1.

[a] Ib.

[b] Contr. Hæreſ. Tom. 2. l. 3. Hæreſ. 78. & lib. Ancorat.

Ver. 58. And he did not many mighty works there, &c.] Some he did, though not many; partly that they might be left inexcuſable, and partly that it might not be ſaid, he did not wiſh well to his own country: what he did, were not of the firſt claſs, and greateſt note; he only laid his hands, as Mark ſays, ch. vi. 5. upon a few ſick folk, and healed them; and yet theſe were ſuch as raiſed their wonder and aſtoniſhment, but did not command their faith; and were rather ſtumbling blocks unto them; ſuch were their prejudices, their unbelief, and the hardneſs of their hearts: and the reaſon indeed why he did no more was, becauſe of their unbelief. Theſe words in Mark, are joined with this expreſſion, he marvelled; ſhewing, that their continued unbelief in him, notwithſtanding his miniſtry and miracles among them, was matter of ſurprize to him; but here they are given as a reaſon, why he did no more mighty works among them: and which Mark ſays he could not do, not for want of power, or as if their unbelief was too mighty for him to overcome; but he would not, becauſe he judged them unworthy, and that it was not fit and convenient to perform any more, ſince they were offended with what was done; and that their condemnation might not be increaſed.

CHAP. XIV.

Ver. 1. AT that time Herod the tetrarch, &c.] Not Herod the great, in whoſe reign Chriſt was born, and who ſlew the infants of Bethlehem, but his ſon; this was, as the Jewiſh chronologer [c] rightly obſerves, "Herod Antipater, "whom they call, טיסרקי, the tetrarch; the ſon "of Herod the firſt, and brother of Archelaus, and "the third king of the family of Herod." And though he is here called a tetrarch, he is in Mark vi. 14. called a king: the reaſon of his being ſtiled a tetrarch was this; his father Herod divided his large kingdom into four parts, and bequeathed them to his ſons, which was confirmed by the Roman ſenate: Archelaus reigned in Judea in his ſtead; upon whoſe deceaſe, that part was put under the care of a Roman governor; who, when John the Baptiſt began to preach, was Pontius Pilate; this ſame Herod here ſpoken of, being tetrarch of Galilee, which was the part aſſigned him; and his brother Philip, tetrarch of Iturea, and of the region of Trachonitis; and Lyſanias, tetrarch of Abilene, Luke iii. 1. the word tetrarch, ſignifying one that has the fourth part of government: and in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel, he is called one of the four princes; and in the Arabic verſion, a prince of the fourth part; and in the Perſic, a governour of the fourth part of the kingdom. The time referred to, was after the death of John the Baptiſt; and when Chriſt had been for a good while, and in many places, preaching and working miracles; the particular inſtant which reſpect is had unto, is the ſending forth of the twelve diſciples, to preach and work miracles; and which might ſerve the more to ſpread the fame of Chriſt, and which reached the court of Herod; who, 'tis ſaid here, heard of the fame of Jeſus; what a wonderful preacher he was, and what mighty things were done by him.

Ver. 2. And ſaid unto his ſervants, &c.] Thoſe of his houſhold, his courtiers, with whom he more familiarly converſed; to theſe he expreſſed his fears, that it might be true what was ſuggeſted by the people, and he was ready to believe it himſelf; this is John the Baptiſt: ſome copies add, whom I have beheaded, as in Mark vi. 16. the guilt of which action roſe in his mind, lay heavy on him, and filled him with horror and a thouſand fears: he is riſen from the dead; which if he was a Sadducee, as he is thought to be, by comparing Matt. xvi. 6. with Mark viii. 15. was directly contrary to his former ſentiments, and was extorted from him by his guilty conſcience; who now fears, what before he did not believe; and what he fears, he affirms; concluding that John was raiſed from the dead, to give proof of his innocence, and to revenge his death on him: and therefore mighty works do ſhew themſelves in him, or are wrought by him; for though he wrought no miracles in his life-time, yet, according to a vulgar notion, that after death men are endued with a greater power, Herod thought this to be the caſe; or that he was poſſeſſed of greater power, on purpoſe to puniſh him for the murder of him; and that theſe miracles which were wrought by him, were convincing proofs of the truth of his reſurrection, and of what he was able to do to him, and what he might righteouſly expect from him.

Ver. 3. For Herod had laid hold on John, &c.] By his ſervants, whom he ſent to apprehend him: and bound him; laid him in chains, as if he was a malefactor: and put him in priſon; in the caſtle of Machærus [d], for Herodias's ſake; who was angry with him, had a bitter quarrel againſt him, and by whoſe inſtigation all this was done; who was his brother Philip's wife. This Herodias, was the daughter of Ariſtobulus, ſon to Herod the great [e], and brother to Philip, and to this Herod; ſo that ſhe was niece to them both; and firſt married the one, and then the other, whilſt the former was living. Philip and this Herod, were both ſons of Herod the great, but not by the ſame woman; Philip was born of Cleopatra of Jeruſalem, and Herod Antipas, of Malthace a Samaritan [f]; ſo that Philip was his brother by his father's ſide, but not by his mother's; the Evangeliſt Mark adds, for he had married her: the caſe was this, Herod being ſent for to Rome, called at his brother Philip's by the way, where he fell into an amorous intrigue with his wife, and agreed, upon his return, to take her with him and marry her; as he accordingly did, and divorced his own wife, who was daughter of Aretas, king of Arabia Petræa; which occaſioned a war between Herod and his wife's father, in which the former was beaten [g].

---

[c] David Ganz. Tzemach David, par. 1. fol. 25. 2. and ſo in Juchaſin, fol. 142. 2.
[d] Joſeph. Antiqu. l. 18. c. 7.
[e] Ib. c. 6.
[f] Ib. de Bello Jud. l. 1. c. 28. §. 7.

Ver. 4. For John ſaid unto him, &c.] John having heard of this inceſtuous marriage, went to Herod, and reproved him to his face for it; and, as Luke ſays, for all the evils he had done, ch. xiii. 19. for he was a very wicked man, and guilty of many flagitious crimes: John, in ſo doing, ſhewed his zeal for holineſs, his hatred of ſin, his courage and faithfulneſs in reproving thus freely, ſo great a man; and made it manifeſt, that he came in the ſpirit of Elijah: what he ſaid to him was, it is not lawful for thee to have her, being forbidden, Levit. xviii. 16. for though by another law it was right to marry a brother's wife, after his deceaſe, when he left no iſſue, yet this was not the caſe here; Philip was now living, and, had he been dead, ſuch a marriage would have been unlawful, becauſe there was iſſue; ſhe had a daughter, who afterwards is ſaid to dance before Herod; and beſides, he himſelf had another wife, whom he put away; ſo that his ſin was a very aggravated and complicated one: lying with a brother's wife, was one of thoſe ſins which, according to the Jewiſh [h] canons, deſerved cutting off, or death by the hand of God. Joſephus [i] gives another reaſon of the impriſonment and death of John, that Herod feared that the people of the Jews, through his means, would be moved to ſedition, and revolt from his government; which might be what Herodias ſuggeſted to him, or what he gave out himſelf, to cover the true cauſe of his proceedings: but the true reaſon is, what is here given, and is to be confirmed by the teſtimony of Jewiſh writers. One of their chronologers [k] delivers the account in theſe expreſs words: "Herod "Antipater was a very wicked and pernicious man, "many of the wiſe men of Iſrael he ſlew with "the ſword; and he took to wife, his brother Philip's wife, whilſt he was living; and becauſe "John the high-prieſt (for ſo through miſtake they "call him) הוכיחו על זה, reproved him for this; "(ſee Luke iii. 19.) he ſlew him with the ſword "with many of the wiſe men of Iſrael." And, ſays their hiſtorian [l], "alſo he, Herod, ſlew John, "becauſe he ſaid unto him, it is forbidden thee to "take the wife of Philip, and he ſlew him; this "is that John that practiſed baptiſm."

Ver. 5. And when he would have put him to death, &c.] As ſoon as he apprehended him, and put him into priſon; being provoked by his reproving him, and being ſtirred up by Herodias, who was greatly incenſed and enraged, and would have killed him herſelf, but could not, being hindered by Herod: who, though he had a good will and ſtrong inclination to take away his life, yet what with fearing the terror of his own conſcience, and the reverence and reſpect he had for John, as a good man; and eſpecially for the reaſon here given, he did not do it, for he feared the multitude: not God, but the multitude; and theſe, not only the large number of people that attended on John's miniſtry, and were baptized by him, and became his diſciples, but the generality of the people, the whole body of the Jewiſh nation. So God is pleaſed often times, to reſtrain the wickedneſs of princes, by the fear of their ſubjects: becauſe they counted him as a prophet; a holy good man, and who was ſent of God; they reſpected him as ſuch, believing him to be a true, and real prophet, and treated him with honour and reverence, ſuitable to his character; wherefore Herod was afraid, ſhould he take away his life, that the people would mutiny, riſe up againſt him, and revolt from him. In what eſteem John was with the people of the Jews in general, may be learned from the character Joſephus gives of him, as a good man; who ſtirred up the Jews to the practice of virtue, eſpecially piety and juſtice; which made the common people fond of him, and his doctrine; and who were of opinion, that the defeat of Herod's army which followed the death of John, was a juſt judgment of God upon him for it [m].

Ver. 6. But when Herod's birth-day was kept, &c.] The birth-days of princes, both of their coming into the world, and acceſſion to the throne of government, were kept by the Gentiles; as by the Egyptians, Gen. xl. 20. and by the [n] Perſians, and Romans [o], and other nations, but not by the Jews; who reckon theſe among the feaſts of idolaters. "Theſe, ſay they [p], are the feaſts of ido-"laters; the Calends, and the Saturnalia, the time "kept in memory of ſubduing a kingdom (or "when a king takes poſſeſſion of it, the day of his "acceſſion) ויום גנוסיא של מלכים, and the birth-"day of kings, (when they are made and crowned, "the day of coronation) and the day of birth, and "the day of death." And it is a queſtion, whether this day, that was kept, was the day of Herod's natural birth, or of his civil government, being his acceſſion, or coronation day: and it might alſo be a queſtion, whether it was the then preſent Herod's birth-day, or whether it was not his father Herod's, was it not that Mark ſays, ch. vi. 21. it was his birth-day; ſince it is the latter the poet [q] refers to, as kept by the Jews, when he ſays, At cùm Herodis venere dies; and the old Scholiaſt upon him obſerves, that "Herod reigned over the Jews in "Syria, in the times of Auguſtus; therefore the "Herodians kept Herod's birth-day, as alſo the "ſabbath, on which day they ſet up candles "in the windows lighted, and encircled with vio-"lets." This they did, believing him to be the Meſſiah: and it is further to be obſerved, that the word here uſed, is ſaid [r] to be proper to the dead, and not to the living; and that he that uſes it of the living, ſpeaks very inaccurately: but however, it was a feſtival, and a time of great mirth and jollity; and a proper opportunity offered to Herodias, to execute her malicious deſigns againſt John the Baptiſt; for at this time, the daughter of Herodias danced before them: in the original text it is, in the midſt, in the middle of the hall; or in the midſt of the company, the lords, high captains, and chief eſtates of Galilee, for whom Herod made a ſupper, Mark vi. 21. and the Syriac renders it, קדם סמיכא, before the gueſts. Muſick and dancing, were uſual at ſuch entertainments, they were the common appendages of a feaſt [s]: the daughter of Herodias, who danced before the company for their diverſion, whether alone, or with others, was very probably Salome [t], whom ſhe had by her former huſband; and therefore is called, not the daughter of Herod, but of Herodias: and pleaſed Herod; and as Mark adds, and them that ſat with him; ſo that the pleaſure he had, did not ariſe merely from the reſpect and honour ſhown to him and his birthday, by her appearing with ſo much chearfulneſs on this occaſion before him; who had taken her father's wife from him, and defiled her mother; but from the airs, geſtures, and motions of the lady in dancing; which were ſo extreamly fine and regular, that ſhe gave wonderful ſatisfaction and delight to Herod, and the whole company.

---

[g] Joſeph. Antiqu. l. 18. c. 6. [h] Miſn. Ceritot, c. 1. §. 1. [i] Antiqu. l. 18. c. 6. [k] Ganz. Tzemach David, par. 1. fol. 25. 2. [l] Joſeph. Gorionides, l. 5. c. 45. [m] Antiqu. l. 18. c. 6. [n] Herodot. l. 1. c. 133. & 9. c. 109. [o] Plin. Ep. l. 10. ep. 61. [p] Miſn. Avoda Zara, c. 1. §. 3. [q] Perſius, Satyr. 5. prope finem. [r] Ammonius, περὶ ὁμοίων, &c. in lit. Γ. [s] Alex. ab Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 2. c. 25. [t] Joſeph. Antiqu. l. 18. c. 6.

Ver. 7. Whereupon he promiſed with an oath, &c.] On account of her fine dancing, and being extreamly pleaſed with it himſelf; and the more, that it gave ſuch pleaſure to the whole court: he firſt promiſed her, to give her whatſoever ſhe would aſk; and then repeating it, he confirmed it with an oath; adding, as Mark ſays, that he would give it her, even to the half of his kingdom: a way of ſpeaking uſed by princes, when they give full power to perſons, to aſk what they will of them; and to expreſs their great munificence and liberality; ſignifying, let it be ever ſo great, or coſt what it will, though as much as half a kingdom comes to, it ſhall be granted; ſee Eſth. v. 3, 6. A very fooliſh promiſe, and a raſh oath theſe, which were made upon ſuch a conſideration, as only a fine dance. If ſhe, as Theophylact obſerves, had aſked for his head, would he have given it her? And if he ſwore by his head, which was a common form of ſwearing with the Jews[u], ſhe very appoſitely, though unjuſtly, as Dr. Lightfoot obſerves, anſwers to him; as you have ſwore by your head, give me John Baptiſt's head.

Ver. 8. And ſhe being before inſtructed of her mother, &c.] What requeſt to make; for as Mark ſays, ſhe went forth to her mother immediately, as ſoon as ſhe had received the king's promiſe, and took advice of her, what ſhe ſhould aſk; who bid her aſk for the head of John the Baptiſt; and accordingly ſhe went in, ſtraightway with haſte unto the king, as the ſame Evangeliſt obſerves, to take him at his word, and whilſt he was in the mood; being urged and haſtened on by her mother, who was eager to ſatisfy her revenge on John; and ſaid, give me here John Baptiſt's head in a charger: ſhe deſires his head, and this to be brought to her in a large diſh, that her mother might be ſure of his death; and have an opportunity of inſulting that mouth and tongue, that had ſpoke againſt her inceſtuous marriage: and ſhe deſires to have it given here, in that very place, at that very time, where, and while the company was together, who were witneſſes of the king's promiſe and oath; and this ſhe did, leſt when the feſtival was over, and he was out of his cups, he ſhould repent of his folly and raſhneſs. The mother and daughter ſeem to be much alike, both for laſciviouſneſs, revenge, and cruelty: and if what the hiſtorian ſays[w] be true, that this ſame perſon Salome, the daughter of Herodias, as ſhe walked over a river which was frozen in the winter ſeaſon, the ice broke, and ſhe fell in, and the pieces of ice cut off her head; the lex talionis, the law of retaliation, was righteouſly executed on her.

Ver. 9. And the king was ſorry, &c.] As he might be upon many accounts; partly on account of John, for whom, notwithſtanding his freedom in reproving him, he had a reſpect; and partly on his own account, his conſcience dictating to him, that it was an evil action, and would leave a brand of perpetual infamy upon him; as alſo on account of the people, who were ſo much affected to John, leſt they ſhould make an inſurrection, and rebel againſt him; and likewiſe, becauſe it was reckoned an ill omen with the Romans, to take away life on that day they received their own; and therefore carefully abſtained, on ſuch days, from executions. Nevertheleſs for his oath's ſake; that he might not be guilty of perjury, choſe rather to commit murder; though it would have been no iniquity in him, to have acted contrary to ſuch a raſh promiſe, and wicked oath; which would have been better to have been broke, than kept: and them which ſat with him at meat; leſt he ſhould be thought by them fickle and inconſtant, and not a man of his word, and who had no regard to an oath: or it may be, they, either to curry favour with Herodias, or out of ill-will they might bear to John; or in great reſpect to the damſel, who had ſo well pleaſed them with her dancing; inſtead of diſſuading him from it, preſſed him much to perform his promiſe: and therefore, he commanded it to be given her; in the form and manner ſhe requeſted it. Some have thought, that the whole of this affair was a concerted ſcheme; and that Herod himſelf was in it, though he pretended to be ſorry and uneaſy, having fixed on this ſeaſon as a convenient time for it; and choſe to have it done in this way, and in ſo publick a manner, to leſſen the odium of it; or otherwiſe, it is not eaſy to account for his extravagant promiſe, and his punctual performance of it.

Ver. 10. And he ſent, &c.] An executioner, as in Mark vi. 27. where the Latin word ſpeculator, or as it is ſometimes written ſpiculator, is uſed; and is the name of an officer concerned in executions, and particularly in beheading of perſons; and ſo is uſed by Latin writers. "In a civil war, ſays[x] Seneca, a ſervant hid his maſter that was proſcribed; and when he had fitted his rings for himſelf, and put on his cloaths, he met ſpeculatoribus, the ſpeculators; he told them he deſired nothing, but that they would perform their orders, and immediately ſtretched out his neck." And the ſame writer elſewhere[y] ſpeaks, of a ſoldier that was condemned by Piſo, on ſuſpicion of murdering his fellow ſoldier; "Who was had without the camp, and as ſoon as he ſtretched out his neck, he, who was thought to be killed, ſuddenly appeared; upon which the centurion that had the management of the execution, ordered ſpeculatorem, the ſpeculator, to put up his ſword, and returned the condemned perſon to Piſo." The word is alſo uſed by the Jewiſh doctors, and in the ſame ſenſe; take the following inſtance among many[z]. "R. Iſhmael ſaid to R. Simeon ben Gamaliel (when they were both apprehended in order to be executed) brother, there was a man ready to receive his blow, and they intreated, לאספקלטור, the ſpeculator: one ſaid, I am a prieſt, the ſon of an high-prieſt, ſlay me firſt, that I may'nt ſee the death of my companion; and the other ſaid to him, I am a prince, the ſon of a prince, ſlay me firſt, that I may not ſee the death of my companion: he replied unto them, caſt lots; and they caſt lots, and the lot fell on R. Simeon ben Gamaliel; immediately he took a ſword, and cut off his head." And as this word is often uſed by them[a] for an executioner, ſo ספקולא, ſpecula is often made mention of by them[b], as a ſort of puniſhment by death: and ſuch an officer was ſent by Herod, to inflict this puniſhment upon John; who accordingly executed it, and beheaded John in the priſon; that is, of Machærus, where he lay, without giving him a hearing, or allowing him to ſpeak for himſelf, or with his friends: and which was done in this private manner, partly for diſpatch, and partly on account of the people; who it might have been feared, had the execution been publick and known, would have roſe and reſcued him.

---

[u] Miſn. Sanhedrim, c. 3. §. 2. T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 3. 1. Derech Eretz, c. 6. fol. 18. 2.

[w] Nicephorus, Hiſt. l. 1. c. 20.

[x] De beneficiis, l. 3. c. 25.

[y] De ira, l. 1. c. 16. Vid. Julium Firmicum l. 8. c. 26. & Florum, l. 4. c. 7. & Suetonium in vit. Caligul. c. 52. Octav. Auguſt. c. 74. & Claud. c. 35. Tertullian. de Corona, c. 1.

[z] Abot R. Nathan, c. 38. fol. 9. 1.

[a] Vid. Targum Jon. in Gen. xxxvii. 36. & xxxix. 1. & Targ. Sheni in Eſth. v. 2. Jarchi in Exod. iv. 11. T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 108. 1. & Gloſſ. in ib.

Ver. 11. And his head was brought in a charger, &c.] By the executioner that cut it off, to Herod, whilſt he and his gueſts were at table; by which it ſhould ſeem, that the priſon was very near; and it is not improbable, that it was the caſtle of Machærus, that Herod made this entertainment in: and given to the damſel; the daughter of Herodias, who, by her mother's inſtigation, had aſked it, and who received it out of the hands of Herod himſelf; or however, it was delivered to her by his orders: and ſhe brought it to her mother; who had put her upon it, than which, nothing could be a more agreeable diſh to her; and who, as Jerom ſays[c], becauſe ſhe could not bear truth, that tongue which ſpoke truth; ſhe plucked out, and pierced it through and through with a needle, as Fulvia did Cicero's: but this triumph over the faithful reprover of her, and Herod's vices, did not laſt long; for quickly after this, they were ſtript of their honours and riches, and deprived of the kingdom, and baniſhed to Lyons in France, where they died[d]. A Jewiſh chronologer ſays[e], Herod was driven out of the land by Tiberius, and fled to Spain, and died there.

Ver. 12. And his diſciples came, &c.] To the priſon where his body was left, and to which they had liberty of recourſe before; ſee Matt. xi. 2. and very probably, upon hearing what was done, might apply to Herod, as Joſeph of Arimathea did to Pilate, for the body of Jeſus; who might, as he did, give them leave to take it: and took up the body and buried it. Theophylact ſays, his body was buried in Baſte Ceſaræa, and that his head was firſt repoſited in Emeſeſa. This was the laſt office of love to their maſter, and was done in reſpect and gratitude to him, and to ſhew that they ſtill abode by his doctrine; and was what decency and the belief of the reſurrection of the dead, as well as the will of God, require ſhould be done: and went and told Jeſus; that their maſter was dead, what kind of death he ſuffered, and by what means it was brought about; and how that they had interred him; and what Herod alſo had ſaid of Jeſus, that he was John riſen from the dead. Their coming to Chriſt, and informing him of all this ſhew, that they were taught by their maſter to reſpect him as the Meſſiah, and believe in him, and adhere to him; and it is very likely that they continued with him.

Ver. 13. When Jeſus heard of it, &c.] Of the death of John, and of the cruel uſage he had met with; and particularly, that his fame had reached the court of Herod, and that he was talked of there, and ſaid by Herod himſelf to be John the Baptiſt, that was riſen from the dead; he departed thence by ſhip, into a deſert place apart; to avoid Herod, though not through fear of death; but becauſe his time was not yet come: which may teach us, that it is lawful to ſhun dangers, when there is an opportunity; which may be done, without betraying truth, or ſacrificing a good conſcience. The other Evangeliſts Mark and Luke, aſſign another reaſon of this departure of Chriſt's, that it was upon the return of his diſciples to him from their embaſſy; when having given him an account of what they had done, and taught, he judged it proper they ſhould retire, and get ſome refreſhment and reſt; and both may very well be thought to be the reaſons of this receſs. At the ſame time that John's diſciples brought him the news of their maſter's death, Chriſt's diſciples return to him, with the account of the ſucceſs of their miniſtry; who might not only be weary, and want refreſhment, but be diſcouraged in their minds, at this inſtance of cruelty; wherefore Chriſt thought it neceſſary to retire, partly for his own ſafety, and partly for their eaſe; and that he might have an opportunity of fortifying their minds againſt all trials and perſecutions they were to meet with: the place from whence he departed, was either Capernaum, his own country and city, or Nazareth, where we have lately heard of him; or ſome other place in Galilee, where he was, when John's diſciples came to him: the place whither he went, was a deſert place; and as Luke ſays, belonging to the city called Bethſaida, the city of Andrew and Peter, which lay on the other ſide of the ſea of Galilee, or Tiberias; over which he went by ſhip, John vi. 1. And when the people had heard thereof; of his departure, and whither he went, they followed him on foot out of their cities; ſuch as Nazareth, Capernaum, Tiberias, and others; and paſſing the bridge at Jordan, as Dr. Lightfoot obſerves, they outwent the ſhip, and got thither before them, as Mark relates. This ſhewed their great affection and zeal for Chriſt, and their diligence in attending on him.

Ver. 14. And Jeſus went forth, &c.] Either from the mountain where he ſate with his diſciples, John vi. 3. or out of the deſert, where he had retired for ſecrecy; or out of the ſhip, which ſeems beſt, the company having got thither before his landing: and ſaw a great multitude; for there were about five thouſand men, beſide women and children, ver. 21. and was moved with compaſſion toward them: partly on account of their bodily infirmities, which were very many and great; and partly on account of the bad ſituation they were in, through want of ſpiritual paſtors to feed them with the bread of life; for Mark gives this as the reaſon, moving his compaſſion, becauſe they were as ſheep, not having a ſhepherd: all which, ſhews the truth of Chriſt's human nature; proves him to be a merciful high-prieſt, and one truly concerned for both the bodies and ſouls of men: and he healed their ſick; which they brought along with them, and that without the uſe of any medicine, by a word ſpeaking: ſo that as the former phraſe gives proof of his humanity, this atteſts his divinity: but this was not all he did, he not only healed their bodies, but he taught them the doctrines of the Goſpel; and ſpake to them concerning the kingdom of God, for the good of their ſouls, as the other Evangeliſts relate.

Ver. 15. And when it was evening, &c.] Mark ſays, when the day was now far ſpent; and Luke, when the day began to wear away; it was upon the decline of the day. The Jews, as Grotius rightly obſerves, had two evenings; the one began when the ſun declined at noon, and the other at ſun-ſetting: now it was the former of theſe, and not the latter, that was now come; for after this, you read of another evening that was come, ver. 23. between which two evenings Chriſt made the multitude to ſit down, and he fed them in a miraculous manner; and the diſciples reaſon for the diſmiſſion of the multitude, that they might go into the neighbouring villages, and buy proviſions, ſhews that it could not be the laſt, but the firſt of theſe evenings, that is here meant. His diſciples came to him; the twelve, whom he had left in that part of the deſert he retired to; or on the mount, where he had ſate down with them for their reſt and refreſhment: ſaying, this is a deſert place; where no food was to be had; where were no houſes of entertainment, and the time is now paſt; not the time of the day, but of dining: the uſual dinner-time was paſt, which, with the Jews, was the fifth hour of the day, and anſwers to eleven o'clock with us, or at fartheſt ſix; which, with us, is twelve at noon; concerning which, the Jewiſh doctors thus diſpute [f]. "The "firſt hour, is the time of eating for the Lydians, "or Cannibals; the ſecond for thieves, the third "for heirs, the fourth for workmen, and the fifth "for every man: but does not R. Papa ſay, that "the fourth is the time of dining for every man? "But if ſo, if the fourth is the time for every "man, the fifth is for workmen, and the ſixth for "the diſciples of the wiſe men." Which is elſewhere [g] delivered with ſome little variation, thus; "the firſt hour, is the time of eating for Lydians; "the ſecond, for thieves; the third, for heirs; the "fourth, for workmen; the fifth, for ſcholars; "and the ſixth, for every man: but does not R. "Papa ſay, &c." But ſuppoſing the uſual time of dining to be at the fartheſt, at the ſixth hour, at twelve o'clock, this time muſt be elapſed, ſince the firſt evening was commenced; ſo that the reaſoning of the diſciples is very juſt, ſend the multitude away. Chriſt was preaching to them, the diſciples move that he would break off his diſcourſe, and diſmiſs them: in the ſynagogue, the manner of diſmiſſing the people was, by reading the הפטרה, or diſmiſſion, which was ſome paſſage out of the prophetic writings. That they may go into the villages, and buy themſelves victuals; the little towns which lay neareſt the deſert, where they might be ſupplied with ſuitable proviſions.

---

[b] Bereſhit Rab. §. 79. fol. 69. 3. Vajikra Rab. §. 24. fol. 165. 2. & Bemidbar Rab. §. 7. fol. 187. 4.

[c] Adv. Ruffin. Tom. 2. fol. 82. K.

[d] Joſeph. Antiqu. l. 18. c. 8.

[e] Ganz. Tzemach David, par. 1. fol. 25. 2.

Ver. 16. But Jeſus ſaid unto them, &c.] The diſciples, they need not depart; meaning ſo long as he was with them, who had power enough to provide a ſufficient meal for them, as well as by a word ſpeaking, to heal their diſeaſes; however, to try their faith, and make way for the working of the following miracle, he ſays to them, give ye them to eat; ſuch proviſions as you have along with you.

Ver. 17. And they ſay unto him, &c.] In order to excuſe themſelves, and to ſhew the impoſſibility of feeding ſuch a large number of people; we have here but five loaves; and theſe barley ones, coarſe bread; and two fiſhes; ſmall ones, which were dried and ſalted, and fit for preſent eating; which they either brought along with them for their own refreſhment, or rather, were brought thither by a boy to ſell, as is uſual where a great concourſe of people are got together: theſe words ſeem to be ſpoken by Andrew, Simon Peter's brother; who added, but what are they among ſo many? ſee John vi. 8, 9. not thinking of the power of Chriſt, who was able to multiply, and make this proviſion a ſufficiency for the whole company.

Ver. 18. He ſaid, bring them hither to me.] The loaves and the fiſhes, ſignifying that they were ſufficient; or that he would make them ſo: this he he ſaid, to try their faith in him, their obedience to him, and their liberality to others: and indeed, the beſt way to have an increaſe of temporal ſupplies, is to bring what we have, and put it into Chriſt's hands; whereby not only good is done to others, but that with an overplus is returned to the giver.

Ver. 19. And he commanded the multitude to ſit down on the graſs, &c.] The other Evangeliſts ſay, that he ordered the diſciples to cauſe the people to ſit down; both no doubt were done: the multitude were commanded to ſit down by Chriſt, which, without his orders, they would never have done; and the diſciples were enjoined to place them in form, by companies, in ranks, by hundreds and by fifties, that their number might be the better taken, and the food more orderly diſtributed by the apoſtles: and took the five loaves and the two fiſhes; into his hands, lifting them up, that they might be ſeen by the whole company; and they be fully convinced of the miracle going to be wrought by him: and looking up to heaven; to his Father in heaven, who is the Father of mercies; and from whom, every mercy and bleſſing of life comes; and giving thanks to him for the ſame, as was uſually done by him, he bleſſed the five loaves and the two fiſhes; and brake the loaves, and divided the fiſhes; and gave the loaves, and fiſhes alſo, to the diſciples, and the diſciples to the multitude; who were the miniſters and ſervants of Chriſt, employed by him in this manner, for the more orderly and quick diſpatch of this buſineſs: and which was an emblem of their ſpiritual work and office; who received all their food from Chriſt, which they diſtributed to the churches, and fed them with.

Ver. 20. And they did all eat, &c.] Chriſt and his twelve diſciples, and the five thouſand men, with the women and children, of the five loaves and two fiſhes; every one had their portion, and were filled; they were ſatisfied, they had a full meal, they had enough, and to ſpare; ſee 2 Chron. xxxi. 10. which the Targumiſt paraphraſes thus. "And Azariah ſaid unto him, who was appointed "chief over the houſe of Zadok, and ſaid, from "the time that they began to ſeparate the offering, "to bring it into the ſanctuary of the Lord, "אכלין ושבעין, we have eat and are filled, and "have left much; for the word of the Lord hath "bleſſed his people, and what is left, lo! it is this "plenty of good." The Jews uſed not to reckon it a meal, unleſs a man was filled, and account it an ill ſign, if nothing was left: but here was fulneſs, and more left than what was firſt had; which was gathered up, either for the uſe of the poor, or reſerved for after ſervice; teaching us liberality to the needy, and frugality, not to waſte that which is left. And they took up of the fragments that remained, twelve baſkets full; according to the number of the diſciples, every man had his baſket full. It may be enquired, where they could have ſo many baſkets in the wilderneſs? It is not likely, that every one of the apoſtles had a baſket with him; it is indeed not improbable, but that they might be furniſhed with them from ſome in the company, who might bring proviſions with them, either for their own uſe, or to ſell; ſee John vi. 9. but perhaps the reaſon why they were ſo eaſily ſupplied with ſuch a number of baſkets in a deſert place, might be a cuſtom which the Jews [h] had of carrying baſkets with hay and ſtraw, in commemoration of what they did in Egypt; when they were obliged to carry bricks in baſkets, and to go about and pick up ſtraw in baſkets to make bricks; hence the [l] Epigrammatiſt calls a Jew, ciſtifer, a baſket-bearer, or carrier; and Juvenal [k] laughs at theſe people, as if all their houſhold goods lay in a baſket, and a little hay, or ſtraw: it is ſaid of R. Simeon, that when he went to the ſchool, שקיל צנא, he carried a baſket on his ſhoulders [l]; the Gloſs ſuggeſts, it was to ſit upon; but a baſket is not very proper for a ſeat; very likely it was for the above reaſon: ſuch a cuſtom will account for it, how ſuch a number of baſkets could be come at in the wilderneſs.

---

[f] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 11. 1.

[g] T. Bab. Peſachim, fol. 12. 2.

[h] Nicholas de Lyra, in Pſal. lxxxi. 6.

Ver. 21. And they that had eaten were about five thouſand men, &c.] The word about, is omitted in the Vulgate Latin, in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel, and in the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions, which expreſsly ſay there were ſo many. A large number indeed, to be fed with five loaves and two fiſhes! beſides women and children; who were not taken into the account, though they all eat, and were filled, it not being uſual with the Jews, to number their women; and who might be near as large a number as the men: for generally there is a very great concourſe of the female ſex, and of children, where any thing extraordinary, or out of the way, is to be ſeen or heard; and of this ſort, was a large number of Chriſt's audience, who only came out of curioſity, or for one ſiniſter end or another.

Ver. 22. And ſtraightway Jeſus conſtrained his diſciples, &c.] As ſoon as ever he had wrought the above miracle, and perceived that the people were ſo convinced by it, of his being the Meſſiah, that they were determined, whether he would or no, to ſet him up for a temporal king, to deliver them from the Roman yoke; which they doubted not he was able to do, who could feed ſo large a number, with ſuch a ſmall quantity of proviſion; ſee John vi. 14, 15. and knowing alſo, that his diſciples had imbibed the ſame notion of a temporal kingdom, were very fond of it, and big with expectation thereof; and would have readily encouraged the populace, and joined with them in ſuch an action: wherefore, in all haſte he hurried them away, obliged them to depart, leſt any ſtep ſhould be taken, which might be of dangerous conſequence to them, and the people: it looks as if the diſciples were bent upon the ſame thing, and that it was with much difficulty and reluctance, they were brought off of it. Chriſt was forced to uſe his power and authority, and order them directly to get into a ſhip; very likely, the ſame they came over in; and to go before him unto the other ſide of the lake of Tiberias, or ſea of Galilee, over-againſt Bethſaida, to Capernaum, or the land of Genneſerat; while he ſent the multitudes away: who would not ſo eaſily have been prevailed upon to have departed, if Chriſt had not firſt ſhipped off his diſciples; for had he withdrawn himſelf, and left his diſciples with them, they would have been in hopes of his return, and would have continued in a body with them, in expectation of it; and therefore, the better to diſperſe them, and prevent their deſigns, he ſends away his diſciples before him.

Ver. 23. And when he had ſent the multitudes away, &c.] Had ordered them at leaſt to go away; for, it ſeems, according to John vi. 22. that they did not in general diſperſe: there was a large body of them that continued upon the ſpot all night, expecting his return; in which being diſappointed, they took ſhipping, and came to Capernaum. He went up into a mountain apart to pray; perhaps the ſame he went up to before, and from whence he came down, John vi. 3. This he choſe as a proper place for prayer, where he could be retired, and alone, have his thoughts free, and as man, pour out his ſoul to his Father, on his own account, and on the behalf of others; and particularly, he might be concerned about this notion of a temporal kingdom, that his diſciples and others were ſo fond of; and pray that his diſciples might be convinced of their miſtake, and that the people might be hindered from proſecuting their deſigns. His going up into a mountain, and praying there, were quite contrary to the canons of the Jews; which forbid praying in places ever ſo little raiſed. "Let not a man ſtand " ſay they [m], במקום גבוה, in an high place, and " pray, but in a low place and pray; as it is ſaid, " Out of the depths have I cried unto thee, O Lord, " Pſal. cxxx. 1. 'Tis a tradition, that a man may " not ſtand, neither upon a throne, nor upon a " footſtool, nor in any high place and pray, be" cauſe there are no high places before God." This rule is delivered by Maimonides [n], in this form: " A man may not ſtand in a place that is three " hands high, or more, and pray, neither upon a " bed, nor upon a ſeat, nor upon a throne." But Chriſt did not look upon himſelf obliged, by theſe traditions of the elders; but choſe ſuch places, whether high or low, which were moſt private and retired. And when evening was come; when it was now dark, John vi. 17. when the ſecond evening was come and ended; ſee ver. 15. and it was properly night, he was there alone; in the mountain, where he continued the greateſt part of the night, even until the fourth watch.

Ver. 24. But the ſhip was now in the midſt of the ſea, &c.] That is, the ſhip in which the diſciples were put into, to go on the other ſide, had by this time got into the midſt of the ſea: the Syriac and Perſic verſions ſay, it was many furlongs from land; and the Arabic expreſsly ſays, about twenty-five furlongs; which account ſeems to be taken from John vi. 19. but this was not all, it was not only at ſuch a diſtance from land, but was toſſed with waves; up and down, and in danger of being overſet, and the paſſengers loſt: for the wind was againſt them; which beat the waves with ſuch violence againſt them, that they were in the utmoſt danger of their lives, and not able to get forward; and what was worſt of all, and moſt diſcouraging to the diſciples, Chriſt was not with them. The ſhip in which the diſciples were, was an emblem of the church of Chriſt, and of its ſtate and condition in this world: this world is like a ſea, for its largeneſs, and the abundance of nations and people in it, compared to many waters, Rev. xvii. 15. and for the tumultuouſneſs of its inhabitants; the wicked being like a troubled ſea, which cannot reſt, continually caſting up the mire and dirt of ſin, to the diſhonour of God, and the grief of his people; and for its fickleneſs and inconſtancy, changes and war being continually in it: now the church of Chriſt is like a ſhip in this troubleſome ſea; where the true diſciples and followers of Chriſt, are ſelected together; and are preſerved from the pollutions of the world, and from the danger to which the men of it are expoſed, being in their ſins, and liable to the wrath and curſe of God, and eternal damnation; which they that are in Chriſt, and members of his body, are ſecure

---

[l] Nubere: nupſiſti, Gellia, Ciſtifero. Martial. Epigram. l. 5. ep. 17.

[k] Judæis: quorum Cophinus fœnumque ſupellex. Juvenal. Satyr. 3. cum dedit ille locum, Cophino, fœnoque relicto. ib. Satyr. 6.

[l] T. Bab. Nedarim, fol. 49. 2.

[m] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 10. 2. Piſke Toſaph. in ib. art. 52. T. Hieroſ. Beracot, fol. 4. 4. Kotſenſis Mitzvot Tora precept. Affirm. 19. Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 70. 3.

[n] Hilch. Tephillah. c. 5. §. 7.

from; the port or haven to which they are bound, is heaven and eternal happineſs; theirs and Chriſt's Father's houſe, where are many manſions provided for them; and where they long to be, and hope, and believe, e'er long they ſhall arrive unto; and hope is as an anchor of their ſoul, ſure and ſtedfaſt: but in the mean while, whilſt they are ſailing through the ſea of this world, they are often, as the church of old, toſſed with tempeſts, and not comforted, Iſa. lv. 11. with the tempeſts of ſatan's temptations, the ſtorms of the world's perſecutions, and with the winds of error and falſe doctrine; and then is it moſt uncomfortable to them, when Chriſt is not with them, which was the caſe of the diſciples here.

Ver. 25. And in the fourth watch of the night, &c.] This is ſaid, according to the diviſion of the night into four watches, by the Jews; who [o] ſay, that "there are four watches in the night, and four "watches in the day." It is true indeed, that it is diſputed among them, whether there were four watches, or only three in the night: ſome ſay there were four, others ſay there were but three [p]; not but that theſe made a diviſion of the night into four parts, the three firſt of which, they thought were properly the watches of the night, and the fourth was the morning. The firſt watch began at ſix o'clock in the evening, and laſted till nine; the ſecond began at nine, and ended at twelve, which was midnight; the third began at twelve, and cloſed at three; the fourth began at three, and ended at ſix in the morning. But ſince ſome [q] Jewiſh writers are ſo poſitive for the diviſion of the night into three watches only, and a watch is with them called [r], the third part of the night; and it is dubious with ſome, whether the Jewiſh diviſion is here referred to; and ſince it is ſo clear a point, that the Romans [s] divided their night into four watches, and their writers ſpeak not only of the firſt, ſecond, and third watches, but alſo of the fourth watch [t]; it is thought by ſome, that the Evangeliſt ſpeaks after the Roman manner: but however, certain it is, that within this period, probably at the beginning of it, after three o'clock in the morning, Chriſt came to his diſciples, when they had been almoſt all the night at ſea, toſſed with waves, and in great danger. Jeſus went unto them; from the mountain where he had been praying, the greateſt part of the night, to the ſea-ſide, and ſo upon the waters to them; for it follows, walking upon the ſea; as on dry land: though it was ſo ſtormy and boiſterous, that the diſciples, though in a ſhip, were in the utmoſt danger, yet he upon the waves, was in none at all; by which action he ſhewed himſelf to be the Lord of the ſea, and to be truly and properly God; whoſe character is, that he treadeth upon the waves of the ſea, Job ix. 8.

Ver. 26. And when the diſciples ſaw him walking on the ſea, &c.] It being now morning, and perhaps might have moon-light; and beſides, there is always more light upon the water than land; they were able to diſcern ſomething like a man, walking upon the ſurface of the ſea, but had not light enough to diſtinguiſh what, or who it was; and, moreover, had no thought of Chriſt, or expectation of ſeeing him; and the appearance of a man walking upon the waters being ſo unuſual, and aſtoniſhing, they were troubled, ſaying it is a ſpirit: a nocturnal apparition, a dæmon in human form. The Jews, eſpecially the ſect of the Phariſees, had a notion, from whom the diſciples might have theirs, of ſpirits, apparitions, and dæmons, being to be ſeen in the night: hence that rule [u], "it is "forbidden a man to ſalute his friend in the night, "for we are careful, leſt שר חוא, it ſhould be a "dæmon." They ſay a great many things of one, לילית, Lilith, that has its name from, לילח, the night, a ſhe dæmon, that uſed to appear in the night, with an human face, and carry off young children, and kill them. Some ſuch frightful notions had poſſeſſed the minds of the diſciples: and they cried out for fear; as perſons in the utmoſt conſternation, in the greateſt danger, and in want of help: the fear of ſpirits, ariſes from the uncommoneſs of their appearance; from their ſuperiority to men in power and ſtrength; from the enmity there is between men and evil ſpirits; and from a general notion of their doing hurt and miſchief: hence, dæmons are, by the Jews, called, מזיקין, hurtful, or hurting, all their ſtudy being to do hurt to men; and the ſame word is here uſed in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel: add to all this, that the fear of the diſciples might be increaſed, through a vulgar notion among ſea-faring men, that ſuch ſights are ominous, and portend evil to ſailors; and they might the more eaſily be induced to give credit to this, and fear, ſince they were already in ſuch imminent danger.

Ver. 27. But ſtraightway Jeſus ſpake unto them, &c.] Directly, the very moment, as ſoon as ever they cried out, and he perceived the conſternation they were in, as one truly affected towards them, and concerned for their welfare; he called out aloud unto them, not coming with any intention to fright them, but to ſave them; ſaying, be of good cheer, it is I, be not afraid; take heart, be of good courage, don't be affrighted at my appearance, from whom you have nothing to fear; nor be afraid of the ſtorm and tempeſt in which you are, I'll deliver you; for it is I, your Maſter, Saviour, and Redeemer, and not any hurtful ſpirit; who am able to ſave you, and am come for that purpoſe. Chriſt may be ſometimes near his people, and they not know him; as the Lord was in the place where Jacob was, and he knew it not, Gen. xxviii. 16. and as Chriſt was ſtanding by Mary Magdalene at the ſepulchre, and ſhe took him to be the gardener: and for want of a diſtinct knowledge of Chriſt in his perſon, offices, and grace, perſons have wrong apprehenſions of him, and are filled with dread and fears, concluding they have no intereſt in him; that he is a Saviour, but not of them; that their ſins are ſo many, and of ſuch a dye, and attended with ſuch aggravating circumſtances, that though he is able to ſave them, he never can be willing to receive ſuch vile ſinners as they are: but when Chriſt makes himſelf known unto them, as the able and willing Saviour, and their Saviour and Redeemer, then, inſtead of dreading him as a judge, their fears vaniſh, their faith increaſes, and they are ready to do any thing he ſhall order them; as Peter ſays in the next verſe, who was willing to come to Chriſt on the water, when he knew who he was, if he was but pleaſed to bid him come.

Ver. 28. And Peter anſwered him and ſaid, &c.] Who knew his voice, and was ready to believe it might be Chriſt; and having more courage, and being more forward than the reſt of the diſciples, ventured to ſpeak to him; ſaying, Lord, if it be thou; for he was not fully aſſured that it was he: he might conſider that nocturnal apparitions are deceitful, and that ſatan can transform himſelf into an angel of light, and could put on the appearance, and mimick the voice of Chriſt; wherefore, to try whether it was a ſpectre, or really Chriſt, he ſays, bid me come unto thee on the water; thereby expreſſing great love and affection to Chriſt, being willing to come to him, though through danger, through ſtorms and tempeſts; and alſo his ſtrong faith in him, ſuppoſing it to be he; who, he knew, was as able to ſupport his body on the water, as his own; and yet much modeſty, ſubmiſſion, and dependance; not willing to take a ſtep without his order.

---

[o] T. Hieroſ. Beracot, fol. 2. 4. Echa Rabbati, fol. 54. 4. [p] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 3. 1, 2. [q] Jarchi & Kimchi in Jud. vii. 19. & in Pſal. cxix. 147. [r] Gloſſ. in T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 2. 1. [s] Alex. ab Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 4. c. 20. [t] Liv. Hiſt. l. 36. c. 24. [u] T. Bab. Megilla, fol. 3. 1. Sanhedrim, fol. 44. 1.

Ver. 29. And he ſaid, come, &c.] This he ſaid, partly to aſſure them who he was; for had he denied him, he and the reſt might have concluded, it was none of Jeſus; and partly to commend his love, and confirm his faith, by giving a further inſtance of his power, in enabling him to walk upon the water, as he did: and when Peter was come down out of the ſhip; as he immediately did, having orders from Chriſt; and being by this ſecond ſpeech fully convinced it was he, he walked on the water; a little way, being ſupported and enabled by the power of Chriſt; for this was an extraordinary and miraculous action: for if it was ſo in Chriſt, it was much more ſo in Peter: Chriſt walked upon the water by his own power, as God; Peter walked upon the water, being held up by the power of Chriſt. The Jews[w] indeed, call ſwimming, השיטה על פני המים, walking upon the face of the waters: hence we read of a ſwimmer's veſſel, which is explained to be what men make to learn in it, how לשוט על פני המים, to go or walk upon the face of the waters[x]: but then this is not going upon them upright, but prone, or lying along upon the ſurface of the waters, which was not Peter's caſe; he did not, as at another time, caſt himſelf into the ſea, and ſwim to Chriſt; ſee John xxi. 7. but as ſoon as he came down from the ſhip, ſtanding upright, he walked upon the waters, to go to Jeſus; not merely for walking ſake, but for the ſake of Chriſt, he dearly loved; that he might be with him, and be ſtill more confirmed of the truth of its being he, and not a ſpirit.

Ver. 30. But when he ſaw the wind boiſterous, &c.] Or ſtrong, blowing hard againſt him, and raiſing up the waves, which beat with great violence upon him, he was afraid; though Chriſt was ſo nigh him, and he had had ſuch an inſtance of his power in bearing him up, cauſing him to walk upon the waters thus far; which ſhews, that his faith was imperfect: and beginning to ſink; through fear, and the violence of the wind and waves, juſt ready to be immerſed, and go down to the bottom of the ſea, he cried; being in a great fright and much danger, and with great importunity and eagerneſs, ſaying, Lord, ſave me; I'm juſt going, I ſhall certainly periſh elſe; ſtill having ſo much faith in Chriſt, that he was able to ſave him in the laſt extremity.

Ver. 31. And immediately Jeſus ſtretched forth his hand, &c.] The Syriac reads it, וברשעתה, and in that very moment; for his caſe required immediate aſſiſtance, and Chriſt readily gave it; he reached out his hand at once, being juſt by him, and caught him; as he was ſinking to the bottom, and lifted him up, and ſet him on his feet upon the water, and enabled him to walk with him to the ſhip; but not without reproving him for the weakneſs of his faith, and ſaid unto him, O thou of little faith: he does not ſay, O thou unbeliever! or, O thou who haſt no faith! for ſome faith he had, though but ſmall: of this phraſe, ſee the note on ch. vi. 30. Wherefore didſt thou doubt? waver, fluctuate, or waſt divided, between faith and fear. He was worthy of reproof, ſince he had had the order of Chriſt to come to him upon the water; and an experience of his power in ſupporting him thus far; and was now ſo near unto him, that he had no room to doubt, whether it was he or no, nor of his power to preſerve him.

Ver. 32. And when they were come into the ſhip, &c.] Chriſt and Peter. The Arabic and Perſic verſions, and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel read, when he aſcended, or was come into the ſhip; but there's no doubt but Peter went with him into it, though the following effect, is only to be aſcribed to Chriſt's coming into the ſhip, and not to Peter's: the wind ceaſed; from blowing with that fury and violence it did before, and there was a perfect calm; which gave equal proof of the divine power of Chriſt, as his walking upon the ſea: he walked upon the ſea whilſt the wind was blowing hard, and the waves were tumultuous; he comes into the ſhip, and all is calm; both winds and ſea obey him, who is Lord of both.

Ver. 33. Then they that were in the ſhip, &c.] Not only the reſt of the diſciples, who remained in it, whilſt Peter came forth out of it, to walk upon the ſea, to go to Chriſt; but the mariners alſo, the owners of the veſſel, and their ſervants that managed it, came and worſhipped him: not merely in a civil, but in a religious way; being convinced by what they ſaw, that he muſt be truly and properly God, and worthy of adoration; ſaying, of a truth, thou art the Son of God: not by creation, as angels and men, nor by office, as magiſtrates, but by nature; being of the ſame eſſence, perfections, and power, with God, his Father: and which theſe actions of his now done, as well as many others, are full atteſtations of; as his walking upon the ſea, cauſing Peter to do ſo too, ſaving him when ſinking, and ſtilling the wind and waves upon his entrance into the veſſel; all which being obſerved by the diſciples and mariners, drew out this confeſſion upon full conviction from them, that he was a divine perſon, and the proper object of worſhip.

Ver. 34. And when they were gone over, &c.] That is, the ſea, as Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel adds, the ſea of Tiberias, or Galilee; they came into the land of Geneſaret; the ſame with Cinnereth, or Chinnereth, or Cinnerot, Numb. xxxiv. 11. Deut. iii. 17. Joſh. xi. 2. and xii. 3. and xiii. 27. 1 Kings xv. 20. in all which places, the Chaldee paraphraſe renders it by גינוסר, Ginuſar, the ſame word that is uſed in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel here: it was a country in Galilee, in the tribe of Napthali[y], bordering upon a lake, called the lake of Geneſaret; taking its name from the country, or the country from the lake: it was exceeding fruitful, full of gardens and orchards; hence we often read in the Talmud[z], of פירות גנוסר, the fruits of Genuſar, or Geneſaret, which are ſaid to be exceeding ſweet: and it is ſaid to[a] be a country in the land of Iſrael, in which were many gardens; and by others[b], a place in the land of Galilee (as it was) whoſe fruits were large and good; and was, as Joſephus ſays[c], thirty furlongs long and twenty broad. And thus the ſaints, after a long and troubleſome paſſage over the ſea of this world, arrive at laſt, ſafe at their deſired haven, and enter upon a moſt delightful country, a paradiſe, a garden of pleaſure; where all delicious fruits and deſireable things are enjoyed, even pleaſures for evermore; where they ſhall be led to fountains of living waters, into fulneſs of joy; where all troubles will ceaſe, and tears will be wiped away; and when they will have leiſure and capacity to reflect upon all they have met with in their dangerous, and difficult voyage; and will admire the wonderful grace of God, which has been with them; and his divine power, which has appeared for them, and ſupported them, and brought them ſafe to eternal glory; and they will aſcribe greatneſs to Chriſt, as the Son of God, and for ever worſhip him as the eternal Jehovah, who has done ſuch great things for them, as none but God can do.

---

[w] R. David Kimchi, Sepher Shoraſh. rad. שחה.

[x] R. Sol. Urbin. Ohel moed, fol. 78. 1.

[y] Targum Jon. in Deut. xxxiii. 23.

[z] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 44. 1. Erubim, fol. 30. 1. & Peſachim, fol. 8. 2. Vid. Jarchi in Iſa. xxviii. 1. & Kimchi in Joſh. xi. 2. & in 1 Kings xv. 20.

[a] Maimon. in Miſn. Maaſerot, c. 3. §. 7.

[b] Bartenora, in ib.

[c] De Bello Jud. l. 3. c. 35.

Ver. 35. And when the men of the place had knowledge of him, &c.] Not merely by report, but by face, having ſeen, and heard him before; ſee Luke v. 1. They ſent out into all that country round about, and brought unto him all that were diſeaſed; which not only expreſſes their faith in him, that he was able to heal all their ſick and diſeaſed, were they ever ſo many; but alſo their affectionate regard to their fellow-creatures and countrymen; and their care and diligence in ſending meſſengers about to their reſpective cities, towns, and villages, and which muſt be attended with expence: for they neither ſpared coſt nor pains, to do good to their country; in all which, they ſet an example worthy of imitation.

Ver. 36. And beſought him that they might only touch the hem of his garment, &c.] As the woman with the bloody iſſue did, ch. ix. 20. This they deſired, partly to ſhow the ſtrength of their faith in him, that they doubted not of a cure, could they be admitted ſo near his perſon; and partly, to ſignify the ſenſe of their unworthineſs, to be in another way taken notice of by him, either by ſpeaking to them, or putting his hands on them: and as many as touched, were made perfectly whole. Chriſt condeſcended to this their requeſt, and perfectly cured all ſuch of their diſeaſes, of whatever kind they were, who in the exerciſe of faith, touched the hem of his garment, the fringe he wore, in compliance with the ceremonial law, Numb. xv. 38, 39. Deut. xxii. 12.

CHAP. XV.

Ver. 1. THEN came to Jeſus Scribes and Phariſees, &c.] After he had wrought ſo many miracles, particularly that of feeding five thouſand men, beſides women and children, with five loaves and two fiſhes; the fame of which had reached Jeruſalem, and occaſioned much talk there about him: the Scribes and Phariſees, who were his inveterate enemies, hearing thereof, came to him, where he was, in Galilee, to know the truth of theſe things, to converſe with him, and to watch, and obſerve, what he ſaid and did; which were of Jeruſalem, ſaying. There were Scribes and Phariſees throughout the land, but thoſe of Jeruſalem were the chief; they were men of the greateſt learning and abilities, and were more expert in their religion and cuſtoms: theſe were either ſent by the Sanhedrim at Jeruſalem, or came of themſelves; taking upon them a greater power, and authority of examining, correcting, directing, and adviſing.

Ver. 2. Why do thy diſciples tranſgreſs the tradition of the elders? &c.] Having obſerved, for ſome little time, the conduct of Chriſt and his diſciples, they thought proper to take no notice of him as yet, but of them; and of them, not as tranſgreſſing any command of God, but of men; not being able to charge them with any breach of the law of God: and could they have done this with any ſhew of truth, yet they might chuſe rather to accuſe them of breaking the rules of the elders; by whom they mean, not the elders of the preſent Sanhedrim, but Hillell and Shammai, the two heads of their famous ſchools, and other ancient doctors; from whom were delivered by one to another, certain rules and laws of their own deviſing, which had no foundation in the word of God; and of theſe the Scribes and Phariſees were more tenacious, than of the Scriptures; and indeed they preferred them before them: moſt extravagant are their praiſes and commendations of theſe unwritten traditions; thus they ſay [a], "Know then, that the "words of the Scribes are more lovely than the "words of the law; for, ſays R. Tarphon, if a man "does not read, he only tranſgreſſes an affirmative; "but if he tranſgreſſes the words of the ſchool of "Hillell, he is guilty of death, becauſe he hath "broke down a hedge, and a ſerpent ſhall bite "him. 'Tis a tradition of R. Iſhmael, the words "of the law have in them both prohibition and "permiſſion; ſome of them are light, and ſome "heavy, but the words of the Scribes are all of "them heavy—חמורים דברי זקנים, weightier "are the words of the elders, than the words of the "prophets." And elſewhere [e], this advice is given; "My ſon, attend to the words of the Scribes, "more than to the words of the law; for in the "words of the law, are affirmatives and negatives; but the words of the Scribes— "כל העובר על דברי סופרים, every one that "tranſgreſſes the words of the Scribes, is guilty of "death." This is what they charge the diſciples with here, and could they have had their wills, would have put them to death for it: the particular tradition, they accuſe them with the breach of, follows, for they waſh not their hands when they eat bread; common bread, an ordinary meal: for, for eating of holy things, more than bare waſhing was required, even an immerſion of them in water; but the hands were to be waſhed before eating common food, whether they were known to be defiled or no: bread is particularly mentioned, as including all ſorts of food, and as diſtinct from fruit; for, for eating of common fruit, there was no need of waſhing of hands; he that waſhed his hands for eating fruit, was reckoned an oſtentatious man [f]: who were the firſt authors of this tradition, 'tis not certain; 'tis ſaid [g], that "Hillell and Shammai de- "creed, על טהרות ידים, concerning the purifica- "tion of the hands; R. Joſe ben R. Bon, in the "name of R. Levi ſays, ſo was the tradition be- "fore, but they forgot it; and theſe two ſtood "up, and agreed with the mind of the former "ones." However, it is a certain point, that "the waſhing of the hands, and the dipping of "them, are, מדברי סופרים, from the words of the "Scribes [h]." The breach of this rule was reckoned equal to the moſt flagitious crimes [i]: R. Joſe

---

[a] T. Hieroſ. Beracot, fol. 3. 2. [e] T. Bab. Erubim, fol. 21. 2. T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 4. 2. [f] Miſn. Chagiga, c. 2. §. 5, 6. Maimon. Præfat. ad Tract. Yadaim, & Hilch. Beracot, c. 6. §. 3. [g] T. Hieroſ. Sabbat, fol. 3. 4. [h] Maimon. Hilch. Mikvaot, c. 11. §. 1. [i] T. Bab. Sota, fol. 4. 2.

“ ſays, whoever eats bread without waſhing of “ hands, is as if he lay with a whore: and, ſays R. “ Eleazer, whoever deſpiſeth waſhing of hands, “ ſhall be rooted out of the world.” And elſewhere it is ſaid by them [k], that “ he that bleſſeth “ (food) with defiled hands, is guilty of death.” And again [l], “ whoever does not waſh his hands as “ is fitting, although he is puniſhed above, he “ ſhall be puniſhed below.” And to fright people into an obſervance of this tradition, they talk of Shibta, a ſort of an evil ſpirit, that hurts ſuch as eat without waſhing their hands: they ſay, he ſits upon their hands, and upon their bread, and leaves ſomething behind, which is very dangerous [m]; and it is recorded [n], to the praiſe of R. Akiba, that he choſe rather to die, than to tranſgreſs this tradition; for being in priſon, and in want of water, what little he had, he waſhed his hands with it, inſtead of drinking it. Eleazar ben Chanac, was excommunicated for deſpiſing the tradition concerning waſhing of hands; and when he died, the Sanhedrim ſent and put a great ſtone upon his coffin, to ſhew, that he that died in his excommunication, the Sanhedrim ſtoned his coffin [o]: but of this, ſee more in the note on Mark vii. 3.

Ver. 3. But he anſwered and ſaid unto them, &c.] Taking no notice of the tradition about eating bread without waſhing the hands, whether it was right or wrong; it being at moſt but an human tradition, of no moment and importance, whether it was broke or kept: he makes a very juſt recrimination, by putting another queſtion to them, why do you alſo tranſgreſs the commandment of God by your tradition? ſuggeſting, that if his diſciples were guilty, they were not ſo guilty as they themſelves were; that his diſciples, at moſt, were but guilty of the breach of an human precept, whereas they were guilty of the breach of a divine command; and that it was ſtrange, that men who were ſo ſcrupulous of breaking, and bore ſo hard on ſuch as did tranſgreſs the traditions of the elders, could allow themſelves to tranſgreſs the commandments of God; yea, to do this by, and while they were obſerving their own traditions: and which obſervation, carries a full acquittance of the diſciples from blame; for, if by keeping the traditions of the elders, they broke the commands of God, it was a very good reaſon why they ſhould not obſerve them.

Ver. 4. For God commanded, ſaying, &c.] That he might not be thought to ſuggeſt this without any foundation, he gives them an inſtance, wherein a command of God was tranſgreſſed, by the obſervance of their tradition: the command he refers to, ſtands in Exod. xx. 12. and is this; Honour thy father and mother. This was a plain command of God, written with his own hand, and delivered by Moſes to them; it was of a moral nature, and of eternal obligation: and to be underſtood, not merely of that high eſteem parents are to be had in by their children, and of the reſpectful language and geſture to be uſed towards them, and of the chearful obedience to be yielded to them; but alſo of honouring them with their ſubſtance, feeding, clothing, and ſupplying them with the neceſſaries of life, when they ſtand in need thereof; which is but their reaſonable ſervice, for all the care, expence, and trouble they have been at, in bringing them up in the world: nor did the Jews deny this to be the duty of children to their parents, and own it to be the ſenſe of the commandment: they ſay [p], that this is the weightieſt commandment among the weighty ones, even this, the honouring of father and mother; and aſk, “ What is this honour? “ To which is replied, he muſt give him food, “ drink, and cloathing; buckle his ſhoes, and “ lead him in, and bring him out.” They indeed lay down this as a rule, and it ſeems a very equitable one [q]; that, “ when a man's father has any “ money, or ſubſtance, he muſt be ſupported out “ of that; but if he has none, he muſt ſupport “ him out of his own.” But then, as will be ſeen hereafter, they made void this command of God, and their own explications of it, by ſome other tradition. Moreover, Chriſt obſerves, that it is ſaid, Exod. xxii. 17. And he that curſeth father or mother, let him die the death; temporal and eternal: and which is a poſitive command of God, made as a fence for the former; and is to be underſtood, not only of giving abuſive language to parents, but of ſlighting, as the Hebrew word ſignifies, and neglecting them, taking no notice of them, when needy and in diſtreſs, to ſupply their wants. Now theſe commands of God, Chriſt ſhews the Jews tranſgreſſed by their tradition, as appears from the following verſes.

Ver. 5, 6. But ye ſay, whoſoever ſhall ſay to his father or mother, &c.] That is, it was a tradition of theirs, that if a man ſhould ſay to his father and mother, when poor and in diſtreſs, and made application to him for ſuſtenance, it is a gift, by whatſoever thou mighteſt be profited by me, and honour not his father, or his mother, he ſhall be free: or, as Mark expreſſes it, it is Corban, that is to ſay a gift, by whatſoever thou mighteſt be profited by me, he ſhall be free, and ye ſuffer him no more to do ought for his father or mother. For the underſtanding of this tradition, let it be obſerved, that the word Corban ſignifies a gift, or offering, which was devoted to ſacred uſe; and was unalienable, and could not be converted to any other uſe; and that this word was uſed among the Jews, from hence, as the form of an oath, or vow; and therefore, when any one ſaid Corban, it was all one, as if he ſwore by Corban; or as if he had ſaid, let it be as Corban, as unalienable as Corban: by which oath, or vow, the uſe of that which was ſpoken of, whether it reſpected a man's ſelf, or others, was reſtrained and prohibited: the rule was [r] this, קרבן כאומר כקרבן הוא אסור, if a man ſaid Corban, it was as if he ſaid as Corban, and it was forbidden; and if he uſed the words Conem, Conach, and Conas, which they call [s] the ſurnames of Corban, and were no other than corruptions of it, it was all one as if he had ſaid Corban itſelf. There are many inſtances of this kind of vows, and the form of them in their oral law [t], or book of traditions; “ If any one ſhould ſay, “ קונם שאני נהנה, Conem (or Corban) whatſoever “ I might be profited by the ſons of Noah, it is free “ of an Iſraelite, and forbidden of a Gentile; if he “ ſhould ſay, whatſoever I might be profited by the “ ſeed of Abraham, it is forbidden of an Iſraelite, “ and is free of a Gentile——if any one ſhould ſay, “ קונם שאני נהנה לערלים, Conem (or Corban) “ whatſoever I might be profited by the uncircumciſed, “ it is free of the uncircumciſed of Iſrael, and “ forbidden of the circumciſed of the Gentiles; if “ he ſays Conem (or Corban) whatſoever I might be “ profited by the circumciſed, it is forbidden of the “ circumciſed of Iſrael, and free of the circum-

---

[k] Zohar in Deut. fol. 107. 3.

[l] Ib. in Gen. fol. 60. 2.

[m] Gloſſ. in T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 77. 2. Taanith, fol. 20. 2. & Cholin, fol. 107. 2.

[n] T. B. Erubim, fol. 21. 2.

[o] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 19. 1.

[p] T. Hieroſ. Kiddushin, fol. 61. 2.

[q] Piſke Toſeph. ad T. Bab. Kiddushin, art. 61.

[r] T. Hieroſ. Nedarim, fol. 37. 1. Miſn. Nedarim, c. 1. §. 4. Maimon. Hilch. Nedarim, c. 1. §. 7.

[s] Miſn. Nedarim, c. 1. §. 1, 2. Maimon. Hilch. Nedarim, c. 1. §. 16.

[t] Miſn. Nedarim, c. 3. §. 11.

“ ciſed of the Gentiles.” Again [u], “ if any one ſays to his friend, קונם שאני נהנה לך, Conem (or Corban) whatſoever thou mighteſt be profited by me, &c.” which is exactly the ſame form as here, unleſs it ſhould be rather rendered, whatſoever I might be profited by thee: once more [w], “ if a married woman ſhould ſay to her huſband, קונם שאני נהנית לאבא ולאביך, Conem (or Corban) whatſoever I might be profited by my father, or thy father, &c.” Let theſe inſtances ſuffice: the plain and evident ſenſe of the tradition before us, is this; that when, upon application being made to a man by his parents, for ſupport and ſuſtenance, he makes a vow in ſuch form as this, Corban, whatſoever thou mighteſt be profited by me; that is, whatſoever profit or advantage thou mighteſt have, or expect to have from me, let it be as Corban, as a gift devoted to God, that can never be revoked and converted to another uſe; or, in other words, I vow and proteſt thou ſhalt'ſt never have any profit from me, not a penny, nor a penny-worth of mine. Now, when a man had made ſuch an impious vow as this, according to this tradition, it was to ſtand firm and good, and he was not to honour his father or mother, or do any thing for them by way of relief: ſo that our Lord might juſtly obſerve upon it as he does; thus have ye made the commandment of God of none effect, by your tradition: for if ſuch a vow was valid, and a man was obliged to abide by it, according to the tradition of the elders, and not honour his father and mother, as the law of God requires; 'tis a plain caſe, that the command of God was made void by this tradition: nay, they expreſsly ſay [x], that נדרים חלות על דברי מצוה, vows fall upon things of a (divine) commandment, as well as upon things in a man's power, and that he is bound by them; ſo that without ſin he can't do what the law commands; inſomuch, that if a man vows a vow, and that it may be ratified, a command muſt be made void, his vow muſt ſtand, and the command be abrogated. So truly and juſtly does Chriſt charge them with making the command of God of none effect, by their tradition. It is indeed diſputed by the doctors, and at laſt allowed, that ſuch a vow might be diſſolved by a wiſe man, for the honour of parents [y]. “ R. Eliezer ſays, they open to a man, (i. e. the door of repentance, and diſſolve his vow) for the honour of his father and his mother, but the wiſe men forbid it. Says R. Tzadok, if they open to him for the honour of his father and mother, they will open to him for the honour of God, and if ſo, there will be no vows: however, the wiſe men agreed with R. Eliezer in the affair between a man and his parents, that they ſhould open to him for the honour of them.” And this could be done only by a wiſe man; and very probably this laſt decree was made on account of this juſt reproof of Chriſt's, being aſhamed any longer to countenance ſo vile a practice; and even, according to this determination, the vow ſtood firm till diſſolved by one of their doctors: ſo that notwithſtanding, Chriſt's argument is good, and the inſtance full to prove that for which he brought it: for the above reaſon it may be, it is, that this tradition Chriſt refers to is not now extant; but that there was ſuch an one in Chriſt's time, is certain, he would never have aſſerted it elſe; and had it not been true, the Phariſees would have been able to have refuted him, and forward enough to have done it: and that ſuch vows were ſometimes made, and which were not to be reſcinded, is clear from the following fact [z]. “ It happened to one in Bethhoron, שהיה אביו מודר הימנו הנאה, whoſe father was excluded, by a vow, from receiving any profit from him; and he married his ſon, and ſaid to his friend, a court and a dinner are given to thee by gift; but they are not to be made uſe of by thee, but with this condition, that my father may come and eat with us at dinner;” which was a device to have his father at dinner, and yet ſecure his vow. Upon the whole, the ſenſe of this paſſage is, not that a man excuſed himſelf to his parents, according to this tradition, by ſaying, that his ſubſtance, either in whole, or in part, was Corban, or devoted to the ſervice of God, and therefore they could expect no profit, or relief, from him; but that he vowed that what he had ſhould be as Corban, and they ſhould be never the better for it: ſo that a man ſo vowing might give nothing to the ſervice of God, but keep his whole ſubſtance to himſelf; which he might make uſe of for his own benefit, and for the benefit of others, but not for his father and mother; who, after ſuch a vow made, were to receive no benefit by it, unleſs reſcinded by a wiſe man; and which ſeems to be an explanation of it, made after the times of Chriſt.

Ver. 7. Ye hypocrites, &c.] After our Lord had given ſo full a proof of their making void the commandments of God by their traditions, he might very juſtly, as he does, call them hypocrites; who pretended to ſo much religion and holineſs, and yet ſcrupled not, upon occaſion, to ſet aſide a divine command; who affected ſo much ſanctity, as to be diſpleaſed with the diſciples, for not complying with an order of their elders, when they themſelves made no account of a divine precept; and plainly ſhewed they had more regard to men than God, and to the precepts of men, than to the commands of God, and to approve themſelves to men more than to God; and that they ſought the praiſe and applauſe of men, and not the honour which comes from God; and that their religion lay in mere rituals and externals, and thoſe of mens deviſing, and not in the ſpritual worſhip and ſervice of God. Nor can it be thought that Chriſt, in calling them hypocrites, bears too hard upon them; when one of their own doctors, who lived not very diſtant from this age, ſays [a] of the men of Jeruſalem, that “ if the hypocrites of the world were divided into ten parts, nine of them would belong to Jeruſalem, and one to the reſt of the world.” Well did Eſaias prophecy of you, ſaying, in ch. xxix. 13. which prophecy, though it was directed to, and ſuited with many in that generation in which the prophet lived, yet had a further view to the Jews in after-times: their own writers [b] acknowledge, that the whole prophecy is ſpoken of that nation; for by Ariel they underſtand the altar at Jeruſalem, the city in which David dwelt.

Ver. 8. This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, &c.] The preface to theſe words, or the form in which they are introduced by the prophet; wherefore the Lord ſaid, is left out in this citation, being unneceſſary here, tho' of the greateſt importance there; partly to ſhew, that what was about to be ſaid, was not the prophet's own words, but the words of the Lord, of which the Jews in Chriſt's time made no doubt; and partly to give a reaſon why that judicial blindneſs, threatened in the context, ſhould be inflicted on them, which is no part of Chriſt's deſign here; but which is only to ſhew, that the deſcription here given, exactly agrees with them, and ſo proves, and confirms the character he gives of them as hypocrites. They approached the ordinances of God, and drew nigh to him, and attended him in outward worſhip; they prayed unto him publickly, and conſtantly, in the ſtreets, in the ſynagogues, and temple, and with much ſeeming devotion and ſanctity: and honoureth me with their lips: they owned him to be their creator, and preſerver; they made their boaſt of him, and of their knowledge of him, as the one only living, and true God, and as the God of Iſrael; they brought their ſacrifices of praiſe and thankſgiving, even the fruit of their lips, unto him, for their many peculiar mercies, privileges, and favours, as a nation, church, and people, and with much ſeeming ſincerity and affection. But their heart is far from me; they had no true love to God, nor faith in him, nor fear of him; they were not at all concerned for his preſence with them, or for communion with him, or for his honour and glory; their hearts were in the world, and after their covetouſneſs; they made religion a tool to their ſecular purpoſes, ſuppoſed gain to be godlineſs, ſought the applauſe of men, and contented themſelves with bodily exerciſe; having no regard to internal religion, powerful godlineſs, or where their hearts were, ſo be it, their bodies were preſented to God in public worſhip; and what they did, it was to be ſeen and approved of men, not caring what the ſearcher of hearts knew concerning them, or what he required of them.

---

[u] Miſn. Nedarim, c 8. §. 7. Vid. c. 11. §. 3, 4. [w] Ib. c. 11. §. 11. [x] Maimon. Hilch. Nedarim, c. 3. §. 1, 6, 7, 9. [y] Miſn. Nedarim, c. 9. §. 1. [z] Ib. c. 5. §. 6. [a] R. Nathan in Rabba, §. 1. [b] Abarbinel, Jarchi, Kimchi, & Aben Ezra.

Ver. 9. But in vain do they worſhip me, &c.] In the Hebrew text it is, their fear towards me; which is rightly expreſſed here by worſhip; for the fear of God often intends the whole worſhip of God, both external and internal: here it only ſignifies external worſhip, which theſe men only attended to. They prayed in the ſynagogues, read, and, in their way, expounded the books of Moſes, and the prophets, to the people, diligently obſerved the rituals of the ceremonial law, brought their offerings and ſacrifices to the temple, and neglected nothing appertaining to the outward ſervice of it; and yet it was all in vain, and to no purpoſe; ſince the heart was wanting, no grace there, they acted from wrong principles, and with wrong views; their worſhip was merely outward, formal, and cuſtomary; and beſides, they added doctrines and traditions of their own inventing and deviſing. The phraſe, in vain, is not in the text in Iſaiah: ſome have thought that it was not originally in Matthew, but inſerted by ſome other hand, to make the ſenſe more complete. Grotius thinks there was a various reading, which is followed by the Septuagint, and the Evangeliſt; and that inſtead of ותהי, and is, it was ותהו, the ſame with לתהו, in vain; but there is no need to ſuppoſe either of theſe: Chriſt, who made this citation, either added it himſelf for the clearer illuſtration of the paſſage, and as being entirely agreeable to the ſenſe of it, and which it required, for the true underſtanding of it; or he might have in his view another paſſage of the ſame prophet, ſpeaking of the ſame people, and upon the ſame ſubject, Iſ. i. 11, 13. and from thence take the phraſe, and, for explanation-ſake, join it to the paſſage here. It follows, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men; that is, teaching the people to obſerve the traditions of the elders, the decrees and determinations of the doctors, as if they were doctrines delivered by God himſelf; or, inſtead of the doctrines contained in the bible, which lay neglected by them, they obtruded on them the orders and injunctions of men. In the text in Iſaiah, are only theſe words, taught by the precept of men; and which relate to their fear and worſhip of God; and which is here interpreted of their teachers teaching them it, and that explained of the commandments of men; as if, inſtead of, מלמדה, taught, it had been read, מלמדים, teaching. The Jews have no reaſon to quarrel with this conſtruction and ſenſe, ſince their Targum paraphraſes it thus; and their fear before me is, כתפקידת גברין מלפין, according to the commandment of men that teach: and a noted commentator[c] of theirs has this remark on the text, their fear towards me is not with a perfect heart, but by the commandment האנשים המלמדים אותם, of the men that teach them.

Ver. 10. And he called the multitude, &c.] Having ſilenced the Scribes and Phariſees, and judging it not worth his while to ſay any more to men ſo obſtinate and perverſe; who were not open to conviction, nor would attend to any argument or reaſon, tho' ever ſo clear and ſtrong, againſt their darling notions; he leaves them, as both diſliking them, and deſpairing of them, and calls to the common people; who, thro' their great veneration for theſe men, upon their coming withdrew, and ſtood at a diſtance; nor indeed would they admit them very near unto them, leſt they ſhould be polluted by them: Chriſt, I ſay, calls to theſe to come nearer to him, hoping better of them, and knowing that they were more tractable, and teachable; and that there were ſome among them, that were to be brought off of their former principles and prejudices, to embrace him, and the truths delivered by him: and ſaid unto them, hear and underſtand; this he ſaid, partly by way of reflection upon the learned Scribes and Phariſees, who, with all their learning, could not hear him ſo as to underſtand him; and partly to excite the attention of the multitude to what he had to ſay; as alſo to ſhew, that barely to hear with the outward hearing of the ear, will be of no ſervice, unleſs what is heard is underſtood; and that the way to underſtand, is to hear.

Ver. 11. Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth the man, &c.] No ſort of meats, or drinks, or whatever is proper food for men, or manner of eating and drinking them, when moderately uſed, defile a man, or render him loathſome and odious in the ſight of God. This is directly oppoſite to the notions of the Jews, who ſay[d], that "forbidden meats "are unclean themſelves, ומטמאין הגוף והנפש, "and defile both body and ſoul." The firſt food of man was herbs; after the flood he had an allowance of the fleſh of beaſts, without diſtinction; under the Levitical diſpenſation, a difference of meats was enjoined to be obſerved; the laws reſpecting that diſtinction are now aboliſhed, and not binding on us under the Goſpel-diſpenſation. Some ſcruples, about ſome of theſe things, did ariſe among the firſt chriſtians; but in proceſs of time theſe difficulties were got over: nor is there any religion in abſtinence from any ſort of food; men, indeed, on a phyſical account, ought to be careful what they eat and drink, but not on a religious one; moderation in all ought to uſed; and whatever is eat, or drank, ſhould be received with thankfulneſs, and done to the glory of God, and then no defilement can ariſe from hence: but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth a man. 'Tis ſin, and that only, which takes its riſe from the heart, lies in thought, and is either expreſſed by the mouth, or performed by ſome outward action, which defiles the man, and renders him loathſome, abominable, and odious in the ſight of God. The heart is the ſource of all evil; the pollution of it is very early, and very general, reaching to all the powers and faculties of the ſoul; which ſhews the ignorance of ſome, and folly of others, that talk of, and truſt to the goodneſs of their hearts; and alſo the neceſſity of new hearts and right ſpirits being formed and created; and that the ſinful thoughts of the heart, and the luſts thereof, are defiling to men; and that they are ſinful in God's account, and abominable in his ſight; that they are loathſome to ſenſible ſinners, and are to be repented of, and forſaken by them; and need the pardoning grace of God, or otherwiſe will be brought into judgment. Sinful words, which, thro' the abundance of wickedneſs in the heart, come out of the mouth, have the ſame influence and effect: words are of a defiling nature; with theſe men pollute both themſelves and others: the tongue, tho' a little member, defiles the whole body; and evil and corrupt communication proceeding out of the mouth, corrupts the beſt of manners, and renders men loathſome to God, and liable to his awful judgment. And this is the nature of all ſinful actions; they are what God can take no pleaſure in; they are diſagreeable to a ſenſible mind; they leave a ſtain, which can never be removed by any thing the creature can do; nothing ſhort of the blood of Chriſt can cleanſe from it; and inaſmuch as they are frequently committed, there's need of continual application to it. Theſe are now the things men ſhould be concerned about, as of a defiling nature; and not about meats and drinks, and the manner of uſing them, whether with hands waſhed, or unwaſhed.

---

[c] R. Sol. Jarchi in Iſ. xxix. 13.

[d] Tzeror Hammor, fol. 142. 1.

Ver. 12. Then came his diſciples, and ſaid unto him, &c.] That is, after he had diſmiſſed the people, and was come into a private houſe; ſee Mark vii. 17. his diſciples came to him, being alone, full of concern, for what he had ſaid to the Phariſees, and before all the people; and not ſo well underſtanding it themſelves. Knoweſt thou that the Phariſees were offended after they heard this ſaying? that they ſet aſide the commandments of God, by obſerving the traditions of the elders; or that they were hypocrites; and that the prophecy of Iſaiah, which deſcribes ſuch perſons, belonged to them; or that not what goes into, but what comes out of a man, defiles him: which ever it was they have reſpect unto, or it may be to the whole, they ſeem to wiſh Chriſt had not ſaid it; becauſe the Phariſees were, as they thought, grieved and troubled at it, as being contrary to true religion and piety; and leſt they ſhould be ſo ſtumbled, as no more to attend, and ſo all hopes of bringing them over to the faith of Chriſt be loſt; and chiefly, becauſe they perceived they were made exceeding angry, and were highly provoked, ſo that they might fear that both Chriſt, and they themſelves, would feel the effects of their wrath and rage; and perhaps it was with ſome ſuch view, that he would take ſome prudential ſtep that he might not fall into their hands, that they acquaint him with it.

Ver. 13. But he anſwered, and ſaid, &c.] As being unconcerned at their rage, and having nothing to fear from them; and being well ſatisfied, that what he had ſaid was right, and would produce proper effects, he gave his diſciples this for anſwer: every plant which my heavenly father hath not planted, ſhall be rooted up; which may be underſtood either of things, or of perſons: it may have regard to doctrines and ordinances; and the meaning be, that whatever doctrine is not delivered by God, or whatever ordinance is not inſtituted by him; whatever is not of heaven, but of man, of man's deviſing, and of human impoſition, as the traditions of the elders, muſt be oppoſed and rejected; and ſooner or later will be utterly rooted up, and deſtroyed; as will all the falſe notions, corrupt worſhip, and errors, and hereſies of men, in God's own time: or it may reſpect perſons. There are ſome plants, which are planted by Chriſt's father, which is in heaven; theſe are the elect of God, who are trees of righteouſneſs, the planting of the Lord, that he might be glorified. Theſe are planted by the river of God's love, in the perſon of Chriſt, in the likeneſs of his death and reſurrection; they are tranſplanted out of a ſtate of nature, are ingrafted into Chriſt, have the graces of the Spirit implanted in their ſouls, and are themſelves planted in the courts of the Lord, in a Goſpel church-ſtate; and being water'd with the dews of grace, appear to be choice plants, plants of renown, pleaſant ones, very fruitful, and which ſhall never periſh, or be rooted, and plucked up: but there are others, like theſe Phariſees, hyprocrites, formal profeſſors, and hereticks, who pretend to much religion and holineſs, make a ſhew of the leaves of profeſſion, but have not the fruit of grace; theſe get into churches, and are outwardly and miniſterially planted there; but being never rooted in Chriſt, nor partake of his grace, in time they wither, and die away; or perſecution ariſing becauſe of the word, or truth being diſpenſed in ſo clear and glaring a light, that they cannot bear it; they are offended with it, and ſo are detected, diſcovered, and rooted up: and it is neceſſary that truth ſhould be freely ſpoken, as it was here by Chriſt, that ſuch plants might be rooted out; for theſe words are ſaid by Chriſt, in juſtification of his conduct. So the Jews ſpeak of God, as a planter, and of rooting up what he does not like. "The holy, bleſſed God, ſay they[e], plants trees in this world; if they proſper, it's well; if they do not proſper, אעקר לון, he roots them up, and plants them even many times." And elſewhere 'tis ſaid[f], "let the maſter of the vineyard come, and conſume its thorns: the Gloſs on it is, the holy, bleſſed God; for the vineyard of the Lord of hoſts, is the houſe of Iſrael, and he will conſume, and take away the thorns of the vineyard."

Ver. 14. Let them alone, &c.] Have nothing to ſay, or do with them; don't mind their anger and reſentment, their reproaches and reflections, nor trouble yourſelves at the offence they have taken; if they'll go, let them go; they are a worthleſs generation of men, who are not to be regarded, hearkened to, nor to be pleaſed; it matters not what they ſay of me, and of my doctrine: they be blind leaders of the blind; the people that hearken to them, and are followers of them, are blind, as to any true ſenſe of themſelves, their ſtate, and condition by nature; as to any ſpiritual, ſaving knowledge of God; as to any acquaintance with the Meſſiah, and the method of ſalvation by him; as to the Spirit of God, and the work of grace, regeneration, and ſanctification upon the ſoul; as to the ſcriptures of truth, and doctrines of the Goſpel; and the leaders of them were as blind as they: by whom are meant the Scribes and Phariſees, the learned doctors and rabbins of the Jewiſh nation; who thought themſelves very wiſe and knowing, yet they were blind alſo; and none more than they. It was an old tradition[g] among the Jews, "that there ſhould be blind "teachers at the time when God ſhould have his "tabernacle among them." This was predicted, in Iſ. xlii. 19. and all ſuch leaders and teachers are blind, who, notwithſtanding their natural abilities, and acquired parts, are in a ſtate of unregeneracy; and have nothing more than what they have from nature, or have attained to at ſchool; and as apparently all ſuch are, who lead men from Chriſt, to mere morality, and to a dependance upon their own righteouſneſs for juſtification, which was the darling principle of the blind leaders in the text. And if the blind lead the blind, both ſhall fall into the ditch; of ignorance and error, immorality and prophaneneſs, diſtreſs, if not deſpair, temporal ruin and deſtruction; which was notoriouſly verified in the Jewiſh people, and their guides; and of eternal damnation, the lake which burns with fire and brimſtone; what elſe can be expected?

---

[e] Zohar in Gen. fol. 105. 3.

[f] T. Bab. Bava Metzia, fol. 83. 2.

Ver. 15. Then anſwered Peter, &c.] Mark ſays, his diſciples aſked him concerning the parable; which might be by the mouth of Peter; who, probably, being the eldeſt man, and very forward to ſpeak, was generally their ſpokeſman; and who, at this time, might be requeſted, by the reſt, to aſk the meaning of the parable, which had given offence to the Phariſees, and was not clearly underſtood by them; which he accordingly did: and ſaid unto him, declare unto us this parable; that not what goes into the mouth, but what comes out of it, defiles the man; which, tho' expreſſed in very plain words, and eaſy to be underſtood, yet did not appear clear to their underſtandings; and ſeemed to be contrary, not only to the traditions of the elders, but to the laws of God, reſpecting the difference of clean and unclean meats; and therefore call it a parable, and deſire an explanation of it.

Ver. 16. And Jeſus ſaid, &c.] As wondering at, and as being diſpleaſed with, and as reproving them for their dulneſs and ignorance: are ye alſo yet without underſtanding? you, my diſciples, as well as the Scribes and Phariſees; you, who have been with me ſo long, who have heard ſo many diſcourſes from me, who for ſo long a time have been inſtructed by me, both in private, and in public; and yet do not underſtand what is ſo plain and eaſy, that has nothing of difficulty in it, but what might eaſily be accounted for.

Ver. 17. Do not ye underſtand, &c.] You muſt underſtand, you can't be ſo ignorant, that whatſoever entreth in at the mouth, goeth into the belly, and is caſt out into the draught? that is, that whatſoever food a man takes in at his mouth, he ſwallows down, and it is received into his ſtomach; which, having performed its office, the groſſer parts go down into the belly, and paſſing thro' the bowels, are evacuated into the vault, or privy, purging all meats, as Mark ſays; for that only receives the filth and excrementitious matter; ſo that what is left in the body is pure, wholeſome, and nouriſhing: nor can any part of what goes into a man defile him, becauſe it only enters into the body, and paſſes thro' it; and, as Mark ſays, entreth not into the heart, which is the ſeat of moral impurity; ſo that no moral pollution can be contracted by eating any ſort of food, even tho' it ſhould not be clean itſelf, nor be eaten with clean hands.

Ver. 18. But thoſe things which proceed out of the mouth, &c.] Meaning not material things, as ſpittle, vomit, &c. but, as it follows, which come forth from the heart; are firſt conceived and formed there, and then come forth from thence, and are expreſſed by the mouth; as all idle words, fooliſh talking, filthy jeſting, unſavoury communication, and every word that is rotten and corrupt, or which is done in the life and converſation; and they defile the man: the heart is the corrupt fountain from whence all moral defilement flows; and ſinful words and actions are the impure ſtreams, which ſpring from thence, and increaſe the moral pollution of human nature.

Ver. 19. For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, &c.] Of God, of Chriſt, of the Spirit, of fellow-creatures, and of all ſorts of wickedneſs. The thoughts of ſin are evil, are to be hated, forſaken, and for which men are accountable to God. All wicked imaginations, carnal reaſonings, luſtful deſires, and malicious contrivances, are here included; which take their riſe from, and are deviſed, and forged, in the corrupt heart of man. Murders; inveterate hatred of mens perſons, malice prepenſe, ſchemes to take away life, all angry and wrathful words, and actual effuſion of man's blood. Adulteries; uncleanneſs committed between married perſons, both in thought, and deed: fornications; unlawful copulations of perſons in a ſingle ſtate: thefts; taking away from others by force or fraud, what is their right and property: falſe witneſs; ſwearing falſely, or exhibiting a falſe teſtimony to the hurt of his neighbour, either his name, perſon, or eſtate: blaſphemies; evil ſpeakings of God or men. To which Mark adds covetouſneſs; a greedy and inſatiable deſire after the things of the world, or the neighbour's goods: wickedneſs; doing hurt and miſchief to fellow-creatures: deceit; in words and actions, in trade and converſation: laſciviouſneſs; all manner of uncleanneſs, and unnatural luſts: an evil eye; of envy and covetouſneſs: the vitioſity, or corruption of nature, is, by the Jews[h], called רע עין, the evil eye: pride; in heart and life, in dreſs and geſture; and fooliſhneſs; expreſſed in talk and conduct.

Ver. 20. Theſe are the things which defile a man, &c.] Theſe are filthy in themſelves, and muſt pollute all in whom they are; they bring a defilement on the whole man, both body and ſoul, faſten guilt upon him, and expoſe him to everlaſting puniſhment: but to eat with unwaſhen hands defileth not a man: ſhould a man neglect to waſh his hands before eating a common meal, this need give him no uneaſineſs; he contracts no filth to his ſoul hereby, nor any guilt to his conſcience; nor does he break any law of God; nor is he liable to any penalty for ſuch an omiſſion. This is a trifling matter, and merits no regard; but the things before mentioned are in their nature evil: they are contrary to the law of God; they are abominable in his ſight; they render men loathſome and odious to the divine being; and expoſe them to ſhame and ruin; and it is only the blood of Chriſt can cleanſe them from the pollution and guilt of them, and ſecure them from that puniſhment they deſerve.

Ver. 21. Then Jeſus went thence, &c.] From the land of Genneſaret, after he had ſilenced the Phariſees, as to the charge brought by them againſt his diſciples; and when he had reproved them for their hypocriſy and wickedneſs, in making void the commands of God by their traditions; and had explained ſome difficult and parabolical ſayings he had made uſe of to his diſciples, he then left that country, and departed very privately: either to ſhun the multitude, for the ſake of retirement; or to avoid any ſnares the Scribes and Phariſees might be laying for him, who muſt be greatly galled with his free diſcourſe, and ſtrong arguments: and departed into the coaſts of Tyre and Sidon; two principal cities of Phœnicia: not that he went into theſe places themſelves, but into ſome places that border'd upon them; for as he ordered his diſciples not to go in the way of the Gentiles, ſo neither did he himſelf.

---

[g] Midraſh Tillim in Pſ. cxlvi. apud Grotium in loc.

[h] Tzeror Hammor, fol. 141. 3.

Ver. 22. And behold a woman of Canaan, &c.] That is, of Phœnicia, which was called Canaan; ſo Shaul, the ſon of a Canaantiſh woman, is, by the Septuagint in Exod. vi. 15. called the ſon of a Phœnician; and the kings of Canaan are, by the ſame interpreters in Joſ. v. 1. called kings of Phœnicia: hence this woman is by Mark ſaid to be a Greek, that is, a Gentile, as the Jews uſed to call all of another nation, and a Syro-phœnician, being a native of Phœnicia, called Syro-phœnicia; becauſe it bordered upon Syria, and had been formerly a part of it, by conqueſt: ſo Cadmus, who is reported to have firſt brought letters from Phœnicia to Greece, is called [1] a Syro-phœnician merchant. Came out of the ſame coaſts; being an inhabitant, it is very likely, either of Tyre or Sidon: this ſhews that Chriſt did not go into theſe places, but only to the borders of them, ſince ſhe is ſaid to come out of them to him; who, having heard of him, and the miraculous cures wrought by him, and being informed that he was near, at ſuch a place, as the Perſic verſion ſays, ſuddenly came forth out of a corner; and the Ethiopic reads it, out of the mountains thereof; and made to the houſe where he was privately retired, and would have hid himſelf, as Mark ſuggeſts, and cried unto him; with a loud voice, with much vehemency, being in great diſtreſs, ſaying, have mercy on me; meaning, by curing her daughter, with whoſe caſe ſhe was ſo much affected, that ſhe made it, as it were, her own: O Lord, thou ſon of David. The firſt of theſe characters expreſſes her faith in his power, dominion, and goverment, that all perſons and things, and ſo all diſeaſes were at his command, and controul; and that being Lord of all, he could remove them at his pleaſure: the other ſhews her knowledge and belief of him, as the Meſſiah, that being a name by which he was uſually known by the Jews; ſee the note on Matt. i. 1. and which ſhe, tho' a Gentile, might come at the knowledge of, either thro' being a proſelyte to the Jewiſh religion, or thro' a general report which might reach, eſpecially the neighbouring nations, that the Jews expected a wonderful deliverer to ariſe among them, under this character of the ſon of David; and from what ſhe had heard of him, ſhe concluded he muſt be the perſon. My daughter is grievouſly vexed with a devil; which had took poſſeſſion of her, and moſt grievouſly afflicted her: and her requeſt to him was, that he would caſt him out of her; believing he had power ſo to do, without ſeeing or touching her, only by a word ſpeaking: her faith was like that of the centurion's.

Ver. 23. But he anſwered her not a word, &c.] Not that he did not hear her, or that he deſpiſed either her perſon or petition, or that he was not moved with it; but to continue her importunity, and try her faith, and make it manifeſt: for like reaſons the Lord does not always, and immediately, anſwer the requeſts of his people. This giving her no anſwer, either that he would, or would not help her, carried in it a tacit repulſe of her, and a denial of aſſiſtance to her; and it ſeems as if ſhe did for a while deſiſt from her application to him, and betook herſelf to his diſciples to plead with him for her: and his diſciples came; to the houſe where he was; who, it ſeems by this, had been elſewhere; and beſought him, ſaying, ſend her away; not in any ſhape, with any ſort of anſwer, without curing her daughter, or without a promiſe of a cure; no, they deſired ſhe might be diſmiſſed, with a grant of her requeſt, to her entire ſatisfaction, as appears from Chriſt's anſwer: the reaſon they give is, for ſhe crieth after us; not only becauſe ſhe was troubleſome to them, was importunate with them, and would take no denial from them: ſhe followed them wherever they went; there was no getting rid of her: but alſo, becauſe her caſe was ſo moving, was delivered in ſuch an affecting manner, and her cries were ſo piercing, that they could not bear them; and therefore intreat him, that he would relieve, and diſmiſs her.

Ver. 24. But he anſwered, and ſaid, &c.] To his diſciples, who knew how limited their commiſſion was, that they were not to go into the way of the Gentiles, not to preach to them, nor perform miracles among them; and therefore could not reaſonably expect that either the woman, or they, on her behalf, ſhould ſucceed in this matter. I am not ſent, but to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael; as a prieſt, or as a ſaviour and redeemer, he was ſent to make ſatisfaction and atonement for the ſins of all God's elect, and to obtain eternal redemption and ſalvation for all of them, whether Jews or Gentiles; but as a prophet, in the diſcharge of his own perſonal miniſtry, he was ſent by his father only to the Jews; he was the miniſter of the circumciſion, Rom. xv. 8. that is, a miniſter to the circumciſed Jews; he was ſent only to preach the Goſpel to them, and work miracles among them, in proof of his Meſſiahſhip; and upon their rejection of him, then his apoſtles were to be ſent among the Gentiles; but he himſelf was ſent only to the Jews, here ſtiled the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael: by the houſe of Iſrael, is meant the whole body of the Jewiſh nation, ſo called from Iſrael, the name of Jacob their father, from whom they ſprung; and by the loſt ſheep of that houſe, are more eſpecially deſigned the elect of God among them: for though all the individuals of that houſe were loſt perſons, conſidered in Adam, and in themſelves, as the reſt of mankind, and Chriſt, in the external miniſtry of the word, was ſent to preach to them all; yet the elect of God are only ſheep: they are the ſheep of Chriſt, of his paſture, and of his hand, whom he has the particular care and charge of; and who, in their nature-ſtate, are loſt and ſtraying, and could never find their way, or recover themſelves from their loſt ſtate in Adam, and by their own tranſgreſſions; but he came to ſeek, and to ſave them, and to theſe his miniſtry was powerful and efficacious.

Ver. 25. Then came ſhe and worſhipped him, &c.] She followed the diſciples into the houſe; and perceiving another repulſe by Chriſt's anſwer to them, ſhe puſhes on, thro' all diſcouragements; her faith grows ſtronger, and her importunity greater: ſhe had called Chriſt Lord, and the ſon of David before, but now ſhe worſhips him as God: Saying, Lord help me; a ſhort petition, but what fully and fitly expreſſed her caſe: the object ſhe prays unto, is the Lord, by which ſhe owns his ſovereignty, dominion, and power: the requeſt ſhe makes is for help, ſignifying that her caſe required it; that it was ſuch, that ſhe could not help herſelf, nor any creature help her, only he, which ſhe firmly believed; and tho' it was her daughter, and not ſhe herſelf, that was ſo miſerably afflicted; yet ſuch was her ſympathy, love, and affection to her, that ſhe makes the caſe her own, and calls helping her daughter, helping herſelf; for her daughter being relieved, ſhe would be made eaſy.

---

[1] Lucian. Dialog. Deor. Concil. §. 2.

Ver. 26. But he anſwered, and ſaid, &c.] To the woman, as the Perſic verſion reads it, and the ſenſe requires: it is not meet to take the childrens bread, and to caſt it to dogs; which he ſaid, to try her faith the more, and make it appear the more illuſtrious; and that not ſo much from his own ſenſe of things, as in the language of the Jewiſh people, and which ſhe might not be a ſtranger to. By the children, are meant the Jews, to whom the adoption belong'd; who, as a nation and people, were the children of God in a large ſenſe; being diſtinguiſhed by many bleſſings and favours, which others had not, and being under the more peculiar care and notice of God; not that all of them were the children of God by ſpecial grace: by the bread, which belong'd to them, is meant the external miniſtry of the word, and the miracles of Chriſt wrought among them; and particularly ſuch outward favours which related to the good of the bodies of men, by healing their diſeaſes, and diſpoſſeſſing them of devils: and by the dogs are deſigned the Gentiles, ſo called by the Jews in a way of contempt, becauſe of their ignorance, idolatry, and impurity. Chriſt here ſpeaks not his own mind, as if he reproached the Gentiles, and held them in ſcorn and contempt, but uſes the common dialect of the people; and which, this woman, living upon the borders of the Iſraelitiſh nation, was acquainted with; ſo that it was not ſo ſhocking and ſurprizing, or quite ſo diſcouraging, as it would otherwiſe have been. The Jewiſh doctors ſay [k], that the idolatrous Gentiles are not called men, that they are comparable to the beaſts, to the beaſts of the field [l], to oxen, rams, goats [m], and aſſes [n]: the fœtus in the bowels of a Canaanitiſh ſervant, they ſay [o], "כולד במעי בהמה דמיו, is " like the fœtus in the bowels of a beaſt." Take the following paſſage, as an illuſtration of this, and as a further proof of the Jews calling the Gentiles dogs [p]. "A king provides a dinner for the children of his " houſe; whilſt they do his will they eat their meat " with the king, and he gives to the dogs the part " of bones to knaw; but when the children of the " houſe don't do the king's pleaſure, he gives the " dogs the dinner, and the bones to them: even " ſo, while the Iſraelites do the will of their Lord, " they eat at the king's table, and the feaſt is pro- " vided for them, and they of their own will give " the bones to the Gentiles; but when they don't " do the will of their Lord, lo! the feaſt is, לכלבי, " for the dogs, and the bones are theirs." And a little after, "thou prepareſt a table before me; this " is the feaſt of the king; in the preſence of mine " enemies; אינון כלבי, theſe are the dogs that ſit be- " fore the table, looking for their part of the bones." In which may be clearly diſcerned the diſtinction between children and dogs, and the application of the one to the Jews, and the other to the Gentiles, and the different food that belongs to each: and hence it's eaſy to ſee from whom Chriſt borrowed this expreſſion, and with what view he made uſe of it.

Ver. 27. And ſhe ſaith, truth, Lord, &c.] She owns all that he had ſaid to be true, that he was ſent only to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael; that ſhe was indeed but as a dog, a poor ſinful creature, and unworthy of any favour; and that it was not right and fitting that all the childrens bread ſhould be taken from them, and given to dogs: yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their maſter's table. The Syriac and Perſic verſions add, and live: thus ſhe wiſely lays hold upon, and improves, in a very beautiful manner, in her own favour, what ſeemed to be ſo much againſt her. It is obſerved [q] of the Syro-phænicians in general, that they have all in their common talk, ſomething, ηδυ και κεχαρισμενον, pleaſant and graceful, as there is indeed in this ſmart reply of hers, who was one of that people. She ſuggeſts, that tho' the Gentiles were but dogs, and ſhe one of them; yet their common Lord and Maſter had a propriety in them, and they in him; and were to be maintained and fed, and ought to live, tho' not in ſuch fulneſs of favours and bleſſings, as the Jews, the children of God: nor did ſhe deſire their affluence, only that a crumb of mercy might be given her, that her poor daughter might be healed; which was but a ſmall favour, in compariſon of the numerous ones he heaped upon the children, the Jews: nor would this be any more detrimental to them, than it is to children, for the dogs, under the table, to eat of the crumbs that fall.

Ver. 28. Then Jeſus anſwered, and ſaid unto her, &c.] As one ſurprized at the ſtrength of her faith, and the clearneſs and juſtneſs of her pious reaſoning; and not concealing himſelf, and the deſigns of grace, any longer from her, breaks out in great admiration of her, ſaying, O woman, great is thy faith! He ſeems ſurprized, that ſhe, a woman, and a poor Gentile, ſhould expreſs ſuch ſtrong faith in him; calling him Lord, owning him to be the Meſſiah, worſhipping him as God, believing him able to do what could not be done by human art; and tho' ſhe met with ſuch repulſes, and even called a dog, yet ſtill continued importunate with him, believing ſhe ſhould ſucceed: be it unto thee even as thou wilt; let thy daughter be healed, as thou deſireſt, and in the way, and at the very time thou wouldſt have it: and her daughter was made whole from that very hour: power went forth from Chriſt, and diſpoſſeſſed the devil; ſo that when ſhe came home, as Mark obſerves, ſhe found her daughter lying on the bed, quiet, and eaſy, and perfectly well. The conduct of our Lord towards this woman, and her behaviour under it, do, in a very lively manner, repreſent the methods which God ſometimes takes with his people, when they apply to him in their diſtreſs; and the nature and actings of their faith upon him: as ſhe, when ſhe firſt applied to Chriſt for mercy and help, had not a word of anſwer given her; ſo ſometimes they cry, and the Lord turns a deaf ear, or ſeems not to hear, and, in their apprehenſion of things, has covered himſelf with a cloud, that their prayer ſhould not paſs through; however, an immediate anſwer is not returned; yea, when others interpoſe on their behalf, and intreat for them, yet no favourable anſwer is return'd, as was not by Chriſt to his diſciples, when they beſought him on this woman's account: and yet, notwithſtanding all this, as ſhe, they are not diſcouraged, but ply the throne of grace with freſh ſuits, acknowledge that the worſt of names and characters belong to them; that they are unworthy of the leaſt of mercies, and ſhould be content with the crumbs of divine favour, but can't go away without a bleſſing; they lay hold on every word of God, and haſtily catch at it, and improve every thing in their own favour, that faith can come at, and ſo, in the iſſue, ſucceed in their requeſts: effectual, fervent, and importunate prayer, the prayer of faith availeth much with God.

---

[k] T. Bab. Bava Metzia, fol. 114. 2. Zohar in Exod. fol. 35. 4. Tzeror Hammor, fol. 1. 4. [l] Zohar in Gen. fol. 31. 1. & 34. 1, 2. [m] Jarchi in Gen. 15. 10. [n] T. Bab. Kidduſhin, fol. 68. 1. [o] Ib. fol. 69. 1. [p] Zohar in Exod. fol. 63. 1, 2. Vid. Tzeror Hammor, fol. 147. 4. [q] Eunapius in Vita Libanii.

Ver. 29. And Jeſus departed from thence, &c.] From the coaſts of Tyre and Sidon, where he would have been private and retired; but being diſcovered, and knowing that the fame of this laſt miracle would make him more publick in thoſe parts, he removed, and paſſed thro' the midſt of the coaſt of Decapolis, as Mark ſays, and came nigh unto the ſea of Galilee; the ſame with the ſea of Tiberias, Joh. vi. 1. and xxi. 1. that is, he came to thoſe parts of Galilee, which lay near the ſea-ſide, and went up into a mountain; which was very uſual with him, either for ſolitude, or for prayer, and ſometimes, for better conveniency, to preach to the people: and ſat down there; to take ſome reſt, being weary with his journey, and as waiting for the multitude to come to him, both for inſtruction and healing.

Ver. 30. And great multitudes came unto him, &c.] From the adjacent places; having heard of his being where he was; and who had either attended on him before, or, however, the fame of him, and his miracles, had reached their ears: theſe flocked to him, having with them, in their hands, or arms, or upon their backs, or ſhoulders, leading ſome, and carrying others, in ſome form or another, thoſe that were lame; either in their legs, or arms: blind; in one eye, or both, and that either from their birth, or ſince: dumb; the word ſignifies both deaf and dumb: theſe often meet in the ſame perſon; and if a man is born deaf, he is always dumb: maimed; having loſt a limb, an arm, or a leg, or ſo enfeebled by ſome diſeaſe or another, as the palſy, that their limbs were uſeleſs to them. The Perſic verſion reads it leprous: and many others; who were afflicted with various other diſeaſes, too many to be mentioned particularly: and caſt them down at Jeſus feet; to eaſe themſelves of their burdens, and with a view to move his compaſſion, believing he was able to cure them: nor do they ſay a word to him, or deſire him to relieve theſe miſerable objects; thinking it was enough to preſent them to him, and not doubting at all, but he would ſhew favour to them: and he healed them; immediately, either by a word ſpeaking, or by touching them, or by putting his hands on them, or without any ſuch outward ſign, thro' a divine power proceeding from him, which, at once, removed all their diſorders and complaints.

Ver. 31. Inſomuch that the multitude wondred, &c.] The multitude of the ſpectators, who, though they came in expectation of ſeeing miracles wrought; yet theſe were ſo much beyond what they could have imagined, that they were amazed and ſurprized to ſee cures ſo inſtantly performed, in ſuch a miraculous manner: theſe were ſuch glaring proofs and evidences of the wonderful power of God, that they were aſtoniſhed when they ſaw the dumb to ſpeak; that is, ſuch who before were dumb, now ſpoke; and the ſame is to be obſerved in the other following inſtances: ſome copies have alſo, the deaf to hear; and ſo the Arabic verſion: the maimed to be whole. This is left out in ſome copies; nor is it in the Arabic, Ethiopic, and Vulgate Latin Verſions, nor in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel; but the Syriac has it, and moſt Greek copies, and ſeems neceſſary; ſince theſe are particularly mentioned among the perſons brought to be cured; and a wonderful cure this was, that perſons who had not only loſt the uſe of their limbs, but ſuch who had loſt the limbs themſelves, ſhould have them reſtored perfect; for doubtleſs, the power of our Lord was able to do this, and which was amazing to behold: the lame to walk, and the blind to ſee; as was propheſied of the times of the Meſſiah, and as things to be effected by him, Iſ. xxxv. 5, 6. and they glorified the God of Iſrael. The Ethiopic verſion adds, which had given ſuch power to the ſon of man, or unto men, which ſeems to be taken out of ch. ix. 8. This muſt be underſtood both of the multitude that ſaw theſe miraculous operations, and the perſons on whom they were wrought; who were both affected with them, and gave God the praiſe and glory of them, by whoſe power alone ſuch things could be done, who is the one only and true God: and therefore to diſtinguiſh him from the fictitious deities of the Gentiles, he is here ſtiled the God of Iſrael, of the people of Iſrael, ſo called from Jacob their anceſtor, whoſe name was Iſrael; by whom God was known, and worſhipped, and was their Covenant-God, and Father.

Ver. 32. Then Jeſus called his diſciples unto him, &c.] Who were at ſome little diſtance from him, to impart his mind unto them, whom he had made, and uſed, as his familiar friends; and to try their faith, and raiſe their attention, and prepare them for the following miracle; as well as to teach them by his example, and accuſtom them to ſhew bowels of mercy and compaſſion to perſons in any kind of want and diſtreſs: and ſaid, I have compaſſion on the multitude; which muſt be underſtood of him as man, whoſe bowels earned towards them, having been ſo long without any food for their bodies, or very little; as he had compaſſion on the ſick, and diſeaſed, and healed them, ſo on the ſound and whole, and was willing to feed them. Chriſt, our high-prieſt, is a merciful one, and is touched with the feeling of the infirmities of men, of every ſort, both of ſoul and body: becauſe they continue now with me three days; which time had been ſpent in healing their bodily diſorders, and in preaching to them for the good of their ſouls; which ſhews the diligence and indefatigableneſs of Chriſt, as well as the attachment of the people to him; who were ſo ſtruck with his miracles and miniſtry, that though they had been ſo long from their habitations and families, knew not how to leave him; nor did they talk, or ſhew any ſigns of departing from him, and returning to their own houſes, and buſineſs of life: and have nothing to eat; not that they had been ſo long without eating any thing, tho' very likely it was but little, and what they brought with them, and was now expended; nor could they provide themſelves in a deſart place, and many of them were a great way off from home: and I will not ſend them away faſting; he might have done it, nor did the multitude aſk any food of him; but he could not bear the thoughts of diſmiſſing them in ſuch a condition; having had but very little ſuſtenance all this while, and ſo might be ſaid to be in a manner faſting during this time, at leaſt now: leſt they faint by the way; to their own houſes, not having ſtrength and ſpirit enough to travel, and get home; for divers of them, as Mark ſays, came from far.

Ver. 33. And his diſciples ſaid unto him, &c.] The former miracle of feeding five thouſand men, beſides women and children, with five loaves and two fiſhes, being quite out of their thoughts, they reply; whence ſhould we have ſo much bread in the wilderneſs, as to fill ſo great a multitude? The queſtion is big with objections, and is put with ſome vehemency and aſtoniſhment: the people to be fed were a multitude, a great multitude, a very great multitude, and theſe too had had but little, or no food, for a great while; and therefore would require the more to fill and ſatisfy them; and beſides, it was a wilderneſs where they were, and where no proviſions were to be had; and if they could have been got for money, they had not ſtock enough to purchaſe ſuch a large number of loaves, as were neceſſary to feed ſo great a company with.

Ver. 34. And Jeſus ſaith unto them, &c.] In a very mild and gentle manner, taking no notice of their ſtupidity, nor upbraiding them with their forgetfulneſs of the late miracle, and willing to exerciſe their patience, and try their faith, aſks, how many loaves have ye? meaning in the common ſtock, and which they brought along with them, for their own ſupply: and they ſaid ſeven, and a few little fiſhes; which they mention as ſo ſmall a proviſion, that it was as nothing for ſuch multitudes; their loaves of bread were but ſeven, and their fiſhes, which were ready dreſſed, dried, or boiled, &c. were few in number, and ſmall, as to ſize and bigneſs.

Ver. 35. And he commanded the multitude to ſit down on the ground.] Not regarding the ſmallneſs of the proviſions, nor any further conſulting with his diſciples; but knowing his own power to increaſe this food, and determining to feed the multitude before he diſmiſſed them, in an authoritative way ordered them to ſit down upon the ground in rows, that they might be the better ſeen, and ſerved.

Ver. 36. And he took the ſeven loaves, and the fiſhes, &c.] Into his hands, and lifted them up, that it might be ſeen, and obſerved, that there were no other food than theſe, that ſo the miracle might appear in its true light: and gave thanks; to God for the proviſion, tho' it was ſo ſmall, in the name of the whole company, according to the uſage of the Jewiſh nation; who, if there were ten thouſand [r], one for the reſt uſed to ſay, "let us bleſs the Lord "our God, the God of Iſrael, the God of hoſts, "that ſitteth between the cherubim:" teaching us to do ſo likewiſe, and to be thankful for, and content with our portion, be it more or leſs: and brake them; which alſo was the cuſtom of the maſter of the family to do: and gave to his diſciples; as a freſh trial of their faith, to reprove their unbelief, to put them in mind of the former miracle, and that they might be witneſſes of this, and, in order to diſtribute to the people, which they accordingly did: and the diſciples to the multitude; in doing which they obeyed their maſter's orders, tho' before they could not perſuade themſelves, that ſuch a multitude of people could be filled with ſo ſmall a quantity.

Ver. 37. And they did all eat, and were filled, &c.] Every one had a ſhare of the proviſion, and that to full ſatisfaction; no one was overlooked and neglected, and every one had as much as he could eat: and they took up of the broken meat that was left, ſeven baſkets full. The diſciples, after they had diſtributed to every one his portion, went round, and collected the remaining fragments, and filled ſeven baſkets therewith, according to the number of the loaves which were broken; and ſo had a full return for the loaves and fiſhes they ſpared on this occaſion.

Ver. 38. And they that did eat, were four thouſand men, &c.] This number of men, as well as of the baſkets of fragments, clearly ſhews this to be a diſtinct miracle from the former of this kind, recorded in ch. xiv. There the number of men were five thouſand, here four thouſand; there the quantity of food was five loaves and two fiſhes, here ſeven loaves and a few fiſhes; there the number of the baſkets of fragments was twelve, here ſeven; tho' the quantity might be as large; ſince the word here uſed for a baſket is not the ſame as there, and deſigns one of a larger ſize: beſides men and women; who were not taken into the account, though they eat as well as the men, and whoſe number might be very large.

Ver. 39. And he ſent away the multitude, &c.] Diſmiſſing them, either with a prayer for them, or with a ſuitable word of exhortation, to be thankful for the mercies, both ſpiritual and temporal, they had received, and behave agreeably in their lives and converſations: and took ſhip; being near the ſea-ſide, the ſea of Galilee, and came into the coaſts of Magdala; not far from Tiberias; for often mention is made of Magdala in the Talmud [s], along with Tiberias, and Chammath, another place in the ſame neighbourhood; and was famous for ſome Rabbins, as R. Joden and R. Iſaac [t], who are ſaid to be מגדלאה, of Magdala. Thus the Syriac verſion reads it Magedo, and the Vulgate Latin Magedan; and Beza ſays, in one Greek exemplar 'tis read Magadan; and ſome have thought it to be the ſame with Megiddo, where Joſiah was ſlain by Pharoah-necho, and which Herodotus calls Magdolos [u]. The Evangeliſt Mark ſays, that he came into the parts of Dalmanutha, which was a place within the coaſts of Magdala. This was not the place, but another of the ſame name near Jeruſalem, from whence Mary Magdalene may be thought to have her name. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, they went into a ſhip, and departed into the mountains of Magdala; that is, Chriſt, and his diſciples.

CHAP. XVI.

Ver. 1. THE Phariſees alſo with the Sadducees came, &c.] Not from Jeruſalem, as in ch. xv. 1. but from the neighbouring places: theſe were Galilean Sadducees and Phariſees, of whom mention is made in the Miſna [w]; "ſays "צדוקי גלילי, a Galilean Sadducee, (i. e. one that "was of the land of Galilee, as Bartenora on the "place obſerves) I complain of you Phariſees, be"cauſe ye write the name of a ruler with the name "of Moſes, in a divorce; ſay the Phariſees, we "complain of you Galilean Sadducees, that you "write the name of a ruler, with the name of God, "in the ſame leaf:" but tho' theſe two ſects could not agree in this, and in many other things, yet they could unite againſt Chriſt, to whom they bore an implacable hatred. And tempting, deſired him that he would ſhew them a ſign from heaven: they came with no ſincere view to be taught by him, or learn any thing from him; but if they could, to enſnare him, and get an opportunity of expoſing him to the people; and therefore pretending diſſatisfaction with the miracles he wrought on the earth, they aſk of him to produce a ſign from heaven, of his coming from thence, of his being the ſon of God, and the true Meſſiah. They wanted ſome ſuch ſign, as the ſtanding ſtill of the ſun and moon, in the times of Joſhua; and as raining manna, in the times of Moſes; or ſome ſuch appearances of thunder

---

[r] Miſn. Beracot, c. 7. §. 3.

[s] T. Hieroſ. Sheviith, fol. 38. 4. Maaſerot, fol. 50. 3. Erubin, fol. 21. 4.

[t] T. Hieroſ. Taanith, fol. 64. 3. T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 81. 2. & Nidda, fol. 33. 1. Bereſhit Rabba, fol. 4. 4.

[u] L. 2. c. 159.

[w] Yadaim, c. 4. §. 8.

and lightning, as at the giving of the law. The appearance of the rainbow, in a very extraordinary manner, is looked upon by the Jews as a ſign of the Meſſiah's coming [x]. "Says a certain Jew, when my father departed out of the world, he ſaid thus to me; don't look for the Meſſiah until thou ſeeſt the bow in the world, adorned with light colours, and the world enlightened by it; then look for the Meſſiah, as it is written, Gen. ix. 16." Some very unuſual and uncommon ſight in the heavens, was what theſe men aſked of Chriſt in proof of his miſſion from God.

Ver. 2. He anſwered and ſaid unto them, &c.] Knowing full well their views, and having wrought ſufficient miracles to confirm his Meſſiahſhip, he thought fit to give them no other anſwer, than this: when it is evening, ye ſay, it will be fair weather, for the ſky is red; when the ſun is ſetting, it is a common thing for you to ſay, looking up to the heavens, and obſerving the face and colour of them, that it is like to be fair weather; no rain that night, nor perhaps the next day, for the ſky is red like fire, thro' the rays of the ſun; which ſhew the clouds to be very thin, and ſo will ſoon waſte away, and conſequently fine weather muſt follow.

Ver. 3. And in the morning it will be foul weather to-day, &c.] When you riſe in the morning, and take a ſurvey of the heavens, it is a very uſual thing with you to ſay, it is like to be windy or rainy weather to-day, for the ſky is red and lowring; which ſhews, that the clouds are ſo thick that the ſun can't pierce thro' them, and its face is not ſeen; ſo that it may be reaſonably concluded they will iſſue in rain, or wind, or both. O ye hypocrites. The Vulgate Latin, and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel, leave out this appellation; but all other verſions, as well as copies, have it: and it is an uſual epithet, beſtowed very juſtly by Chriſt, on theſe men; who pretended to be the guides of the people, took upon them to teach and inſtruct them in divine things, and ſet up themſelves as men of great holineſs, piety and knowledge; and yet, inſtead of ſearching the ſcriptures, and comparing the characters of the times of the Meſſiah therein fixed, with the preſent ones, ſpent their time in making ſuch low and uſeleſs obſervations, and which fall within the compaſs of every one's knowledge and reach. Ye can diſcern the face of the ſky; very diſtinctly, and make ſome very probable gueſſes, if not certain concluſions, what will follow, good weather or bad: but can ye not diſcern the ſigns of the times? or, as the Syriac reads it, the time, the preſent time: if they had not been blind, they might eaſily have diſcerned, that the ſigns of the time of the Meſſiah's coming were upon them, and that Jeſus was the Meſſiah; as the departure of the ſcepter from Judah, the ending of Daniel's weeks, the various miracles wrought by Chriſt, the wickedneſs of the age in which they lived, the miniſtry of John the Baptiſt, and of Chriſt, the great flockings of the people, both to one and to the other, with divers other things which were eaſy to be obſerved by them: but they pretend this to be a very great ſecret. "The ſecret of the day of death, they ſay [y], and the ſecret of the day when the king Meſſiah comes, who by his wiſdom can find out?"

Ver. 4. A wicked and adulterous generation, &c.] He ſays the ſame things here, as he did to the Phariſees on a like occaſion, in ch. xii. 39. ſee the note there. And he left them; as perſons hardened, perverſe, and incurable, and as unworthy to be converſed with: and departed; to the ſhip which brought him thither, and went in it to the other ſide of the ſea of Galilee; ſee Mark viii. 13.

Ver. 5. When his diſciples were come to the other ſide, &c.] Of the ſea, as Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel adds, to Bethſaida, Mark viii. 22. as they were either in the ſhip, or going from the ſhore to the ſaid place, they recollected themſelves, that they had forgotten to take bread; having but one loaf, as Mark ſays, in the ſhip; the ſeven baſkets of fragments being either expended, or given away to the poor, of their own accord, or by Chriſt's orders. It ſeems, it was uſual with the diſciples to buy food at places moſt proper, and carry with them; ſince Chriſt often went into deſarts and mountainous places, where proviſions could not be had. This their forgetfulneſs to act according to their wonted method, might ariſe either from their being intent upon Chriſt's converſation with the Phariſees, and Sadducees, or from the ſuddenneſs of Chriſt's departure.

Ver. 6. Then Jeſus ſaid unto them, &c.] Either taking occaſion from the diſciples obſerving that they had forgot to take bread with them, or on account of what paſſed between him and the Phariſees and Sadducees, he gave the following advice to his diſciples; take heed and beware of the leaven of the Phariſees and of the Sadducees. Mark, inſtead of the leaven of the Sadducees, ſays, the leaven of Herod; either becauſe Chriſt might caution againſt all three; or becauſe the Sadducees were generally Herodians, taking Herod to be the Meſſiah; or were on his party, or for his government, which the Phariſees diſliked; and the Herodians were generally Sadducees. By the leaven of theſe is meant their doctrine, as appears from ver. 12. The doctrines the Phariſees taught were the commandments and inventions of men, the traditions of the elders, free-will, and juſtification by the works of the law: the doctrine of the Sadducees was, that there was no reſurrection of the dead, nor angels, nor ſpirits: now becauſe they ſought ſecretly and artfully to infuſe their notions into the minds of men; and which, when imbibed, ſpread their infection, and made men ſour, moroſe, rigid, and ill-natured, and ſwelled and puffed them up with pride and vanity, Chriſt compares them to leaven; and adviſes his diſciples to look about them, to watch, and be on their guard, leſt they ſhould be infected with them.

Ver. 7. And they reaſoned among themſelves, &c.] Either what ſhould be the meaning of this caution of Chriſt's, and upon what account he ſhould ſay this to them; or they were anxiouſly concerned what they ſhould do for proviſion: ſaying, becauſe we have taken no bread; for the phraſe, it is, is a ſupplement, and is not in the original text, which confines the ſenſe to the firſt way of interpretation; the words may be read without it, and confirms the other ſenſe, and which receives ſtrength from what follows.

Ver. 8. Which when Jeſus perceived, &c.] Without hearing any of their debates, but by his omniſcience; for he knew the doubts and unbelief, and anxious ſolicitude of their minds, as well as their private reaſonings one with another: he ſaid unto them, O ye of little faith; a phraſe uſed upon a like occaſion, when he would diſſuade his diſciples from an anxious diſtreſſing care about a livelihood, Matt. vi. 30. ſee the note there: why reaſon ye among yourſelves, becauſe ye have brought no bread? blaming one another for your negligence and forgetfulneſs in this matter; diſtreſſing your minds, as if you ſhould be famiſhed and ſtarved, becauſe ye have not brought a quantity of bread, as you uſed to do with you.

---

[x] Zohar in Gen. fol. 53. 2.

[y] Targum in Eccl. vii. 24.

Ver. 9. Do ye not yet underſtand, &c.] Meaning either the ſenſe of the advice he had now given; or rather his almighty power diſplayed in the two miracles of feeding five thouſand at one time, and four thouſand at another, with a very ſmall quantity of proviſion; for to this the word underſtand refers, as well as the following: neither remember the five loaves of the five thouſand, and how many baſkets ye took up? Have you forgot what was ſo lately done, namely, the feeding five thouſand men, beſides women and children, with five loaves and two fiſhes, when ye took up, after all were filled and ſatisfied, no leſs than twelve baſkets of fragments? And can you, after this, diſtruſt my power in the care of you? Have I fed ſo many with ſo ſmall a quantity of food? and am I not able to feed twelve of you, tho' you have but one loaf? Why all theſe anxious thoughts and carnal reaſonings?

Ver. 10. Neither the ſeven loaves of the four thouſand, &c.] Have you forgot the other miracle done but a very little while ago, when I fed four thouſand men, beſide women and children, with ſeven loaves and a few ſmall fiſhes, and how many baſkets ye took up? no leſs than ſeven large baſkets; and am I not able to provide for you? diſtreſs not yourſelves about this matter; give not way to unbelief, which muſt argue great ſtupidity and inſenſibility.

Ver. 11. How is it that ye do not underſtand, &c.] That you ſhould be ſo ſenſeleſs and void of thought, after ſuch inſtances, as to imagine, that I concerned myſelf about what bread you brought with you; one would think you could not but know, that I ſpake it not to you concerning bread, taken in a literal ſenſe; but muſt be thought to ſpeak figuratively and myſtically, and to have an higher ſenſe and meaning, when I ſaid to you, that ye ſhould beware of the leaven of the Phariſees, and of the Sadducees; how could you think that I had any regard to the leaven taken in a literal ſenſe, the Phariſees and Sadducees approve or diſapprove of?

Ver. 12. Then underſtood they, &c.] Without any further explication of his ſenſe and meaning, how that he bade them not beware of the leaven of bread: which ſenſe they firſt took him in, imagining, becauſe the Phariſees were very particular and preciſe what ſort of leaven they made uſe of [z], that Chriſt forbad them buying bread that was made with leaven according to their directions: and ſince their rules in every thing prevailed much in all places, they were concerned what bread they muſt, or could buy; but now they perceived that he did not ſpeak of this, but of the doctrine of the Phariſees and of the Sadducees. It was very common with the Jews [a] to call the corruption and vitioſity of nature by the name of שאור שבעיסה, leaven in the lump: hence our Lord calls their doctrine ſo, becauſe it proceeded from thence, and was agreeable thereunto; and uſes the phraſe on purpoſe to expoſe it, and bring it into neglect and contempt.

Ver. 13. When Jeſus came into the coaſts of Ceſarea Philippi, &c.] The towns that were in the neighbourhood of this city; which city went by ſeveral names before, as Leſhem, Joſh. xix. 47. which being taken by the Danites, they called it Dan; hence we read of דן דקיסריון, Dan, which is Ceſarea [b]. It was alſo called Paneas, from the name of the fountain of Jordan, by which it was ſituated; and which Pliny ſays [c], gave the ſurname to Ceſarea; and hence it is called by Ptolomy [d] Ceſarea Paniæ; and by the name of Paneas it went, when Philip the [e] tetrarch rebuilt it, and called it Ceſarea, in honour of Tiberius Cæſar; and from his own name, Philippi, to diſtinguiſh it from another Ceſarea, of which mention is made in the Acts of the Apoſtles, built by his father Herod, and ſo called in honour of Auguſtus Cæſar; which before bore the name of Strato's tower. The Miſnic doctors ſpeak of two Ceſarea's [f], the one they call the eaſtern, the other the weſtern Ceſarea. Now, as Mark ſays, whilſt Chriſt and his diſciples were in the way to theſe parts; and, as Luke, when he had been praying alone with them, he aſked his diſciples, ſaying, whom do men ſay that I, the ſon of man am? He calls himſelf the ſon of man, becauſe he was truly and really man; and becauſe of his low eſtate, and the infirmities of human nature, with which he was encompaſſed: he may have ſome reſpect to the firſt intimation of him, as the ſeed of woman, and the rather make uſe of this phraſe, becauſe the Meſſiah was ſometimes deſigned by it in the Old Teſtament, Pſ. lxxx. 17. Dan. vii. 13. or Chriſt ſpeaks here of himſelf, according to his outward appearance, and the prevailing opinion of men concerning him; that he looked to be only a mere man, born as other men were; was properly a ſon of man, and no more: and therefore the queſtion is, not what ſort of man he was, whether a holy, good man or no, or whether the Meſſiah or not; but the queſtion is, what men in general, whether high or low, rich or poor, learned or unlearned, under the notion they had of him as a mere man, ſaid of him; or ſince they took him to be but a man, what man they thought he was; and to this the anſwer is very appoſite. This queſtion Chriſt put to his diſciples, they being more converſant with the people than he, and heard the different opinions men had of him, and who were more free to ſpeak their minds of him to them, than to himſelf; not that he was ignorant of what paſſed among men, and the different ſentiments they had of him, but he was willing to hear the account from his diſciples; and his view in putting this queſtion to them, was to make way for another, in order to bring them to an ingenuous confeſſion of their faith in him.

Ver. 14. And they ſaid, ſome ſay that thou art John the Baptiſt, &c.] It was the opinion of ſome of the Jews, that he was John the Baptiſt riſen from the dead. This notion was ſpread, and prevailed in Herod's court, and he himſelf, at laſt, gave into it. Some Elias; the Tiſhbite, becauſe an extraordinary perſon was propheſied of by Malachi, under the name of Elias; and who was to come in his power and ſpirit before the great day of the Lord; and it being a prevailing notion with the Jews, that Elias was to come before the Meſſiah; ſee the note on Matt. xi. 14. they concluded that he was now come: and others Jeremias; this is omitted both by Mark and Luke; the reaſon why he is mentioned, is not becauſe of what is ſaid of him, in Jer. i. 5, 10. or in ver. 18. but becauſe the Jews thought he was that prophet ſpoken of, in Deut. xviii. 15. that ſhould be raiſed up from among them, like unto Moſes: and this is the ſenſe of ſome of their writers;

---

[z] Miſn. Peſach, c. 2. §. 2, 3. T. Hieroſ. Shabbat, fol. 3. 3.

[a] T. Hieroſ. Beracot, fol. 7. 4. T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 17. 1. Bereſhit Rabba, fol. 29. 4. Caphtor, fol. 38. 2. Tzeror Hammor, fol. 73. 2.

[b] Targum Hieroſ. in Gen. xiv. 17.

[c] Hiſt. l. 5. c. 15, 18.

[d] Geograph. l. 5. c. 15.

[e] Joſeph. Antiq. l. 18. c. 3. & de Bello Jud. l. 3. c. 13.

[f] Miſn. Oholot, c. 18. §. 9.

ters [g]; and in their very ancient writings a parallel is run between Moſes and Jeremy [h]. “R. Judah, the ſon of R. Simon, opened Deut. xviii. 18. and xxxiv. 10. thus: as thee, this is Jeremiah, who was, as he, in reproofs; you'll find all that is written of the one, is written of the other; one propheſied forty years, and the other propheſied forty years; the one propheſied concerning Judah and Iſrael, and the other propheſied concerning Judah and Iſrael; againſt the one thoſe of his own tribe ſtood up, and againſt the other thoſe of his own tribe ſtood up; the one was caſt into a river, and the other into a dungeon; the one was delivered by the means of an handmaid, and the other by the means of a ſervant; the one came with words of reproof, and the other came with words of reproof.” Now they fancied, either that the ſoul of Jeremy was tranſmigrated into another body, or that he was riſen from the dead. Or one of the prophets; one of the ancient ones, as Hoſeah, or Iſaiah, or ſome other: they could not fix upon the particular perſon who they thought was riſen from the dead, and did theſe wondrous works among them. From the whole it appears, that theſe perſons, whoſe different ſentiments of Chriſt are here delivered, were not his ſworn enemies, as the Scribes and Phariſees, who could never ſpeak reſpectfully of him; ſaying, that he was a gluttonous man, a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and ſinners, a very wicked man, and far from being one, or like one of the prophets: they ſometimes repreſent him as beſides himſelf, and mad, yea, as being a Samaritan, and having a devil, as familiar with the devil, and doing his miracles by his aſſiſtance; but theſe were the common people, the multitude that followed Chriſt from place to place, and had a great opinion of him on account of his miniſtry, and miracles: wherefore, tho' they could not agree in their notions concerning him, yet each of them fix upon ſome perſon of note and worth, whom they took him for; they all looked upon him as a great and good man, and as a prophet, as John the Baptiſt was accounted by all the people, and as one of the chief of the prophets, as Elias and Jeremiah; and they that could not fix on any particular perſon, yet put him into the claſs of the prophets: but ſtill they came ſhort of the true knowledge of him; they did not know him to be a divine perſon, which his works and miracles proved him to be; nor to be that prophet Moſes had ſpoken of, who was alone to be hearkened unto, tho' his miniſtry was a demonſtration of it; nor that he was the Meſſiah, ſo much ſpoken of in prophecy, and ſo long expected by the Jewiſh nation, tho' he had all the characters of the Meſſiah meeting in him. The chief reaſon why they could not entertain ſuch a thought of him, ſeems to be the mean figure he made in the world, being of a low extract, in ſtrait circumſtances of life, regarded only by the poorer ſort; and there appearing nothing in him promiſing, that he ſhould deliver them from the Roman yoke, and ſet up a temporal kingdom, which ſhould be proſperous and flouriſhing, which was the notion of the Meſſiah that then generally obtained: and ſince they could not, by any means, allow of this character as belonging to Jeſus, though otherwiſe they had an high opinion of him; hence they could not agree about him, but formed different ſentiments of him; which is uſually the caſe in every thing, where the truth is not hit upon and received.

Ver. 15. He ſaith unto them, but whom ſay ye that I am?] Without taking any further notice, or making any reflections on the different ſentiments of men concerning him, he puts this queſtion to his diſciples, and which is what he had chiefly in view, that he might have their ſenſe of him; and which he puts in a different form, and leaves out the phraſe, the ſon of man, becauſe they knew he was more than a man: nor was his mean appearance an offence to them; they had believed in him, became his diſciples, and were followers of him: but it was not enough to believe in him, they muſt confeſs him; both are neceſſary; therefore he does not ſay, whom believe ye, but whom ſay ye that I am? You who have been with me ſo long from the beginning; you who have heard ſo many diſcourſes from me, and have ſeen ſo many miracles wrought by me; and who are to be the teachers of others, to preach my Goſpel, and publiſh my ſalvation to Jews and Gentiles, what have you to ſay of me? whom do you ſay I am? as for thoſe men, it is no great matter who they ſay I am; but of great moment and conſequence are your ſenſe and confeſſion of me. Such who have long ſat under a Goſpel-miniſtry, or who have been long in the church and ſchool of Chriſt, it is expected of them, that they ſhould know more of Chriſt than others; and ſhould be come to a point about his perſon and office, and be ready to make a confeſſion of their faith, and give a reaſon of their hope in him; and eſpecially ſuch who are, or are to be preachers of Chriſt to others: theſe ought to be well acquainted with him, who, and what he is; they ſhould have no doubt, nor heſitation in their minds, about him, but be fully ſatisfied concerning him; and be free, and open, and ready to declare what they know and believe of him.

Ver. 16. And Simon Peter anſwered and ſaid, &c.] Either of his own accord, and for himſelf, being a warm, zealous, and forward man; one that dearly loved Chriſt, truly believed in him, and was ready to make a confeſſion of him; or, as the mouth of the reſt, in their name, and with their conſent; or, at leaſt, as full well knowing the ſentiments of their minds. Thou art Chriſt, the ſon of the living God; a ſhort, but a very full confeſſion of faith, containing the following articles: as that there is a God, that there is but one God; that he is the living God, has life in himſelf, is the fountain of life to others, and by this is diſtinguiſhable from the idols of the Gentiles: that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Chriſt of God, the true Meſſiah, that was promiſed by God, propheſied of by all the prophets, from the beginning of the world, and expected by the people of God; a character that includes all his offices, of prophet, prieſt, and king, to which he is anointed by God: and that this Meſſiah was not a mere man, but a divine perſon, the ſon of God; not by creation, as angels and men are, nor by adoption, as ſaints, nor by office as magiſtrates, but by nature, being his own ſon, his proper ſon, the only-begotten of the father, of the ſame nature with him, being one with him, and equal to him. This confeſſion, as it is uniform, and all of a piece, and conſiſtent with itſelf, and is what all the diſciples of Chriſt agreed in, ſo it greatly exceeds the moſt that can be made of the different ſentiments of the people put together. They took him, one and all, to be but a mere man; their moſt exalted thoughts of him roſe no higher: but in this he is acknowledged to be the ſon of God, a phraſe expreſſive of his divine nature, and diſtinct perſonality: they thought him to be a dead man brought to life; but here he is called the ſon of the living God, as having the ſame life in him the father has: they indeed judged him to be a prophet, but not that prophet that was to come, ſuperior to all prophets; but here he is owned to be the Chriſt, which not only takes in his prophetic office in a higher ſenſe than they underſtood it, but all his other offices, and declares him to be the promiſed Meſſiah; which they who thought, and ſpoke the moſt honourably of him, could not allow of.

---

[g] Baal Hatturim in Deut. xviii. 15. R. Abraham Seba, Tzeror Hammor, fol. 127. 4. & 143. 4.

[h] Peſikta Rabbati apud R. Abarbinel. Præfat. ad Jer. fol. 96. 2.

Ver. 17. And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, &c.] Not wanting for any other declaration from them; but taking this to be the ſenſe of them all, he ſaid, bleſſed art thou Simon Bar-Jona, or ſon of Jona, or Jonas, as in John i. 42. and xxi. 15. His father's name was Jonah, whence he was ſo called: ſo we read [i] of R. Bo bar Jonah, and of a Rabbi of this very name [k], ר׳ שמעון בר יונא, Rabbi Simeon bar Jona; for Simon and Simeon are one, and the ſame name. Some read it Bar-Joanna, the ſame with John; but the common reading is beſt; Bar-Jona ſignifies the ſon of a dove, and Bar-Joanna ſignifies the ſon of one that is gracious. Our Lord, by this appellation, puts Peter in mind of his birth and parentage, but does not pronounce him bleſſed on that account; no true bleſſedneſs comes by natural deſcent; men are by nature children of wrath, being conceived in ſin, and ſhapen in iniquity: tho' he was Bar-Jona, the ſon of a dove, and his father might be a good man, and anſwer to his name, and be of a dove-like ſpirit; yet ſuch a ſpirit was not conveyed from him to Peter by natural generation: and tho' he might be, according to the other reading, Bar-Joanna, or the ſon of a gracious man, yet grace was not communicated to him thereby; for he was not born of blood, nor of the will of the fleſh, nor of the will of man, but of God, John i. 13. He was a bleſſed man, not by his firſt, but by his ſecond birth; and the reaſon why our Lord makes mention of his father, is to obſerve to him, that he was the ſon of a mean man, and had had but a mean education, and therefore his bleſſedneſs in general was not of nature, but of grace, and this branch of it in particular: the knowledge he had of the Meſſiah, was not owing to his earthly father, or to the advantage of an education, but to the revelation he had from Chriſt's father which is in heaven, as is hereafter affirmed. He is pronounced bleſſed, as having a true knowledge of God, and of his ſon Jeſus Chriſt, whom to know is life eternal; and all ſuch as he are ſo, appear to be the favourites of God, to have an intereſt in Chriſt, and in all the bleſſings of his grace; are juſtified by his righteouſneſs, pardoned through his blood, are accepted in him, have communion with Father, Son, and Spirit, and ſhall live eternally with them hereafter. For fleſh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee: nothing is more frequent to be met with in Jewiſh writings, than the phraſe of fleſh and blood, as deſigning men in diſtinction from God: ſo the firſt man is ſaid [l] to be "the workmanſhip of the "bleſſed God, and not the workmanſhip, דבשר ודם "of fleſh and blood." Again [m], בשר ודם, fleſh and blood, who knows not the times and ſeaſons, &c. but the holy, bleſſed God, who knows the times and ſeaſons, &c. Inſtances of this way of ſpeaking are almoſt without number: accordingly, the ſenſe here is, that this excellent confeſſion of faith, which Peter had delivered, was not revealed unto him, nor taught him by any mere man; he had not it from his immediate parents, nor from any of his relations, or countrymen; nor did he attain to the knowledge of what is expreſſed in it, by the dint of nature, by the ſtrength of carnal reaſon, or the force of his own capacity and abilities; but my father which is in heaven; from whom both the external and internal revelation of ſuch truths come; though not to the excluſion of the ſon, by whoſe revelation the Goſpel is taught, and received; nor of the Holy Ghoſt, who is a Spirit of wiſdom and revelation, but in oppoſition to, and diſtinction from any mere creature whatever. Neither the Goſpel, nor any part of it, is an human device or diſcovery; it is not after man, nor according to the carnal reaſon of man; it is above the moſt exalted and refined reaſon of men; it has in it what eye has not ſeen, nor ear heard, nor has it entered into the heart of man to conceive of: its truths are the deep things of God, which the Spirit of God ſearches and reveals; and which men, left to the light of nature, and force of reaſon, muſt have been for ever ignorant of, and could never have diſcovered. The Goſpel is a revelation, it conſiſts of revealed truths; and which are to be received and believed upon the teſtimony and credit of the revealer, without entering into carnal reaſonings, and diſputes about them; and it is the higheſt reaſon, and the moſt noble uſe of reaſon, to embrace it at once, as coming from God; for this revelation is from heaven, and from Chriſt's father; particularly the Deity, Sonſhip, and Meſſiahſhip of Chriſt, are doctrines of pure revelation: that there is a God, is diſcoverable by the light of nature; and that he is the living God, and gives being, and life, and breath, and all things, to his creatures; but that he has a ſon of the ſame nature with him, and equal to him, who is the Meſſiah, and the Saviour of loſt ſinners, this could never have been found out by fleſh and blood: no man knows the ſon, but the father, and he to whom he reveals him; he bears witneſs of him, and declares him to be his ſon, in whom he is well pleaſed: and happy are thoſe who are bleſſed with the outward revelation of Jeſus Chriſt in the Goſpel, but more eſpecially ſuch to whom the father reveals Chriſt in them the hope of glory!

Ver. 18. And I ſay alſo unto thee, &c.] Either beſides what he had already ſaid concerning his happineſs; or, as the father had revealed ſomething great and valuable, ſo likewiſe would he; or inaſmuch as he had freely ſaid and declared who, and what he was, in like manner he alſo would ſay what Peter was, thou art Peter; intimating, that he was rightly called Peter, or Cephas, by him, when he firſt became a follower of him, Matt. iv. 18. John i. 42. which words ſignify the ſame thing, a rock, or ſtone; becauſe of his firmneſs and ſolidity, and becauſe he was laid upon the ſure foundation, and built on the rock Chriſt, and was a very fit ſtone to be laid in the ſpiritual building. The aptneſs of this name to him is eaſy to be ſeen in his full aſſurance of faith, as to the perſon of Chriſt, and his free, open, and undaunted confeſſion of him. And upon this rock will I build my church: by the church, is meant, not an edifice of wood, ſtones, &c. but an aſſembly, and congregation of men; and that not of any ſort; not a diſorderly, tumultuous aſſembly, in which ſenſe this word is ſometimes taken; nor does it deſign the faithful of a family, which is ſometimes the import of it; nor a particular congregated church, but the elect of God, the general aſſembly and church of the firſt-born, whoſe names are written in heaven; and eſpecially ſuch of them

---

[i] Juchaſin, fol. 85. 1. [k] Ib. fol. 105. 1. [l] Zohar in Gen. fol. 43. 3. [m] R. Simeon in Jarchi in Gen. ii. 2.

as were to be gathered in, and built on Chriſt, from among the Jews and Gentiles. The materials of this building are ſuch, as are by nature no better, or more fit for it, than others: theſe ſtones originally lie in the ſame quarry with others; they are ſingled out, and ſeparated from the reſt, according to the ſovereign will of God, by powerful and efficacious grace; and are broken and hewn by the Spirit of God, generally ſpeaking, under the miniſtry of the word, and are, by him, made living ſtones; and being holy and ſpiritual perſons, are built up a ſpiritual houſe: and theſe are the only perſons which make up the true and inviſible church of Chriſt in the iſſue, and are only fit to be members of the viſible church; and all ſuch ought to be in a Goſpel church-ſtate, and partake of the privileges of it: theſe materials are of different ſorts, and have a different place, and have a different uſefulneſs in this building; ſome are only as common ſtones, and timber; others are as pillars, beams, and rafters; and all are uſeful and ſerviceable; and being put, and knit together, grow up as an holy temple to the Lord: and are called, by Chriſt, my church, becauſe given him by the father; and he has purchaſed them with his own blood; are built by him, and on him; inhabited by him, and of whom he is the head, king, and governor; though not to the excluſion of the father, whoſe houſe they alſo are; nor of the Spirit, who dwells in them, as in his temple. This church Chriſt promiſes to build. Though his miniſters are builders, they are but under-builders; they are qualified, employed, directed, encouraged, and ſucceeded by him; he is the wiſe, able, and chief maſter-builder. This act of building ſeems to have a ſpecial regard to the converſion of God's elect, both among Jews and Gentiles, particularly the latter; and to the daily converſions of them in all ages; and to the building up of ſaints in faith and holineſs; each of which will more manifeſtly appear in the latter day; and are both generally effected through the word, and ordinances, as means, the Spirit of Chriſt bleſſing them. By the rock on which Chriſt builds his church, is meant, not the perſon of Peter; for Chriſt does not ſay, upon thee Peter, but upon this rock, referring to ſomething diſtinct from him: for tho' his name ſignifies a rock, or ſtone, and there may be ſome alluſion to it; and he is ſo called becauſe of his truſt and confidence in the Lord, on whom he was built; but not becauſe he was the foundation on which any others, and eſpecially the whole church, were built: 'tis true, he may be called the foundation, as the reſt of the twelve apoſtles of the lamb are, Eph. ii. 20. Rev. xxi. 14. without any diſtinction from them, and preference to them; they and he agreeing in laying doctrinally and miniſterially Chriſt Jeſus as the foundation of faith and hope, but not in ſuch ſenſe as he is; neither he, nor they, are the foundation on which the church is built, which is Chriſt, and him only. Moreover, what is ſaid to Peter in theſe, and the following words, is not ſaid to him perſonally and ſeparately from the reſt of the apoſtles, but is deſigned for them, as well as him, as appears by comparing them with ch. xviii. 18. As he ſpoke in the name of them all, to Chriſt; ſo Chriſt ſpake to him, including them all. Peter had no preheminence over the reſt of the apoſtles, which he neither aſſumed, nor was it granted; nor would it ever have been connived at by Chriſt, who often ſhewed his reſentment at ſuch a ſpirit and conduct, whenever there was any appearance of it in any of them; ſee ch. xviii. 1, 2, 3. and xx. 25—28. and though Peter, with James, and John, had ſome particular favours beſtowed on him by Chriſt; as to be at the raiſing of Jairus's daughter, and at the transfiguration of Chriſt on the mount, and with him in the garden; and he appeared to him alone after his reſurrection, and before he was ſeen by the reſt of the diſciples; yet in ſome things he was inferior to them, being left to deny his Lord and Maſter, they did not; and upon another account is called ſatan by Chriſt, which they never were; not to mention other infirmities of his, which ſhew he is not the rock: and, after all, what is this to the pope of Rome, who is no ſucceſſor of Peter's? Peter, as an apoſtle, had no ſucceſſor, in his office; nor was he biſhop of Rome; nor has the pope of Rome either his office, or his doctrine: but here, by the rock, is meant, either the confeſſion of faith made by Peter; not the act, nor form, but the matter of it, it containing the prime articles of Chriſtianity, and which are as immoveable as a rock; or rather Chriſt himſelf, who points, as it were, with his finger to himſelf, and whom Peter had made ſuch a glorious confeſſion of; and who was prefigured by the rock the Iſraelites drank water out of in the wilderneſs; and is comparable to any rock for heighth, ſhelter, ſtrength, firmneſs, and duration; and is the one and only foundation of his church and people, and on whom their ſecurity, ſalvation, and happineſs entirely depend. Chriſt is a rock that is higher than they, where they find ſafety in times of diſtreſs, and the ſhadow of which is refreſhing to them; and therefore betake themſelves to him for ſhelter, and where they are ſecure from the wrath of God, and rage of men: he is the rock of ages, in whom is everlaſting ſtrength; and is the ſure, firm, and everlaſting foundation on which the church, and all true believers, are laid: he is the foundation of their faith, and hope, and everlaſting happineſs, and will ever continue; and the gates of hell ſhall not prevail againſt it. The Jews ſpeak of the gates of hell; ſometimes of the gate of hell, in the ſingular number[p]; and ſometimes of the gates of hell, in the plural number. They ſay[q], that "שלשה פתחים יש לגיהנם, " hell has three gates, one in the wilderneſs, one in " the ſea, and one in Jeruſalem." They talk[r] of " an angel that is appointed על תרעי דגיהנם, " over the gates of hell, whoſe name is Samriel; " who has three keys in his hands, and opens three " doors." And elſewhere[s] they ſay, that " he that " is appointed over hell his name is Dumah, and " many myriads of deſtroying angels are with him, " and he ſtands על פתחא דגיהנם, at the gate of " hell; and all thoſe that keep the holy covenant in " this world, he has no power to bring them in." Our Lord may allude to theſe notions of the Jews, and his ſenſe be, that all the infernal principalities and powers, with all their united cunning and ſtrength, will never be able to extirpate his Goſpel, to deſtroy his intereſt, to demoliſh his church in general, or ruin any one particular ſoul that is built upon him. Again, the gates of Hades, or hell, ſometimes ſeem to deſign no other than the gates of death, and the grave, and perſons going into the ſtate of death; ſee Job xxxviii. 17. Iſ. xxxviii. 10. where the Septuagint uſe the ſame phraſe as here; and then the ſenſe is, that neither death, nor the grave, ſhall finally, and totally, prevail over the people of God, and members of Chriſt; but they ſhall be raiſed out of ſuch a ſtate, and live gloriouſly with him for ever. By it here is not meant Peter himſelf; though it is true of him, that ſatan, and his poſſe of devils that beſet him, did not prevail againſt him, ſo as to deſtroy his grace, hurt his eſtate, and hinder his ſalvation: nor could death, in all its frightful appearances, deter him from holding, and preaching, and maintaining the doctrine of Chriſt; and though death, and the grave, have now power over him, yet they ſhall not always detain him: but rather, it deſigns the doctrine Peter made a confeſſion of; which, though it may be oppoſed by hell and earth, by ſatan, and his emiſſaries, by the open force of perſecutors, and the ſecret fraud of hereticks; it may be brought into contempt by the ſcandalous lives of profeſſors; and though the true profeſſors of it may die off, yet truth itſelf always lives, and defies the power of death, and the grave: or elſe the church in general is meant, and every true believer. Theſe words do not aſcertain the continuance of any one particular congregated church, but ſecures the church univerſal, which will continue as long as the ſun and moon endure, and the perſeverance of every one of God's elect; and aſſure that death, and the grave, ſhall not always have the dominion over the ſaints, but that they ſhall be reſcued from them. Once more, this it may refer to Chriſt the rock, who, though he was brought to the duſt of death, by the means of ſatan, and the powers of darkneſs, yet to the ruin of him that had the power of death; and though death, and the grave, had power over him for a while, yet could not hold him; he roſe victorious over them, and ever lives, having the keys of hell and death, to open the gates thereof, and let his people out when he thinks fit.

---

[p] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 39. 1. Succa, fol. 32. 2. Bava Bathra, fol. 84. 1.

[q] T. Bab. Erubin, fol. 19. 1. Menaſſeh ben Iſrael, Niſhmat Chayim, fol. 33. 1, 2.

[r] Zohar in Gen. fol. 47. 4.

[s] Ib. fol. 7. 1.

Ver. 19. And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven, &c.] By the kingdom of heaven is meant the Goſpel, which comes from heaven, declares the king Meſſiah to be come, ſpeaks of things concerning his kingdom, is the means of ſetting it up, and enlarging it, diſplays the riches of his grace, and gives an account of the kingdom of heaven, and of perſons right unto it, and meetneſs for it. The keys of it are abilities to open and explain the Goſpel-truths, and a miſſion and commiſſion from Chriſt to make uſe of them; and being ſaid to be given to Peter particularly, denotes his after-qualifications, commiſſion, work, and uſefulneſs in opening the door of faith, or preaching the Goſpel firſt to the Jews, Acts ii. and then to the Gentiles, Acts x. and xv. 7, 14. and who was the firſt that made uſe of the keys of evangelical knowledge with reſpect to both, after he, with the reſt of the apoſtles, had received an enlarged commiſſion to preach the Goſpel to all nations, beginning at Jeruſalem. Otherwiſe theſe keys belonged to them all alike; for to the ſame perſons the keys, and the uſe of them appertained, on whom the power of binding and looſing was beſtowed; and this latter all the diſciples had, as is manifeſt from ch. xviii. 18. wherefore this does not ſerve to eſtabliſh the primacy and power of Peter over the reſt of the apoſtles; nor do keys deſign any lordly domination or authority; nor did Chriſt allow of any ſuch among his apoſtles; nor is it his will that the miniſters of his word ſhould lord it over his heritage: he only is king of ſaints, and head of his church; he has the key of David, with which he opens, and no man ſhuts, and ſhuts, and no man opens; and this he keeps in his own hand, and gives it to none. Peter is not the door-keeper of heaven to let in, nor keep out whom he pleaſes; nor has his pretended ſucceſſor the keys of hell and death; theſe alſo are only in Chriſt's hands: though it has been ſaid of the pope of Rome, that if he ſends millions of men to hell, none ſhould ſay to him what doſt thou: but the keys here mentioned are the keys of the kingdom of heaven, or of the Goſpel, which was ſhut up in the Jewiſh nation, through the ignorance, malice, and calumnies of the Scribes and Phariſees, who would neither embrace it, or enter into the kingdom of God themſelves, nor ſuffer others that were going to enter into it; and through their taking away the key of knowledge, or the right interpretation of the word of God; and through a judicial blindneſs, which that nation in general was given up to: and this was ſhut up to the Gentiles through the natural darkneſs that was ſpread over them, and through want of a divine revelation, and perſons ſent of God to inſtruct them: but now Chriſt was about, and in a little time he would, for theſe words, with what follow, are in the future tenſe, give his apoſtles both a commiſſion and gifts, qualifying them to open the ſealed book of the Goſpel, and unlock the myſteries of it, both to Jews and Gentiles, eſpecially the latter. Keys are the enſigns of treaſurers, and of ſtewards, and ſuch the miniſters of the Goſpel are; they have the rich treaſure of the word under their care, put into their earthen veſſels to open and lay before others; and they are ſtewards of the myſteries and manifold grace of God, and of theſe things they have the keys. So that theſe words have nothing to do with church-power and government in Peter, nor in the Pope, nor in any other man, or ſett of men whatever; nor to be underſtood of church cenſures, excommunications, admiſſions, or excluſions of members: nor indeed are keys of any ſuch ſimilar uſe; they ſerve for locking and unlocking doors, and ſo for keeping out thoſe that are without, and retaining thoſe that are within, but not for the expulſion of any: but here they are uſed in a figurative ſenſe, for the opening and explaining the truths of the Goſpel, for which Peter had excellent gifts and abilities. And whatſoever thou ſhalt bind on earth, ſhall be bound in heaven: and whatſoever thou ſhalt looſe on earth, ſhall be looſed in heaven. This alſo is not to be underſtood of binding, or looſing mens ſins, by laying on, or taking off cenſures, and excommunications; but only of doctrines, or declarations of what is lawful and unlawful, free, or prohibited to be received, or practiſed; in which ſenſe the words אסור ומותר, bound and looſed, are uſed in the Talmudic writings, times without number, for that which is forbidden and declared to be unlawful, and for that which is free of uſe, and pronounced to be ſo: in multitudes of places we read of one Rabbi אוסר, binding, and of another מתיר, looſing; thouſands, and ten thouſands of inſtances of this kind might be produced; a whole volume of extracts on this head might be compiled. Dr. Lightfoot has tranſcribed a great many, ſufficient to ſatisfy any man, and give him the true ſenſe of theſe phraſes; and after him to mention any other is needleſs; yet give me leave to produce one, as it is ſhort, and full, and explains theſe phraſes, and points at the perſons that had this power, explaining Eccl. xii. 11. and that clauſe in it, maſters of the aſſemblies. "Theſe, ſay they[t], are the diſ-
"ciples of the wiſe men, who ſit in different col"lections, and ſtudy in the law; theſe pronounce
"things or perſons defiled, and theſe pronounce
"things or perſons clean, הללו אוסרין והללו מתירין,

---

[t] T. Bab. Chagiga, fol. 3. 2.

“ theſe bind, and theſe looſe; theſe reject, or pronounce perſons or things profane, and theſe declare them right.” And a little after, “ get thyſelf an heart to hear the words of them that pronounce unclean, and the words of them that pronounce clean, the words of them, אוסרין, that bind, and the words of them, מתירין, that looſe, the words of them that reject, and the words of them that declare it right.” But Chriſt gave a greater power of binding and looſing, to his diſciples, than theſe men had, and which they uſed to better purpoſe. The ſenſe of the words is this, that Peter, and ſo the reſt of the apoſtles, ſhould be empowered with authority from him, and ſo directed by his holy Spirit, that whatever they bound, that is, declared to be forbidden, and unlawful, ſhould be ſo: and that whatever they looſed, that is, declared to be lawful, and free of uſe, ſhould be ſo; and accordingly they bound ſome things which before were looſed, and looſed ſome things which before were bound; for inſtance, they bound, that is, prohibited, or declared unlawful, the uſe of circumciſion, which before, and until the death of Chriſt, was enjoined the natural ſeed of Abraham; but that, and all ceremonies, being aboliſhed by the death of Chriſt, they declared it to be nothing, and of no avail, yea, hurtful and pernicious; that whoever was circumciſed, Chriſt profited him nothing, and that he was a debtor to do the whole law: they affirmed, that the believing Gentiles were not to be troubled with it; that it was a yoke not fit to be put upon their necks, which they, and their fathers, were not able to bear, Gal. v. 1, 2, 3, 6. Acts xv. 10, 19. They bound, or forbid the obſervance of days, months, times, and years; the keeping holy days, new moons, and ſabbaths, which had been uſed in the Jewiſh church for ages paſt; ſuch as the firſt day of the new year, and of every month, the day of atonement, the feaſts of the paſſover, pentecoſt, and tabernacles, the jubilee year, the ſabbatical year, and ſeventh-day ſabbath, Gal. iv. 9, 10. Col. ii. 16, 17. They looſed, or declared lawful and free, both civil and religious converſation between Jews and Gentiles; whereas, before, the Jews had no dealings with the Gentiles, nor would not enter into their houſes, nor keep company with them, would have no converſation with them, neither eat, nor drink with them; but now it was determined and declared, that no man ſhould be called common, or unclean; and that in Chriſt Jeſus, and in his church, there is no diſtinction of Jew and Gentile, Acts x. 28. and xi. 2, 3, 18. Gal. iii. 28. They alſo looſed, or pronounced lawful, the eating of any ſort of food, without diſtinction, even that which was before counted common and unclean, being perſuaded by the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by the words he ſaid, Matt. xv. 11. They aſſerted, that there is nothing unclean of itſelf; and that the kingdom of God is not meat and drink; or that true religion does not lie in the obſervance of thoſe things; that every creature of God is good, and fit for food, and nothing to be refuſed, or abſtained from, on a religious account, provided it be received with thankſgiving, Rom. xiv. 14, 17. 1 Tim. iv. 4. And theſe things now being by them bound or looſed, pronounced unlawful or lawful, are confirmed as ſuch by the authority of God, and are ſo to be conſidered by us.

Ver. 20. Then charged he his diſciples, &c.] When Peter had ſo freely and fully confeſſed him to be the Meſſiah, and which was the ſenſe of all the diſciples; and when Chriſt had expreſſed his approbation of his confeſſion, and had promiſed ſuch great and excellent things upon it, he gave a ſtrict charge unto his diſciples, that they ſhould tell no man that he was Jeſus the Chriſt. The word Jeſus is not in ſome copies; and is left out in the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions; nor does it ſeem abſolutely neceſſary: it was enough to charge them to tell no man that he was the Meſſiah: his reaſons for it might be, leſt his enemies, the Scribes and Phariſees, ſhould be the more provoked and incenſed againſt him, and ſeek his death before his time; and leſt the jealouſy of the Romans ſhould be ſtirred up, who might fear he would ſet up himſelf againſt Cæſar, as king of the Jews, which might lead them to take meaſures obſtructive of his further deſigns; and leſt ſome perſons, hearing of this, ſhould riſe and proclaim him king of the Jews, who were big with the notion of the Meſſiah being a temporal prince: and moreover, becauſe the diſciples were to atteſt the truth of this after his reſurrection; and he choſe, for the preſent, that the people ſhould collect this from his own miniſtry and miracles, which were ſufficient to lead them into the knowledge of it, without any declarations of theirs: and tho' they were poſſeſſed of true faith in him, as ſuch, for themſelves, as yet they had not the gifts and abilities to defend thoſe doctrines reſpecting his perſon, and his offices, they had after the Spirit was poured down upon them.

Ver. 21. From that time forth began Jeſus to ſhew unto his diſciples, &c.] From the time that Peter made the confeſſion concerning Jeſus, as that he was the Meſſiah, and ſon of God, and which things were clear to all the apoſtles, he began to teach them more expreſſly, and to point out to them more clearly, and plainly, his ſufferings and death, than he had done before: and this he choſe to do now, partly becauſe that their faith in him was well-grounded and eſtabliſhed, ſo that they were the better able to bear theſe things he told them, which before might have been more ſtaggering and diſcouraging to them; and partly, that being forewarned of them, they would not be ſo ſhocking when they came to paſs; as alſo to deſtroy all their expectations of a temporal kingdom, which they might now be big with, he having ſo fully and freely owned himſelf to be the Meſſiah: and this alſo furniſhes out ſome reaſons why Jeſus would not have his diſciples, for the preſent, declare him to be the Meſſiah, that his death might not, by any means, be prevented, which was ſo neceſſary; ſince, ſhould the princes of the world know him, they would not crucify him: and beſides, ſeeing he was to ſuffer, and die, and riſe again for the ſalvation of his people, it was proper that all this ſhould be over before he was ſo publickly declared to be the Meſſiah, the Saviour, and Redeemer. How that he muſt go to Jeruſalem; the metropolis of the nation, where the great Sanhedrim ſate, who only could take cognizance of him, under the imputation of a falſe prophet, and adjudge him to death, and which therefore would be in the moſt publick manner; and tho' it would add to his reproach, would leave no room to be doubted of. The word, muſt, not only belongs to his going to Jeruſalem, but to his ſufferings, death, and reſurrection; all which muſt be becauſe of the immutable decree of God, the council, and covenant of grace, and peace, the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, and the redemption and ſalvation of God's elect; theſe required them, and made them abſolutely neceſſary: and ſuffer many things of the elders, chief-prieſts, and ſcribes; who would lie in wait for him, ſend perſons to apprehend him, inſult, reproach, and deſpitely uſe him; load him with falſe charges, accuſations, and calumnies, and deliver him to the Gentiles, to be mocked, ſcourged, and crucified: and this is aggravated as what would be done to him, not by the common people, or the dregs of them, but by the principal men of the city; by the Sanhedrim, which conſiſted of the elders of the people, their ſenators; for this is not a name of age, but of office and dignity; and of the chief prieſts, the principal of them, thoſe of the greateſt note among them, who were choſen members of the grand council; and of the Scribes, a ſett of men in high eſteem, for their learning and wiſdom: and be killed; ſignifying, that he ſhould not die a natural death, but that his life ſhould be taken from him in a cruel and violent manner, without any regard to law or juſtice; indeed, that he ſhould be properly murdered; but for the comfort of his diſciples, and that they might not be overmuch preſſed and caſt down, at the hearing of theſe things, he adds, and be raiſed again the third day; according to the ſcriptures of the Old Teſtament, and the type of Jonas.

Ver. 22. Then Peter took him, &c.] The Arabic verſion reads it, called to him; the Ethiopic, anſwered him; and the Syriac, led him; he took him aſide, by himſelf; and as the Perſic verſion, privately ſaid to him; or he took him by the hand in a familiar way, to expoſtulate with him, and diſſuade him from thinking and talking of any ſuch things: and began to rebuke him; reprove and chide him, forgetting himſelf and his diſtance; though he did it not out of paſſion and ill-will, but out of tenderneſs and reſpect; looking upon what Chriſt had ſaid, unworthy of him, and as what was ſcarce probable or poſſible, ſhould ever befall him, who was the Son of the living God; and overlooking his reſurrection from the dead, and being ignorant at preſent of the end of Chriſt's coming into the world, and redemption and ſalvation by his ſufferings and death: ſaying, far be it from thee, Lord; or, Lord, be propitious to thyſelf, or ſpare thyſelf: the phraſe anſwers to, חם לך, often uſed by the Targumiſts [u], and ſtands in the Syriac verſion here. The Septuagint uſe it in a like ſenſe, in Gen. xliii. 23. 2 Sam. xxiii. 17. 1 Chron. xi. 19. Some think the word God is to be underſtood, and the words to be conſidered, either as a wiſh, God be propitious to thee; or ſpare thee, that no ſuch thing may ever befall thee; or as an affirmation, God is propitious to thee, he is not angry and diſpleaſed with thee, as ever to ſuffer any ſuch thing to be done to thee: but it may very well be rendered, by God forbid; or as we do, far be it from thee, as a note of averſation, and abhorrence of the thing ſpoken of: this ſhall not be done unto thee; expreſſing his full aſſurance of it, and his reſolution to do all that in him lay to hinder it: he could not ſee how ſuch an innocent perſon, could be ſo uſed by the chief men of the nation; and that the Meſſiah, from whom ſo much happineſs was expected, could be treated in ſuch a manner, and eſpecially that the Son of the living God ſhould be killed.

Ver. 23. But he turned, &c.] Either to Peter, changing his countenance, and looking ſternly upon him, or rather to the diſciples; for Mark ſays, when he had turned about and looked on his diſciples, he rebuked Peter: Peter had took him aſide, and was arguing the caſe privately with him; but what he ſaid, was ſo offenſive to him, that he choſe to reprove him publickly before the diſciples; and therefore turned himſelf from him to them, in a way of reſentment, and ſaid unto Peter; in their hearing, and before them all, get thee behind me, ſatan. The Perſic verſion renders it, O infidel! as he was at preſent, with reſpect to the ſufferings, death, and reſurrection of Chriſt: ſome take the word ſatan, to be a general name for an adverſary, or enemy, as it is uſed in 2 Sam. xix. 22. 1 Kings xi. 14. and think, that Chriſt calls Peter by this name, becauſe he was againſt him, and oppoſed him in this point; which ſenſe abates the harſhneſs of this expreſſion. But it ſeems rather to mean the devil, who took the advantage of Peter's weakneſs and ignorance; and put him upon diſſuading Chriſt from ſuffering, for the ſalvation of his people: though it ſhould be known, that the word ſatan, is uſed by the Jews [w], to ſignify the vitioſity and corruption of nature; of which they ſay, שטן הוא, this is ſatan; ſo the meſſenger, or angel ſatan, 2 Cor. xii. 7. may be thought to be the ſame; ſee the note there. And then our Lord's ſenſe is, be gone from me, I can't bear the ſight of thee; thou art under the influence of the corruption of thy heart, and nature; thou talkeſt like a carnal, and not like a ſpiritual man; and therefore Chriſt denominates him from his carnality, ſatan, one of the names of the vitioſity of nature, whom a little before he had pronounced bleſſed; being then under the influence of another ſpirit, as appeared from the noble confeſſion of his faith in Chriſt: this change, ſhews the weakneſs of human nature, the ſtrength of corruption, the inconſtancy and fickleneſs of frames, and the imperfection of grace in the beſt of ſaints. Thou art an offence unto me; or a ſtumbling-block to me, a cauſe of ſtumbling and falling; not that he really was, but he endeavoured to be, and was as much as in him lay; and had he given heed unto him, would have been ſo. It may be obſerved, that nothing was more offenſive to Chriſt, than to endeavour to divert him from the work his Father called him to; he had agreed to do; what he came into this world for, and his heart was ſo much ſet upon; namely, to ſuffer and die in the room of his people, in order to obtain ſalvation for them: never were ſuch words uttered by him, and ſuch reſentment ſhewn to any, but to the devil himſelf, when he tempted him to worſhip him. For thou ſavoureſt not the things that be of God; meaning his ſufferings and death, which were the appointment of God, the counſel of his will, the proviſion of his covenant; what he foretold in the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, and what he had an hand in, and in which the glory of his grace, power, and juſtice, was concerned, and were the end of the miſſion of his Son into this world; which things were out of ſight and mind, and were not regarded by the apoſtle at this time; but thoſe that be of men: he thought of nothing but worldly grandeur in the kingdom of the Meſſiah, as a temporal prince and ſaviour; and of the continuance of Chriſt's natural life, for his own carnal and worldly advantage; which ſhowed him to be at this time, greatly under the influence of corrupt nature. So, though the blood, righteouſneſs, ſacrifice, and death of Chriſt, are ſavoury things, things to be ſavoured, minded and regarded by believers, and accounted precious; and they do mind them, ſo the word ſignifies, Rom. viii. 5. when being bleſſed with a ſpiritual and experimental knowledge, and application of them to themſelves, they exerciſe faith, hope, and love upon Chriſt, with reſpect unto them; when they remember them aright in the ordinance of the ſupper, the love from whence they ſpring, and the benefits that come hereby; and when they diſcern the Lord's body in it, a crucified Jeſus, and the bleſſings of grace which come by him, and aſcribe their whole ſalvation to his ſufferings and death, and taſte the ſweetneſs there is in theſe things, eating his fleſh and drinking his blood by faith; yet being left to themſelves, they do not ſavour, mind and regard theſe things, but carnal things, and human ſchemes; as when they are dilatory to profeſs a crucified Chriſt, and ſubmit to thoſe ordinances of his, which ſet forth his ſufferings and death; or are negligent in their attendance on them, their place being often empty at ſupper-time; or if they do attend, their hearts go after other things.

---

[u] Targum Hieroſ. in Gen. xlix. 22. & Targum Onkelos in 1 Sam. xx. 9.

[w] T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 16. 1. Tzeror Hammor, fol. 6. 2, 3. & paſſim.

Ver. 24. Then ſaid Jeſus unto his diſciples, &c.] Knowing that they had all imbibed the ſame notion of a temporal kingdom, and were in expectation of worldly riches, honour, and pleaſure; he took this opportunity of preaching the doctrine of the croſs to them, and of letting them know, that they muſt prepare for perſecutions, ſufferings, and death; which they muſt expect to endure, as well as he, if they would be his diſciples: if any man will come after me; that is, be a diſciple and follower of him, it being uſual for the maſter to go before, and the diſciple to follow after him: now let it be who it will, rich or poor, learned or unlearned, young or old, male or female, that have any inclination and deſire, or have took up a reſolution in the ſtrength of grace, to be a diſciple of Chriſt, let him deny himſelf: let him deny ſinful ſelf, ungodlineſs, and worldly luſts; and part with them, and his former ſinful companions, which were as a part of himſelf: let him deny righteous ſelf, and renounce all his own works of righteouſneſs, in the buſineſs of juſtification and ſalvation; let him deny himſelf the pleaſures and profits of this world, when in competition with Chriſt; let him drop and baniſh all his notions and expectations of an earthly kingdom, and worldly grandeur, and think of nothing but reproach, perſecution, and death, for the ſake of his Lord and Maſter: and take up his croſs; chearfully, receive, and patiently bear, every affliction and evil, however ſhameful and painful it may be, which is appointed for him, and he is called unto; which is his peculiar croſs, as every Chriſtian has his own; to which he ſhould quietly ſubmit, and carry, with an entire reſignation to the will of God, in imitation of his Lord: and follow me; in the exerciſe of grace, as humility, zeal, patience, and ſelf-denial; and in the diſcharge of every duty, moral, or evangelical; and through ſufferings and death, to his kingdom and glory. The alluſion is, to Chriſt's bearing his own croſs, and Simeon's carrying it after him, which afterwards came to paſs.

Ver. 25. For whoſoever will ſave his life, &c.] Whoever is deſirous of preſerving himſelf from troubles, reproaches, perſecutions, and death; and takes ſuch a method to do it, as, by forſaking Chriſt, denying his Goſpel, and dropping his profeſſion of it; and by ſo doing, curries favour with men, in order to procure to himſelf worldly emoluments, honour, peace, pleaſure, and life, ſhall loſe it; he'll expoſe himſelf to the wrath of God, to everlaſting puniſhment, the deſtruction of ſoul and body in hell, which is the ſecond death, and will be his portion: and whoſoever will loſe his life for my ſake; that is, is willing to forego all the pleaſures and comforts of life, and be ſubject to poverty and diſtreſs, and to lay down life itſelf, for the ſake of Chriſt and the Goſpel, rather than deny him, and part with truth, ſhall find it; in the other world, to great advantage; he ſhall enjoy an immortal and eternal life, free from all uneaſineſs and affliction, and full of endleſs joys and pleaſures.

Ver. 26. For what is a man profited, &c.] Such perſons, though they are only ſeeking their own profit, will find themſelves moſt ſadly miſtaken; for of what advantage will it be to ſuch a man, if he ſhall gain the whole world; all that is precious and valuable in it; all the power, pleaſures, and riches of it; if with Alexander, he had the government of the whole world, and with Solomon, all the delights of it; and was poſſeſſed with the wealth of Crœſus, and Craſſus, and loſe his own ſoul? If that ſhould be conſigned to everlaſting torment and miſery, be baniſhed the divine preſence, and continually feel the knawings of the worm of conſcience that never dies, and the fierceneſs of the fire of God's wrath, that ſhall never be quenched, he'll have a miſerable bargain of it. Or what ſhall a man give in exchange for his ſoul? Or, for the redemption of it, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it; ſee Pſal. xlix. 8. If he had the whole world to give, and would give it, it would not be a ſufficient ranſom for it; the redemption of an immortal ſoul, requires a greater price than gold and ſilver, or any corruptible thing; nothing ſhort of the blood and life of Chriſt, is a proper exchange, or ranſom price for it. But in the other world, there will be no redemption; the loſs of a ſoul is irrecoverable: a ſoul once loſt and damned, can never be retrieved. This paſſage is thought to be proverbial; what comes neareſt to it, is the following[x]. "If a ſcholar dies, we never find an exchange for him; there "are four things, which are the miniſtry or ſervice "of the world, אם אבדו יש חליפין, if they are "loſt, they may be changed; and they are theſe, "gold, ſilver, iron, and braſs, Job xxviii. 1, 2. "but if a ſcholar dies, מי מביא לנו תמורתו, who "will bring us his exchange? or an exchange for "him: we loſt R. Simon, who will bring us his ex- "change?"

Ver. 27. For the Son of man ſhall come in the glory of his Father, &c.] This is a reaſon, proving the truth of what is before aſſerted, that mens lives may be loſt by ſaving them, and be found by loſing them, whatever paradoxes they may ſeem to be; and that the loſs of a ſoul is irrecoverable, and no compenſation can be made for it; and points out the time, when all this will appear: for nothing is more certain, and to be depended upon, than that Chriſt, who, though he was then a mean and contemptible man, and attended with the ſinleſs infirmities of human nature, wherefore he calls himſelf, the Son of man, ſhould come; either a ſecond time to judgment at the laſt day, in the ſame glory as his Father, as his Son, equal with him, and clothed with power and authority from him, and as Mediator, to execute judgment: with his angels; the holy ones, ſo the Syriac and Perſic verſions read, and ſo ſome copies; who will add to the glory of his appearance; and will be employed in gathering all nations before him, and in executing his will: or, in his power, to take vengeance on the Jewiſh nation; on thoſe that crucified him, or did not believe in him, or deſerted and apoſtatized from him. And then he ſhall reward every man according to his works, or work; either that particular action of putting him to death, or their unbelief in him, or deſertion of him; or any, or all of their evil works, they had been guilty of: for though good works are not the cauſe of ſalvation, nor for which men will be rewarded; though they may be brought into judgment, as proofs and evidences of true faith, in the perſon, blood, and righteouſneſs of Chriſt, by which good men will be acquitted and diſcharged; yet evil works will be the cauſe of condemnation, and the rule of judgment; and the reaſon of adjudging to temporal puniſhment here, and eternal deſtruction hereafter.

---

[x] Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 72. 3, 4. T. Hieroſ. Beracot, fol. 5. 3.

Ver. 28. Verily I ſay unto you, &c.] This is a ſtrong aſſeveration, Chriſt puts his Amen to it; declaring it to be a certain truth, which may firmly be believed: there be ſome ſtanding here; meaning either his diſciples, or ſome of the audience; for it is clear from Mark viii. 34. that the people were called unto him with his diſciples, when he ſaid theſe words: which ſhall not taſte of death; that is, ſhall not die; a phraſe frequently uſed by the Jewiſh doctors: they ſay [y], "All the children of the "world, טעמין טעמא דמותא, taſte the taſte of "death." That is, die: till they ſee the Son of man coming in his kingdom; which is not to be underſtood of his perſonal coming in his kingdom in the laſt day, when he will judge quick and dead; for it can't be thought, that any then preſent, ſhould live to that time, but all taſted of death long before, as they have done; for the ſtory of John's being alive, and to live till then is fabulous, and grounded on a miſtake which John himſelf has rectified at the cloſe of his Goſpel: nor of the glorious transfiguration of Chriſt, the account of which immediately follows; when he was ſeen by Peter, James, and John, perſons now preſent; for that at moſt, was but an emblem and a pledge of his future glory: rather, of the appearance of his kingdom, in greater glory and power, upon his reſurſurrection from the dead, and his aſcenſion to heaven; when the Spirit was poured down in an extraordinary manner, and the Goſpel was preached all over the world; was confirmed by ſigns and wonders, and made effectual to the converſion and ſalvation of many ſouls; which many then preſent, lived to ſee, and were concerned in: though it ſeems chiefly to have regard to his coming, to ſhew his regal power and authority in the deſtruction of the Jews; when thoſe his enemies that would not he ſhould reign over them, were ordered to be brought and ſlain before him; and this the apoſtle John, for one, lived to be a witneſs of.

CHAP. XVII.

Ver. 1. AND after ſix days, &c.] That is, ſo long after Chriſt's converſation with his diſciples at Cæſarea Philippi, Peter's confeſſion of him, and the reproof he gave him, upon his intimating that he ſhould ſuffer and die, and Chriſt's reſentment of it; after he had diſcourſed about his diſciples taking up their croſs, and following him; and of men's loſing and finding their lives; and after the promiſe, or prophecy, that he had given out, that ſome then preſent ſhould not die, until he came into his kingdom. Mark ſays the ſame as here, ch. ix. 2. but Luke, ch. ix. 28. ſays, it was about an eight days after, which may be reconciled in this manner; Matthew and Mark leave out the day in which Chriſt delivered the above ſayings, and that in which he was transfigured, and ſo reckon but ſix days; and Luke takes them both into the account, and makes it eight days, ſo that they all agree; and it appears, in ſhort, to be that day ſevennight. Jeſus taketh Peter, James, and John his brother: Peter is taken, though he had ſo lately offended his maſter; Chriſt did not bear the offence in mind, but freely forgave him, and ſtill loved him: James was not the brother of our Lord, who was of that name, but the ſon of Zebedee; as appears from John being his brother, who was the beloved diſciple; theſe three were all favourite diſciples, and were at other times admitted to be with him, when others were not, Matt. xxvi. 37. Mark v. 37. Such a number was taken, as being proper and ſufficient to bear witneſs of the truth of the following account of Chriſt's transfiguration: and bringeth them up into an high mountain apart. Luke ſays, to pray; as he was wont to do, in ſuch places. This mountain, is generally ſaid to be Tabor; but for what reaſon does not appear. Chriſt was going to Cæſarea Philippi, when he had that diſcourſe with his diſciples, which this account is connected with; and though it was a week after, yet we have no intimation of his removing from theſe parts, with his diſciples; only of his leading them up into a mountain; and quickly after this, we hear of him at Capernaum, which was ten miles from mount Tabor. Dr. Lightfoot [z] thinks, that this was the mountain, which Cæſarea was at the foot of; where formerly, the firſt idolatry was ſet up, one of Jeroboam's calves; and now the eternal Son of God is ſhewn, in the confeſſion of Peter, and in the illuſtrious demonſtration of the Meſſiah. Since the goodly mountain Lebanon, and which was a very high one, was in thoſe parts which Moſes had a ſight of, before he died; why may it not be that, which he now deſcended upon, to be one of the witneſſes from heaven, of Chriſt's transfiguration?

Ver. 2. And was transfigured before them, &c.] Peter, James, and John, before whom he was metamorphoſed, or changed into another form; for not the ſubſtance of his body was changed, nor even the ſhape of it altered, only it received a more glorious form; that whereas before he appeared in the form of a ſervant, and looked mean and deſpicable, now he appeared in the form and majeſty of God; or there was a divine glory, which from his deity ſhewed itſelf in a viſible manner through his fleſh: and his face did ſhine as the ſun; it had ſtill the ſame appearance of an human face, but had ſuch a dazzling glory upon it, as equalled the ſun ſhining in its full ſtrength: and his raiment was white as the light: he did not put off his cloaths, nor were the nature and ſubſtance, and faſhion of them changed; but ſuch rays of glory darted through his fleſh, and through his cloaths, as made them as bright and ſhining, as the light of the ſun at noon-day. Mark ſays, they became exceeding white as ſnow, ſo as no fuller on earth can white them. The Vulgate Latin reads, as ſnow, here; and ſo do the Ethiopic verſion, and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel. Snow has a peculiar whiteneſs in it, and is therefore made uſe of, to expreſs the glittering brightneſs of Chriſt's raiment; and the fuller is mentioned, who by the Jews [a] is called כובס, and means one that whitens wool, or raiment, and ſuch an one is here deſigned: not that any fuller makes garments of another colour white; for though this may be done, it is not the work of fullers, but dyers: but fullers, whatever colour garments are of, if ſullied and ſpotted, can reſtore them to their native colour; and if white, can bring them to their former whiteneſs: now Chriſt's garments were as white, yea, whiter, than any ſuch men could poſſibly make garments, that were white at firſt: what colour Chriſt's garments were of before, is not certain; now they appeared white, to the greateſt degree of whiteneſs. Dr. Hammond [b] has a conjecture, that in the phraſe on earth, reference is had to the earth fullers make uſe of in cleaning, and which is called fullers earth; and that the words are to be rendered, as no fuller, by or with earth can white them; but if this will not bear, the ſenſe is, that there is no fuller, nor ever was, or ever will be upon earth, that can make raiment ſo white as Chriſt's was.

---

[y] Zohar in Gen. fol. 27. 4. & 37. 1. & in Exod. fol. 19. 2. & in Num. fol. 50. 4. & 51. 2. 4. Vid. Bereſhit Rabba, §. 9. fol. 7. 3, 4. Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 83. 3.

[z] Hor. Heb. in Mar. ix. 2.

[a] Maimon. in Miſn. Bava Kama, c. 10. §. 10.

Ver. 3. And behold, there appeared unto them, &c.] The diſciples: Moſes and Elias; Moſes the giver of the law, and Elias one of the chief of the prophets: one of them had been dead near a thouſand and five hundred years, and the other had been caught up to heaven, about nine hundred years before this. The Jews ſometimes ſpeak of theſe two as together. They ſay [c], "that the Shekinah "never deſcends below, but משה ואליהו, Moſes "and Elias aſcend above." Yea, they expect that theſe two will come together in future time; for ſo they repreſent [d] God ſaying to Moſes; "Moſes, as "thou haſt given thy life for them (the Iſraelites) "in this world, ſo in time to come (the days of "the Meſſiah) when I ſhall bring Elias the pro-"phet, שניכם באין כאחת, you two ſhall come to-"gether." Now they came. Luke ſays, they appeared in glory; in glorious bodies, in a glory upon their bodies; like, though inferior, to the glorious body of Chriſt, now transfigured: that they appeared in their own real bodies, no doubt need be made: about the body of Elijah, or Elias, there is no difficulty; ſince he was carried ſoul and body to heaven, he died not, but was changed; and has ever ſince remained in a glorious body, in which he doubtleſs now appeared: and why this ſhould not be the caſe of Moſes, or why he ſhould appear in another body, and not his own, I ſee not; for though he died, yet he was buried by the Lord, and no man ever knew the place of his ſepulchre; and there was a diſpute about his body, between Michael and the devil, all which are uncommon circumſtances: ſo that it might be, that his body was, quickly after his death, raiſed and reſtored to him; or at this time, as a pledge of the reſurrection of the dead, as Chriſt's transfiguration was of his glory. The Jews have a notion that Moſes is not dead, but is aſcended, and ſtands and miniſters to God, in the higheſt heavens [e]: the appearance of theſe two with Chriſt, was to ſhew, that Chriſt is the end of the law and prophets; that there is an entire agreement between him and them, and that they have their full accompliſhment in him; and alſo ſhews, that he was neither Elias, nor any of the prophets, as ſome took him to be; ſince he was diſtinct from them, and the chief and more glorious than any of them. If it ſhould be aſked, how came the diſciples to know theſe two, to be Moſes and Elias, ſince they never ſaw them before, nor could have any ſtatues or pictures of them, theſe being not allowed among the Jews; nor do the accounts of them in ſcripture, ſeem to be ſufficient to direct them to ſuch a thought; eſpecially, ſince by their glorification, they muſt be greatly altered: it may be replied, they knew them either by immediate divine revelation, or by the diſcourſe that paſſed between them and Chriſt; for it follows, talking with him. The Jews often ſpeak of the appearance of Elias to their doctors, and of his converſing with them, and teaching them. Whether this is done with deſign to leſſen the glory of this appearance, I will not ſay; however, they can't reaſonably object to the probability of this account, ſince they make it to be ſo frequent among themſelves; though they look upon it as an high favour, and that ſuch are holy good men, that are indulged with it, take an inſtance or two: thus they ſay [f] of a certain perſon, "Lo! the pious man, whom Elias "uſed משתעי בהדיה, to converſe with." And elſewhere it is ſaid [g], "R. Phineas and R. Mari, "the ſons of R. Chaſda, were godly men, "ואליהו מדבר עמהם, and Elias was talking with "them, and they were prieſts." What Moſes and Elias were talking with our Lord about, is expreſſed by Luke, ch. ix. 31. ſee the note there.

Ver. 4. Then anſwered Peter and ſaid unto Jeſus, &c.] Which was, as Luke informs us, after he, and James, and John, awoke out of ſleep; for it being night when Chriſt was transfigured, and they weary, were overpreſſed, and fell aſleep on the mount, as they afterwards did in the garden with him: but when they were awaked, either by the talk of the men with Chriſt, or by the rays of brightneſs and glory, which darted from them, and eſpecially from Chriſt, to their great ſurprize; they ſaw the glory that was upon him, and obſerved the two men that were with him, who appeared alſo in glorious forms; whom either by revelation, or the ſequel of their diſcourſe, they knew to be Moſes and Elias: and juſt as theſe were taking their leave of Chriſt, Peter, charmed with ſuch objects, and with ſuch delightful company, and pleaſant converſation, he had the happineſs of hearing part of, addreſſes himſelf to Chriſt and ſays, Lord, it is good for us to be here; in this mountain, with thyſelf and ſuch company; better than to be below among the throng and multitude, where nothing but miſery and diſtreſs are to be ſeen, and noiſe and tumult heard; or it is better to be here, than to go to Jeruſalem, and there ſuffer and die; the horror of which, is thought by ſome, ſtill to abide on Peter's mind. If thou wilt, let us make here three tabernacles; tents, or booths, ſuch as were made at the feaſt of tabernacles, of boughs and branches of trees, to keep off heat, cold, and rains: one for thee, and one for Moſes, and one for Elias; Luke adds, not knowing what he ſaid; and Mark, for he wiſt not what to ſay: the one repreſenting him, as with the rapture and ſuprize, not himſelf; and the other, under the awe and dread of ſuch majeſty, as at the utmoſt loſs what to ſay, agreeable to ſuch a ſituation of things: not but that he knew what words he did deliver, and with what view; but he ſpake as a miſtaken man, being ignorant of the deſign of this appearance; which was, not that this glory ſhould continue, only that it ſhould be an emblem and pledge of what was future; and beſides, he was wrong in putting theſe two men upon an equal foot with Chriſt, each of them being to have a ſeparate tabernacle as he; and he appeared to be quite out of the way, in propoſing earthly tabernacles for glorified perſons to dwell in, who had an houſe not made with hands, eternal in the heavens: moreover,

---

[b] In Mark ix. 3.

[c] T. Bab. Succah, fol. 5. 1.

[d] Debarim Rabba, §. 3. fol. 239. 2.

[e] T. Bab. Sota, fol. 13. 2. Maimon. præfat. ad Seder Zeraim in Talmud. fol. 86. 4.

[f] T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 7. 2.

[g] Juchaſin, fol. 101. 1. vid. fol. 79. 1. & 118. 2. & 13. 132. 1. & T. Bab. Cetubot, fol. 106. 1.

over, as to the myſtical ſenſe, Moſes and Elias, the law and the prophets, were not to be conſidered as in diſtinct apartments, and ſeparate from Chriſt, but as agreeing with him, and fulfilled and ſwallowed up in him; who only, according to the voice that followed, was to be heard and attended to, and not they, as diſtinct from him.

Ver. 5. While he yet ſpake, &c.] That is, while Peter was propoſing the above to Chriſt, before an anſwer could be given by him, and which was unworthy of one, another ſcene of things preſents, and a full anſwer is returned him by a voice from the Father; directing him and his fellow diſciples, to attend to Jeſus only, and not to Moſes and Elias: and behold, a bright cloud overſhadowed them; that is, Jeſus, Moſes, and Elias; the two laſt of which were ſeen no more; and which cloud covered them, as the cloud of glory covered the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs; and which, as it ceaſed at the death of Moſes, the firſt prophet; one like unto it appeared at the declaration of Chriſt, as the greater prophet, ſpoken of, and typified by Moſes. The diſciples at its firſt appearance were not under it, and overſhadowed by it; for Luke adds, and they feared as they entered into the cloud; there was ſuch a ſolemnity and glory in it, as ſtruck their minds with awe and fear, as they gradually came into it, and under it. This cloud, which is ſaid to be a bright one, was a ſymbol of the divine preſence, and a token of the love, grace, and favour of God; and expreſſive of the brightneſs and clearneſs of the Goſpel-diſpenſation, in diſtinction from the obſcurity of the legal one, ſignified by the thick, dark, and black cloud, God deſcended in on mount Sinai, when he gave the law; and behold, a voice out of the cloud. The word behold, is prefixed both to the cloud and to the voice out of it, which were both wonderful and ſurprizing; and which voice came from heaven, and from the excellent glory, from God the Father in heaven; as ſays Peter, who was now preſent, 2 Pet. i. 17, 18. Which ſaid, this is my beloved Son; not a ſervant, as Moſes, Elias, and the reſt of the prophets were: though as Mediator, and as conſidered in his office-capacity, he was a ſervant; but in this clauſe, he is conſidered in his perſonal character and relation to the Father, as a divine perſon, who was the Son of God: not by creation, as angels and men are the ſons of God; nor by adoption, as ſaints are; or on account of his miraculous incarnation, and reſurrection from the dead; whereby indeed, he was manifeſted and declared to be the Son of God, which he was before; but on account of his natural relation to God, as his Father; he being the eternal, eſſential, and only begotten Son of God, in a way of filiation no creature is, and which is ineffable by us. And as ſuch he is dearly beloved of God his Father, being his image, and the brightneſs of his glory; of the ſame nature and perfections with him, and equal to him. So he ever was, and will be, and that even in the meaneſt form and loweſt condition, in which he has appeared: he was his beloved Son, when he was made fleſh and dwelt among men, while ſubmitting to ordinances, as to baptiſm, and obeying his Father's will, when covered with reproach, and full of ſorrows; when he hung upon the croſs, and laid down his life for his people; which he ſhewed, by concealing nothing from him; by putting all things into his hands, and by appointing him the head of the church, the Saviour of the body, and the judge of quick and dead. In whom I am well pleaſed: Mark and Luke have not this clauſe, but Peter, who was preſent, and heard the words ſpoken, mentions it, 2 Pet. i. 17. which confirms Matthew's relation. This regards, not ſo much the well pleaſedneſs of God with the perſon of Chriſt, which is expreſſed in the former clauſe; but ſignifies, that he was in him, as Mediator, well pleaſed with all his people; he was well pleaſed with his righteouſneſs he was working out, whereby the law was magnified, and made honourable; and with the ſacrifice he was about to offer up, which would be of a ſweet ſmelling ſavour to him, his juſtice being entirely ſatisfied with it; and with all he did and ſuffered in human nature; which were things that always pleaſed the Father, being according to his will, his counſel and covenant: and ſo he graciouſly accepted of, and was infinitely well pleaſed with all his elect, as conſidered in him, and repreſented by him, on account of his righteouſneſs, ſacrifice, and ſatisfaction: hear ye him: as the former clauſe chiefly reſpects that part of his mediatorial office, the prieſtly, this regards his prophetical office principally, and alſo his kingly office; ſo that in this divine teſtimony, firſt his ſonſhip is bore witneſs to, and then his ſeveral offices; which his ſonſhip is the foundation of, and qualifies him to bear and execute. This clauſe has the very words which Moſes delivered, when he ſpoke of the Meſſiah, the great prophet like unto himſelf, that ſhould be raiſed up among the Jews; ſaying, unto him ye ſhall hearken, Deut. xviii. 15. So that theſe words, hear ye him, moſt clearly point to Chriſt, as being this prophet, who is to be heard, and he only; not Moſes, but he, the prophet Moſes propheſied of; nor Elias, or any of the other prophets, but one greater than them all: hear and believe his prophecies, concerning his ſufferings, death, and reſurrection, lately delivered by him; liſten to, and embrace his doctrines, as coming from God, and as having a divine impreſs upon them, and being confirmed by miraculous works; ſubmit to his ordinances, and obey his commands, as king of ſaints; hear him always, and in all things.

Ver. 6. And when the diſciples heard it, &c.] The voice out of the cloud, and which they apprehended came from God, and was uttered with ſo much majeſty: they fell on their face; not ſo much out of reverence, or for the ſake of adoration, but as perſons ſtruck with aſtoniſhment and fear, and were as half dead; and ſo fell with their faces flat to the ground, not being able to ſtand before God, to behold his majeſty, and hear his voice: and were ſore afraid; they were filled with fear, when, awaking out of their ſleep, they ſaw the ſurprizing glory of Chriſt, and of the two men that were with him, inſomuch that they knew not what to think, or ſay; and ſo they were when they entered into the cloud, and ſtill more upon hearing the voice of God himſelf, even though it was a voice of love, grace, and mercy; ſee Deut. v. 24, 25, 26. But yet they were not ſtruck with ſo much amazement and ſurprize, as not to know what was ſaid; for they diſtinctly heard the words, rightly underſtood, and faithfully related them; from whom the Evangeliſts had them, and which Peter perfectly remembered, and recorded many years after.

Ver. 7. And Jeſus came and touched them, &c.] The diſciples were at ſome little diſtance from Chriſt, but he obſerving the fear and ſurprize they were in, came to their relief and aſſiſtance; which he did not diſdain to give, notwithſtanding the glory he was covered with; but acts the part of a Mediator between God and them, and lays hold on them to raiſe them up, whom the majeſty of God's voice had caſt down: the Perſic verſion renders it, he came and brought them to themſelves; who were juſt fainting and ſwooning away, at the awfulneſs of the voice: and ſaid, ariſe, and be not afraid: it is not the voice of an angry God, but of God well pleaſed with me, and in me with you; it is the voice of my God, and your God, of my Father, and your Father; ariſe, ſtand on your feet, take heart, and be of good courage, no hurt will come to you.

Ver. 8. And when they had lift up their eyes, &c.] And looked round about, as Mark ſays, to ſee whether the ſame objects ſtill continued, as Moſes and Elias, and the bright cloud: they ſaw no man; neither Moſes nor Elias, who were both gone: ſignifying, that though the law and the prophets were till this time, they were now finiſhed and compleated, and the Moſaic œconomy was to be no more; as theſe men appeared no more after, nor will they, till the ſecond coming of Chriſt. And Mark has it, they ſaw no man any more; that is, theſe men any more, neither then, nor afterwards, ſave Jeſus only. Mark adds, with themſelves; in the ſame form as before his transfiguration. Chriſt is the only Mediator, Saviour, and Redeemer; the only Prophet, Prieſt, and King; and who only is to be, and can be beheld as ſuch; and who does, and will abide with his people; and helps, comforts, and ſaves them, when none elſe can. Luke obſerves, that when the voice was paſt, Jeſus was found alone; which was ſo ordered, that it might be a clear caſe, that this voice was only concerning Chriſt, and not either Moſes or Elias.

Ver. 9. And as they came down from the mountain, &c.] Where all theſe things had been tranſacted, Jeſus charged them ſaying, tell the viſion to no man: by the viſion is meant, as it is explained in Mark, what things they had ſeen; as Moſes and Elias, and the bright cloud that overſhadowed them, and Chriſt transfigured before them, in a ſurprizing, glorious manner. Theſe Chriſt ſtrictly ordered, Peter, James, and John, to ſpeak of to no man whatever; no, not their fellow-diſciples; who either would be apt to diſbelieve them, on account of the greatneſs of them, as Thomas did the reſurrection of Chriſt afterwards; or leſt they ſhould be troubled and diſpleaſed, that they were not admitted to the ſame ſight; and eſpecially not to the multitude, or to any other perſon, until the Son of man be riſen again from the dead; meaning himſelf and his reſurrection, when ſuch proof would be given of his miſſion, authority and glory, which would make this account more eaſy to be believed: beſides, he had told the Jews, that no ſign, that is, from heaven, as this voice was, ſhould be given, but the ſign of the prophet Jonas; referring to his reſurrection, which would be a ſure teſtimony of the truth of his Meſſiahſhip. This order of Chriſt was ſtrictly obſerved by the diſciples; for Luke ſays, they kept it cloſe; to themſelves, in their own breaſts; it lay concealed between theſe three; and told no man in thoſe days, any of thoſe things which they had ſeen: and Mark ſays, they kept that ſaying within themſelves; only as he adds, they were queſtioning one with another, what the riſing from the dead ſhould mean: for they were not yet reconciled to the Meſſiah's dying, which was contrary to their expectation of a temporal kingdom; and therefore could not tell what to make of his riſing again, whether this had not ſome ſecret, myſtical meaning; for of his reſurrection from the dead, in a literal ſenſe, they had no notion; though it was foretold in the writings of the Old Teſtament, and had been ſo lately affirmed by Chriſt himſelf.

Ver. 10. And his diſciples aſked him, ſaying, &c.] That is, theſe three, Peter, James, and John, before they came to the reſt; whilſt they were going down the mountain, or from it, to the place where the others were; for the reſt knew nothing of the appearance of Elias, and ſo can't be thought to join in a queſtion concerning him. Why then ſay the Scribes, that Elias muſt firſt come? That is, come before the Meſſiah comes; for certain it is, that this was the ſenſe of the Scribes, as it was of the ancient Jews, and is ſtill the opinion of the modern ones. They ſay [h], "that in the ſecond year of "Ahaziah, Elias was hid; nor will he appear, "till the Meſſiah comes; then he'll appear, and "will be hid a ſecond time; and then will not appear, till Gog and Magog come." And they expreſsly affirm [i], that "before the coming of the "Son of David, יבא אליהו לבשר, Elias will come "to bring the good news of it." And this they ſay [k], will be one day before the coming of the Meſſiah. And Maimonides [l] obſerves, "that there are of their "wiſemen that ſay, שקודם ביאת המשיח יבא אליהו, "that before the coming of the Meſſiah, Elias ſhall "come." So Trypho the Jew, the ſame with R. Tarphon, ſo often mentioned in Talmudic writings, diſputing with Juſtin Martyr, tells him [m], that the Meſſiah "ſhall not know himſelf, nor have any "power, μεχρι αν ελθων Ηλιας, till Elias comes, and "anoints him, and makes him known to all." And hence the Targumiſt [n] often ſpeaks of Meſſiah and Elias as together, and of things done by them; and in their prayers, petitions are put for them, as to come together [o]: this is founded upon a miſtaken ſenſe of Mal. iv. 5. and which is the general ſenſe of their commentators [p]. Now the Scribes made uſe of this popular ſenſe, to diſprove Jeſus being the Meſſiah: they argued, that if he was the Meſſiah, Elias would be come; but whereas he was not come, therefore he could not be the Meſſiah. The diſciples having juſt now ſeen Elias, are put in mind of this tenet of the Scribes, and of their uſe of it; and enquire of Chriſt, not ſo much about the truth of it, and the reaſon of their imbibing it, as why they were ſuffered to make uſe of it, to his diſadvantage; and eſpecially why they, the diſciples, ſhould be forbid publiſhing what they had ſeen; whereas, were they allowed to divulge this viſion, and bear their teſtimony to this truth, that Elias had appeared, and they had ſeen him, it might be a means of ſtopping the mouths of theſe Scribes; and of convicting men of the truth of the Meſſiahſhip of Jeſus, upon their own principles, and of confirming them that believed it: or elſe the ſenſe is, whereas they had ſeen Elias, and he was gone again, without making any public appearance in the nation, their queſtion is, how came the Scribes to ſay, that he ſhould come firſt? and if there was any truth in this, how came it to paſs, that he did not come ſooner, even before Chriſt came in the fleſh; and inaſmuch as he did now appear, why he did not appear more publickly, as the perſon that was to come, at leaſt, before the ſetting up of the kingdom and glory of the Meſſiah; which they might hope were at hand, and that Elias was come to uſher it in: but that he did not appear publickly, and they were not allowed to ſpeak of it, they wanted to know Chriſt's ſenſe of theſe things; and took this opportunity as they came from the mountain, to converſe with him about it.

---

[h] Seder Olam Rabba, p. 45, 46.

[i] Gloſſ. in T. Bab. Erubin, fol. 43. 2.

[k] R. Abraham ben David in Miſn. Ediot, c. 8. §. 7.

[l] Hilch. Melacim, c. 12. §. 2.

[m] Dialog cum Tryph. p. 226.

[n] In Exod. xl. 10. Deut. xxx. 4. & Lam. iv. 22.

[o] Seder Tephillot, fol. 56. 2. & 128. 2.

[p] Aben Ezra, Kimchi, & Abarbinel in loc.

Ver. 11. And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, &c.] By way of conceſſion, Elias truly ſhall firſt come: this is indeed a tenet of the Scribes, and it is alſo certain, that there is a prophecy in Mal. iv. 5. of the coming of Elias; of one that goes under that name, not of Elias the Tiſhbite, in perſon, but of one that was to come in his power and ſpirit, and reſtore all things. The Syriac and Perſic verſions render it, ſhall perfect, or compleat all things, that are propheſied of him; and ſhall put a period to the law and the prophets, and cloſe the Moſaic œconomy, and direct perſons to Chriſt; in whom are the perfection of the law, and the fulfilling of the prophets. The Arabic verſion reads it, he ſhall teach you all things; the whole of the Goſpel being to be reduced to theſe two heads, repentance towards God, and faith in Chriſt; both which were taught by the true Elias: but the trueſt ſenſe of the phraſe is, to be learnt out of Mal. iv. 6. He ſhall reſtore, השיב, he ſhall turn all things, the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers; and as this is explained in Luke i. 17. he ſhall turn the diſobedient to the wiſdom of the juſt, and make ready a people prepared for the Lord: which is other, and better ſort of work, than what the Jews aſſign to their Elias, whom they expect, and whom they make to be a reſtorer of all things, in their way: they often ſpeak of his purifying [q] of things, or pronouncing things pure, that were defiled; and among others, that he will purify baſtards, and, ישבם, reſtore them to the congregation of the Lord [r]. Though Maimonides [s] denies, that when he comes he will pronounce defiled that which is pure, or pronounce pure, that which is defiled. They pretend [t], that he is now employed, and very buſy, in writing every thing that is done in every age; ſo that when he comes, he'll be able to give an account of every thing: and nothing is more common with them, than to ſay concerning any matter, that there is any doubt or difficulty about it [u], יהא מונח עד שיבא אליהו, let it be left till Elias comes.

Ver. 12. But I ſay unto you, &c.] A way of ſpeaking uſed by Chriſt, when he oppoſes and contradicts any of the tenets of the Scribes and Phariſees; ſee Matt. v. 22, 28, 32, 34, 39, 44. that Elias is come already; the perſon that was ſignified by, and propheſied of, under the name of Elias: for Chriſt refers not to the late appearance of Elias on the mount, but to the coming of a certain perſon ſome time ago; who came in the power and ſpirit of Elias, and was the forerunner and harbinger of him, the Meſſiah; as was ſaid of him he ſhould, and they knew him not; that is, the Scribes and Phariſees, who believed that Elias would come before the Meſſiah; and yet when he who was deſigned by him was come, they knew him not, they did not know him to be the Elias; they knew him under the name of John the Baptiſt, and ſeemed pleaſed with his miniſtry for a while, but afterwards rejected his doctrine and baptiſm, which is referred to in the next clauſe: but have done unto him whatſoever they liſted; they did not believe what he ſaid, nor repent upon his preaching to them; they rejected the counſel of God he declared, not being baptized of him; they treated him with indignity and contempt, charging him with having a devil, and were well pleaſed when Herod put him to death; ſome of whom were doubtleſs among thoſe, that ſate at meat with him; for whoſe ſake, as well as for his oath's ſake, he ordered the execrable murder to be committed: likewiſe alſo ſhall the Son of man ſuffer of them. Chriſt takes this opportunity to confirm what he had ſaid in the preceding chapter, concerning his ſufferings and death; and his meaning is, that as ſure as John the Baptiſt had ſuffered indignities, and death itſelf, ſo ſure ſhould the Son of man ſuffer like things; if not from the ſame individual perſons, yet from that generation of men.

Ver. 13. Then the diſciples underſtood, &c.] By his ſaying that Elias was come, and by the account he gave of his ill uſage, it was clear to them, that he ſpake unto them of John the Baptiſt; and that he was the Elias that was to come, and was come: ſo that this obſervation, that according to prophecy Elias was to come before the Meſſiah, was no objection to Jeſus being the Meſſiah; but on the contrary, ſince he that was intended by Elias was come, and had done his work and office, it was a confirmation of the truth of his Meſſiahſhip.

Ver. 14. And when they were come to the multitude, &c.] Which was on the next day, as Luke ſays, ch. ix. 37. when Chriſt and his three diſciples, Peter, James, and John, came down from the mount to the other nine, with whom the multitude of the people were, during their ſtay on the mountain, there came to him a certain man; who was, as Mark ſays, one of the multitude; and as Luke, a man of the company; who had applied to the nine diſciples on the behalf of his ſon, but without ſucceſs, and was waiting till Chriſt came from the mount; who when he ſaw him, made up to him, and kneeling down to him in the manner of a ſupplicant, doing him homage and worſhip; hereby ſhewing his great eſteem of him, and veneration for him, and ſaying the following words;

Ver. 15. Lord, have mercy on my ſon, &c.] He addreſſed him with great marks of honour and reſpect, not only by geſture, but by words; he craves mercy, pity, and compaſſion; for the caſe he had to preſent, was a miſerable one; and his earneſtneſs and importunity he hoped might be excuſed, ſince it was for a child of his own. Luke adds, for he is mine only child; and therefore his affection for him muſt be thought to be very ſtrong, and he greatly concerned for its grievous affliction, and earneſtly deſirous of its health and life. For he is lunatick: not a mad man, but troubled with the epileptic diſeaſe; upon which, as on madneſs or lunacy, the changes and full of the moon have an influence: hence the next clauſe, and ſore vexed, is rendered in the Arabic verſion, and ſore vexed at the beginning of full moons; at which times, he had very grievous and frequent fits of his diſorder: for oft times he falleth into the fire, and oft into the water; which ſhows it to be the epilepſy, or falling-ſickneſs, he was afflicted with; which, whenever it ſeized him, whether by the fire-ſide, or by the ſide of a river or brook, or any place of water, or in any other dangerous ſituation, he fell into it, not being able to help himſelf, or avoid any danger, to which he was expoſed. A larger account of this child's diſorder, and of the circumſtances of his cure, are related by Mark, ch. ix. 17, 18, &c. where this caſe will be more fully conſidered.

Ver.

[q] T. Bab. Chagiga, fol. 25. 1. & Becorot, fol. 33. 2. & 34. 1.

[r] Kimchi in Zech. ix. 6.

[s] Hilchot Melacim, c. 12. §. 2. Vid. Miſn. Ediot, c. 8. §. 7. & Maimon. & Bartenora in ib. §. 8. T. Bab. Bava Metzia, fol. 3. 1. & 37. 1. & Bava Bathra, fol. 94. 1.

[t] Seder Olam Rabba, p. 46.

[u] Miſn. Bava Metzia, c. 1.

Ver. 16. And I brought him to thy diſciples, &c.] To the nine, whilſt Chriſt was with the other three upon the mountain: no doubt but his deſign was to bring him to Chriſt firſt; but he being abſent, he applied to his diſciples, and deſired them to make uſe of their power to heal him; and which they attempted, but without ſucceſs: and they could not cure him. This he ſaid, partly to ſhew the malignity and ſtubborneſs of the diſeaſe, and partly to accuſe the diſciples of weakneſs; when he himſelf was as much in fault as they, as the following words ſhew. Here the Jew [w] inſults, and charges with contradiction, that in one place it ſhould be ſaid, that Jeſus gave his diſciples power to caſt out unclean ſpirits, and here all the diſciples could not caſt a ſpirit out of one little child: but without any reaſon; let it be obſerved, that all the diſciples were not preſent, the three principal ones were with Chriſt; beſides, this was not owing to want of power in them, which Chriſt had conferred on them, and which they often made uſe of with ſucceſs; but partly to their own unbelief, and partly to the unbelief of the father of this child, and others with him, as appears from what follows: and it is clear from Mark, that when he came to Chriſt, he had but little faith; he ſays to him, if thou canſt do any thing, help us; and after Chriſt had talked with him about his faith, he could only ſay, Lord, I believe, help mine unbelief.

Ver. 17. Then Jeſus anſwered and ſaid, &c.] Not to the diſciples, but to the father of the child; ſee Mark ix. 19. and thoſe that were with him, and the Scribes that were preſent, diſputing with the diſciples, upbraiding them with their weakneſs, and triumphing over them: O faithleſs and perverſe generation; a way of ſpeaking, which is never uſed of the diſciples, and indeed could not be properly ſaid of them; for though they often appeared to be men of little faith, yet not faithleſs; nor were they ſo rebellious, ſtubborn, and perverſe, as here repreſented, though there was a great deal of perverſeneſs in them: but the characters better ſuit the body of the Jewiſh nation, who, on account of the incredulity of this man, and thoſe that were preſent, being of the ſame temper with them, are exclaimed againſt in words, which were long ago ſpoken of their anceſtors, Deut. xxxii. 5. and from whence they ſeem to be taken. How long ſhall I be with you? how long ſhall I ſuffer you? Upbraiding them with the length of time he had been with them, in which ſo many wonderful works had been done among them, and yet they remained unbelieving and incorrigible; and intimating, that his patience and long-ſuffering would not always continue; and that in a ſhort time, he ſhould be gone from them, and they ſhould no longer enjoy the benefit of his miniſtry and miracles, but wrath ſhould come upon them to the uttermoſt: but however, whilſt he was with them, notwithſtanding all their unbelief and obſtinacy, he ſhould go on to do good; and therefore ſays, bring him hither to me, meaning the lunatick child. Theſe words alſo are directed, not unto the diſciples, but to the father of the child; for ſo it is ſaid in Luke, ch. ix. 41. bring thy ſon hither; and ſo the Syriac renders it here, אתיהון, bring thou him; though, as expreſſed in the plural number, may very well be thought to intend him, and his friends.

Ver. 18. And Jeſus rebuked the devil, &c.] The words may indeed be rendered, and Jeſus rebuked him, and the devil departed out of him; ſo the Vulgate Latin, and the Oriental verſions; but the ſenſe our verſion gives, is certainly right; for it was not the father of the child Chriſt rebuked for his unbelief; this he had done already; nor the lunatick himſelf, as ſome have thought, either for his unbelief, or becauſe he was poſſeſſed by the devil, for ſome ſins of his own; which is not likely, ſince he was ſo from a child, and perhaps not now in his right mind, and capable of any rebuke: beſides, the Evangeliſts Mark and Luke, expreſly ſay, that he rebuked the foul, or unclean ſpirit; for though it was a natural diſeaſe which attended this child, yet he was afflicted with it in a preternatural way, by the means of ſatan; who, by divine permiſſion, had a power of inflicting bodily diſeaſes: and that this diſeaſe was effected by him, is clear from the manner of curing, by the diſpoſſeſſion of him; for when he departed out of him; at the command of Chriſt, whoſe power he could not withſtand, but was obliged, whether he would or no, to obey; the child was cured from that very hour; directly, immediately, and continued well, and in good health. Hence the word rendered lunatick, in ver. 15. is in ſeveral Oriental verſions, tranſlated in the ſenſe of dæmoniack, or one poſſeſſed with a devil. The Arabic verſion renders it, he is with a dæmon; the Perſic thus, on whom a dæmon hath power; and the Ethiopic after this manner, an evil dæmon takes hold on him. And it is uſual with the Jews, to aſcribe diſeaſes to evil ſpirits; and perhaps, this uncommon diſpenſation in the times of Chriſt, may give riſe to ſuch a notion; particularly, they aſcribe this very ſame diſeaſe of the epileptic, or falling-ſickneſs, to the ſame cauſe, which they call [x] Kordicus, or Cardiacus, the Cardiac paſſion, which one of their commentators [y] explains thus. "It is a diſ-
"eaſe which proceeds from the repletion of the "veſſels of the brain, whereby the underſtanding is
"confounded; wherefore it is one of the ſorts,
"חולי הנופל, of the falling ſickneſs." Says another [z] of them, "It is שם שירה, the name of a
"dæmon, that rules over ſuch, that drink much
"wine out of the fat." To which others agree, ſaying [a], that one attended with this diſorder, is one, "whoſe underſtanding is confounded,
"מחמת שד, by means of a dæmon, who rules over
"ſuch, that drink new wine; and lo! the ſpirit's
"name is Kardiacus." From whence it is clear, that with them, the diſeaſe and the dæmon go by the ſame name; and that the former is from the latter.

Ver. 19. Then came the diſciples to Jeſus apart, &c.] Or ſecretly, as the Vulgate Latin, and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel read; that is, privately, and when alone; and as Mark ſays, when he was come into the houſe; and was by himſelf, then came the nine diſciples to him, to converſe with him about this matter, and ſaid unto him, why could not we caſt him out? That is, the devil, and ſo cure the lunatick; the Syriac and Perſic verſions render it, why could not we heal him? The lunatick; which only could be done by caſting out the dæmon: they were concerned, fearing they had loſt the power which Chriſt had beſtowed on them, and wanted to know what they had done, which had deprived them of it; and what ſhould be the cauſe of their late unſucceſsful attempt, when they had ſo frequently triumphed over the unclean ſpirits, that were ſubject to them. Though they might have learned from the anſwer Chriſt gave to the father of the lunatick, and the general character of the Jewiſh nation in that anſwer, the true reaſon of their own inability; but this they took no notice of, imagining it belonged entirely to others, and not to them.

---

[w] Vet. Nizzachon, p. 219, 220. [x] Miſn. Gittin, c. 7. §. 1. [y] Maimon. in ib. [z] Gloſſ. in T. Bab. Gittin, fol. 67. 2. [a] Bartenora & Yom Tob. in Miſn. Gittin, c. 8. §. 1.

Ver. 20. And Jeſus ſaid unto them, becauſe of your unbelief, &c.] The Arabic and Ethiopic verſions read, becauſe of your little faith, or the ſmallneſs of your faith; and ſo does one Greek manuſcript; and which is what is doubtleſs meant by their unbelief; for they were not altogether deſtitute of faith, but their faith was very low, and their unbelief very great. Chriſt ſays, not becauſe of the unbelief of the parent of the child, and thoſe that were with him, though that alſo was a reaſon; but becauſe of their unbelief, being willing to convince them of their unbelief, as he had done the father of the child, who had confeſſed it, and deſired it might be removed from him: but leſt they ſhould think they had loſt their power of doing miracles, Chriſt adds; for verily I ſay unto you, if ye have faith as a grain of muſtard-ſeed; which was a very ſmall ſeed, the leaſt of all ſeeds, and is uſed very often proverbially by the Jews, to ſignify any thing of a ſmall quantity or weight [b], and is ſometimes uſed of faith, as here; ſo ſpeaking of the congregation of Edom, meaning the Chriſtians, they [c] ſay, "they have not, אמונה כמו גרעין של חרדל, faith as a grain of muſtard-ſeed." And it is uſed in like ſenſe, in other Eaſtern nations; and by Mahomet, in his Alcoran [d], who ſays, "We will appoint juſt balances in the day of reſurrection, neither ſhall any ſoul be injured at all, although the merit or guilt of an action, be of the weight of a grain of muſtard-ſeed." So that it has no reference to the quality of muſtard-ſeed, being hot and acrimonious; which has led ſome interpreters wrong, to compare faith unto it, for its livelineſs and fervency: when our Lord only means, that if his apoſtles had ever ſo ſmall a degree of faith in exerciſe, which might be compared for its ſmallneſs to this leaſt of ſeeds, ſuch an effect as he after mentions would follow; and which therefore is to be underſtood, not of an hiſtorical faith, by which men aſſent to all that is in the bible as true; nor of a ſpecial, ſpiritual faith, by which ſouls believe in Chriſt, as their Saviour and Redeemer; for of neither of theſe, can the following things in common be ſaid; but of a faith of miracles, peculiar to certain perſons, in thoſe early times, for certain reaſons; which ſuch as had but ever ſo ſmall a degree of, as the apoſtles here ſpoken to might ſay, as Chriſt obſerves to them, ye ſhall ſay to this mountain; pointing perhaps, to that he was juſt come down from, which might be in ſight of the houſe where he was, remove hence to yonder place, and it ſhall remove: meaning, not that it would be ordinarily or ever done in a literal ſenſe by the apoſtles, that they ſhould remove mountains; but that they ſhould be able to do things equally difficult, and as ſeemingly impoſſible, if they had but faith, when the glory of God, and the good of men, required it. So that it does not follow, becauſe the apoſtles did not do it in a literal ſenſe, therefore they could not, as the Jew inſultingly ſays [e]; ſince it was meant that they they ſhould, and beſides, have done, things equally as great as this, and which is the ſenſe of the words. So the apoſtle expreſſes the faith of miracles, by removing mountains, 1 Cor. xiii. 2. i. e. by doing things which are difficult, ſeem impoſſible to be done: wherefore Chriſt adds, and nothing ſhall be impoſſible to you; you ſhall not only be able to perform ſuch a wonderful action as this, were it neceſſary, but any, and every thing elſe, that will make for the glory of God, the enlargement of my kingdom and intereſt, the confirmation of truth, and the good of mankind.

Ver. 21. Howbeit, this kind goeth not out, &c.] The Vulgate Latin renders it, is not caſt out; and ſo do the Arabic verſion, and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel; and which confirm the more commonly received ſenſe of theſe words, that they are to be underſtood of that kind of devils, one of which was caſt out of the lunatick, and was of the worſt ſort, of a fierce and obſtinate kind; and having had long poſſeſſion, was not eaſily ejected: and that there is a difference in devils, ſome are worſe and more wicked than others, is clear from Matt. xii. 45. and not of that kind of miracles, or kind of faith to the working of ſuch miracles. Moreover, the above verſions, as they fitly expreſs the word, εκπορευεται, here uſed; ſee Mark ix. 17. compared with Matt. xv. 17. So they pertinently ſet forth the diſpoſſeſſion of devils, who don't go out voluntarily, but by force; and this ſort could not be ejected, but by faſting and prayer: that is, in the exerciſe of a miraculous faith, expreſſed in ſolemn prayer to God, joined with faſting. It ſeems that Chriſt not only ſuggeſts, that faith was greatly wanting in his diſciples; for which reaſon they could not caſt out the devil, and heal the lunatick; but they had been wanting in prayer to God, to aſſiſt them in the exerciſe of their miraculous gifts; and that whilſt Chriſt, and the other three diſciples were on the mount, they had been feaſting and indulging themſelves with the people, and ſo were in a very undue diſpoſition of mind, for ſuch extraordinary ſervice, for which our Lord tacitly rebukes them. This agrees with the notions of the Jews, who think that by faſting, a divine ſoul [f], תשיג את מבוקשה, may obtain that which is ſought for; and that among other things, for which a private perſon may afflict himſelf with faſting, this is one, מפני רוח רעה, becauſe of an evil ſpirit [g]; which they think may be got rid of this way.

Ver. 22. And while they abode in Galilee, &c.] Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel reads it, ובשהתהלכו, and while they were walking in Galilee, for they paſſed through it, when they departed from hence; ſee Mark ix. 30. and as they were going to Capernaum, and ſo onward, to the coaſts of Judea, in order to be at Jeruſalem at the feaſt of the paſſover; where, and when, Chriſt was to ſuffer: and obſerving that the time of his death drew nigh, he inculcates it again to his diſciples a third time, that they might be prepared for it, and not be diſcouraged and terrified by it; Jeſus ſaid unto them, the Son of man ſhall be betrayed into the hands of men: ſome copies read, ſinful men; and ſo the angels report the words, in Luke xxiv. 7. by whom may be meant the Gentiles, who by the Jews, were reckoned very wicked men, and called ſinners of the Gentiles. Now Chriſt intimates, that the Son of man, meaning himſelf, ſhould be betrayed by the Jews, into the hands of the Gentiles; than which, with the Jews, nothing was reckoned a fouler action, or a viler crime; their canons run thus [h]: "It is forbidden to betray an Iſraelite into the hands of the Gentiles, whether in his body or in his ſubſtance; and though he may be a wicked man, and a ringleader in ſin, and though he may have oppreſſed and afflicted him; and every one that betrays an

---

[b] T. Bab. Beracot, fol 31. 1. Megilla, fol. 28. 2. Nidda, fol. 66. 1. Maimon. Iſſure Biah, c. 11. §. 4. Maacolot Aſurot, c. 2. §. 21. & c. 14. §. 8. Tumaot Okelim, c. 4. §. 2. & 7. 6.

[c] Vet. Nizzachon, p. 148.

[d] C. 21. p. 268. & c. 31. p. 336. Ed. Sale.

[e] Vet. Nizzachon, p. 237.

[f] Jacchiades in Dan. x. 3.

[g] T. Bab. Taanith, fol. 22. 2. Maimon. Hilch. Taaniot. c. 1. §. 6.

[h] Maimon. Hilch. Chobel Umazzik, c. 8. §. 9, 10.

“ Iſraelite into the hands of the Gentiles, whether in his body, or in his ſubſtance, has no part in the world to come.” They forgot this rule, when they delivered Chriſt to Pontius Pilate. They go on to obſerve, that “ it is lawful to kill a betrayer in any place, even at this time, in which they do not judge capital crimes; and it is lawful to kill him before he betrays; but when he ſays, lo! I am about to betray ſuch an one in his body, or in his ſubſtance, though his ſubſtance is ſmall, he expoſes himſelf to death; and they admoniſh him and ſay to him, don’t betray: if he is obſtinate, and ſays I will betray him, it is commanded to kill him; and he that is firſt to kill him, is a worthy man.”

Ver. 23. And they ſhall kill him, &c.] Put him to death, with the death of the croſs; for the angels, in rehearſing theſe words, affirm, that Chriſt told his diſciples at this time, and in this place, whilſt they were in Galilee, that he ſhould be crucified, Luke xxiv. 7. And the third day he ſhall be raiſed again: this he ſaid for their comfort; and it is obſervable, that when Chriſt ſpeaks of his riſing again, he makes mention of the exact time, the third day, on which he ſhould riſe, according to the types and prophecies of the Old Teſtament: and they were exceeding ſorry; that he ſhould be betrayed into the hands of the Gentiles, fearing that another nation would come, and take away, and poſſeſs the worldly kingdom and grandeur they were dreaming of; and that he ſhould die at all; and much more that he ſhould die ſuch a cruel and ignominious death, as that of the croſs. They ſeem to have overlooked, and to have taken no notice of his riſing again from the dead; which might have adminiſtered comfort to them, and have relieved them under their melancholy apprehenſions of things; but this they underſtood not, nor indeed truly any part of what he had ſaid; ſo Mark and Luke intimate: but then it may be ſaid, how came they to be ſo very ſorrowful, if they did not know what was ſaid? To which may be replied, that this might be the reaſon of their ſorrow, becauſe they did not underſtand what he ſaid, and they were afraid to aſk; they could not tell how to reconcile the betraying of him into the hands of men, and his ſufferings and death, with their notions, that the Meſſiah ſhould abide for ever, and ſhould ſet up a temporal kingdom, in great ſplendor and magnificence; and what he meant by riſing again from the dead, they could not deviſe; they could not tell whether all this was to be underſtood in a literal, or myſtical ſenſe.

Ver. 24. And when they were come to Capernaum, &c.] Called Chriſt’s own city, ch. ix. 1. where he dwelt ſome time, ch. iv. 13. and Peter had an houſe, ch. viii. 14. they that received tribute-money, or the didrachms; in Talmudic language, it would be, גובין השקלים [i], they that collect the ſhekels: for not the publicans, or Roman tax-gatherers are meant; nor is this to be underſtood of any ſuch tribute: there was a tribute that was paid to Cæſar, by the Jews; ſee Matt. xxii. 17. but that is expreſſed by another word, and was paid in other money, in Roman money, which bore Cæſar’s image and ſuperſcription; and was exacted of them, whether they would or no: but this deſigns the collection of the half ſhekel, paid yearly for the ſervice of the temple: the original of this cuſtom, was an order of the Lord to Moſes, upon numbering the people; that every one that was twenty years of age and upwards, ſhould give half a ſhekel as atonement-money, or as a ranſom for his ſoul; which was to be diſpoſed of for the ſervice of the tabernacle, Exod. xxx. 12—16. This does not appear to have been deſigned for a perpetual law, or to be paid yearly; nor even whenever the number of the people was taken, but only for that preſent time: in the time of Joaſh king of Judah, a collection was ſet on foot for the repair of the temple; and the collection of Moſes in the wilderneſs, was urged as an argument, and by way of example; nor is any mention made of the half ſhekel, nor was any ſum of money fixed they ſhould pay; but, according to the account, it was entirely free and voluntary. In the time of Nehemiah, there was a yearly charge of the third part of a ſhekel, for the ſervice of the temple; but this was not done by virtue of a divine order, or any law of Moſes, with which it did not agree; but by an ordinance the Jews then made for themſelves, as their neceſſity required. Aben Ezra [k] indeed ſays, that this was an addition to the half ſhekel. Now in proceſs of time, from theſe inſtances and examples, it became a fixed thing, that every year an half ſhekel ſhould be paid by every Iſraelite, excepting women, children, and ſervants, towards defraying the neceſſary charges of the temple ſervice, and this obtained in Chriſt’s time. There is a whole tract in the Jewiſh Miſna, called Shekalim; in which an account is given of the perſons who are obliged to pay this money, the time and manner of collecting it, and for what uſes it is put: and ſo it continued till the times of Titus Veſpaſian, who, as Joſephus ſays [l], laid a tax of two drachms, the ſame with the half ſhekel, upon the Jews; and ordered it to be brought yearly into the Capitol at Rome, as it uſed to have been paid into the temple at Jeruſalem. We need not wonder that we hear of receivers of the half ſhekel at Capernaum; ſince once a year, on the fifteenth of the month Adar, tables were placed, and collectors ſate in every city in Judea, as they did on the twenty-fifth of the ſame month, in the ſanctuary [m]. The value of the half ſhekel, was about fifteenpence of our money. The Syriac verſion renders the word here uſed, two zuzim of head-money: now a zuz with the Jews, anſwered to a Roman penny, four of which made a ſhekel [n]; ſo that two of them were the the value of an half ſhekel: it is further to be obſerved, that ſhekels in Judea, were double the value of thoſe in Galilee, where Chriſt now was: five ſhekels in Judea, went for ten in Galilee, and ſo ten for twenty [o]. The receivers of this money came to Peter; not caring to go to Chriſt himſelf; but obſerving Peter a forward and active man among his diſciples, they applied to him; or rather, becauſe he had an houſe in this place, at which Chriſt might be: and ſaid, doth not your maſter pay tribute? or the didrachms, the half ſhekel money. Had this been the Roman tribute, the reaſon of ſuch a queſtion, might have been either to have enſnared him, and to have known whether he was of the ſame mind with Judas of Galilee, that refuſed to pay tribute to Cæſar; or becauſe they could not tell whether he was reckoned as an inhabitant, or citizen of that city; for, according to the Jewiſh canons [p], a man muſt be twelve months in a place, before he is liable to tribute and taxes; or becauſe they might ſuſpect him to be exempted, as a doctor, or teacher: for the Jewiſh doctors, wiſe men, and ſcholars, were freed from all tribute and taxes [q], even from the head-money, the Syriac verſion here mentions; and which was a civil tax paid to kings [r]; to which ſenſe that verſion ſeems to incline: the rule concerning wiſe men or ſcholars, is this [s]. “They don't collect of them for the building a wall, or ſetting up gates, or for the hire of watchmen, and ſuch like things; nor for the king's treaſury; nor do they oblige them to give tribute, whether it is fixed upon citizens, or whether it is fixed on every man.” But this was not the Roman tax, nor tribute, on any civil account, but the half ſhekel for religious ſervice: and it may ſeem ſtrange that ſuch a queſtion ſhould be aſked; and eſpecially ſince it is a rule with them [t], that “all are bound to give the half ſhekel, prieſts, Levites, and Iſraelites; and the ſtrangers, or proſelytes, and ſervants, that are made free; but not women, nor ſervants, nor children; though if they gave, they received it of them.” But a following canon [u] explains it, and accounts for it: “On the fifteenth, (i. e. of the month Adar) the collectors ſit in every province or city, (that is, in the countries) ובעין בנחת כל, and mildly aſk every one: he that gives to them, they receive it of him; and he that does not give, אין כופין אותו ליתן, they don't oblige him to give: on the five and twentieth they ſit in the ſanctuary to collect; and from hence and onward, they urge him that will not give, until he gives; and every one that will not give, they take pawns of him.” So that it ſeems, there was a different uſage of perſons, at different times and places: our Lord being in Galilee at Capernaum, was treated in this manner.

---

[i] Maimon. Hilch. Shekalim, c. 2. §. 4.

[k] In Neh. x. 32.

[l] De Bello Jud. l. 7. c. 26.

[m] Miſn. Shekalim, c. 1. §. 3. Maimon. Hilch. Shekalim, c. 1. §. 9.

[n] T. Bab. Kidduſhin, fol. 11. 2. Vid. Targum & Kimchi in 1 Sam. ix. 8. Maimon. in Miſn. Shekalim, c. 2. 4. & Hilch. Shekalim, c. 1. §. 3.

[o] Miſn. Trumot, c. 10. §. 8. & Cetubot, c. 5. §. 9. T. Bab. Cetubot, fol. 59. 1.

[p] T. Hieroſ. Bava Bathra, fol. 12. 4. T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 8. 1.

Ver. 25. He ſaith, yes, &c.] Without any heſitation, knowing it had been his maſter's practice; and therefore as he had done it, did not doubt but he would again: and when he was come into the houſe; that is, Peter, as both the Syriac and Perſic verſions expreſs; when he was come into his own houſe, or at leaſt into that where Chriſt was, in order to talk with him about this affair, the collectors had been ſpeaking of to him, who ſeems to have been alone when they met with him; however, Chriſt was not with him: Jeſus prevented him; ſaying what he intended to ſay, on that head; for he being the omniſcient God, though not preſent, knew what queſtion had been put to Peter, and what anſwer he had returned; and therefore before Peter could lay the caſe before him, he puts this queſtion to him; ſaying, what thinkeſt thou Simon? How does it appear to thee, to thy reaſon and underſtanding? in what light doſt thou conſider this matter? what is thy judgment of it? Of whom do the kings of the earth take cuſtom or tribute? of their own children, or of ſtrangers, or others? What is the uſual practice of earthly kings, whether of Judea, or of other countries? do their own children, ſons, and heirs, ſuch as are of their own family, pay? or is it only their ſubjects that are not of their family?

Ver. 26. Peter ſaith unto him, &c.] The Vulgate Latin reads, and he ſaid; and ſo the Ethiopic, and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel; but without doubt Peter is meant, and rightly expreſſed; whoſe anſwer to Chriſt's queſtion is, of ſtrangers: meaning not foreigners, or ſuch who formerly belonged to other nations, but were now taken captive, and brought into ſubjection; but their own native ſubjects, ſo called, in diſtinction from their domeſticks, their children, and thoſe of their own family: Jeſus ſaith unto him, then are the children free; from paying cuſtom, tribute, and taxes, and leaves Peter to make the application; and which he ſuggeſted might be made, either thus: ſuppoſing it was a civil tax, that ſince he was the Son of David, king of Iſrael, was of his houſe and family, and heir apparent to his throne and kingdom; according to this rule, he muſt be exempt from ſuch tribute: or, thus; taking it to have reſpect to the half ſhekel, paid on a religious account, for the ſervice of the temple worſhip; that ſince he was the ſon of the king of kings, for the ſupport of whoſe worſhip and ſervice, that money was collected; and was alſo the Lord and proprietor of the temple, and greater than that, he might well be excuſed the payment of it.

Ver. 27. Notwithſtanding, leſt we ſhould offend them, &c.] Though Chriſt could have maintained his right of exemption from payment, by ſuch ſtrong and clear reaſons and arguments; yet he choſe to forego it, leſt any ſhould be offended with him, and look upon him as a tranſgreſſor of the law; one that had no regard to the temple, and ſlighted the worſhip and ſervice of it, and ſo be prejudiced againſt him, and his doctrines: which, by the way, may teach us to be careful to give no offence, to Jew or Gentile, or the church of God; though it may be to our own diſadvantage, when the honour and intereſt of religion lie at ſtake. This is following the example of Chriſt, who therefore ſaid to Peter, go thou to the ſea; of Tiberias, which was near this city, and caſt an hook; a fiſher's hook into it: and take up the fiſh that firſt cometh up, and when thou haſt opened his mouth, thou ſhalt find a piece of money; a ſtater, as in the original text, the ſame with the אסתירא of the Talmudiſts; and which word, the Syriac verſion here retains, and was, they [w] tell us, of the ſame value with a ſela, or ſhekel of the province. The Arabic and Perſic verſions render it, by four drachms, which alſo were the ſame with a ſhekel: and ſo was juſt enough to pay the two half ſhekels, for Chriſt and Peter, and was worth, of our money, near half a crown; and not nearly a crown, as in a late paraphraſe is ſaid, through miſtake. This was a wonderful inſtance of the omniſcience of Chriſt, who knew there was in ſuch a fiſh, ſuch a piece of money, as exactly anſwered the preſent exigence, and that that would come firſt to Peter's hook; and of his omnipotence, if not in forming this piece of money immediately in the fiſh's mouth, as is thought by ſome, yet in cauſing this fiſh to come to Peter's hook firſt, and as ſoon as caſt in; and of his power and dominion over all creatures, even over the fiſhes of the ſea; and ſo proved himſelf to be what he ſuggeſted, the ſon of the king of kings; and to be a greater perſon than the kings of the earth, to whom tribute was paid: and yet, at the ſame time, it declares his great poverty as man, that he had not a ſhekel to pay on ſuch an occaſion, without working a miracle; and his great condeſcenſion to do it, rather than give offence by non-payment: and take, and give unto them for me and thee; for the half ſhekel was expected of Peter, as well as of Chriſt, and he had not wherewith to pay it; and this Chriſt knew, and therefore provides for both. But why did not Chriſt pay for the other diſciples, as well as for himſelf and Peter?

---

[q] Maimon. & Bartenora in Pirke Abot, c. 4. §. 5.

[r] Gloſſ. in T. Bab. Cetubot, fol. 100. 2. & Nedarim, fol. 62. 2. & Bava Metzia, fol. 73. 2.

[s] Maimon. Talmud Tora, c. 6. 10.

[t] Ib. Hilch. Shekalim, c. 1. §. 7.

[u] Ib. §. 9.

[w] Gloſſ. in T. Bab. Cetubot, fol. 64. 1. & 105. 1. & Bava Metzia, fol. 102. 2.

ter? It may be replied, that this money would pay for no more than two: but this is not a full anſwer; Chriſt could have ordered more money in the ſame way he did this: it may then be further ſaid, that only he and Peter, were looked upon as inhabitants of this place; and ſo the reſt were not called upon here, but in their reſpective cities, where they might pay alſo, and, beſides, were not now preſent.

CHAP. XVIII.

Ver. 1. A*T the ſame time came the diſciples unto Jeſus*, &c.] When the receivers of the half ſhekel had ſpoke to Peter about his maſter's paying it, and Chriſt and he had converſed about it, by whoſe orders he had taken up a fiſh out of the ſea, and from it a piece of money, which he had paid for them both; juſt at this time came the other eleven diſciples to the houſe where Chriſt and Peter were: ſaying, who is the greateſt in the kingdom of heaven? Mark ſays, that the diſciples diſputed this point in the way; and that when they came to Jeſus, he put the queſtion to them, what they had been diſputing about: and Luke takes no notice of any queſtion put by one or another; but obſerves, that Chriſt perceiving the thoughts of their hearts, in order to rebuke, and convince them, took the method hereafter mentioned. All which is reconcileable, and of a piece: the ſum is this; that as they were in the way to Capernaum they fell upon this queſtion, which, being known to Chriſt, the omniſcient God; when they came to Capernaum, and to the houſe where he was, and knowing that the ſame thought was in them, he aſked them what they had been talking of by the way; upon which they were ſilent; but calling them nearer to him, and they finding that the matter was known, took courage to put the queſtion to him, and deſired to have his ſenſe of it. The Vulgate Latin reads, who doſt thou think; and the Arabic verſion, who in thy opinion, &c. The occaſion of this could not be the reſpect ſhewn to Peter, in paying the half ſhekel for him; for this converſation was begun in the way, and before this was done, or, at leaſt, before they knew it: rather it might be occaſioned by his promiſe of giving the keys of the kingdom of heaven to him; or by his taking him, and James, and John, ſo lately to the mountain with him, where he was transfigured before them; though it ſeems beſt to aſcribe it to the mention Chriſt had made of his reſurrection from the dead: for, as Dr. Lightfoot, Hammond, and others, have obſerved, ſomething of this kind generally followed any account Chriſt gave of his death and reſurrection, as Mark ix. 31, 34. Matt. xx. 19, 20. Luke xxii. 24. and this thought of an earthly kingdom ſtill continued, when they ſaw him riſen, Acts i. 6. for they had been taught, that the reſurrection, and the kingdom of the Meſſiah, would be at the ſame time[x]. And, by the kingdom of heaven, they meant, not the kingdom of glory in another world, but the kingdom of the Meſſiah in this; and which they looked upon to be a temporal one, tho' they call it the kingdom of heaven; not only becauſe Chriſt often uſed this phraſe, but becauſe the times of the Meſſiah, and his reign, were frequently ſo called by the Jews; ſee the note on Matt. iii. 2. Now, what they wanted to be ſatisfied in was, who ſhould be advanced to the higheſt poſt in that kingdom next to the Meſſiah; and, as they doubted not but it would fall on one of them, to have the moſt honourable poſt, and the place of the greateſt truſt, they were deſirous of knowing who it ſhould be.

Ver. 2. And Jeſus called a little child unto him, &c.] One, very likely, that was in the houſe, and might belong to the maſter of it, and which was big enough to come to him at his call. Some have thought that this was Ignatius the martyr, but without any foundation. His own words, in his epiſtle to the church at Smyrna[y], can give no countenance to it; where he ſays, "for I alſo know, that after "his reſurrection he was in the fleſh, and I believe "that he is." The Latin verſion indeed renders it thus; "for I alſo ſaw him in the fleſh after the "reſurrection, and believe that he exiſts." But it does not follow from hence that he muſt be this child, but rather the contrary; ſince it can't be thought, that a child ſo young as this, in half a year after, had it ſeen Chriſt, when riſen from the dead, could have took ſo much notice of him, as this verſion repreſents Ignatius to do; but it matters not who it was; Chriſt deſigned, by this emblem, to give them his ſenſe of the queſtion, and convey ſome proper inſtruction to the minds of his diſciples: and ſet him in the midſt of them; that every one might ſee him; and upon the very ſight of him, had he ſaid no more to them, they might eaſily have perceived what was his opinion; that he that was but a child, the moſt humble, and leaſt in his own eyes, would be the greateſt: but beſides ſetting the child in ſuch a ſituation, he pointed to him, ſaying what follows.

Ver. 3. And ſaid, verily I ſay unto you, &c.] You may take it for a certain truth, and what may be depended upon, that except ye be converted, or turned; from that groſs notion of a temporal kingdom, and of enjoying great grandeur, and outward felicity in this world; and from all your vain views of honour, wealth, and riches, and become as little children: the Arabic renders it, as this child; that is, unleſs ye learn to entertain an humble, and modeſt opinion of yourſelves, are not envious at one another, and drop all contentions about primacy and pre-eminence, and all your ambitious views of one being greater than another, in a vainly expected temporal kingdom; things which are not to be found in little children, though not free from ſin in other reſpects, ye ſhall not enter into the kingdom of heaven: ye ſhall be ſo far from being one greater than another in it, that you ſhall not enter into it at all; meaning his viſible, ſpiritual kingdom, which ſhould take place, and appear after his reſurrection, upon his aſcenſion to heaven, and pouring forth of the ſpirit: and it is to be obſerved, that the apoſtles carried theſe carnal views, contentions, and ſentiments, till that time, and then were turned from them, and dropped them; for, upon the extraordinary effuſion of the holy Spirit, they were cleared of theſe wordly principles, and underſtood the ſpiritual nature of Chriſt's kingdom; which they then entered into, and took their place in, and filled it up with great ſucceſs, without envying one another; having received the ſame commiſſion from their Lord, and Maſter: ſo that theſe words are a ſort of prophecy of what ſhould be, as well as deſigned as a rebuke to them for their preſent ambition and contentions.

---

[x] Vid. Pocock. not. miſcell. ad Port. Moſis, p. 103, 104, 105, 106.

[y] P. 3. Ed. Voſſ.

Ver. 4. Whoſoever therefore ſhall humble himſelf, &c.] Whoever ſhall entertain mean thoughts of himſelf, and prefer others to himſelf, ſhall behave in a modeſt, humble manner, not affecting dominion over others, or treating his brethren and chriſtians in a haughty and ſupercilious manner, with ſcorn and contempt; but condeſcend to thoſe of the loweſt ſtate, and place himſelf in the loweſt form, converſing with his friends freely and familiarly, without diſtinction, as this little child; or any other of the like age; for there is no reaſon to ſuppoſe, that there was any thing peculiar in this child, which was not in another, it being common to children to behave towards one another, as on a level; not to envy one another, or to ſet up one above another, or be vainly elated with the diſtinctions of birth and fortune. The ſame is greateſt in the kingdom of heaven; in the Goſpel church-ſtate; which was verified in the apoſtle Paul, tho' not one of the twelve: nor are theſe words limited to them; at leaſt, this paſſage may be illuſtrated in his caſe: he thought himſelf to be the chief of ſinners, and leſs than the leaſt of all ſaints, and unworthy to be called an apoſtle; yet had the largeſt meaſures of grace, the greateſt gifts and abilities; and was honoured with the greateſt uſefulneſs and ſucceſs in the preaching of the Goſpel to the converſion of ſinners, and planting of churches; labouring more abundantly than they all.

Ver. 5. And whoſo ſhall receive one ſuch little child, &c.] Which is to be underſtood, not literally, but metaphorically; meaning not ſuch an one in age, but one, as the Syriac renders it, איך טליא הנא, that is, as this child; like unto it for modeſty and humility; one, that is as that, free from pride, ambition, and envy. Chriſt's ſenſe is, that whoever receives his diſciples, that are meek and lowly, into their houſes, or into their hearts and affections; that receives their miniſtry and meſſage, embraces the Goſpel preached by them, with readineſs and chearfulneſs, with faith and love, in my name; on his account, becauſe they are his diſciples, believe in him, preach his Goſpel, and, as being ſent by, and perſonating him, receiveth me: it is ſo taken by Chriſt, as if he was perſonally preſent, and perſonally received, and had all the favours ſhewn to his, done to himſelf in perſon; yea, ſuch receive Chriſt in the miniſtry of the word, he being the ſum and ſubſtance of it. This is ſaid to encourage modeſty and humility; and intimates, that proud and haughty perſons will not be received as the diſciples and followers of the meek and lowly Jeſus; and to encourage perſons to receive ſuch that are modeſt and humble, ſince the reſpect ſhown to them, is all one as if ſhown to him.

Ver. 6. But whoſo ſhall offend one of theſe little ones, &c.] Not in age, but are little and mean in their own eyes, and contemptible in the eſteem of the world; tho' otherwiſe men of great grace, gifts, and uſefulneſs; who may be ſaid to be offended, when they are not received; their perſons deſpiſed, their miniſtry rejected, and they reproached and perſecuted; and every thing done to them to diſcourage, and cauſe them to ſtumble and fall, to drop their profeſſion of Chriſt, to quit his ſervice, and deſert his cauſe: and that ſuch perſons are deſigned, appears by the following deſcriptive character of them, which believe in me; which can't be ſaid of infants, or little ones in age, and who alſo are not capable of offence; but muſt be underſtood of adult perſons, of ſuch who by faith look unto, lay hold on, and receive the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, as their Saviour and Redeemer, and who make a profeſſion of their faith in him; and chiefly of ſuch who preach the doctrine of faith, who having believed, therefore ſpeak; and who are generally the butt of the contempt, reproach, and perſecution of men. It were better for him, that a mill-ſtone be hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the ſea. The word tranſlated depth, is ſometimes uſed for the ſea itſelf, Iſ. xxvii. 5. and ſignifies the middle, or deeper path, and anſwers to the Hebrew phraſe, the heart of the ſea; פילגוס דימא רבא, uſed by the Targum, in Pſ. xlvi. 3. and by Jonathan ben Uzziel, in Exod. xv. 8. Jerom thinks, that this was a ſort of puniſhment in uſe among the Jews, that is here referred to; but this does not appear. The four capital puniſhments inflicted by them were ſtoning, burning, ſlaying with the ſword, and ſtrangling [z]: they had indeed other ſorts of puniſhment, which they borrowed from other nations; and ſo they might this, either from the Romans, or Greeks, or their neighbours the Syrians. The mill-ſtone, in the original, is called μυλος ονικος, which may be rendered the aſs mill-ſtone, being either the nether mill-ſtone, as ſome think, which was called the aſs, becauſe, like an aſs, it bears the chief of the weight and burden; or elſe reſpects ſuch mill-ſtones as were turned about by an aſs, in diſtinction from thoſe that were turned by the hand; for that it was uſual with the Jews to make uſe of aſſes in grinding, as well as other nations, is certain: hence we read [a] of חמרא ריחיא, the aſs of mills, that were employed in grinding in the mills, and of one that turned his mill with wild aſſes [b]: but it is further to be obſerved, that mention is made [c] of חמור של רחים של יד, the aſs of an hand-mill; which the commentators ſay [d], was a beam on which an hand-mill was fixed, and was called the aſs. Now, I ſhould rather think that this is meant than the other. It does not ſeem likely that a nether mill-ſtone, or one that required an aſs to turn it, ſhould be tied to a man's neck, in order to drown him, when caſt into the ſea; for our Lord muſt be thought to refer to a practice ſomewhere in uſe: but rather, that ſuch a beam, or log, of an hand-mill, ſo called, were wont to be put about the necks of malefactors, in drowning them. Our Lord's ſenſe is, that it was much better for a man to endure the ſevereſt temporal puniſhment, rather than by offending, and evil treating any of his diſciples, expoſe himſelf to everlaſting deſtruction. The phraſe of having a mill-ſtone about the neck, I find, is ſometimes uſed to denote any thing very troubleſome and burdenſome [e]. "The tradition is, "a man that marries a wife, and after that learns the "law, R. Jochanan ſays, ריחים בצוארו, though "a mill-ſtone is about his neck, yet he muſt ſtudy "in the law:" that is, tho' his worldly circumſtances are narrow, and his wife and family are as burdenſome as if he had a mill-ſtone about his neck, he muſt continue his ſtudies.

Ver. 7. Wo unto the world becauſe of offences, &c.] By which are meant, not ſins, as ſometimes, but rather temptations to ſin; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders this word by temptation in every clauſe, as the Arabic does in the next; and may deſign all the contempt and reproach caſt upon the doctrines, ordinances, and people of Chriſt, and all thoſe afflictions, diſtreſſes, and perſecutions exerciſed on them, on purpoſe to cauſe them to ſtumble and fall; to tempt them to deny the truth, drop their profeſſion of religion, and relinquiſh the ſervice of Chriſt; things which are diſpleaſing to God, diſcouraging to his people, and often attended with bad conſequences to formal profeſſors; and bring down the judgments of God upon the men of the world; who ſooner or later will vindicate his own cauſe, avenge his own elect, and render tribulation to them that trouble them. For it muſt needs be that offences come; conſidering the implacable malice of ſatan, his unwearied and indefatigable pains, the malignity of the men of the world, their averſion and enmity to the Goſpel of Chriſt, and all good men; it can't be thought, God ſuffering ſuch things for the trial of ſuch as are truly gracious, and for the diſcovery of hypocrites, and for the manifeſtation of his grace, power, and faithfulneſs in the preſervation of his dear children, that it ſhould be otherwiſe, but that ſuch offences ſhould be: but wo to that man by whom the offence cometh; for tho' God, for wiſe ends and reaſons, as above, voluntarily permits ſuch things to be in the world; and tho' they do not ſucceed, as to cauſe the true followers of Chriſt ſo to ſtumble and fall, as to periſh, yet this does not excuſe their ſin and wickedneſs, in doing all that in them lay to effect it. For tho' God will, and does over-rule all their baſe deſigns againſt his miniſters, church, and people, for his glory, and their good, this is no thanks to them; and as it does not in the leaſt extenuate their crime, it will not abate the ſeverity of their puniſhment.

---

[z] Miſn. Sanhedrim, c. 7. §. 1.

[a] T. Bab. Moed-Katon, fol. 10. 2. Maimon. Hilch. Yom Tob, c. 8. §. 15.

[b] T. Bab. Avoda Zara, fol. 16. 2.

[c] Miſn. Zabim, c. 4. §. 2.

[d] R. Maimon. R. Sampſon, & R. Obadiah Bartenora, in ib.

[e] T. Bab. Kidduſhin, fol. 29. 2.

Ver. 8, 9. Wherefore if thy hand or thy foot, &c.] The ſame words are repeated here on occaſion of offences, as are ſpoken by Chriſt, ch. v. 29, 30. on account of unchaſte looks, deſires, and luſts: giving offence to Chriſt's diſciples, or endeavouring, by any means whatever, to cauſe them to ſtumble and fall, is equally gratifying the fleſh, and no more to be indulged, than the other, on pain of eternal damnation. See the note there.

Ver. 10. Take heed that ye deſpiſe not one of theſe little ones, &c.] That is, one of thoſe little ones that believed in Chriſt; for he is not ſpeaking of infants in age, but of thoſe who might be compared to ſuch, for their humility and modeſty; who were little in their own eyes, and mean and deſpicable in the eyes of the world, as well as appeared but little in the eyes of their fellow-diſciples and brethren: for our Lord returns and addreſſes himſelf to his diſciples, who had been contending among themſelves who ſhould be greateſt in the kingdom of heaven; and ſo were ſtriving to leſſen one another, each looking upon himſelf as the greater, and every other as little. Wherefore Chriſt cautions them againſt ſuch a ſpirit, and bids them beware of deſpiſing their fellow-diſciples, as little, and below them; eſpecially ſince ſo much notice and care were taken of them, both in heaven, and in earth: for I ſay unto you, that in heaven: the phraſe, in heaven, is omitted in the Syriac and Perſic verſions, perhaps, becauſe it might be looked upon as unneceſſary, ſince it afterwards appears; but is very proper, or pertinent, whether it be conſidered as deſcriptive of the angels, who have their habitation there, in diſtinction from the evil angels, who are caſt down from thence; or as pointing out the place where the angels behold the face of God, and who are ſtiled their angels: the angels of the little ones, that believe in Chriſt, who are miniſtring ſpirits unto them, the guardians of them, who encamp about them, and do many good offices for them. Some have thought from hence, that every good man has his peculiar angel that waits upon him, and cares for him; but this does not neceſſarily follow from theſe words, only that they all have an intereſt in angels, and in their good ſervices. This ſeems indeed to have been a notion that prevailed among the Jews, not only that there were angels which preſided over particular nations, but who alſo had the care of particular perſons; ſo they ſpeak of an angel that was particularly appointed for Abraham [f]. Nor will they allow, that one angel does two meſſages, nor two angels one [g] meſſage: but that every one has his particular place, perſon, and work; of whom it is further ſaid, that they do always behold the face of my father which is in heaven: which is not ſo much to be underſtood of their intellectual knowledge, and apprehenſion of the divine being, of their beholding the glory of his nature, and eſſence, and of their contemplating and applauding his perfections; as of their miniſtring before him, waiting, as ſervants upon him, watching to receive his orders, and ready to obey his commands. And our Lord's argument is, that if ſuch excellent creatures as the angels in heaven, who are continually favoured with being in the preſence of Chriſt's heavenly father, honoured with ſo high a ſtation, as always to ſtand before him, as miniſters of his; if theſe are the guardians of theſe little ones, if they are committed to their care, and they have the overſight of them, then they ought not to be deſpiſed: and beſides, ſince the angels that have the care of them are ſo near the throne, it ſhould deter every one from having their charge in contempt, or doing any injury to them; ſince they are capable of lodging accuſations and complaints againſt them; and, when leave is given, have power of executing the soreſt judgments upon men. This deſcription of angels agrees with what the Jews ſay of them, eſpecially of the chief of them. Michael, they ſay [h], is the firſt and principal of the chief princes, רואי פני המלך, that behold the face of the king; that is, the king of kings, the Lord of hoſts. Suriel, which, with them, is another name of an angel, is called [i], שר הפנים, the prince of faces, who is always in the preſence of God; and, as the Gloſs ſays, is "an angel that is counted worthy to "come before the king."

Ver. 11. For the ſon of man is come to ſave that which was loſt.] This is another, and ſtronger reaſon, why theſe little ones ſhould not be deſpiſed; becauſe Chriſt, who is here meant by the ſon of man, came into this world to ſave theſe perſons; who were loſt in Adam, and had deſtroyed themſelves by their tranſgreſſions, and carries great force in it: for if God had ſo great a regard to theſe little ones, as to ſend his ſon to obtain eternal ſalvation for them, when they were in a miſerable and periſhing condition; and Chriſt had ſo much love for them, as to come into this world, and endure ſorrows, ſufferings, and death itſelf for them, who were not only little, but loſt; and that to obtain righteouſneſs and life for them, and ſave them with an everlaſting ſalvation; then they muſt, and ought to be, far above the contempt of all mortals; and the utmoſt care ſhould be taken not to deſpiſe, grieve, offend, and injure them in any form or ſhape whatever; ſee Rom. xiv. 15. 1 Cor. viii. 11. Beza obſerves, that this whole verſe is left out in ſome Greek copies, but it ſtands in others, and in all the Oriental verſions, and in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel; nor can it be omitted, the following parable, which is an exemplification of it, requires it.

---

[f] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 96. 1.

[g] Bereſhit Rabba, §. 50. fol. 44. 4.

[h] Jacchiades in Dan. x. 13.

[i] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 51. 1.

Ver. 12. How think ye, &c.] Or, as the Arabic, what do you think? what is your opinion of this matter? what is your ſenſe of it? how does it appear to you? 'Tis a Talmudic way of ſpeaking, the ſame with מה אתם סבורין, what do you think? what is your judgment? So the Rabbins, after they have diſcuſſed a point among themſelves, aſk [k], מאי סבירא לן, what is our opinion? or what do we think upon the whole? Chriſt here appeals to his diſciples, makes them judges themſelves in this matter, and illuſtrates it by a familiar inſtance of a man's ſeeking and finding his loſt ſheep, and rejoicing at it. If a man have an hundred ſheep; who is the proprietor of them; not the hireling, who has them under his care, and whoſe the ſheep are not; but the owner of them, to whom they belong, and who muſt be thought to be moſt concerned for any one of them that ſhould go aſtray: a hundred ſheep ſeem to be the number of a flock; at leaſt flocks of ſheep uſed to be divided into hundreds. In a Maronite's will, a field is thus bequeathed [l]; “the north part of it to ſuch an one, and with it מאה צאן, a hundred ſheep, and a hundred veſſels; and the ſouth part of it to ſuch an one, and with it מאה צאן, a hundred ſheep, and a hundred veſſels; and he died, and the wiſe men confirmed his words, or his will.” Such a ſuppoſition, or putting ſuch a caſe as this, is very proper and pertinent. And one of them be gone aſtray; which ſheep are very prone to; ſee Pſ. cxix. 176. Iſ. liii. 6. doth he not leave the ninety and nine, which are not gone aſtray in the place where they are; it is uſual ſo to do: and goeth into the mountains; alluding to the mountains of Iſrael, where were paſtures for ſheep, Ezek. xxxiv. 13, 14. and whither ſheep are apt to wander, and go from mountain to mountain, Jer. l. 6. and therefore theſe were proper places to go after them, and ſeek for them in: but the Vulgate Latin verſion joins the words in or on the mountains, to the preceding clauſe, and reads, doth he not leave the ninety and nine in the mountains; and ſo read all the Oriental verſions, Syriac, Arabic, Ethiopic, and Perſic; and in the ſame manner Theophylact; and ſeeketh that which is gone aſtray? This is uſual with men: no man that has a flock of ſhep, and though but one ſtrays from it, but takes this method. This parable now may be conſidered, either as an illuſtration of the ſon of man's coming into this world, to ſeek, and to ſave his loſt ſheep, mentioned in the preceding verſe; even the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael, the little ones that believed in him, who were deſpiſed by the Jews. And then by the ninety and nine, we are not to underſtand the angels; who never went aſtray, never ſinned, but kept their firſt eſtate, whom Chriſt left in the higheſt heavens, on the holy mountains of eternity, when he became incarnate, and came down on earth to redeem mankind: for theſe never go by the name of ſheep; nor are they of the ſame nature and kind with the one that ſtrays, and is ſought out; nor is their number, with reſpect to men, as ninety-nine to one; at leaſt it cannot be aſcertained; nor were they left by Chriſt, when he came on earth; for a multitude deſcended at his birth, and ſung glory to God. Nor are the ſaints in heaven intended, whoſe ſtate is ſafe; ſince it cannot be ſaid of them, as in the following verſe, that they went not aſtray; for they went aſtray like loſt ſheep, as others, and were looked up, ſought out, and ſaved by Chriſt as others; but rather, by them, are meant the body of the Jewiſh nation, the far greater part of them, the Scribes and Phariſees, who rejected the Meſſiah, and deſpiſed thoſe that believed in him: theſe were in ſheeps clothing, of the flock of the houſe of Iſrael, of the Jewiſh fold; and with reſpect to the remnant among them, according to the election of grace, were as ninety-nine to one: theſe were left by Chriſt, and taken no notice of by him, in compariſon of the little ones, the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael he came to ſave: theſe he left on the mountains, on the barren paſtures of mount Sinai, feeding on their own works and ſervices; or rather, he went into the mountains, or came leaping and ſkipping over them, Cant. ii. 8. encountring with, and ſurmounting all difficulties that lay in the way of the ſalvation of his people; ſuch as appearing in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, bearing, and carrying the griefs and ſorrows of his people, obeying the law, ſatisfying juſtice, bearing their ſins, and undergoing an accurſed death, in order to obtain the ſalvation of his choſen ones, deſigned by the one ſheep that was gone aſtray; who ſtrayed from God, from his law, the rule of their walk, out of his way, into the ways of ſin, which are of their own chuſing and approving: or, the intention of this parable is, to ſet forth the great regard God has to perſons ever ſo mean, that believe in Chriſt, whom he would not have ſtumbled and offended, and takes ſpecial care of them, that they ſhall not periſh; even as the proprietor of a flock of ſheep is more concerned for one ſtraying one, than for the other ninety-nine that remain.

Ver. 13. And if ſo be that he find it, &c.] Which is a caſual and uncertain thing with the ſhepherd, but not ſo with Chriſt, who certainly finds all thoſe he goes after, and ſeeks: for, verily I ſay unto you, he rejoiceth more of that ſheep; at the finding of it, whoſe loſs greatly affected him, than of the ninety and nine which went not aſtray; who ſeemed not to go aſtray, were outwardly righteous before men, and, in their own opinion, being the ſame with the ninety and nine juſt perſons who needed no repentance in their own apprehenſion, Luke xv. 7. This ſame parable is related in Luke xv. 3, 4, 5, 6. and it being there more largely expreſſed, and along with other parables of the ſame kind, I ſhall refer the more particular conſideration of it to that place; only obſerve, that it ſeems to me that this parable was twice delivered by our Lord, and that on two different occaſions; once, as here, in his diſcourſe on offences, and upon mention of his coming into this world to ſave loſt ſinners; at another time, as there, upon the Phariſees murmuring at his receiving ſinners, and eating with them.

Ver. 14. Even ſo it is not the will of your father which is in heaven, &c.] This is the accommodation, or application of the parable of the loſt ſheep to the preſent purpoſe, and is the top of the climax or gradation here made uſe of. Firſt, Chriſt obſerves, in order to deter any from deſpiſing and offending any of his diſciples, even the meaneſt, that they have angels to be their guardians, who are continually in the preſence of God; and next, that he himſelf in human nature came to be the author of ſalvation to theſe perſons; and then riſes up to the ſovereign will of his father, and theirs, the ſource and ſecurity of their everlaſting happineſs; which will is, not, that one of theſe little ones, that believe in Chriſt, ſhould periſh. It is his will of command that no ſtumbling-blocks ſhould be laid in their way to cauſe them to ſtumble and fall, to the grieving of their ſouls, the wounding of their conſciences, and the periſhing, or loſs of their peace and comfort; and it is his unalterable will of purpoſe, or his unchangeable decree, that not one of them, even the meaneſt, ſhall periſh eternally: in purſuance of which will, he has choſen them in his Son, he has put them into his hands, and ſecured them in his covenant; and having redeemed them by Chriſt, and called them by grace, he keeps them by his power, through faith unto ſalvation. Nor ſhall any one of them finally and totally fall away and periſh, through the power of their own corruptions, the temptations of ſatan, the reproaches and perſecutions of men, the frowns or flatteries of the world, or through the errors and hereſies of falſe teachers, or any other way. It is to be obſerved, that when our Lord in ver. 10. is ſpeaking of the happineſs of the angels, and the honour done to the little ones by having ſuch guardians; then the more to aggrandize this matter, he repreſents thoſe as in the preſence of his Father which is in heaven; but here, when he would expreſs the wonderful love and grace of God, in the reſolutions of his heart, and purpoſes of his will, to ſave them, then it is your Father which is in heaven; and this, the rather to engage them to the belief of it, ſince they ſtood in ſuch a near relation to him, as children to a father; and therefore muſt be infinitely more concerned for their welfare, than a proprietor of ſheep can be, for one that is loſt. The Arabic and Ethiopic verſions indeed read, my father, but without any authority; for the phraſeology, the will before your Father, as in the original text, ſee the note on Matt. xi. 26.

---

[k] T. Bab. Sanhedrim, fol. 88. 2.

[l] T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 156. 2.

Ver. 15. Moreover, if thy brother ſhall treſpaſs againſt thee, &c.] This is ſaid to ſhew, that as on the one hand, if any of thoſe that believe in Chriſt, ſhould commit a treſpaſs againſt his fellow chriſtian, his ſin is not to be connived at, for fear of offending him; for what Chriſt has before ſaid, is not to be taken in ſuch ſenſe, as to prevent private reproof, or publick cenſures, when there is occaſion for them; ſo on the other hand, he is not to be deſpiſed and ill uſed, and treated in the ſame injurious manner; but gentle reproofs are to be made uſe of, for his good. This is ſpoken not to the apoſtles as ſuch, but as believers in Chriſt; and concerns every one that ſtands in the relation of a brother, or church-member to each other, and only ſuch; for they that are without, don't fall under their notice, nor are they obliged to take, nor can they take altogether, the ſame methods with them. This rule reſpects ſins committed by one brother againſt another, either in word or deed; or ſuch as are of a private nature, and which one only, or at leaſt but few, are acquainted with: in ſuch caſes the advice is, go and tell him his fault between thee, and him alone; don't wait for his coming to thee, as being the aggreſſor, to acknowledge his fault, teſtify his repentance, expreſs his ſorrow for his ſin, and aſk pardon; but go to him, and freely and faithfully lay his ſin before him; but don't aggravate it, and reproach him with it, and bear hard on him for it, but gently rebuke and reprove him: let this be done in the moſt private manner; let none be preſent, nor any know of it, even the moſt intimate friend and acquaintance: if he ſhall bear thee; patiently, take your reproof kindly, acknowledge his offence, declare his hearty ſorrow for it, and deſire it might be overlooked, and reconciliation made: thou haſt gained thy brother; recovered him from the error of his ways, reſtored him to his duty, and ſecured his friendſhip, and intereſt in his favour; nor ſhould any mention be made of this ever after, either to him, or any other, or to the church.

Ver. 16. But if he will not hear thee, &c.] But will either deny the fact, or extenuate and excuſe it, or defend it, or at leaſt is obſtinate and incorrigible, ſhews no ſigns of repentance, but is angry, gives hard words, and ill language: then take with thee one or two more; members of the church, and perſons of weight, reputation, and character, who either know ſomething of the matter, and ſo can confirm, by their teſtimony, what has been alledged, in order to bring the perſon to conviction and acknowledgment; or if they do not, and which ſeems rather to be the ſenſe, they may, by hearing what is ſaid on both ſides, judge where the truth lies, and join with the offended perſon in the admonition, that it may fall with the greater weight, and become more effectual: that in the mouth of two or three witneſſes every word may be eſtabliſhed, referring to Deut. xix. 15. So that ſhould the matter be brought before the whole church, theſe witneſſes would be able to teſtify the truth of the caſe, and report the ſteps that had been taken, and what effect they had had; ſo that things being thus prepared, the caſe would appear plain and eaſy, and without difficulty. The whole of this is very agreeable to the rules and cuſtoms of the Jews, and is founded on the law, in Lev. xix. 17. upon which they form rules very much like to theſe. They repreſent God himſelf taking ſuch a method as this, with the ſons of men[m]: "When the holy bleſſed God reproves "a man, he reproves him in love, privately; if "he receives it, it is well; if not, he reproves him "among his friends: if he receives it, it is well; "if not, he reproves him openly before the eyes "of all; if he receives it, it is well; if not, he "leaves him, and reproves him no more." And this is an inſtruction to men, how they ſhould reprove their friends. They ſay[n], "he that ſees "any thing in his friend that is not becoming, he "ought to reprove him." And which is elſewhere more[o] largely expreſſed: "he that ſeeth his friend "walking in a way that is not good, he is bound "to reprove him, even a diſciple his maſter; and "this he ſhall do for his good, and in order to bring "him to the life of the world to come, or eternal "life; and if he takes it of him, it is well; but if "not, he muſt reprove again, a ſecond and a third "time; and ſo he muſt reprove him many times, "if, or until he hears him." And this they require to be done, in the moſt private manner: "reproof out of love, they[p] ſay, is ſecret from the "children of men; whoever reproves his friend in "love, ſeeks to ſecrete his words from the ſons of "men, that he may not expoſe him thereby to "ſhame and reproach." That is, as the Gloſs[q] on it obſerves, "he ſeeks to reprove him in ſecret, ſo "that he may not be put to ſhame before many." If this way does not ſucceed, they allow of a publick reproof, for ſo it is ſaid[r]; "thou mayeſt not "reprove him with hard words, till his countenance changes; for whoever cauſes the face of "his friend to turn pale publickly, has no portion "in the world to come; but thou mayeſt reprove "in the words of heaven, or God; and if he does "not return privately, thou mayeſt make him

---

[m] Raya Mehimna in Zohar, in Lev. fol. 35. 4.

[n] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 31. 1, 2.

[o] Moſes Kotſenſis Mitzvot Tora pr. Affirm. 11.

[p] Zohar in Lev. fol. 19. 3.

[q] Imre Binah in ib.

[r] Mitzvot Tora, pr. neg. 6.

" aſhamed publickly, and expoſe his ſin before him; " and reproach and curſe him, until he returns to " do well; for ſo did all the prophets to Iſrael." They plead alſo for a ſecond reproof, from the text in Lev. xix. 17 [s]. " From whence does it appear, " that he that ſees any thing in his friend unbecoming, ought to reprove him? As it is ſaid, thou " ſhalt in any wiſe rebuke, &c. if he reproves him, " ולא קבל, and he does not receive it, (he does not " take it kindly, or, as here, he does not hear him) " from whence is it manifeſt, that he muſt return " and reprove him? (or repeat the reproof) from " what is ſaid, reproving thou ſhalt reprove." The whole of this, is very fully expreſſed in a few words, by one [t] of their beſt writers, and in great agreement with theſe rules of Chriſt: " He that ſees his " friend ſinning, or going in a way not good, he " is commanded to cauſe him to return to that " which is good; and to let him know, that he " ſins againſt himſelf by his evil works; as it is " ſaid, thou ſhalt in any wiſe rebuke thy neighbour: " he that reproveth his friend, whether for things " between him and himſelf, or whether for things " between him and God, ought to reprove him, " בינו לבין עצמו, between him and himſelf; and " ſhould ſpeak to him mildly, and in tender language; and let him know that he does not ſpeak " to him, but for his good, and to bring him to " everlaſting life; and if he receives it of him, " it is well, and if not, he muſt reprove him, " פעם שנייה ושלישית, a ſecond and a third time; " and ſo a man muſt continually reprove, until the " ſinner ſtrikes him and ſays, I will not hear." Buxtorf has produced a paſſage out of one of their writers [u], in the very language in which Chriſt here delivers himſelf: " The wiſe man ſays, if thy " friend does thee an injury, reprove him between " him and thee alone: if he hears thee, thou haſt " already gained; if he does not hear thee, ſpeak " to him before one or two, who may hear the " matter, and if he will not hear, reckon him a " worthleſs friend." One would almoſt be ready to think, that this writer ſhould mean Chriſt by the wiſe man, were it not for the implacable enmity they bear unto him. The above author, has cited alſo the following paſſage out of the ſame [w] writer, pertinent to the preſent purpoſe: " A friend that " declares to thee thy faults, between him and thee, " whenever he meets thee, is better to thee than a " friend, that whenever he meets thee, gives thee " a golden penny."

Ver. 17. And if he ſhall neglect to hear them, &c.] The one or two, in conjunction with the offended perſon that ſhall hear the caſe, and admoniſh and reprove; if he takes no notice of what they ſay to him, but remains ſtiff and impenitent, tell it unto the church: which ſome underſtand, of the רבים, or multitude, before whom it was lawful to reprove, after ſuch private methods had been taken: others, of the political magiſtrates, or Sanhedrim; who took cognizance of caſes between one perſon and another, either by themſelves, or meſſengers; and gave admonitions and reproofs, as to parents, when they did not provide for their families [x], and to wives that were perverſe, and provoked their huſbands [y], &c. others, of the preſbyters and governors of the chriſtian church; others, of the church itſelf, and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, the houſe of chriſtians; to which it is objected, that as yet a chriſtian church was not formed: but what were the twelve apoſtles of the Lamb? They were the great congregation and church, in the midſt of which Chriſt ſung praiſe to his Father: and ſince the whole of this advice, and theſe excellent rules are given to them, and they are ſpoken of in the next verſe, as having the power of binding and looſing, they may well be thought to be meant here; and that the deſign of Chriſt is, to inſtruct them how to behave, in caſe of offence to one another; that the reproof ſhould be firſt private, and if it did not ſucceed, to be made before one or two more; and if that did not do, the whole body was to be acquainted with it; and which rules hold good, and are to be obſerved by all chriſtian men and churches, in all ages: though no doubt, but alluſion is made to the Jewiſh cuſtoms, in rebuking before the multitude, or carrying of a private caſe, after all other means uſed were ineffectual, to the Sanhedrim. But if he neglect to hear the church; the advice they ſhould give unto him, the reproof they ſhould think proper for him, or the cenſure they ſhould paſs upon him, let him be unto thee as an heathen man, and a publican. This is not a form of excommunication to be uſed among chriſtians, nor was there ever any ſuch form among the Jews; nor could heathens or publicans, eſpecially ſuch publicans as were Gentiles, be excommunicated, when they never were of the Jewiſh church. " A religious perſon indeed, that becomes a col- " lector of taxes, they firſt ſaid, is to be driven " from the ſociety; but they afterwards ſaid, all " the time that he is a tax-gatherer, they drive him " from the ſociety; but when he goes out of his " office, lo! he is as a religious perſon [z]." But one that never was of a religious ſociety, could not be driven out of it. And beſides, this is given, not as a rule to the church, but as advice to the offended perſon, how to behave towards the offender: after he has come under the cognizance, reproof, and cenſure of the church, he is to look upon him as the Jews did one that diſregarded both private reproof by a man's ſelf, and that which was in the preſence of one or two more, חבר פחות, a worthleſs friend, or neighbour; as a Gentile, with whom the Jews had neither religious nor civil converſation; and as a Publican, or as Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel reads it, בעל עברה, a notorious ſinner, as a publican was accounted: hence ſuch are often joined together, and with whom the Jews might not eat, nor keep any friendly and familiar acquaintance; and ſo ſuch that have been privately admoniſhed and publickly rebuked, without ſucceſs, their company is to be ſhunned, and intimate friendſhip with them to be avoided.

Ver. 18. Verily I ſay unto you, &c.] To them all, what he had ſaid before to Peter, ch. xvi. 19. ſee the note there: what is ſaid here, refers to things, and not perſons, as there alſo.

Ver. 19. Again, I ſay unto you, &c.] As the words in the former verſe ſeem to regard the whole body of the diſciples, whoſe deciſions in caſes brought before them, declaring them juſt or unjuſt, are determinate and unalterable; theſe ſeem to reſpect the one or two, that ſhould join the offended perſon in the reproof of the offender, and are ſpoken for their encouragement; who might think proper either to premiſe, or follow their engaging in ſuch a work with prayer: that if two of you ſhall agree on earth, as touching any thing that they ſhall aſk; both in the caſe before mentioned, and in any other thing; whether it be for themſelves or others; to aſſiſt them in the miniſtry of the word, and give ſucceſs to it, for the converſion of ſinners; and in the performance of any miracle, for the confirmation of the Goſpel; in the adminiſtration of ordinances, for the comfort of ſaints; and in laying on of cenſures, for the reclaiming of backſliders; or be it what it will that may be done, conſiſtent with the glory of God, the purpoſes of his mind, and the declarations of his will, and the good of men, provided they agree in their requeſts; though they are here on earth, and at ſuch a diſtance from heaven, from whence their help and aſſiſtance come: it ſhall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven; wth whom nothing is impoſſible; and who, as he regards the effectual fervent prayer of any righteous man, ſo more, of two agreed together in any one thing; and ſtill more, of a church and community of ſaints in their united requeſts: a great encouragement this to ſocial prayer, though ever ſo few are engaged in it.

---

[s] T. Bab. Erachin, fol. 16. 2. [t] Maimon. Hilch. Deyot, c. 6. §. 7. [u] Miſchar happeninim apud Buxtorf. Florileg. Heb. p. 297. [w] Ibid. [x] Maimon. Hilchot Iſhot, c. 12. §. 14. [y] Ib. c. 14. §. 9. & Moſes Kotſenſis Mitzvot Tora, pr. neg. 81. [z] T. Hieroſ. Demai, fol. 23. 1.

Ver. 20. For where two or three are gathered together, &c.] This ſeems to be ſaid in oppoſition to a Jewiſh notion, that a number leſs than ten, is not a congregation [a]; whereas, though the number is ever ſo few that are met together to pray to God, or to hear his word, attend on his ordinances, or do the buſineſs of his houſe, or tranſact any affair that is for the glory of God, and the good of ſouls, in my name, ſays Chriſt; that is, by his authority, depending on his aſſiſtance, calling upon his name, and making uſe of it, and ſeeking the glory of it: there am I in the midſt of them; preſiding over them, ruling in their hearts, directing their counſels, aſſiſting them in all they are concerned, confirming what they do, and giving a bleſſing and ſucceſs to all they are engaged in. The Jews, though they ſay there's no congregation leſs than ten, yet own that the divine preſence may be with a leſſer number, even as ſmall an one as here mentioned [b]. “Ten that ſit “and ſtudy in the law, the Shecinah dwells among “them, as it is ſaid, Pſal. lxxxii. 1. From whence “does this appear, if but five? from Amos ix. 6. “from whence, if but three? from Pſal. lxxxii. 1. “from whence, if but two? from Mal. iii. 16. “from whence, if but one? from Exod. xx. 24.” And again [c], “two that ſit together, and the words “of the law are between them, the Shecinah dwells “among them, according to Mal. iii. 16. from “whence does it appear, that if but one ſits and “ſtudies in the law, the holy bleſſed God hath fixed “a reward for him? from Lam. iii. 28.”

Ver. 21. Then came Peter unto him, &c.] Having heard and obſerved the rules Chriſt gave concerning offences and brotherly reproofs, he drew near to Chriſt, and put this queſtion to him: and ſaid, Lord, how oft ſhall my brother ſin againſt me, and I forgive him? He inſtances in a brother, becauſe it was ſuch an one Chriſt had been ſpeaking of; he makes no doubt of its being his duty to forgive him upon his repentance, and acknowledgment, but wanted to be informed, how often this was to be done, and aſks, whether until ſeven times? Which was, as he might think, a large number; and eſpecially, ſince it was double the number of times, that the Jewiſh doctors ſet for forgiveneſs: for thus they ſay [d], “A man that commits a ſin, the “firſt time they pardon him; the ſecond time they “pardon him; the third time they pardon him; “the fourth time they do not pardon, according “to Amos ii. 6. and Job xxxiii. 29.” Again, “he “that ſays I have ſinned, and I repent, they for“give him unto three times, and no more [e].”

Ver. 22. Jeſus ſaith unto him, I ſay not unto thee, &c.] Which is as if he had ſaid, obſerve what I am about to ſay, I do not agree to what thou ſayeſt to fix the number, until ſeven times only, but until ſeventy times ſeven; a certain number for an uncertain, ſee Gen. iv. 24. Chriſt's meaning is, that a man ſhould be all the days, and every day of his life, forgiving thoſe that ſin againſt him, as often as they repent and acknowledge their fault; and that no time is to be ſet for the exerciſe of the grace of forgiveneſs; but as often as there are objects and occaſions, though ever ſo many and frequent, it ſhould be uſed; and which he illuſtrates by the following parable.

Ver. 23. Therefore is the kingdom of heaven, &c.] The Goſpel church-ſtate, or the church of Chriſt under the Goſpel diſpenſation, and the methods of God's dealings in it: likened unto a certain king; or a man, a king, pointing either to Chriſt, the king Meſſiah, who is king of kings, and lord of lords, the king of ſaints and churches; who, as God, has a natural kingdom of providence, and as man and Mediator, a kingdom of grace; and will have a more viſibly glorious one, both in this world and in the other: or rather, the Father of Chriſt, as appears from the application of the parable, in ver. 35. who is the living God, and everlaſting king; whoſe is the kingdom of nature, grace, and glory: which would take account of his ſervants; not all mankind, though theſe are all in a ſenſe his ſervants, and accountable to him; nor only miniſters of the Goſpel, who are ſo in an eminent and peculiar ſenſe, and muſt give an account to God of their time and talents, and ſouls committed to them; but all that bear the chriſtian name, that are profeſſors of religion, that are either really or nominally, the ſubjects and ſervants of God. Theſe, it is ſometimes the will and pleaſure of God, to take account of; not of their perſons, or number, but of their conduct and behaviour; which, as it will be more fully done at death, or at judgment, ſo ſometimes is taken in this life: God ſometimes calls, and brings, profeſſors of religion to an account, and reckons with them by afflictive diſpenſations of providence; when he puts them upon reflecting how they have ſpent their time, made uſe of their talents and gifts, and have behaved in their families, and in the world, and church; or by dealing roundly with men's conſciences, awakening and convincing them of their ſins, of omiſſion and commiſſion, which ſeems to be intended here.

Ver. 24. And when he had begun to reckon, &c.] To open the book of conſcience, and to bring to account by ſome awakening providence, and ſtrong conviction: one was brought unto him; whether he would or no, through the force of an awakened conſcience, under guilt and terror; which owed him ten thouſand talents; which muſt be underſtood, either of gold, or ſilver: a talent of ſilver contained 3000 ſhekels, as appears from Exod. xxxviii. 25, 26. and was in value of our money 375 l. but a talent of gold was equal to 4500 l. of our [f] money. According to Dr. Prideaux [g], a talent of ſilver was 450 l. and a talent of gold, the proportion of gold to ſilver being reckoned as ſixteen to one, was 7200 l. and according to Biſhop Cumberland, a talent of ſilver was 353 l. 11 s. 10 d. ob. and a talent of gold of the ſame weight, was 5075 l. 15 s. 7 d. ob. The whole, according to Dr. Hammond, was a thouſand eight hundred ſeventy-five thouſand pounds, reckoning them ſilver talents; but if talents of gold are meant, what an immenſe ſum muſt ten thouſand of them be? According to ſome, ſeventy-two millions ſterling. The deſign of the phraſe, is to ſet forth the exceeding greatneſs of the debt. Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel reads it, ten thouſand manehs, or pounds; and ſo the Perſic verſion: now the value of a maneh of gold, was 75 l. and of ſilver, 7 l. 10 s.[h] take the ſum in the leaſt quantity and value, it was exceeding large. The Arabic verſion renders it, a ſum of talents, without mentioning the number, and may mean an innumerable one. Mention is made of ſuch a number of talents of ſilver, in Eſth. iii. 9. which Aben Ezra ſays is defective, and ſignifies ten thouſand thouſand talents. The ſecond Targum on the place ſays, that the ſum of ſix hundred thouſand zuzim, drachms, or pence (i. e. Roman ones) is ten thouſand talents of ſilver. Theſe ten thouſand talents intend ſins, which are called debts, in ſcripture; not that they are properly ſo, or owing to God, for then it would be right to pay them, but becauſe they bind over to puniſhment. All men owe a debt of thankfulneſs to God, for their beings, the preſervation of them, and all the mercies of life; and alſo a debt of obedience to the whole law, in failure of which, they are obliged to puniſhment: hence every ſin becomes a debt, and theſe are numerous; in-dwelling ſin, and the luſts thereof, are innumerable; as are actual ſins and tranſgreſſions; they are more than the hairs of a man's head, and are fitly expreſſed, both for the weight and quantity of them, by ten thouſand talents. In this light they appear to the conſcience of an awakened ſinner, who ſees that he has been doing nothing but ſin, all the days of his life; and that he has been continually breaking the law, one precept or another of it, in thought, word, or deed; which violations of the law, even in word and deed, are riſen up to ſo great a ſum, that he is not able to give it to any nearneſs, and with any exactneſs: he can't underſtand all his errors, nor expreſs the full number of them, or declare all their aggravated circumſtances; beſides the ſwarms of corruption of internal luſts and ſins, which he obſerves dwelling in his heart, and are as innumerable as the motes and atoms in a ſun-beam. The ſins of God's people, which have been all made to meet upon Chriſt, have been laid upon him by his Father's imputation of them to him, with his own conſent, are repreſented in this manner; ſee Pſal. xl. 12. And indeed, if the debts of one of them amount to ten thouſand talents, what muſt the ſum of all be, put together! and how great muſt be the ſtrength and power of Chriſt, to bear the weight of theſe ſins, and not be broken or diſcouraged, and fail, as he did not! and what a rich virtue and efficacy muſt there be in his blood, to pay off all theſe debts, and make ſatisfaction for them, which could never have been done, if he had not done it! for it is impoſſible that a perſon in ſuch circumſtances as here deſcribed, ſhould ever be able to recover himſelf, or pay his debts, as follows.

---

[a] Miſn. Sanhedrim, c. 1. §. 6. T. Bab. Megilla, fol. 23. 2. Gloſſ. in ib.

[b] Pirke Abot, c. 3. §. 6.

[c] Ib. §. 2.

[d] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 86. 2. Maimon. Hilch. Teſhuba, c. 3. §. 5.

[e] Abot R. Nathan, c. 40. fol. 9. 3.

[f] Brerewood de Nummis Heb. c. 4.

[g] Connection, Vol. I. Preface, p. 20.

Ver. 25. But foraſmuch as he had not to pay, &c.] Every ſinner is inſolvent: ſinful man has run out the whole ſtock of nature, and is become a bankrupt, and has nothing to offer by way of compoſition; nor has he any righteouſneſs to anſwer for him, nor any works of righteouſneſs which deſerve that name: and if he had, theſe are nothing in point of payment: for a debt of ſin, can't be diſcharged by a debt of obedience; ſince God has a prior right to the latter; and in paying it, a man does but what is his duty. Sin being committed againſt an infinite God, contracts the nature of an infinite debt, which can't be paid off by a finite creature. Chriſt only was able to pay this debt, and he has done it for his people; and without an intereſt in his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſatisfaction, every debtor is liable to be caſt, and will be caſt into the priſon of hell, there to lie till the uttermoſt farthing of the ten thouſand talents is paid, which will be to all eternity. We ſee what a ſad condition ſin has brought men into; it has ſtripped them of their eſtates and poſſeſſions; it has reduced them to want and beggary; it expoſes them to a priſon; to the juſt reſentments of their creditor; to the wrath of God, and the curſes of the law; and what little reaſon there is to think, yea, how impoſſible it is, that a man ſhould be able to merit any thing at the hands of God, to whom he is ſo greatly indebted: he muſt firſt pay his debts, which is a thing impracticable, before he can pretend to do any thing deſerving the notice of God; and even was he ſet free, and clear of all his debts, and entered upon a new life of obedience, and this ſtrictly attended to, without contracting any debts for the future, yet all this would be but what is due to God, and could merit nothing of him; ſee Luke xvii. 10. Rom. xi. 35, 36. We ſee alſo from hence, how much the ſaints are obliged to Chriſt Jeſus, and how thankful they ſhould be to him, who became a ſurety for ſuch inſolvent creatures; has paid all their debts for them, and procured for them every bleſſing of grace they ſtand in need of: but think, O ſinner, what thou wilt be able to ſay and do, when God comes to reckon with thee, and thou haſt nothing to pay, nor any to pay for thee, or be thy ſurety; a priſon muſt be thy portion for ever. His Lord commanded him to be ſold, and his wife and children, and all that he had; according to the Jewiſh laws, in ſuch a caſe: of a man's being ſold, or ſelling himſelf when poor, ſee Lev. xxv. 47. for the law in Exod. xxii. 3. referred to by ſome as an inſtance of this, reſpects the ſelling of a man for theft, and not for debt. Of the ſelling of a man's wife for the payment of his debts, I don't remember to have read any law concerning it, or inſtances of it; but of children being taken for bondmen by the creditor, for their father's debts, mention is made, 2 Kings iv. 1. Theſe children, by the Jewiſh writers[l], are ſaid to be the children of Obadiah, who contracted the debt to feed the prophets in a cave, when they were perſecuted by Jezebel; and the creditor, according to them, was Jehoram, the ſon of Ahab, who lent him money on uſury for this purpoſe, in his father's time; and now Obadiah being dead, he takes his children for the debt, and makes them bondmen; ſee alſo Neh. v. 5. There ſeems to be an alluſion to this practice, in Iſa. l. 1. and it was not only the cuſtom of the Jews to come upon children for the debts of parents, but of other nations: with the Athenians, if a father could not pay his debts, the ſon was obliged to pay, and in the mean while to be kept in bonds, till he did[k]: and as Grotius, in 2 Kings iv. 1. proves from Plutarch and Dionyſius Halicarnaſſenſis, children were ſold by the creditors of their parents, as in Aſia, at Athens, and at Rome. Now this expreſſes the ſtate of bondage, ſin as a debt, brings men into; they become ſlaves to their own luſts, vaſſals of ſatan, and in bondage to the law; and alſo the ruin and deſtruction it expoſes them to; as, the curſe and condemnation of the law, the wrath of God, eternal death, even the deſtruction of body and ſoul in hell: and payment to be made; by puniſhment, which will always be making, and never finiſhed. This order of the king was not intended to be executed, as the ſequel ſhews; but declares the will of God, that the ſad and woful condition of man ſhould be ſet before him by the miniſters of the word; ſignifying what his ſtate is, how deſerving of vengeance, and what muſt be his portion, if grace prevent not: the view of which is to vindicate the rights of law and juſtice, to expreſs the ſinners deſerts, and move him to apply to the Lord for grace and mercy, which effect it had.

---

[h] Brerewood de Nummis. Heb. c. 4.

[l] Targum Jon. in loc. Tanchuma in Abarbinel in loc. Jarchi, Kimchi & Laniado in ib.

[k] Alex. ab Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 6. c. 10.

Ver. 26. The ſervant therefore fell down, &c.] At his feet, upon his knees, or on his face, to the ground; not being able to ſtand before him, or look him in the face, and much leſs to anſwer the demands of his law and juſtice; but owned the debt, and his preſent inability to pay, and worſhipped him: the Vulgate Latin reads it, prayed, or intreated him, ſaying, Lord have patience with me; give me but time, ſpare me a little longer, ſend me not to priſon, and I will pay thee all: a very weak and fooliſh promiſe, but what is uſual for men in ſuch circumſtances to make. Thus men, under guilt, and dreadful apprehenſions of wrath and ruin, frequently promiſe, that if their lives are but ſpared, what they will do for God, and in a religious way; and very fooliſhly and ignorantly imagine, that by their humiliation and tears, their prayers, and other ſervices, by their good lives and converſations, for the future, they ſhall be able to make compenſation to God for all the iniquities they have been guilty of: which ſhows them to be exceeding ignorant of the nature of ſin, which is committed againſt an infinite being, and therefore reconciliation for it cannot be made by a finite creature; as alſo of the nature of their duties and ſervices, which, when performed, in ever ſo good a manner, can never make ſatisfaction for paſt offences, theſe being duties they are obliged to perform; and would have been equally obliged thereunto if they had never offended; and likewiſe, betrays great vanity, pride, boaſting, and conceit of themſelves, and abilities, as that they ſhall be able, in a little time, to pay all, when they have nothing at all to pay with: and was patience to be exerciſed towards them ever ſo long, they would ſtill be in the ſame condition, and in no better capacity to make payment; but, on the contrary, would ſtill run a larger ſcore, and be more and more in debt. Indeed, the patience and long-ſuffering of God to his people is ſalvation; not that by giving them time, and bearing with them, they diſcharge their debts, and work out their ſalvation; but waiting upon them to be gracious to them, he brings them to repentance, to a ſenſe of themſelves and ſins, and to an acknowledgment of them, and leads them, by faith, to his ſon for righteouſneſs, forgiveneſs, ſalvation, and eternal life; but as for others, his patience towards them, and forbearance of them, iſſue in their everlaſting deſtruction, which, by their iniquities, they are fitted for.

Ver. 27. Then the Lord of that ſervant was moved with compaſſion, &c.] Or had compaſſion on him, ſhewed pity to him, and extended mercy towards him; not that he was moved hereunto by any actions of his, as his proſtrating himſelf before him, and his worſhipping him, nor by his cries and intreaties, nor by his promiſes, which were not at all to be depended on, but by his own goodneſs, and will; for not to any thing that this man ſaid, or did, nor to any deſerts of his, but to the pure mercy, and free grace of God, is to be aſcribed what is after related: and looſed him; from obligation to puniſhment, and from a ſpirit of bondage, through the guilt of ſin, and work of the law upon his conſcience: and forgave him the debt; the whole debt of ten thouſand talents: for when God forgives ſin, he forgives all ſin, original and actual, ſecret and open, ſins of omiſſion and commiſſion, of heart, lip, and life, of thought, word, and deed, paſt, preſent, and to come; and that freely, according to his abundant mercy, and the riches of his grace, without any regard to any merits, motives, and conditions in the creature; though not without reſpect to the ſatisfaction of Chriſt, which no ways detracts from the grace and mercy of God, ſince this is owing to his gracious proviſion and acceptation. It was grace in God that provided, ſent, and parted with his ſon to be the propitiatory ſacrifice for ſin, and accepted the ſatisfaction when made, in the room, and ſtead of ſinners: it was grace in Chriſt to become a ſurety for them, to aſſume their nature, to ſhed his precious blood, and give himſelf an offering, and a ſacrifice for them; and it is diſtinguiſhing grace that this ſatisfaction ſhould be provided, made, and accepted, not for angels, but for men; and though it is at the expence of Chriſt's blood and life, that this ſatisfaction is made, and remiſſion of ſins obtained, yet the whole is entirely free to thoſe who are partakers of it; they have it without money, and without price. So, that though the ſatisfaction of Chriſt is not expreſly mentioned in this parable, and forgiveneſs of ſin, which lies in a non-remembrance, and non-imputation of it, in a covering, and blotting it out, and in remitting the obligation to puniſhment for it, is aſcribed to the compaſſion and mercy of God, yet it is implied; ſince theſe two involve each other: the ſpecial mercy of God, in the forgiveneſs of ſins, ſtreams only thro' the blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice of Chriſt; and the ſacrifice and ſatisfaction of Chriſt largely diſplay the grace and mercy of God.

Ver. 28. But the ſame ſervant went out, &c.] From his Lord's palace and preſence, immediately, directly, after he had got his pardon and liberty: and found one of his fellow-ſervants; a fellow-creature and chriſtian; not only one of the ſame nature and ſpecies, but of the ſame profeſſion of religion, and in the ſervice of the ſame kind and generous maſter: which owed him an hundred pence; which, if underſtood of Roman pence, each penny being ſeven pence half-penny of our money, amounted to no more than three pounds and half a crown; a ſmall ſum, in compariſon of the ten thouſand talents which had been juſt now forgiven him: for ſo ſins committed againſt men, againſt fellow-creatures, or fellow-chriſtians, are but ſmall, when compared with thoſe which are committed againſt God. All which circumſtances, as that it was immediately after he had been forgiven himſelf; that it was a fellow-ſervant he found; and the ſum he owed him ſo inconſiderable, greatly aggravate his inhuman carriage, next related: and he laid hands on him, and took him by the throat, ſaying, pay me that thou oweſt; he laid hold on him in a violent manner, and uſed him with great inhumanity: he took him by the collar, and ſhook him, and griped him ſo hard about the neck, that he almoſt throttled, and ſtrangled, or choaked him, as the word ſignifies, and is ſo rendered in moſt verſions. It anſwers to the Hebrew word חנק, which is uſed by the Jews [1] in the ſame ſenſe; "חוניק, he that throttles any one "(who is indebted to him) in the ſtreets, and his "friend comes up and ſays, let him go, and I'll "pay thee, he is free, &c." This man inſiſted on payment of the whole debt; which expreſſes the rigour and ſeverity uſed by ſome profeſſors of religion to their fellow-chriſtians; who, having offended them, in ever ſo ſmall a matter, will not put up with the affront, nor forgive the injury, without having the moſt ample ſatisfaction, and avenging themſelves upon them to the uttermoſt.

Ver. 29. And his fellow-ſervant fell down at his feet, &c.] In the moſt humble and ſubmiſſive manner, juſt as he himſelf had done a little before at the feet of his Lord: and beſought him, ſaying, have patience with me, and I will pay thee all; uſing the very ſame words, in which he had expreſſed himſelf to his Lord, and had ſucceeded.

Ver. 30. And he would not, &c.] Have patience with him, give him time for payment, and forbear ſeverity at preſent, as he requeſted: but went and caſt him into priſon, till he ſhould pay the debt; had him before a proper officer, and proved his debt, and got him ſent to jail, there to lie till the whole debt was paid; which, as it diſcovered ill-nature, ſevere uſage, ſo, great ignorance and ſtupidity; for a priſon will pay no debt: which ſets forth the rigorous proceedings of ſome church-members againſt their brethren, that have diſpleaſed them; who immediately bring the matter before the church, and wont be eaſy unleſs ſome cenſure is laid upon them, or they are caſt out, until full ſatisfaction is given them, whereby oftentimes an uſeful member of a church is loſt.

Ver. 31. So when his fellow-ſervants ſaw what was done, &c.] What hard uſage, and ill treatment, their fellow-ſervant met with; the Syriac reads, their fellow-ſervants, being the fellow-ſervants both of the creditor and the debtor: they were very ſorry; they were greatly grieved and troubled at the cruelty of the one, and the unhappineſs of the other; being more tender-hearted, and of a more forgiving ſpirit than he: and came and told unto their Lord all that was done; to their fellow-ſervant, by one that had ſo lately received ſuch favours from him: this may be expreſſive of the concern of ſome members of churches at ſuch conduct; who, tho' they may not have ſtrength and number ſufficient to oppoſe ſuch meaſures, yet being ſecretly grieved at ſuch cruel methods, go to the throne of grace, and ſpread the caſe before the Lord, tell him all that is done by way of complaint; which is no impeachment of his omniſcience, only ſhews their trouble for ſuch male practices, and the ſenſe they have, by whom only ſuch grievances can be redreſſed.

Ver. 32. Then his Lord, after that he had called him, &c.] Or ordered him to be called, and brought before him, ſaid unto him, O thou wicked ſervant! Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel reads, thou ſervant of Belial; thou cruel and hard-hearted man to thy fellow-ſervant, and ungrateful creature to me, on whom my goodneſs to thee has not made any impreſſion, nor taken any effect: I forgave thee all that debt; all that vaſt debt of ten thouſand talents, and that freely: becauſe thou deſiredſt me; not to forgive the debt, but to have patience, and give time, and therefore unaſked forgave the whole ſum, every farthing of it; which was ſuch an inſtance of pure goodneſs, as was enough to have wrought upon an heart of ſtone, and engaged the moſt tender concern and pity for a fellow-creature, as well as filled with thankfulneſs to the kind benefactor. The favour, ſo lately beſtowed on him, is juſtly obſerved as an aggravation of his wickedneſs.

Ver. 33. Shouldſt not thou alſo have had compaſſion, &c.] It is but reaſonable, what ought to be, and may be expected, that ſuch who have received mercy, ſhould ſhow mercy; and as the Lord had compaſſion on this man, and had forgiven him ſuch an immenſe ſum, and ſaved him, his wife and children, from being ſold for bond-ſlaves, the leaſt he could have done after this, would have been to have followed ſuch an example, and have had mercy, as his Lord ſays to him, on thy fellow-ſervant; between whom, and him, there was not ſo great a diſtance, as between him, and his Lord; and the ſum ſo ſmall that was owing to him, as not to be mentioned with his: even as I had pity on thee; ſuch an inſtance of pity and compaſſion did not only ſet him an example, worthy of his imitation, but laid him under an obligation to have acted ſuch a part.

Ver. 34. And his Lord was wroth, &c.] Very angry, greatly incenſed, and juſtly provoked at ſuch inhuman treatment: and delivered him to the tormentors, or jail-keepers. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, to them that judge, or the judges; Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel, to the puniſhers, or ſuch that inflicted puniſhment according to the decree of the judge: from both, the ſenſe may be, that he was delivered over to proper judges of his caſe, to be treated as the nature of it required, to be caſt into priſon, and there endure all the ſeverities of law and juſtice: till he ſhould pay all that was due unto him; which being ſo vaſt a ſum, and he but a ſervant, could never be done: but inaſmuch as this man was fully and freely pardoned before, how comes it to paſs, that full payment of his debt is yet inſiſted on? It is certain, that ſin, once pardoned by God, he never puniſhes for it; for pardon with him is of all ſin; he forgives all treſpaſſes, though ever ſo many, and remits the whole debt, be it ever ſo large; which act of his grace will never be revoked: it is one of his gifts which are without repentance; it proceeds upon, and comes through a plenary ſatisfaction for ſin made by his own ſon, and therefore it would be unjuſt to puniſh for it: by this act, ſin is covered out of ſight; 'tis blotted out, and entirely done away, and that for ever. Hence ſome think this man had only the offer of a pardon, and not that itſelf; but it is not an offer of pardon, that Chriſt, by his blood, has procured, and is exalted to give, but that itſelf; and this man had his debt, his whole debt forgiven him: others think, that this was a church-forgiveneſs, who looked upon him, judged him, and received him as one forgiven; but for his cruel uſage of a fellow-member, delivered him to the tormentors, paſſed cenſures on him, and excommunicated him, till he ſhould give full ſatisfaction, which is more likely: others, that this forgiveneſs was only in his own apprehenſions: he preſumed, and hoped he was forgiven, when he was not; but then his crime could not have been ſo aggravated as it is: rather, this forgiveneſs is to be underſtood of averting calamities and judgments, likely to fall on him for his iniquities, which is ſometimes the ſenſe of this phraſe; ſee 1 Kings viii. 34, 36, 39. and ſo his being delivered to the tormentors may mean, his being diſtreſſed with an accuſing guilty conſcience, an harraſſing, vexing devil, many misfortunes of life, and temporal calamities. Though after all, this is not ſtrictly to be applied to any particular caſe or perſon, but the ſcope of the parable is to be attended to; which is to enforce mutual forgiveneſs among men, from having received full and free pardon at the hands of God; and that without the former, there's little reaſon to expect the latter, as appears from what follows.

---

[1] Apud Caſtell. Lexic. Polyglott. col. 1314.

Ver. 35. So likewiſe ſhall my heavenly father, &c.] This is the accommodation and application of the parable, and opens the deſign and intent of it; ſhewing, that God, who is Chriſt's father, that is in heaven, will act in like manner towards all ſuch perſons, who are cruel and hard-hearted to their brethren, and are of mercileſs and unforgiving ſpirits; for ſo it is ſaid, he will do alſo unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their treſpaſſes. The phraſe, their treſpaſſes, is omitted by the Vulgate Latin, the Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions, but is in all the Greek copies; and deſigns not pecuniary debts, though theſe are to be forgiven, and not rigorouſly exacted in ſome caſes, and circumſtances; but all injuries by word or deed, all offences, though ever ſo juſtly taken, or unjuſtly given; theſe ſhould be forgiven fully, freely, and from the heart, forgetting, as well as forgiving, not upbraiding with them, or with former offences, and aggravating them; and ſhould alſo pray to God that he would forgive alſo. 'Tis certainly the will of God, that we ſhould forgive one another all treſpaſſes and offences. The examples of God and Chriſt ſhould lead and engage unto it; the pardon of ſin received by ourſelves from the hands of God ſtrongly enforces it; the peace and comfort of communion in public ordinances require it; the reverſe is contrary to the ſpirit and character of chriſtians, is very diſpleaſing to our heavenly father, greatly unlike to Chriſt, and grieving to the Spirit of God.

CHAP. XIX.

Ver. 1. AND it came to paſs, that when Jeſus had finiſhed theſe ſayings, &c.] Concerning humility, avoiding offences, the methods to be taken in reproving offenders, and the forgiveneſs that is to be exerciſed towards them: he departed from Galilee; where he had chiefly preached and wrought his miracles, no more to return thither till after his reſurrection: and came into the coaſts of Judea beyond Jordan; that is, to that country which was called beyond Jordan, and bordered on Judea; coming ſtill nearer and nearer to Jeruſalem, where he had told his diſciples, a little while ago, he muſt come, and ſuffer, and die. Rather, it ſhould be rendered, on this ſide Jordan, as alſo in John i. 28. for the coaſts of Judea were on this ſide; ſo עבר הירדן is rendered in Deut. iv. 49.

Ver. 2. And great multitudes followed him, &c.] The Perſic verſion adds, of the ſick and diſeaſed; but all that followed him were not ſuch, tho' ſome were: theſe came not only from Galilee, but from the adjacent parts, from the country beyond Jordan, and the coaſts of Judea, where he had been formerly; and who reſort to him again, as Mark obſerves; and whom, according to his uſual manner, he taught and inſtructed in the knowledge of divine things, and confirmed his doctrines by miracles: and he healed them there; in the above-mentioned places, even as many of them as were ſick and diſeaſed.

Ver. 3. The Phariſees alſo came unto him, &c.] Either from the places round about, or from Jeruſalem: theſe came unto him, not for the ſake of learning, or to be inſtructed by him; but as ſpies upon him, to obſerve what he ſaid and did, and watch every opportunity to expoſe him to the contempt and hatred of the people; tempting him with a queſtion about divorces, in order to enſnare him: and ſaying to him, is it lawful for a man to put away his wife for every cauſe? be it ever ſo trivial, as ſaid the ſchool of Hillell: for there was a difference between the ſchool of Shammai, and the ſchool of Hillell about this matter; the former inſiſted that a man might not put away his wife but in caſe of uncleanneſs; but the latter allowed putting away for very trifling things; as if ſhe ſpoiled her huſband's food by over roaſting, or over ſalting it; and, as one of the doctors ſay, if he found another woman that was more beautiful than her; ſee the note on ch. v. 32. This queſtion being now agitated in the ſchools, they artfully put to Chriſt; not for information, but with a view to reproach him in ſome way or other; and that he might incur the reſentment of one party or another, as he ſhould anſwer. They might argue thus with themſelves, and hope to ſucceed in this manner; ſhould he be on the ſide of the ſchool of Shammai, which was the weakeſt ſide, and leſs popular, as they had reaſon to believe he would, he would then expoſe himſelf to the reſentment of the ſchool of Hillell, and all on that ſide the queſtion; ſhould he take the part of Hillell, he would make the ſchool of Shammai his enemies; ſhould he forbid putting away of wives, which Moſes allowed, they would then traduce him as contrary to Moſes, and his law, which could not fail of ſetting the people againſt him; and ſhould he conſent to it, they would charge him with contradicting himſelf, or with inconſtancy in his doctrine, ſince he had before aſſerted the unlawfulneſs of it, but in caſe of adultery; and ſhould he abide by this, they might hope to irritate the men againſt him, who would think their liberty granted by Moſes was intrenched on; as, on the other hand, ſhould he, according to the queſtion, admit of putting away for every cauſe, the women would be provoked at him, who would be left to the uncertain humour and caprice of their huſbands; ſo that either way they hoped to get an advantage of him.

Ver. 4. And he anſwered and ſaid unto them, &c.] Not by replying directly to the queſtion, but by referring them to the original creation of man, and to the firſt inſtitution of marriage, previous to the law of Moſes: have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning, made them male and female? This may be read in Gen. i. 27. and from thence this ſenſe of things collected; that God, who in the beginning of time, or of the creation, as Mark expreſſes it, made all things, the heavens, and the earth, and all that is therein, and particularly man, as the Vulgate Latin, and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel ſupply it here, made the firſt parents of mankind, male and female; not male and females, but one male, and one female; firſt, one male, and then of him one female, who, upon her creation, was brought and married to him; ſo that in this original conſtitution, no proviſion was made for divorce, or poligamy. Adam could not marry more wives than one, nor could he put away Eve for every cauſe, and marry another: now either the Phariſees had read this account, or they had not; if they had not, they were guilty of great negligence and ſloth; if they had, they either underſtood it or not; if they did not underſtand it, it was greatly to their reproach, who pretended to great knowledge of the ſcriptures, and to be able to explain them to others; and if they did underſtand it, there was no need for this queſtion, which therefore muſt be put with an evil deſign.

Ver. 5. And ſaid, &c.] Gen. ii. 24. where they ſeem to be the words of Adam, tho' here they are aſcribed to God, who made Adam and Eve; and, as if they were ſpoken by him, when he brought them together: and which is eaſily reconciled by obſerving, that theſe words were ſpoken by Adam, under the direction of a divine revelation; ſhewing, that there would be fathers, and mothers, and children; and that the latter, when grown up, would enter into a marriage-ſtate, and leave their parents, and cleave to their proper yoke-fellows, which relations then were not in being: this therefore being the effect of a pure revelation from God, may be truly affirmed to be ſaid by him. Some think they are the words of Moſes the hiſtorian; and if they were, as they were delivered by divine inſpiration, they may be rightly called the word of God. Jarchi's note on the text exactly agrees herewith, which is, רוח הקדש אומרת כן, the holy Spirit ſays thus: for this cauſe ſhall a man leave father and mother, and ſhall cleave to his wife; and not wives: and the phraſe denotes that cloſe union between a man and his wife, which is not to be diſſolved for every cauſe, it being ſtricter than that which is between parents and children; for the wife muſt be cleaved unto, and father and mother forſaken: not that upon this new relation between man and wife, the former relation between parents and children ceaſes; nor does this phraſe denote an entire ſeparation from them, ſo as to have the affection alienated from them, or to be diſengaged from all duty and obedience to them, and care and regard for them, for the future; but a relinquiſhing the houſe of his father and mother's bed, as all the three Targums on the place explain it: that is, he ſhall quit his father's houſe, and not bed and board there, and live with him as before; but having taken a wife to himſelf, ſhall live and cohabit with her: and they twain ſhall be one fleſh; the word twain is not in the Hebrew text in Geneſis, but in the Septuagint verſion compiled by Jews, in the Samaritan Pentateuch, and verſion, and in the Targum of Jonathan ben Uzziel, who renders it, as here, ויהון תרויהון לבישרא חד, and they two ſhall be one fleſh. This is the true ſenſe, for neither more nor leſs can poſſibly be meant; and denotes, that near conjunction, and ſtrict union, between a man and his wife, the wife being a part of himſelf, and both as one fleſh, and one body, and therefore not to be parted on every ſlight occaſion; and has a particular reſpect to the act of carnal copulation, which only ought to be between one man and one woman, lawfully married to each other; ſee the note on 1 Cor. vi. 16.

Ver. 6. Wherefore they are no more twain, &c.] They were two before marriage, but now no more ſo; not but that they remain two diſtinct perſons, but one fleſh; or, as the Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions read, one body: hence the wife is to be loved by the huſband as his own body, as himſelf, as his own fleſh, Eph. v. 28, 29. what therefore God hath joined together; or, by the firſt inſtitution of marriage, has declared to be ſo cloſely united together, as to be, as it where, one fleſh, and one body, as huſband and wife are; let no man put aſunder; break the bond of union, diſſolve the relation, and ſeparate them from each other, for every trivial thing, upon any ſlight occaſion, or for any thing, but what is hereafter mentioned. The ſenſe is, that the bond of marriage being made by God himſelf, is ſo ſacred and inviolable, as that it ought not to be diſſolved by any man; not by the huſband himſelf, or any other for him; nor by any ſtate or government, by any prince or potentate, by any legiſlator whatever; no, not by Moſes himſelf, who is, at leaſt, included, if not chiefly deſigned here, tho' not named, to avoid offence: and God and man being oppoſed in this paſſage, ſhews, that marriage is an inſtitution and appointment of God, and therefore not to be changed and altered by man at his pleaſure; 'tis not merely a civil, but a ſacred affair, in which God is concerned.

Ver. 7. They ſay unto him, &c.] That is, the Phariſees, who object the law of Moſes to him, hoping hereby to enſnare him, and expoſe him to the reſentment of the people, ſhould he reject that, as they ſuppoſed he would; why did Moſes then command to give a writing of divorcement, and put her away? referring to Deut. xxiv. 1. which they thought to be a contradiction, and what they knew not how to reconcile to the doctrine Chriſt had delivered, concerning the original inſtitution of marriage, and the cloſe union there is between a man and his wife, by virtue of it, and which is not to be diſſolved by men. Concerning a writing of divorcement, and the form, and manner of it, ſee the note on ch. v. 31.

Ver. 8. He ſaith unto them, &c.] In anſwer to their objection; Moſes, becauſe of the hardneſs of your hearts, ſuffered you to put away your wives: in which may be obſerved, that, tho' it was by divine direction that Moſes, in his ſyſtem of laws, allowed of divorces; yet not God, but he is ſaid to do it, becauſe it was a branch of the political and judicial laws, by which the people of the Jews were governed under Moſes, and whilſt the Moſaic oeconomy continued, and did not concern other people, and other times; and therefore 'tis ſaid you, and your wives, you Jews, and you only, and not the Gentiles. And ſo the Jews ſay [m], that the Gentiles have no divorces: for thus they repreſent God, ſaying; "in Iſrael I have granted divorces, I have "not granted divorces among the nations of the "world. R. Chananiah, in the name of R. Phinehas, obſerved, that in every other ſection it is "written, the Lord of hoſts, but here it is written, the God of Iſrael; to teach thee, that the "holy, bleſſed God does not join his name to di"vorces, but in Iſrael only. R. Chayah Rabbah "ſays, גוים אין להן גירושין, the Gentiles have no "divorces." Beſides, this was a direct poſitive command to the Jews, as the Phariſees ſuggeſt in their objection; it was only a ſufferance, a permiſſion in ſome caſes, and not in every one; and that becauſe of the hardneſs of their hearts; they being ſuch a ſtubborn and inflexible people, that when they were once diſpleaſed there was no reconciling them; and ſo malicious and revengeful, that if this had not been granted, would have uſed their wives, that diſpleaſed them, in a moſt cruel, and barbarous manner, if not have murdered them: ſo that this grant was made, not to indulge their luſts, but to prevent greater evils; and not ſo much as a privilege and liberty to the men, as in favour of the women; who, when they could not live peaceably and comfortably with a man, might be diſmiſſed, and marry another: but from the beginning it was not ſo; from the beginning of time, or of the creation, or of the world, or at the firſt inſtitution of marriage, and in the firſt ages of the world, there was no ſuch permiſſion, nor any ſuch practice. This was not the declared will of God at firſt, nor was it ever done by any good men before the times of Moſes: we never read that Adam, or Seth, or Noah, or Abraham, put away their wives, upon any conſideration; though in the latter there might have been ſome appearance of reaſon for ſo doing, on account of ſterility, but this he did not; nor Iſaac, nor Jacob, nor any of the patriarchs.

---

[m] T. Hieroſ. Kidduſhin, fol. 58. 3

Ver. 9. And I ſay unto you, &c.] To his diſciples, when they were with him alone in the houſe, and aſked him more particularly about the ſubject, concerning which he had been diſcourſing with the Phariſees, as Mark obſerves, ch. x. 10, 11. when he ſaid to them much the ſame things he had delivered before in Matt. v. 32. whoſoever ſhall put away his wife; ſeparate her from his perſon, houſe, and bed, and diſmiſs her as his wife, no more to be conſidered in that relation to him, except it be for fornication; or whoredom, for defiling his bed: for this is not to be underſtood of fornication committed before, but of uncleanneſs after marriage, which deſtroys their being one fleſh: and ſhall marry another woman, committeth adultery; Mark adds, againſt her; which may be underſtood either of the woman he marries, which not being lawfully done, ſhe lives in adultery with another woman's huſband; or of his former wife, and who is ſtill his wife, and to whoſe injury he has married another; and he not only commits adultery himſelf, but, as in Matt. v. 32. cauſeth her to commit adultery alſo, by being the occaſion of marrying another man, when ſhe is ſtill his lawful wife: and whoſo marrieth her which is put away, for any other cauſe than adultery, doth commit adultery alſo; ſince he cohabits with another man's wife; ſee the note on Matt. v. 32.

Ver. 10. His diſciples ſay unto him, &c.] Being ſurprized at this account of things, it being quite contrary to what they had been taught, and very different from the general practice and uſage of their nation: if the caſe of a man be ſo with his wife; if they are ſo cloſely joined together in marriage; if they are, as it were, one fleſh, or one body, that a man's wife is himſelf; that the bond between them is ſo inviolable, that it is not to be diſſolved, but in caſe of adultery; that if a ſeparation be made by a bill of divorce, in any other caſe, and either party marry again, they are guilty of adultery; if a man can't part with his wife lawfully, provided ſhe be chaſte, and is faithful to his bed, let her be what ſhe will otherwiſe, though ever ſo diſagreeable in her perſon, and troubleſome in her behaviour; tho' ſhe may be paſſionate, and a brawler; though ſhe may be drunken, luxurious, and extravagant, and mind not the affairs of her family, yet if ſhe is not an adultreſs, muſt not be put away: it is not good to marry; it would be more expedient and adviſeable for a man to live always a ſingle life, than to run the riſque of marrying a woman, that may prove very diſagreeable and uncomfortable; to whom he muſt be bound all the days of his or her life, and, in ſuch a caſe, not be able to relieve and extricate himſelf. This they ſaid under the prejudice of a national law and cuſtom, which greatly prevailed, and under the influence of a carnal heart.

Ver. 11. But he ſaid unto them, &c.] With reſpect to the inference or concluſion, the diſciples formed from what he had aſſerted: all men cannot receive this ſaying; of theirs, that it is not good to marry, but it is more proper and expedient to live a ſingle life: every man, as the Syriac verſion renders it, is not ספק לה, ſufficient, or fit, for this thing; every one has not the gift of continency, and indeed very few; and therefore it is expedient for ſuch to marry: for what the diſciples ſaid, tho' it might be true in part, yet not in the whole; and though the ſaying might be proper and pertinent enough to ſome perſons, yet not to all, and indeed to none, ſave they to whom it is given; to receive ſuch a ſaying, to live unmarried with content, having the gift of chaſtity; for this is not of nature, but of grace; it is the gift of God.

Ver. 12. For there are ſome eunuchs, &c.] Our Lord here diſtinguiſhes the various ſorts of perſons, that can, and do live in a ſingle ſtate with content: ſome by nature, and others by violence offered to them, are rendered uncapable of entering into a marriage-ſtate; and others, through the gift of God, and under the influence of his grace, abſtain from marriage chearfully and contentedly, in order to be more uſeful in the intereſt of religion; but the number of either of theſe is but few, in compariſon of ſuch who chuſe a conjugal ſtate, and with whom it is right to enter into it, notwithſtanding all the difficulties that may attend it. Some men are eunuchs, and of theſe there are different ſorts; there are ſome, which were ſo born from their mother's womb; meaning, not ſuch who through a natural temper and inclination of mind, could eaſily abſtain from marriage, and choſe to live ſingle; but ſuch who had ſuch defects in nature that they were impotent, unfit for, and unable to perform the duties of a marriage-ſtate; who, as ſome are born without hands or feet, theſe were born without proper and perfect organs of generation; and ſuch an one was, by the Jews, frequently called, סריס חמה, an eunuch of the ſun [n]: that is, as their doctors [o] explain it, one that from his mother's womb never ſaw the ſun but as an eunuch; that is, one that is born ſo; and that ſuch an one is here intended, ought not to be doubted. The ſigns of ſuch an eunuch, are given by the Jewiſh [p] writers, which may be conſulted by thoſe, that have ability and leiſure. This ſort is ſometimes [q] called סריס בידי שמים, an eunuch by the hands of heaven, or God, in diſtinction from thoſe who are ſo by the hands, or means of men, and are next mentioned: and there are ſome eunuchs, which were made eunuchs of men; as among the Romans formerly, and which Domitian the Emperor forbid by a law [r]; and more eſpecially in the Eaſtern countries, and to this day among the Turks, that they may the more ſafely be entruſted with the cuſtody of their women; and this ſort the Jews call, סריס אדם, an eunuch of men, or בידי אדם, by the hands of men. The diſtinction between an eunuch of the ſun, and an eunuch of men, is ſo frequent with the Jews [s], and ſo well known to them, that a queſtion need not be made of our Lord's referring to it: and there be eunuchs which have made themſelves eunuchs; not in a literal ſenſe, in which the words are not to be taken, as they were by Origen; who though otherwiſe too much purſued the allegorical way of interpreting ſcripture, here took it literally, and caſtrated himſelf [t]; as did alſo a ſort of hereticks, called Valeſians [u], from one Valens an Arabian; and which practice is recommended by Philo the Jew [w], and by heathen philoſophers [x], for the ſake of chaſtity. But here it means ſuch, who having the gift of continency without mutilating their bodies, or indulging any unnatural luſts, can live chaſtly without the uſe of women, and chuſe celebacy: for the kingdom of heaven's ſake; not in order, by their chaſte and ſingle life, to merit and obtain the kingdom of glory; but that they might be more at leiſure, being free from the incumbrances of a marriage-ſtate, to attend the worſhip and ſervice of God, the ordinances of the Goſpel church-ſtate, to minſter in, and preach the Goſpel of Chriſt, and be a means of ſpreading it in the world, and of enlarging his kingdom and intereſt. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it: whoever is able to receive cordially, and embrace heartily, the above ſaying concerning the expediency and goodneſs of a ſingle life, and having the gift of continency, can live according to it, let him take it, and hold it faſt, and act up to it; he may have leſs of worldly trouble, and be more uſeful for God in the Goſpel of Chriſt, and to the intereſt of religion; but this ſhould be a voluntary thing; no man ſhould be forced into it; and he that goes into it, ought to conſider well whether he is able to contain, or no.

---

[n] T. Bab. Yebamot, fol. 75. 1. 79. 2. & 80. 1. Maimon. Hilch. Iſhot, c. 2. §. 14.

[o] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Yebamot, c. 8. §. 4.

[p] Bartenora, ibid. & Maimon. Hilch. Iſhot, ut ſupra.

[q] T. Bab. Yebamot, fol. 80. 2.

[r] Philoſtrat. vit. Apollon. l. 6. c. 17.

[s] Miſn. Yebamot, c. 8. §. 4. Zabim, c. 2. §. 1. T. Hieroſ. Yebamot, fol. 9. 4. Maimon. Hilch. Iſhot, c. 2. §. 26. & 4. 18. Mechoſre Caphara, c. 3. §. 6. Miſhcabumoſhab, c. 1. §. 5.

Ver. 13. Then were there brought unto him little children, &c.] It does not appear that they were new born babes; the words uſed by either of the Evangeliſts, do not always ſignify ſuch, but are ſometimes uſed of ſuch, as are capable of going alone; yea, of receiving inſtructions, of underſtanding the ſcriptures, and even of one of twelve years of age, Matt. xviii. 2. Mark v. 39, 42. 2 Tim. iii. 15. nor is it probable that infants juſt born, or within a month, ſhould be had abroad. Moreover, theſe were ſuch as Chriſt called unto him, Luke xviii. 16. and were capable of coming to him of themſelves, as his words following ſuppoſe; nor does their being brought to him, or his taking them in his arms, contradict this; ſince the ſame things are ſaid of ſuch, as could walk of themſelves, Matt. xii. 22. and xvii. 16. Mark ix. 36. Nor is it known whoſe children they were, whether their parents were believers or unbelievers, nor by whom they were brought: but the end for which they were brought is expreſſed, that he ſhould put his hands on them, and pray; not that he ſhould baptize them, nor did he; which may be concluded from the entire ſilence of all the Evangeliſts; and from an expreſs declaration that Chriſt baptized none; and from the mention of other ends for which they were brought, as that Chriſt ſhould touch them, Mark x. 13. Luke xviii. 15. as he ſometimes uſed to do perſons, when he healed them of diſeaſes; and probably ſome of thoſe infants, if not all of them, were diſeaſed, and brought to be cured; otherwiſe, it is not eaſy to conceive, what they ſhould be touched by him for: or as here, that he might put his hands on them, and pray over them, and bleſs them, as was uſual with the Jews to do; ſee Gen. xlix. 14, 15, 16. and it was common with them, to bring their children to venerable perſons, men of note for religion and piety, to have their bleſſing and prayers [y]: and the diſciples rebuked them; not the children, as the Perſic verſion reads, but thoſe that brought them, as Mark obſerves; either becauſe they came in a rude and diſorderly manner, and were very noiſy and clamorous; or they might think it would be too troubleſome to Chriſt, to go through ſuch a ceremony with ſo many of them; or that it was too mean for him, and below him to take notice of them; or for fear he ſhould take freſh occaſion, on the ſight of theſe children, to rebuke them again for their pride and ambition. However, from this rebuke and prohibition of the diſciples, it looks plainly as if it had never been the practice of the Jews, nor of John the Baptiſt, nor of Chriſt and his diſciples, to baptize infants; for had this been then in uſe, they would ſcarcely have forbid and rebuked thoſe that brought them, ſince they might have thought they brought them to be baptized; but knowing of no ſuch uſage that ever obtained in that nation, neither among thoſe that did, or did not believe in Chriſt, they forbad them.

Ver. 14. But Jeſus ſaid, ſuffer little children, &c.] This he ſaid to ſhew his humility, that he was not above taking notice of any; and to teach his diſciples to regard the weakeſt believers, and ſuch as were but children in knowledge; and to inform them what all ought to be, who expect the kingdom of heaven, for it follows; and forbid them not to come unto me, now, or at any other time; for of ſuch is the kingdom of heaven; that is, as the Syriac renders it, who are as theſe; or as the Perſic verſion, rather paraphraſing than tranſlating, renders it, who have been humble as theſe little children: and it is as if our Lord ſhould ſay, don't drive away theſe children from my perſon and preſence; they are lively emblems of the proper ſubjects of a Goſpel church-ſtate, and of ſuch that ſhall enter into the kingdom of heaven: by theſe I may inſtruct and point out to you, what converted perſons ſhould be, who have a place in my church below, and expect to enter into my kingdom and glory above; that they are, or ought to be, like ſuch children, harmleſs and inoffenſive; free from rancour and malice, meek, modeſt, and humble; without pride, ſelf-conceit, and ambitious views, and deſires of grandeur, and ſuperiority. Chriſt's entire ſilence about the baptiſm of infants at this time, when he had ſuch an opportunity of ſpeaking of it to his diſciples, had it been his will, has no favourable aſpect on ſuch a practice. It is not denied that little children, whether born of believers or unbelievers, which matters not, may be choſen of God, redeemed by the blood of Chriſt, and have the paſſive work of the Spirit on their ſouls, and ſo enter into heaven; but this is not the ſenſe of this text. It was indeed a controverſy among the Jews, whether the little children of the wicked of Iſrael, באין לעולם הבא, go into the world to come: ſome affirmed, and others denied; but all agreed, that the little children of the wicked of the nations of the world, do not. They diſpute about the time of a child's entrance into the world to come; ſome ſay, as ſoon as it is born, according to Pſal. xxii. 31. others, as ſoon as it can ſpeak, or count, according to ver. 30. others, as ſoon as it is ſown, i. e. as the Gloſs ſays, as ſoon as the ſeed is received in its mother's womb, though it becomes an abortion; according to the ſame words, a ſeed ſhall ſerve thee: others, as ſoon as he is circumciſed, according to Pſal. lxxxviii. 15. others, as ſoon as he can ſay Amen, according [z] to Iſa. xxvi. 2. All weak, frivolous, and impertinent.

---

[t] Euſeb. Eccl. Hiſt. l. 6. c. 8. [u] Auguſtin. de Hæreſ. c. 37. & Danæus in ib. [w] Lib. quod deterius, p. 186. [x] Sexti Pythag. Sent. p. 8. [y] Maſſechet Sopherim, c. 18. §. 5. ſee the note on Luke ii. 42. [z] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 110. 2.

Ver. 15. And he laid his hands on them, &c.] And bleſſed them, as Mark ſays; he put his hands upon them, according to the cuſtom of the country, and wiſhed all kind of proſperity to them: and departed thence; out of the houſe where he had been, and his diſciples with him: the Ethiopic verſion renders it, and they went from thence; from thoſe parts, towards Jeruſalem.

Ver. 16. And behold, one came, &c.] The Perſic verſion reads, a rich man; and ſo he was, as appears from what follows: Luke calls him, a certain ruler; not of a ſynagogue, an eccleſiaſtical ruler, but a civil magiſtrate: perhaps he might be one of the Sanhedrim, which conſiſted of twenty-one perſons; or of that which conſiſted only of three, as in ſome ſmall towns and villages. Mark repreſents him as running; for Chriſt was departed out of the houſe, and was gone into the way, the high-road, and was on his journey to ſome other place, when this man ran after him with great eagerneſs; and, as the ſame Evangeliſt adds, kneeled to him; thereby paying him civil reſpect, and honour; believing him to be a worthy good man, and deſerving of eſteem and veneration: and ſaid unto him, good maſter: ſome ſay, that this was a title which the Jewiſh doctors were fond of, and gave to each other, but I have not obſerved it: he ſeems by this to intimate, that he thought him not only to be a good man, but a good teacher; that he was one that came from God, and taught good doctrine, which induced him to run after him, and put the following queſtion to him: what good thing ſhall I do, that I may have eternal life? Or, as in the other Evangeliſts, inherit eternal life; a phraſe much in uſe with the Jewiſh Rabbins[a]: "Judah confeſſed, "and was not aſhamed, and what is his end? "נחל חיי העולם הבא, he inherits the life of the "world to come (i. e. eternal life) Reuben confeſſed, "and was not aſhamed, and what is his end? he "inherits the life of the world to come." This man was no Sadducee, he believed a future ſtate; was a ſerious man, thoughtful about another world, and concerned how he ſhould enjoy everlaſting life; but was entirely upon a legal bottom, and under a covenant of works; and ſpeaks in the language and ſtrain of the nation of Iſrael, who were ſeeking for righteouſneſs and life by the works of the law: he expected eternal life by doing ſome good thing, or things; and hoped, as the ſequel ſhews, that he had done every good thing neceſſary to the obtaining it.

Ver. 17. And he ſaid unto him, &c.] By way of reply, firſt taking notice of, and queſtioning him about the epithet he gave him: why calleſt thou me good? not that he denied that he was ſo; for he was good, both as God and man, in his divine and human natures; in all his offices, and the execution of them; he was goodneſs itſelf, and did good, and nothing elſe but good. But the reaſon of the queſtion is, becauſe this young man conſidered him only as a mere man, and gave him this character as ſuch; and which, in compariſon of God, the fountain of all goodneſs, agrees with no mere man: wherefore our Lord's view is, by his own language, and from his own words, to inſtruct him in the knowledge of his proper deity. Some copies read, why doſt thou aſk me concerning good? And ſo the Vulgate Latin, and the Ethiopic verſions, and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel read; but the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions, read as we do, and this the anſwer of Chriſt requires. There is none good but one, that is God; who is originally, eſſentially, independently, infinitely, and immutably good, and the author and ſource of all goodneſs; which can't be ſaid of any mere creature. This is to be underſtood of God conſidered eſſentially, and not perſonally; or it is to be underſtood, not of the perſon of the Father, to the excluſion of the Son, or Spirit; who are one God with the Father, and equally good in nature as he. Nor does this contradict and deny that there are good angels, who have continued in that goodneſs in which they were created; or that there are good men, made ſo by the grace of God; but that none are abſolutely and perfectly good, but God. What Chriſt here ſays of God, the [b] Jews ſay of the law of Moſes, whoſe praiſe they can never enough extol; אין טוב אלא תורה, there is nothing good but the law. The law is good indeed, but the author of it muſt be allowed to be infinitely more ſo. Chriſt next directly anſwers to the queſtion, but if thou wilt enter into life; eternal life, which is in the queſtion, and which being ſometimes expreſſed by a houſe, a city, and kingdom, by manſions, and everlaſting habitations, enjoyment of it is fitly ſignified by entering into it; which, if our Lord ſuggeſts, he had a deſire of having a right to by doing any good thing himſelf, he muſt keep the commandments; that is, perfectly: he muſt do not only one good thing, but all the good things the law requires; he muſt not be deficient in any ſingle action, in any one work of the law, either as to matter, or manner of performance; every thing muſt be done, and that juſt as the Lord in his law has commanded it. Our Lord anſwers according to the tenor of the covenant of works, under which this man was; and according to the law of God, which requires perfect obedience to it, as a righteouſneſs, and a title to life; and in caſe of the leaſt failure, curſes and condemns to everlaſting death; ſee Deut. vi. 25. Gal. iii. 12, 10. This Chriſt ſaid, in order to ſhew, that it is impoſſible to enter into, or obtain eternal life by the works of the law, ſince no man can perfectly keep it; and to unhinge this man from off the legal foundation on which he was, that he might drop all his dependencies on doing good things, and come to him for righteouſneſs and life.

Ver. 18. He ſaith unto him, which? &c.] Whether thoſe commandments of a moral, or of a ceremonial kind; whether the commands of the written, or of the oral law; of God, or of the elders, or both; or whether he did not mean ſome new commandments of his own, which he delivered as a teacher ſent from God: Jeſus ſaid; according to the other Evangeliſts, thou knoweſt the commandments; not the true nature, ſpirituality, and uſe of them, but the letter and number of them; being trained up from a child by his parents, in the reading them, committing them to memory, and the outward obſervance of them, particularly thoſe of the ſecond table: thou ſhalt do no murder, thou ſhalt not commit adultery, thou ſhalt not ſteal, thou ſhalt not bear falſe witneſs. Chriſt takes no notice of the ceremonial law, nor of the traditions of the elders, only moral precepts; and theſe only ſuch, as refer to the ſecond, and not the firſt table of the law, which reſpect duty to the neighbour, and not to God: and this he does, becauſe theſe commandments were more known, and were in common uſe; and he choſe to inſtance in theſe, partly to ſhew, that if men are under obligation to regard theſe, much more ſuch as concern God more immediately; and partly, to obſerve, that if men are deficient in their duty to one another, they are much more ſo in their worſhip of God; and conſequently, eternal life is never to be got and enjoyed by the performance of theſe things.

---

[a] T. Bab. Sota, fol. 7. 2.

[b] T. Hieroſ. Roſhhaſhanah, fol. 59. 1. Tzeror Hammor, fol. 151. 2.

Ver. 19. Honour thy father and thy mother, &c.] This, as it is the firſt commandment with promiſe, ſo it is the firſt of the ſecond table, and yet is here mentioned laſt; which inverſion of order, is of no conſequence: ſo the ſeventh command is put before the ſixth, and the fifth omitted, in Rom. xiii. 9. and with the Jews it is a common [c] ſaying, אין מוקדם ומאוחר בתורה, there's neither firſt nor laſt in the law; that is, it is of no conſequence which commandment is recited firſt, or which laſt. Moreover, it looks as if it was uſual to recite theſe commands in this order, ſince they are placed exactly in the ſame method, by a very noted Jewiſh [d] writer. And thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thyſelf; which is not a particular diſtinct command from the reſt, or an explication of the tenth and laſt, not mentioned; but a recapitulation, or compendium, and abridgment of the whole, and is ſaid to be a complement and fulfilling of the law; ſee Rom. xiii. 9. Gal. v. 14.

Ver. 20. The young man ſaith unto him, &c.] For though he was ſo very rich, and in ſuch an exalted ſtation in life, as to be a ruler, it ſeems he was but a young man; and to be ſo early ſerious and religious, amidſt ſo much riches and grandeur, though it was but externally, was both remarkable and commendable: upon hearing Chriſt's anſwer, with which he was highly pleaſed and greatly elated, he very pertly replies, all theſe things have I kept from my youth up: as ſoon as he was capable of learning, his parents taught him theſe precepts; and ever ſince he had the uſe of his reaſon, and underſtood the letter, and outward meaning of them, he had been careful to obſerve them; nor could he charge himſelf with any open and flagrant tranſgreſſion of them; not underſtanding the internal ſenſe, extenſive compaſs, and ſpirituality of them; and therefore aſks, what lack I yet? In what am I deficient hitherto? in what have I come ſhort of doing theſe things? what remains at laſt to be performed? what other precepts are to be obeyed? if there are any other commands, I am ready to obſerve them, which may be thought neceſſary to obtain eternal life.

Ver. 21. Jeſus ſaid unto him, if thou wilt be perfect, &c.] Wanting nothing, compleatly righteous, according to the tenor of the covenant of works, having no evil concupiſcence, or worldly luſts: our Lord ſignifies it was not enough to be poſſeſſed of negative holineſs, and do no hurt to his neighbour, to his perſon, property, and eſtate, but he muſt love him, and do him good; and therefore, though ſo far as he had complied with the law, it was right and commendable; wherefore 'tis ſaid by Mark, that Jeſus beholding him, loved him; had an affectionate regard to him as man, and approved of his intentions, ſeriouſneſs, and actions, ſo far as agreeable; yet tells him, one thing thou lackeſt: not but that he lacked many more, but he was only willing to obſerve one thing to him, as a trial of his love to his neighbour, which is the fulfilling of the law: go and ſell that thou haſt, and give to the poor, and thou ſhalt have treaſure in heaven: not that either the law of God, or Goſpel of Chriſt, require this to be done of all men, and at all times; for though it is a duty binding upon all, and always, to relieve the poor and the needy, yet a man is not obliged to give all that he has to them; ſee 2 Cor. viii. 11. nor does either legal or chriſtian perfection, lie in doing this: a man may give all his goods to the poor, and yet be deſtitute of the grace of God, 1 Cor. xiii. 3. much leſs can ſuch an action merit the heavenly treaſure of eternal life. Nevertheleſs of ſome perſons, and in ſome caſes, it has been required, that they part with all their worldly ſubſtance, for the ſake of Chriſt and his Goſpel; as the apoſtles were called to leave all and follow Chriſt, as this man was alſo; for it is added, and come and follow me: between theſe two, Mark puts, take up the croſs; all which to do, was much more than to ſell what he had, and give to the poor; and indeed, in this branch lies Goſpel perfection, or to be really and truly a chriſtian: for to come to Chriſt, is to believe in him, lay hold on him, receive and embrace him as a Saviour and Redeemer; and to follow him, is to be obedient to his will, to be obſervant of his commands, to ſubmit to his ordinances, and to imitate him in the exerciſe of grace, and diſcharge of duty; neither of which can be done, without taking up the croſs; bearing reproach and perſecution, with patience; undergoing hardſhips and difficulties, of one ſort or another, which attend faith in Chriſt, a profeſſion of his name, and following him the Lamb, whitherſoever he goes. The conſequence of this now, not by way of merit, but by way of grace, is the enjoyment of the rich treaſures of eternal glory: but this man was ſo far from complying with the latter, with coming to Chriſt, taking up the croſs, and following him, that he could by no means agree to the former, parting with his worldly ſubſtance; and which is mentioned, as a teſt of his love to God and his neighbour, and to diſcover his ſinful love of the world, and the things of it; and conſequently, that he was far from being in a ſtate of perfection. Moreover, it ſhould be obſerved, that Chriſt is here ſpeaking, not in the pure language of the law, or according to the principles of the Goſpel, when he ſeems to place perfection in alms-deeds, and as if they were meritorious of eternal life; but according to the doctrine of the Phariſees, and which was this man's; and ſo upon the plan of his own notions, moves him to ſeek for perfection, and convicts him of the want of it, in a way he knew would be diſagreeable to him; and yet he would not be able to diſprove the method, on the foot of his own tenets: for this is their doctrine [e]; “ It is a “ tradition, he that ſays this ſela, or ſhekel, is for “ alms, that my ſon may live, or I may be a ſon “ of the world to come, lo! זה צדיק גמור, this “ man is a perfect righteous man.” The Gloſs adds, “ In this thing; and he does not ſay, that he does “ not do it for the ſake of it, but he fulfils the “ command of his Creator, who has commanded “ him to do alms; and he alſo intends profit to “ himſelf, that thereby he may be worthy of the “ world to come, or that his children may live.” And ſo in anſwer to a queſtion much like this, the young man put to Chriſt [f]; “ How ſhall we come “ at the life of the world to come?” It is replied, “ take thy riches, and give to the fatherleſs and “ the poor, and I will give thee a better portion in “ the law.”

Ver. 22. But when the young man heard that ſaying, &c.] That he muſt ſell his eſtates, and all his worldly ſubſtance, and the money made of them, give away to the poor; and become a follower of Chriſt, deny himſelf, and ſubmit to hardſhips very diſagreeable to the fleſh: he went away ſorrowful; not with a godly ſorrow for his ſin and imperfections, but with the ſorrow of the world, which worketh death: he was aſhamed and confounded, that he could not perform what he had juſt now ſo briſkly promiſed, at leaſt tacitly, that whatever elſe was proper he would do; as alſo grieved, that he had not arrived to perfection, which he had hoped he had, but now began to deſpair of, and of obtaining eternal life; and moſt of all troubled, that he muſt part with his worldly ſubſtance, his heart was ſo much ſet upon, or not enjoy it: for he had great poſſeſſions; which were very dear to him; and he choſe rather to turn his back on Chriſt, and drop his purſuits of the happineſs of the other world, than part with the preſent enjoyments of this.

---

[c] T. Bab. Peſach. fol. 6. 2. Zohar in Num. fol. 61. 4.

[d] R. Sangari, Sepher Coſri, par. 3. §. 11. fol. 146. 2.

[e] T. Bab. Peſach. fol. 8. 1, 2. & Roſhhaſhanah, fol. 4. 1.

[f] Zohar in Gen. fol. 60. 4.

Ver. 23. Then ſaid Jeſus unto his diſciples, &c.] When the young man was gone; taking this opportunity to make ſome proper obſervations for the uſe and inſtruction of his diſciples, after, as Mark obſerves, he had looked round about; with concern, and in order to affect their minds with this incident, and to raiſe their attention to what he was about to ſay: verily I ſay unto you, that a rich man ſhall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven; either into the Goſpel diſpenſation, and receive the truths, and ſubmit to the ordinances of it, or into the kingdom of glory hereafter; not but that there have been, are, and will be, ſome that are rich, called by grace, brought into a Goſpel church-ſtate, and are heirs of the kingdom of heaven; though theſe are but comparatively few: nor is it riches themſelves that make the entrance ſo difficult, and clog the way, either into grace or glory, but putting truſt and confidence in them; and therefore in Mark, they that have riches, are by Chriſt explained of ſuch, that truſt in riches; and which rich men in common are very apt to do, as this young man did, againſt which the apoſtle cautions, 1 Tim. vi. 17.

Ver. 24. And again I ſay unto you, &c.] After the apoſtles had diſcovered their aſtoniſhment at the above expreſſion, about the difficulty of a rich man entering into the kingdom of heaven; when they expected that in a ſhort time, all the rich and great men of the nation, would eſpouſe the Meſſiah's intereſt, and acknowledge him as a temporal king, and add to the grandeur of his ſtate and kingdom; and after he had in a mild and gentle manner, calling them children, explained himſelf of ſuch, that truſted in uncertain riches, ſerved mammon, made theſe their Gods, and placed their hope and happineſs in them; in order to ſtrengthen and confirm what he had before aſſerted, and to aſſure, in the ſtrongeſt manner, the very great difficulty, and ſeeming impoſſibility, of rich men becoming followers of Chriſt here, or companions with him hereafter, he expreſſes himſelf in this proverbial way: it is eaſier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God: thus, when the Jews would expreſs any thing that was rare and unuſual, difficult and impoſſible, they uſed a like ſaying with this. So ſpeaking of ſhewing perſons the interpretation of their dreams [g]; "Says Rabba you know, they "don't ſhew to a man a golden palm-tree (i. e. "the interpretation of a dream about one, which, "as the Gloſs ſays, is a thing he is not uſed "to ſee, and of which he never thought, "ולא פילא דעייל בקופא דמחטא, nor an elephant "going through the eye of a needle." Again, to one that had delivered ſomething as was thought very abſurd, it is ſaid [h]; "perhaps thou art one "of Pombeditha (a ſchool of the Jews in Babylon) "דמעיילין פילא בקופה דמחטא, who make an elephant paſs through the eye of a needle." That is, who teach ſuch things as are equally as monſtrous and abſurd, and difficult of belief. So the authors of an edition of the book of Zohar, to ſet forth the difficulty of the work they engaged in, expreſs themſelves in this manner [i]: "In the name of our God, "we have ſeen fit, להכנים פילא בקופא דמהטא, "to bring an elephant through the eye of a needle." And not only among the Jews, but in other eaſtern nations, this proverbial way of ſpeaking was uſed, to ſignify difficulties or impoſſibilities. Mahomet has it in his Alcoran [k]; "Verily, ſays he, they who "ſhall charge our ſigns with falſhood, and ſhall "proudly reject them, the gates of heaven ſhall "not be opened to them, neither ſhall they enter "into paradiſe, until a camel paſs through the eye of "a needle." All which ſhew, that there is no need to ſuppoſe, that by a camel is meant, not the creature ſo called, but a cable-rope, as ſome have thought; ſince theſe common proverbs manifeſtly make it appear, that a creature is intended, and which aggravates the difficulty: the reaſon why inſtead of an elephant, as uſed in moſt of the above ſayings, Chriſt makes mention of a camel, may be, becauſe that might be more known in Judæa, than the other; and becauſe the bunch on it's back, would ſerve to make the thing ſtill more impracticable.

Ver. 25. When his diſciples heard it, &c.] That is, the difficulty of a rich man's entering into the kingdom of heaven, aggravated by the above proverbial expreſſion, they were exceedingly amazed. They were ſurprized at his firſt words; but when he confirmed them by the proverb of a camel's paſſing through the eye of a needle; they were, as Mark ſays, aſtoniſhed out of meaſure: they did not imagine there was any difficulty of rich men coming into the kingdom of the Meſſiah, which they took to be a worldly one, and would be filled with rich men; for ſo they underſtood Chriſt; though he meant by the kingdom of heaven a ſpiritual kingdom, a Goſpel church-ſtate here, or the heavenly glory, or both; but when he expreſſed, by the proverb, the impracticableneſs of ſuch men becoming the ſubjects thereof, their amazement increaſed: ſaying, as in Mark, among themſelves, privately to one another, who then can be ſaved? meaning, not with a ſpiritual and everlaſting ſalvation, but a temporal one: for upon Chriſt's ſo ſaying, they might reaſon with themſelves, that if rich men did not come into the kingdom of the Meſſiah, they would oppoſe him and his kingdom, with all their force and ſtrength; and then what would become of ſuch poor men as themſelves, who would not be able to ſtand againſt them? nor could they hope to be ſafe long, or enjoy any continued happineſs in the expected kingdom, ſhould this be the caſe.

Ver. 26. But Jeſus beheld them, &c.] Looking wiſhly and earneſtly at them; ſignifying thereby, that he knew their reaſonings among themſelves, though they did not ſpeak out ſo as to be heard by him; and that there was no reaſon why they ſhould be in ſo much concern, as their countenances ſhewed, or poſſeſs themſelves with ſuch fears: and ſaid unto them, with men this is impoſſible. Mark adds, but not with God; for with God all things are poſſible; to be done by him, if he will; which are conſiſtent with the glory and perfections of his nature: for as he could, by his almighty power, if he would, reduce a camel to ſo ſmall a ſize, as to be able to go through the eye of a needle, which, with men, is an impoſſible thing; ſo by the mighty power of his grace he can work upon a rich man's heart, in ſuch a manner, as to take off his affections from his worldly ſubſtance, and cauſe him to drop his truſt and confidence in it: he can ſo influence and diſpoſe his mind, as to diſtribute his riches chearfully among the poor, and largely, and liberally ſupply their wants, and even part with all, when neceſſity requires it: he can change his heart, and cauſe the deſires of his ſoul to be after true riches of grace and glory; and bring him to ſee his own ſpiritual poverty, his need of Chriſt, and ſalvation by him; and to deny himſelf, take up the croſs, and follow him, by ſubmitting to his moſt deſpiſed ordinances, and by ſuffering the loſs of all things for his ſake; and he can carry him through a thouſand ſnares ſafe to his kingdom and glory, which is Chriſt's ſenſe; though the thing is impoſſible upon the foot of human nature, and ſtrength, which can never effect any thing of this kind: and as to what the apoſtles ſuggeſted concerning the ſafety of perſons in the Meſſiah's kingdom, if no rich man could enter there, but ſhould be in oppoſition to it; our Lord's anſwer implies, that though, humanly ſpeaking, it was not poſſible and practicable that they, a company of poor, mean, and deſpicable men, ſhould be able to ſtand againſt the united force of the great and mighty men of the earth; yet God was able to ſupport, and uphold them, ſucceed, and keep them, and make them both uſeful and comfortable, amidſt all the oppoſition and perſecution they ſhould meet with, until he had finiſhed his whole will and work by them.

---

[g] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 55. 2.

[h] T. Bab. Bava Metzia, fol. 38. 2.

[i] Prefat. ad Zohar, Ed. Sultzbach.

[k] Chap. 7. p. 120. Ed. Sale.

Ver. 27. Then anſwered Peter and ſaid unto him, &c.] Peter obſerving what Chriſt ſaid to the young man, bidding him ſell all that he had, and give to the poor, and he ſhould have treaſure in heaven, and come and follow him, lays hold on it, and addreſſes him in the following manner, behold, we have forſaken all, and followed thee. Though their worldly ſubſtance was not ſo large as the young man's, they had not ſuch eſtates to ſell, nor that to give to the poor, he had; yet all that they had they left for Chriſt's ſake, their parents, wives, children, houſes, and worldly employments, by which they ſupported themſelves and families; and became the diſciples and followers of Chriſt, embraced his doctrines, ſubmitted to his commands, imitated him in the exerciſe of grace, and diſcharge of duty, denying themſelves, and ſuffering many hardſhips on his account: wherefore it is aſked, what ſhall we have therefore? what reward for all this? what part in the Meſſiah's kingdom? or what treaſure in heaven?

Ver. 28. And Jeſus ſaid unto them, &c.] To all the diſciples whom Peter perſonated; verily I ſay unto you: the thing being ſomething very conſiderable, and of great moment, Chriſt uſes the aſſeveration he ſometimes does in ſuch caſes: that ye which have followed me. Chriſt does not deny that they had forſaken all for his ſake, nor does he deſpiſe it, becauſe it was but little they left, though he does not repeat it; but only takes notice of their following him, which, including their faith in him, their profeſſion of him, and ſubjection to him, was a much greater action, and of more importance than the other; and therefore is only mentioned, and which our Lord confirms: in the regeneration. This clauſe is ſo placed, that it may be read in connection with the preceding words, and be underſtood of the diſciples following Chriſt in the regeneration; meaning, not the grace of regeneration, in which they could not be ſaid, with propriety, to follow Chriſt; and one of them was never a partaker of it: but the new ſtate of things, in the church of God, which was foretold, and is called the time of reformation, or ſetting all things right, which began upon the ſealing up the law, and the prophets, and the miniſtry of John the Baptiſt, and of Chriſt; who both, when they began to preach, declared, that this time, which they call the kingdom of heaven, was at hand, juſt uſhering in. Now the twelve apoſtles followed Chriſt herein: they believed, and profeſſed him to be the Meſſiah; they received, what the Jews called, his new doctrine, and preached it to others; they ſubmitted to the new ordinance of baptiſm, and followed Chriſt, and attended him wherever he went, working miracles, preaching the Goſpel, and reforming the minds and manners of men. Now this new diſpenſation is called the regeneration, and which more manifeſtly took place after our Lord's reſurrection, and aſcenſion, and the pouring down of the Spirit; wherefore the phraſe may be connected with the following words, when the ſon of man ſhall ſit in the throne of his glory, in the regeneration; not in the reſurrection of the dead, or at the laſt judgment, but in this new ſtate of things, which now began to appear with another face: for the apoſtles having a new commiſſion to preach the Goſpel to all the world; and being endued with power from on high for ſuch ſervice, in a ſhort time went every where preaching the word, with great ſucceſs. Gentiles were converted, as well as Jews, and both brought into a Goſpel church-ſtate; the ceremonies of the old law being aboliſhed, were diſuſed; and the ordinances of baptiſm, and the Lord's ſupper, every where practiſed; old things paſſed away, and all things became new: agreeable to this the Syriac verſion renders the phraſe, בעלמא חדתא, in the new world; and ſo the Perſic. The Arabic reads it, in the generation, or age to come; which the Jews ſo often call the world, or age to come, the kingdom of the Meſſiah, the Goſpel-diſpenſation. When the ſon of man ſhall ſit in the throne of his glory, or glorious throne; as he did when he aſcended into heaven, and ſat down at the right hand of God; and was then exalted as a prince, and made, or declared to be Lord and Chriſt; and was crowned in human nature, with honour, and glory, and angels, principalities, and powers, made ſubject to him: ye alſo ſhall ſit upon twelve thrones: for tho' Judas fell from his apoſtleſhip, yet Matthias was choſen in his room, and took his place, and made up the number twelve; a metaphorical phraſe, ſetting forth the honour, dignity, and authority of their office and miniſtry, by which they ſhould be judging the twelve tribes of Iſrael; doctrinally and practically; by charging them with the ſin of crucifying Chriſt, condemning them for their unbelief, and rejection of him, denouncing the wrath of God, and the heavieſt judgments that ſhould fall upon them, as a nation, for their ſin; and by turning from them to the Gentiles, under which judgment they continue to this day. So the doctors among the Jews are repreſented as ſitting and judging others: of the potters, in 1 Chron. iv. 23. they ſay[1], "these are the "diſciples of the law, or the lawyers, for whoſe "ſake the world is created, דיתבין על דינא, who "ſit in judgment, and eſtabliſh the world; and build, "and perfect the ruins of the houſe of Iſrael."

Ver. 29. And every one that hath forſaken houſes, &c.] Not only the then diſciples of Chriſt, but any other believer in him, whether at that time, or in any age, that ſhould be called to quit their habitations, or leave their deareſt relations, friends, and ſubſtance: as brethren or ſiſters, or father or mother, or wife or children, or lands, for my name's ſake; or, as in Luke, for the kingdom of God's ſake; that is, for the ſake of the Goſpel, and a profeſſion of it. Not that believing in Chriſt, and profeſſing his name, do neceſſarily require a parting with all worldly ſubſtance, and natural relations; but when theſe things ſtand in competition with Chriſt, he is to be loved and preferred before them; and believers are always to be ready to part with them for his ſake, when perſecution ariſes, becauſe of the word. All theſe things are to be relinquiſhed, rather than Chriſt, and his Goſpel; and ſuch who ſhall be enabled, through divine grace, to do ſo, ſhall receive an hundred fold: Mark adds, now in this time; and Luke likewiſe, in this preſent time, in this world; which may be underſtood either in ſpiritual things, the love of God, the preſence of Chriſt, the comforts of the Holy Ghoſt, the communion of ſaints, and the joys and pleaſures felt in the enjoyment of theſe things; being an hundred times more and better to them, than all they have left or loſt for Chriſt's ſake; or in temporal things, ſo in Mark it ſeems to be explained, that ſuch ſhall now receive an hundred fold, even houſes and brethren, and ſiſters and mothers, and children and lands; not that they ſhould receive, for the leaving of one houſe, an hundred houſes; or for forſaking one brother, an hundred brethren, &c. which laſt indeed might be true, as to a ſpiritual relation; but that the ſmall pittance of this world's goods, and the few friends they ſhould have with perſecutions along with them, and amidſt them, ſhould be ſo ſweeten'd to them, with the love and preſence of God, that theſe ſhould be more and better to them than an hundred houſes, fields, and friends, without them: and ſhall inherit everlaſting life. The other Evangeliſts add, in the world to come; which is infinitely beſt of all; for this is an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, which fades not away, reſerved in the heavens, when all other inheritances are corruptible, defiled, fading, and periſhing; houſes fall, relations die, friends fail, and lands and eſtates do not continue for ever: they then have the beſt of it, who being called, in providence, to quit all terrene enjoyments for Chriſt's ſake, are favoured with his preſence here, and ſhall enjoy eternal glory and happineſs with him in another world.

---

[1] Targum in 1 Chron. iv. 23.

Ver. 30. But many that are firſt ſhall be laſt, &c.] This may refer unto, or be occaſioned by, either the young ruler; ſignifying that he, and others like him, who were ſuperior in riches and honour, were firſt in this world, of the firſt rank and figure, ſhould be the laſt in the world to come: and the laſt ſhall be firſt; the apoſtles, who were laſt in this world, being poor, mean, and abject, ſhould be the firſt in the other: or to the Scribes and Phariſees, who were in the chief place, and higheſt eſteem, in the Jewiſh church, and yet leaſt in the kingdom of heaven; when, on the other hand, the publicans and ſinners, who were in the loweſt claſs, and in leaſt eſteem, went firſt into it: or to the caſe of perſecution, when ſome, who ſeem moſt forward to endure it at a diſtance, when it comes nearer, are moſt backward to it; whilſt others, who were moſt fearful of it, and ready to ſhrink at the thoughts of it, moſt chearfully bear it: or to the apoſtles themſelves, one of which, who was now firſt, Judas, ſhould be laſt; and the apoſtle Paul, who was laſt of all, as one born out of due time, ſhould be firſt: or to Jews and Gentiles, intimating, that the Jews, who were firſt in outward privileges, would be rejected of God for their unbelief, and contempt of the Meſſiah; and the Gentiles, who were laſt called, ſhould be firſt, or chief, in embracing the Meſſiah, profeſſing his Goſpel, and ſupporting his intereſt. This ſentence is confirmed, and illuſtrated, by a parable, in the following chapter.

CHAP. XX.

Ver. 1. FOR the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man, &c.] That is, the Goſpel-diſpenſation, or times of the Meſſiah, may fitly be repreſented by a man that is an houſholder, or maſter of a family, as Chriſt is; ſee Matt. x. 25. He is maſter of the whole family of God, in heaven, and in earth, of all the children of God, and houſhold of faith; his houſe they are, he is father and maſter, ſon and firſt-born, prieſt and prophet there. Which went out early in the morning to hire labourers into his vineyard: by the vineyard may be meant the church, which, like a vineyard, is ſeparated by electing, redeeming, and calling grace, and by the order and ordinances of the Goſpel, from the reſt of the world; is ſet with various vines, with trees of righteouſneſs, with pleaſant plants, both fruitful and profitable; and which are dear and valuable to Chriſt; and about which much care is uſed to preſerve, keep, and improve them. This may be called his, Chriſt's, being what he has choſen for himſelf, his father has given him, and he is heir of; which he has purchaſed with his blood, and which he plants, waters, takes care of, and enjoys. The labourers deſign either the miniſters of the Goſpel, who labour in the word and doctrine, who are, or, at leaſt ought to be, labourers in Chriſt's vineyard, and not loiterers; whoſe work in ſtudy, meditation, and prayer, in the miniſtration of the word and ordinances, and in performing other ſervices they are called unto, is very laborious; and made more ſo, through the wickedneſs of ſome, and weakneſs of others: the employment of theſe labourers in the vineyard is various; the buſineſs of ſome is to plant; they are chiefly made uſe of in converſion: the work of others is to water; theſe are inſtruments in edification, and means of the growth of grace: others have a good hand at pruning, giving reproofs and corrections, in a ſuitable manner, with ſucceſs, to the checking of ſin, and bringing forth more fruit: others are uſeful in propping and ſupporting the vines, comforting and ſtrengthening weak believers; and others in protecting and defending the outworks of the church, the doctrines and ordinances of it; or elſe private Chriſtians in general may be intended, who all are, or ſhould be labourers, both in the exerciſe of grace; for there's the work of faith, and the labour of love, to God, Chriſt, and his people, in which they ſhould be continually employed; and in the diſcharge of duty, with regard to themſelves; and in the care of their own vineyard, with reſpect to their families, which are their charge, and alſo to the church of Chriſt, of which they are members. Theſe labourers are ſaid to be hired by the houſholder, or owner of the vineyard, Chriſt, not ſtrictly and properly ſpeaking; nor does it mean that he had no prior right to their obedience, or that there is any merit in their labour, or that that is the condition of their ſalvation; but it ſignifies the influence of his grace, in making them willing to ſerve him chearfully, and labour in his vineyard freely; to encourage them in which, he makes them many gracious, and exceeding great and precious promiſes, and particularly that of eternal life: for which purpoſe, 'tis ſaid, that he went out, either from his father as mediator, being ſent by him; or from heaven into this world, by the aſſumption of human nature; or by his Spirit, and the influence of his grace, in the calls of his people, to their ſeveral ſervices, in his church; and that early in the morning: ſome of them being very early called to labour there; meaning either in the morning of the world, as Adam, Abel, Seth, Enoch, and others; or in the morning of the Jewiſh church-ſtate, as Abraham, Moſes, Joſhua, and the like; or in the morning of the Goſpel-diſpenſation, as the apoſtles of Chriſt, which ſeems moſt likely; or in the morning of youth, as Timothy, and others. Several things in this firſt part of the parable might be illuſtrated from the Jewiſh writings. They have a parable indeed, which, in the ſeveral parts of it, greatly reſembles this, and begins thus[m]; "to " what is R. Bon like? to a king that hath a vine-" yard, ושכר עליו פועלים, and hires labourers into " it, &c." Out of which ſome other things will be remarked, in the following parts of this parable: of a ſon's being ſent, and going out to hire labourers into the vineyard, take the following inſtance[n]; " it happened to R. Jochanan ben Matthia, that he " ſaid to his ſon, צא ושכר, go out, and hire la- " bourers for us: he went out, and agreed with " them for their food." The time of hiring labourers, here mentioned, exactly agrees with the Jewiſh accounts[o]. " Says R. Juda ben Bethira, when " the face of all the eaſt is light unto Hebron, all " the people go out, every man to his work; and " when it is ſo light, it is good to hire labourers " we ſay." Upon which the Gloſs ſays, " every " man goes out to his work, not for labourers, but " the houſholder, who משכים יותר, riſes earlier to " find labourers to hire." Perhaps it may not be worth while to obſerve, how large a ſpot of ground, ſet with vines, was, by them, called a vineyard: it is frequently ſaid by them[p], " that a vineyard " planted by leſs than four cubits, is no vineyard; " but R. Simeon, and the wiſe men, ſay it is a " vineyard."

Ver. 2. And when he had agreed with the labourers for a penny a day, &c.] Theſe labourers were of that ſort that were called שכיר יום, hired for a day; concerning whom is the following rule[q]: " he " that is hired for a day, may demand it all the " night; and he that is hired for a night, may de-" mand it all the day: he that is hired for hours, " may demand it all the night, and all the day; " he that is hired for a week, he that is hired for a " month, he that is hired for a year, he that is " hired for ſeven, if he goes out in the day, may " demand all the day; and if he goes out in the " night, he may demand it all the night, and all " the day." And the wages of a day were uſually דינר, a penny; which, if underſtood of a Roman penny, was ſeven pence half-penny of our money. One of their canons runs thus[r]; " he that hires a " labourer in the winter, to work with him in the " ſummer, בדינר בכל יום, for a penny every day, " and he gives him his hire; and, lo! his hire is " alike to that in the winter, a ſela every day, " this is forbidden; becauſe it looks as if he choſe " that time to leſſen his wages; but if he ſays to " him, work with me from this day, to ſuch a " time, for a penny every day, tho' his hire is the " ſame, a ſela every day, this is lawful." By the penny a day agreed for with the labourers, may be meant external privileges; or the free promiſe made, whether to miniſters, or private believers, of a ſufficient ſupply of grace daily, that as their day is, their ſtrength ſhall be; together with that of eternal life and happineſs at laſt. He ſent them into his vineyard; to labour there: for none have any buſineſs there, but ſuch who are called and ſent by the owner of it; and where ſons are ſent, and work, as well as ſervants; ſee Matt. xxi. 28, 29.

Ver. 3. And he went out about the third hour, &c.] About nine o'clock in the morning, and ſaw others ſtanding idle in the market-place; the place where labourers uſed to be hired: and may deſign the world, becauſe a place full of people, and of great wickedneſs, for the whole world lies in it; a place of trade and traffick in worldly things, and likewiſe of worldly and carnal pleaſure, and alſo of idleneſs. Now God's elect, before calling, are in this place: they are natives of it, have their converſation according to it: here Chriſt came in perſon, and here he ſends his miniſters, his Goſpel, to find them out, and by his Spirit and grace he calls them from hence; ſo that afterwards they are no more of it, tho' they are in it: but before converſion they belong to it, and their poſture then is ſtanding idle; being ſluggiſh, and ſlothful in buſineſs, unwilling to work, and afraid of a little danger and trouble, ſauntring away their time in carnal pleaſures, and ſo clothed with rags, and in a ſtarving, famiſhing condition: but Chriſt's eye is upon them; he obſerves, and takes notice of them in this diſagreeable poſition and ſituation, and beſpeaks them in the following manner.

Ver. 4. And ſaid unto them, go ye alſo into the vineyard, &c.] Expreſſive of a call of divine grace out of the world, into the church; and which ariſes from mere grace, and good-will, without any merit in, or motive from man, as the caſe here ſhews: for the houſholder went out to theſe men, not they to him; he puts the queſtion to them, and calls them, and bids them go into his vineyard; they don't aſk him to hire them, nor deſire to be in his ſervice. Moreover, the perſons called were a parcel of idle, mean, vulgar people, as market-folks commonly are; the weak, baſe, and fooliſh things of the world. The encouragement given them follows, and whatſoever is right I will give you; which is to be underſtood, not of ſtrict juſtice; for in this ſenſe nothing could be given to ſinful mortals, for their ſervices; but of grace, for what is had on this ſcore, whether in this, or in the other world, is in a way of giving and receiving, which are the phraſes uſed here, and in the context. It properly ſignifies what is meet and convenient, and will be ſatisfying; and ſince it is not expreſſed what he would give them, and they ſhould receive, it calls for faith and dependance on divine goodneſs: for it does not yet appear, what the faithful labourers in Chriſt's vineyard will want, and ſhall receive in this life, nor what will be their happineſs in the world to come: the glories and joys of heaven are unſeen things; and eternal life is a hidden one at preſent, and muſt be truſted for: and they went their way; into the vineyard, the church, to labour there; which ſhews, that the call was powerful and efficacious; they were powerfully wrought upon by it; were at once inclined, and made willing to, and did go chearfully, without ſtanding to diſpute about their work or wages.

---

[m] Shirhaſhirim Rabba, fol. 21. 3. Vid. Midraſh Koheleth, fol. 72. 4. & Talmud Hieroſ. Beracot, fol. 5. 3.

[n] Miſna Bava Metzia, c. 7. §. 1.

[o] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 28. 2.

[p] T. Hieroſ. Sheviith, fol. 33. 2. T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 37. 2. & 83. 1.

[q] Miſna Bava Metzia, c. 9. §. 11. Maimon. Hilch. Shecirut, c. 11. §. 2.

[r] Maimon. Hilch. Milvah Ulavah, c. 7. §. 12. Vid. T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 86. 2. & 87. 1. & Gloſſ. in ib.

Ver. 5. Again he went out about the ſixth and ninth hour, &c.] About twelve o'clock, or at noon, and three o'clock in the afternoon. Theſe three laſt mentioned ſeaſons of the day, were the hours of prayer; ſee Acts ii. 15. and iii. 1. and x. 9. and did likewiſe: ſeeing others in the ſame place, and poſture, he called them, and ſent them into his vineyard, to labour there, giving them the ſame promiſe he did to others.

Ver. 6. And about the eleventh hour he went out, &c.] About five o'clock in the afternoon. The Perſic verſion reads it, the twelfth hour, which was ſix o'clock in the afternoon, the laſt hour of the day. The Jews divided their day into twelve hours, John xi. 9. and theſe twelve hours into four parts; ſee Neh. ix. 3. each part containing three hours, to which diviſion there is a manifeſt reſpect in this parable. Theſe different ſeaſons of the huſbandman's going out to hire labourers, may have regard either to the ſeveral periods of time, and ages of the world, as before the law, under the law, the times of the Meſſiah, and the laſt days; or the various diſpenſation of the Goſpel, firſt by Chriſt, and John the Baptiſt to the Jews, then by the apoſtles to the ſame in their firſt miſſion, afterwards when their commiſſion was renewed, firſt to the Jews in Judæa, and then to the ſame among the nations of the world, and laſt of all to the Gentiles; or to the ſeveral ſtages of human life, and may regard Chriſt's call of perſons in childhood, youth, manhood, and old age; which laſt may be ſignified by the eleventh hour, as alſo the Gentiles, and the remainder of God's elect in the laſt day: and found others ſtanding idle; in the ſame place and poſition as before: for the ſtate and condition of God's elect, by nature, as it is the ſame with others, 'tis the ſame with them all. The word idle is omitted here by the Vulgate Latin, the Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions, and in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel; but is retained in the Syriac and Perſic verſions; and ſtands in the Greek copies: and ſaith unto them, why ſtand ye here all the day idle? for being about the eleventh hour, the day was far ſpent, it was almoſt gone, a ſmall portion of it remained, but one hour, as appears from ver. 12.

Ver. 7. They ſay unto him, becauſe no man hath hired us, &c.] This may be fitly applied to the Gentiles, who for many hundreds of years were neglected by God; he over-looked the times of their ignorance, took no notice of them in their ſtate of ſtupidity, blindneſs, and irreligion; but ſuffered them to walk in their own ways, ſent no prophets to inſtruct them, nor meſſages, nor meſſengers to them; till at length the Jews, having rejected and crucified the Meſſiah, and perſecuted his apoſtles, and contradicted, and blaſphemed the Goſpel, they were ordered to go to the Gentiles, and preach it to them: he ſaith unto them, go ye alſo into the vineyard: the Goſpel was made the power of God unto ſalvation to them; they were called by grace, became of the ſame body the church, were fellow-heirs with the believing Jews, partakers of the ſame promiſes and privileges, in a Goſpel church-ſtate, and were equally labourers in the Lord's vineyard: and whatſoever is right, that ſhall ye receive; with the reſt of the labourers in it. This clauſe is left out in the Vulgate Latin, and in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel; nor is it in Beza's moſt ancient Greek copy, tho' in all the reſt; nor is it in the Perſic verſion, which has added, and they went, as they were bidden, into the vineyard, the call being effectual; but is retained in the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions.

Ver. 8. So when even was come, &c.] At ſix o'clock, or when the ſun was ſet, which was the time of paying labourers their wages: thus in the parable of the Jews, before referr'd to, which bears ſome reſemblance to this, it is ſaid; "לעתותי ערב[s]; "that at evening time the labourers came to take "their wages." Sooner than this, one that was hired for a day, could not demand it; nor was the maſter of the vineyard, who hired him, obliged to pay him till the ſun was ſet[t], which was the time of his going forth from his labour[u]. This even may be underſtood, either of the evening of the Jewiſh ſtate, upon the calling of the Gentiles; or of the end of the world, the cloſe of the Goſpel-diſpenſation; when the work of it will be over, when all the elect of God, Jews and Gentiles, ſhall be called and gathered in, and all brought to repentance towards God, and faith in Chriſt. The Lord of the vineyard ſaith unto his ſteward: by the Lord of the vineyard may be meant God the father, who has choſen and ſeparated the vineyard of the church for himſelf; and has made it the care and charge of his ſon Jeſus Chriſt; who, as mediator, may be deſigned by his ſteward; who has not only all the ſtores of grace in his hand, to diſtribute to his people, in this life, as their caſes require; but has alſo eternal life and happineſs in his poſſeſſion for them; not only the promiſe of it, but that itſelf; and has a power of giving it to as many as the father hath given him; and which he, the righteous judge, and faithful ſteward, will give at the day of judgment, to all that love his appearing. Call the labourers, and give them their hire; the proper time being come: for the Jews ſay[w], "it is an affirma-"tive precept to give the wages of an hired perſon "in its time; as it is ſaid, Deut. xxiv. 15. at his "day thou ſhalt give him his hire; and if it is pro-"longed after its time, 'tis tranſgreſſing a nega-"tive precept, as it is ſaid, (in the ſame place) "neither ſhall the ſun go down upon it." So Jews and Gentiles were called to partake of the ſame Goſpel privileges; and ſo will all the faithful labourers in the Lord's vineyard be called together, and have the reward of eternal life beſtowed upon them, and be bid to enter into the joy of their Lord, and inherit the kingdom prepared for them, as they before were ordered to go into the vineyard, and work. And tho' eternal life may be called hire or reward, becauſe as hire is given to labourers, ſo is eternal life; and as that is given at the even and cloſe of the day, and when the labourer has done his work, ſo everlaſting glory will be given to the ſaints at the end of life, and when they have done the will and work of God: yet it will not be beſtowed by way of merit, or, as if there was a juſt proportion between the work, labour, and ſervices of the ſaints, and the glory that ſhall be revealed in them. Their pureſt ſervices, even their ſufferings for Chriſt, are not worthy to be compared with that; nor are there any that are done by them, but what are due to God, what he has a right unto, and are their duty to perform; ſo that when they are done by them in the beſt and moſt perfect manner, they are but unprofitable ſervants: nor can they, by any thing they do, be profitable to God, or give any thing to him, which can be obligatory upon him, to do any thing for them, or be a valuable conſideration for any thing they ſhould receive from him; and therefore they can't merit any thing at his hand, and much leſs eternal life: beſides, their ſervices are very impure and imperfect, and whenever any thing is well done by them, it is done not by their own ſtrength and might, but by the aſſiſtance and grace of God; and therefore they can have no demand upon him for what they do: eternal life, though a reward, is not a reward of debt, but of grace; it is the free-gift of God through Chriſt; God has graciouſly promiſed it in the covenant of his grace, before the world began; he has given it into the hands of his Son for his people, with whom it is ſure; and he gives it freely to all the ſheep the Father has given him. Beginning from the laſt unto the firſt; beginning with the laſt that was called and ſent into the vineyard, and ſo proceeding on to the next to them; giving them their wages as he went along, till he came to the firſt, who were early in the morning hired into this ſervice; intimating, that ſome ſuch method will be taken in the introducing of the ſaints into the kingdom of the Meſſiah here, and into his everlaſting kingdom hereafter; whereby that ſaying of our Lord's, which occaſioned this parable, will be alſo fulfilled, the firſt ſhall be laſt, and the laſt firſt.

---

[s] Shir Haſhirim Rabba, fol. 21. 3. Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 72. 4. T. Hieroſ. Beracot, fol. 5. 3.

[t] Bartenora in Miſn. Bava Metzia, c. 9. §. 11.

[u] Jarchi in Lev. xix. 13.

[w] Maimon. Hilch. Shecirut, c. 11. §. 1.

Ver. 9. And when they came that were hired about the eleventh hour, &c.] Who were the laſt that were hired; and ſignify either ſuch, as are called in their laſt days, in old age; or Gentile ſinners; or the laſt of God's elect, that will be called by grace, in the end of the world: they received every man a penny; the ſame they firſt agreed for, that were hired early into the vineyard; and all, and every man alike, not one more, or another leſs. So the ſame church privileges and immunities, are common to all believers, Jews or Gentiles, ſooner or later called; and equal title given to the ſame eternal life and happineſs, which will be enjoyed alike, by one ſaint as another: they are all loved with the ſame everlaſting love by God; they are choſen alike by him in his Son, at the ſame time, in the ſame way and manner, and to the ſame grace and glory; they are intereſted in the ſame covenant, in all the promiſes and bleſſings of it; they are bought with the ſame price of a Redeemer's blood, are juſtified by the ſame righteouſneſs, and are called in one hope of their calling; they are equally the ſons of God, and their glory and happineſs are always expreſſed by the ſame thing, as a kingdom, a crown, an inheritance, &c. They are all equally heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Chriſt; they are heirs of the ſame kingdom and glory, and are born again to the ſame incorruptible inheritance, of which they will all be partakers; they will all be called to inherit the ſame kingdom, they will ſit on the ſame throne of glory, and wear the ſame crown of righteouſneſs, and enjoy the ſame uninterrupted communion with Father, Son, and Spirit. Now, indeed, they have not the ſame meaſures of grace; ſome have more, others leſs; but in heaven, it will be alike, compleat and perfect in all; and even now, they have the ſame grace for nature and kind, only it is not in all in the ſame exerciſe; now the ſaints are diſtinguiſhed by the ſeveral ſtations and places in which they are; though they are members of the ſame body, they have not the ſame office, and have gifts differing from one another; but in the other ſtate, all ſuch offices and gifts will ceaſe, and all will be upon an equal foot; be where Chriſt is, and behold his glory, and will ſtand in no need of each others inſtruction and help. Now the capacities of men are different, according to the different temperament of their bodies, their different education, opportunities, advantages, and ſtations in life; but in the other world, where this difference will be no more, every veſſel of mercy being prepared for glory, will be equally capable of receiving it: and though there will be degrees of puniſhment in hell, proportionate to the ſins of men, which the juſtice of God requires, yet it follows not, that there will be degrees in glory; ſince that is not proportioned to the works of men, but ſprings from the grace of God, and yet in a way of juſtice too, through the blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice of Chriſt: and ſince the ſaints have an equal intereſt in theſe things, it ſeems that upon the foot of juſtice, they ſhould equally enjoy all that happineſs which theſe entitle them to.

Ver. 10. But when the firſt came, &c.] Who were early hired into the vineyard; and deſign either the firſt ſaints that were in the world; or the Jews that firſt believed in Chriſt, either really or nominally; or ſuch, who were called by grace in their early days: they ſuppoſed, or hoped, as the Syriac verſion renders it, that they ſhould have received more; than a penny, a greater reward: not that they could expect it on the foot of their agreement, or on account of their work; but becauſe they obſerved, that they that came laſt into the vineyard, had as much as they agreed for; and therefore hoped, from the goodneſs of their Lord to them, that they ſhould receive more: and they likewiſe received every man a penny; the ſelf-ſame privileges of the Goſpel, and a title to the ſelf-ſame reward of free-grace, the ſelf-ſame glory and happineſs.

Ver. 11. And when they had received it, &c.] The external privileges of the Goſpel diſpenſation, an inheritance among them that are ſanctified, and a right unto it, on the foot of free-grace, they murmured againſt the good man of the houſe; who had been ſo kind and liberal, to thoſe who came laſt into the vineyard, and had done no injury to them, but gave them a full reward. So the Jews that firſt believed in Chriſt, were at firſt uneaſy at the Goſpel being preached to the Gentiles, at the calling of them, and their partaking of the ſame privileges in a Goſpel church-ſtate with them, without ſubmitting to the ceremonies of the law, as they had done; juſt as the Phariſees in Chriſt's time, murmured againſt him, for receiving ſinners, and eating with them: though in the latter day, the envy of Ephraim ſhall depart, and in the ultimate glory there will be no murmuring at each others happineſs.

Ver. 12. Saying, theſe laſt have wrought but one hour, &c.] Thinking it hard, that they ſhould have the ſame reward for the ſervice of one hour, others had for the ſervice of many. This is grudged by the Jews [x]; "Bath Kol, a voice from "heaven, went out and ſaid, Ketiah bar Shallum, "is prepared for the life of the world to come; "Rabbi wept and ſaid, there is that obtains his "world (or the world to come for himſelf) "בשעה אחת, in one hour; and there is that ob"tains it in many years." The ſame obſervation is alſo made by the ſame perſon, on account of "R. Eleazar ben Durdia [y]. So in the parable of the Jews above-mentioned, which is the broken remains of a common proverb among them like [z] this; it is obſerved, that there being one labourer among thoſe that were hired, who did his work better than all the reſt, and who was taken notice of by the king; that when "at even the labourers came to take their wages, this labourer alſo came to take his; and the king gave him his wages equal with them, (or, as in another place, a perfect one) the labourers began to preſs him with difficulty, (or as elſewhere [a], מתרעמין, they murmured) and ſaid, Oh! our Lord, the king, we have laboured all the day; but this man has not laboured but two or three hours in the day, and he takes his wages, even as ours, or a perfect reward." And ſo it follows here, and thou haſt made them equal to us, who have born the burden and heat of the day; of all the Jewiſh rites and ceremonies, which were burdenſome and intolerable. The ceremonial law was a burden to the Jewiſh people; the multitude of ſacrifices enjoined them, and the frequent repetition of them, together with the great number of other ordinances and inſtitutions, produced a wearineſs in them; eſpecially in the carnal part of them, who ſaw not the things typified by them, the uſe and end of them, and ſo did not enjoy ſpiritual pleaſure in them, Mal. i. 13. It was a yoke, and a yoke of bondage, to them, which brought on them a ſpirit of bondage, through the fear of death, which was the penalty annexed to it; and it was an inſupportable one, which neither they, nor their forefathers, were able to bear, becauſe it made them debtors to keep the whole law: and this was made ſtill more burdenſome, by the traditions of the elders, which were added to it, and which the Scribes and Phariſees obliged to the obſervance of; to which they themſelves ſtill added, and bound heavy burdens, and grievous to be born, and laid them on mens ſhoulders. The law was a fiery law, and the diſpenſation of it was a hot and ſcorching one; it was uncomfortable working under the flaſhes of a mount, that burned with fire: the law worked wrath, and poſſeſſed the minds of men with a fearful looking for of judgment, and fiery indignation. This may alſo be applied to ſuch chriſtians, who are called to more ſevere ſervice or ſufferings for Chriſt, than others are; who are almoſt preſſed down without meaſure, and endure fiery trials, are ſcorched, and made black, with the ſun of perſecution beating upon them; as the ſaints under the ten perſecutions of the Roman Emperors, and as the confeſſors and martyrs in the times of papal power and cruelty; and who, it might be thought, will have a greater degree of glory and happineſs hereafter; and ſo ſome have been of opinion, that theſe are they that ſhall live and reign with Chriſt a thouſand years, Rev. xx. 4, 5, 6. But it rather ſeems, that others will be made equal with them, who have not endured what they have done; for all the dead in Chriſt, all that have part in the firſt reſurrection, when Chriſt comes, as all the ſaints will then riſe, will ſhare in that glory; even the innumerable company, choſen, redeemed, and called, out of every nation, tongue, and people, and will be admitted to the ſame honour and happineſs, Rev. vii. 9, 13, 15, 16, 17. And this character will alſo agree with many other ſervants of Chriſt, who are called to harder and more laborious ſervice than others are, and labour more abundantly in the Lord's vineyard than others do, and are longer employed in it; as for inſtance, the apoſtle Paul; and yet the ſame crown of righteouſneſs that is laid up for him, and given to him, will be given to all that love the appearance of Chriſt, though they have not laboured for his name ſake, as he has done.

---

[x] T. Bab. Avoda Zara, fol. 10. 2.

[y] Ib. fol. 17. 1.

Ver. 13. But he anſwered one of them, &c.] Who was the forwardeſt and loudeſt in his complaints, and perſonated the reſt: and ſaid, friend, I do thee no wrong; by giving all alike, the ſame privileges and bleſſings to the laſt, as to the firſt, ſince nothing was witheld from him. And indeed, the Lord does no wrong to any, by the diſtinction which he makes among his creatures: he is righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his works: he does no injury to the evil angels, by chuſing the good angels, and confirming them in the eſtate in which they were created; when the others are reſerved in chains of darkneſs, to the judgment of the great day; or by chuſing fallen men in Chriſt, and making proviſions of grace for them, and not devils: and ſo there is no unrighteouſneſs in him, nor does he do any wrong to any, when, like the potter, out of the ſame clay, he makes one veſſel to honour, and another to diſhonour; any more than when in a providential way, he gives riches and wealth to ſome, and witholds them from others; or ſends his Goſpel, the means of grace to one, and not to another: and ſtill leſs can he be thought to do wrong to the ſons of men, by giving to them alike the ſame grace and privileges here, and the ſame happineſs and glory hereafter; ſince neither have any right to what they have, or ſhall enjoy, and no one has the leſs for what is given to the other. Didſt thou not agree with me for a penny? That is, to labour in the vineyard all the day for a penny; yea, this agreement was made perſonally with him, not with a ſervant, or meſſenger of his; though if it had, it ought, according to the Jewiſh canons, to have been abode by, which run thus [b]: "A man ſays to his meſſenger, or ſervant, go and hire workmen for me for three-pence; he goes and hires them for four-pence: if the meſſenger ſays to them, your wages be upon me, he gives them four-pence, and takes three-pence of the maſter of the houſe; he looſes one out of his own purſe: if he ſays to them, your hire be upon the maſter of the houſe, the maſter of the houſe gives them according to the cuſtom of the province: if there are one in the province that hired for three-pence, and others that are hired for four-pence, he gives them but three-pence, and the murmuring is againſt the meſſenger; in what things? When the work is not known, but when the work is known, and it is worth four-pence, the maſter of the houſe gives them four-pence; but if his meſſenger does not ſay to them four-pence, they do not labour and do what deſerves four-pence. The houſholder ſays to him, hire me for four-pence, and the meſſenger goes and hires for three-pence, though the work deſerves four-pence, they have but three-pence; becauſe that, קבלו על עצמן, they took it upon themſelves, (i. e. they agreed for ſo much) and their murmuring is againſt the meſſenger." Thus the argument in the parable proceeds upon the agreement, which ought to be abode by.

Ver. 14. Take that thine is, &c.] By agreement, and go thy way; out of my ſight, give me no more trouble on this head; which looks like a diſmiſſion from his ſervice, and after privileges; and was true

---

[z] Shirhaſhirim Rabba, fol. 21. 4. Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 72. 4.

[a] T. Hieroſ. Beracot, fol. 5. 3.

[b] Maimon. Hilch. Shecirut, c. 9. §. 3.

of many among the Jews, who were only nominal profeſſors, and from whom the Goſpel and ordinances of it were taken: I will give unto this laſt man that was called, and ſent into the vineyard, even as unto thee; the ſame outward privileges, beſides ſpecial grace, and eternal glory, which it looks as if the other had not.

Ver. 15. Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own? &c.] External gifts and outward privileges, ſuch as enjoying the word and ordinances, are God's own; and he may, as he does, beſtow them on whom he will, and when and where he pleaſes; as he gave them to the Jews, and continued them with them many hundred years, when the Gentiles were utterly deſtitute of them; and as he has beſtowed them in a more abundant manner for a long time on the Gentiles, whilſt the Jews deſpiſe and reject them. Special grace is his own, which he gives to whom he pleaſes; 'tis by his own grace, and not the merits of men, that any are choſen, adopted, juſtified, pardoned, regenerated, and called; that they have faith, hope, love, repentance, or perform new obedience from a new heart, and new principles. Heaven and glory is his own, of his own preparing and giving; and both grace and glory are diſpoſed of, and that very rightly and lawfully, according to his ſovereign good-will and pleaſure: he chuſes, adopts, juſtifies, pardons, regenerates, calls, and ſanctifies whom he pleaſes; and brings what ſons to glory he thinks fit, and beſtows it equally upon them: and in ſo doing, does no wrong, or any injuſtice to any of his creatures; not to the fallen angels, by chuſing ſome of their ſpecies, and confirming them in their original conſtitution; and by leaving them, the fallen angels, in their apoſtacy; nor by making proviſion for fallen man, and not them, nor by puniſhing them with everlaſting deſtruction; nor do they ever complain of any wrong being done them: nor to non-elect men; for none of Adam's race have any right to grace or glory, and therefore no wrong is done to any of them, by witholding them from them, whereby nothing is taken from them, and given to others; and by puniſhing them for ſin: nor to any elect men, by making others partners with them; ſince they are all alike by nature, unworthy of grace and glory, and deſerving of wrath: what is enjoyed by any of them, is of mere grace, and not through merit; and one has not a whit the leſs, for what the other is poſſeſſed of; ſo that there is no room for envy, murmuring, and complaint: is thine eye evil becauſe I am good? An evil eye, is oppoſed to a good eye, frequently in Jewiſh writings, as a good eye ſignifies beneficence and liberality; hence it is ſaid [c], "He " that gives a gift, let him give it, בעין יפה, with " a good eye;" bountifully and generouſly; and " he that devoteth any thing, let him devote it with " a good eye," chearfully and freely: ſo an evil eye intends envy and covetouſneſs, as it does here: and the ſenſe is, art thou envious at the good of others, and covetous and greedy to monopolize all to thyſelf, becauſe I am liberal, kind, and beneficent? Men are apt to complain of God, and charge his procedures in providence and grace, with inequality and injuſtice; whereas he does, as he may, all things according to his ſovereign will, and never contrary to juſtice, truth, and goodneſs; though he is not to be brought to man's bar, and men ſhould ſubmit to his ſovereignty.

Ver. 16. So the laſt ſhall be firſt, and the firſt laſt, &c.] As he had aſſerted in ch. xix. 30. and which is clearly illuſtrated by this parable, as it may be applied to Jews or Gentiles, or to nominal and real chriſtians: for many be called; externally, under the miniſtration of the Goſpel, as the Jews in general were, by Chriſt and his apoſtles; but few choſen; in Chriſt from all eternity, both to grace and glory; and in conſequence, and as an evidence of it, but few among the Jews; as alſo in the Gentile world, comparatively ſpeaking: and even but a few of thoſe that are outwardly called, are inwardly and effectually called by the powerful grace of God, out of darkneſs into marvellous light, into the grace and liberty of the Goſpel, into communion with Chriſt, and to the obtaining his kingdom and glory, according to the eternal purpoſe of God. It is a ſaying of R. Simeon ben Jochai [d], " I have ſeen " the children of the world to come (elſewhere [e] it " is, of the chamber) והן מועטין, and they are " few." Though he vainly thought, that if thoſe few were but two, they were himſelf and his ſon.

Ver. 17. And Jeſus going up to Jeruſalem, &c.] Which was ſituated [f] in the higheſt part of the land of Iſrael: the land of Iſrael, is ſaid to be higher than any other land whatever; and the temple at Jeruſalem, higher than any part of the land of Iſrael; wherefore Chriſt's going to Jeruſalem, is expreſſed by going up to it. Whither he came either from the coaſts of Judæa, from beyond Jordan, ch. xix. 1. where he had been ſome time healing diſeaſes, diſputing with the Phariſees, diſcourſing with the young ruler, and inſtructing his diſciples; or from a country near to the wilderneſs, from a city called Ephraim, John xi. 54. where he continued ſome time with his diſciples, after the Sanhedrim had took counſel to put him to death; for this was his laſt journey to Jeruſalem. Took the twelve diſciples apart in the way; into ſome private place, which lay near the road; for it ſeems that there were others that followed him, beſides the twelve; when he was not willing they ſhould hear what he had to ſay to them, concerning the iſſue of this journey; leſt either they ſhould be diſcouraged and deſert him, or it ſhould be made publick, and methods be uſed to prevent it: and ſaid unto them; the diſciples, whom he thought fit once more to remind of his ſufferings and death, and to prepare them for the ſame; and though they would not ſo thoroughly underſtand all that he ſhould ſay, yet when it was come to paſs, they would remember it, and which would be of ſervice to confirm their faith in him, as the true Meſſiah. See the note on Mark x. 32.

Ver. 18. Behold, we go up to Jeruſalem, &c.] This is the laſt time of our going thither; obſerve, and take notice of what I am about to ſay; ſome extraordinary things will come to paſs, and, as Luke relates that he ſaid, all things that are written by the prophets concerning the Son of man, ſhall be accompliſhed; every thing that is recorded in the twenty-ſecond Pſalm, and in the fifty-third of Iſaiah, or in any other prophecies of the Old Teſtament, relating to the ill-treatment the Meſſiah ſhould meet with, to his ſufferings and death, and all the circumſtances attending them, ſhall be exactly fulfilled in every punctilio: and that they might not be at a loſs about what he meant, he gives an account of various particular things, which ſhould befal him; and the Son of man ſhall be betrayed: he does not ſay by whom, though he knew from the beginning who ſhould betray him, that it would be one of his diſciples,

---

[c] T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 65. 1. & 71. 1. & 72. 1.

[d] T. Hieroſ. Beracot, fol. 13. 4.

[e] T. Bab. Succa, fol. 45. 2. & Sanhedrin, fol. 97. 2.

[f] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 87. 1.

ciples, and that it would be Judas; but the proper time was not yet come to make this diſcovery: the perſons into whoſe hands he was to be betrayed, are mentioned; unto the chief prieſts, and unto the Scribes; who were his moſt inveterate and implacable enemies; and who were the perſons that had already taken counſel to put him to death, and were ſeeking all advantages and opportunities to execute their deſign: and they ſhall condemn him to death; which is to be underſtood not of their declaring it as their opinion, that he was guilty of death, and ought to die by a law of theirs, which declaration they made before Pilate; nor of their procuring the ſentence of death to be pronounced by him, upon him; but of their adjudging him to death among themſelves, in the palace of the high-prieſt; which was done by them, as the Sanhedrim and great council of the nation; though either they could not, or did not, chuſe to execute it themſelves, and therefore delivered him up to the Romans; for this act of condemning him to death, was to be, and was, before the delivery of him up to the Gentiles, as is clear from what follows.

Ver. 19. And ſhall deliver him to the Gentiles, &c.] To Pilate, an heathen governor, and to the Roman officers and ſoldiers under him; ſee John xviii. 35. To mock him, as they did, by putting on him a ſcarlet robe, platting a crown of thorns, and placing it on his head, and a reed in his hand; and then bowed the knee to him, and cried, hail, king of the Jews! and to ſcourge him; as he was by Pilate, at leaſt by his orders; Mark adds, and ſpit upon him; as not only did the Jews in the palace of the high-prieſt, but alſo the Gentiles, the Roman ſoldiers, after they had mocked him in the manner before deſcribed: and to crucify him; which, as it was a cruel and ſhameful death, ſuch as ſlaves and the worſt of malefactors were put to, ſo it was a Roman one; for which reaſon, the Jews choſe to deliver him into the hands of the Gentiles. The Perſic verſion here adds, and put him into the grave; which, though it followed his crucifixion, was not done by the Gentiles, but by Joſeph of Arimathea, a Jew, and a diſciple of Jeſus; and that not in a contemptuous, but honourable manner: and the third day he ſhall riſe again: this he ſaid for the comfort of his diſciples; but now, though theſe things were ſo clearly and diſtinctly expreſſed by Chriſt, and which ſhew his omniſcience, and give proof both of his deity and Meſſiahſhip, yet Luke obſerves of the diſciples, that they underſtood none of theſe things, and this ſaying was hid from them, neither knew they the things which were ſpoken: the words were plain, the grammatical ſenſe of them was eaſy, but they could not imagine, that they were to be taken literally; which was ſuch a glaring contradiction to their received and rooted principles of the temporal kingdom of the Meſſiah, and the grandeur of it, that they fancied theſe expreſſions carried a myſtical, ſecret meaning in them, which they were not maſters of: and certain it is, that what our Lord now ſaid, was ſo far from deſtroying, or weakening theſe prejudices of theirs, that it rather confirmed them in them; particularly, what he ſaid about riſing again, which ſeemed to have put them afreſh in mind, and to excite their hopes of this external felicity, as appears from the following caſe.

Ver. 20. Then came to him the mother of Zebedees children, &c.] Whoſe name was Salome, as may be concluded from Matt. xxvii. 56. compared with Mark xv. 40. She is not called the wife of Zebedee, who might be now dead, but the mother of his children, his two ſons, as the Arabic verſion renders it; James and John, and who were the diſciples of Chriſt: it is not certain, that Zebedee was ever a follower of him; and therefore the woman is deſcribed by her relation to her children, and not her huſband; and the rather, becauſe it was in their name, and on their account, that ſhe came to Jeſus. She is ſaid to be the ſiſter of Joſeph, the huſband of Mary, the mother of our Lord; and if ſo, might hope to ſucceed in her requeſt, on the foot of relation; as alſo, ſince ſhe herſelf had been a conſtant follower of, and attendant on him; and eſpecially, inaſmuch as her ſons were his favourite diſciples: with her ſons; her two ſons, James and John, whom Mark mentions by name: worſhipping him, and deſiring a certain thing of him; that is, ſhe came in a very ſubmiſſive manner to him, either bowed unto him, or kneeled down before him, or threw herſelf at his feet, and ſignified that ſhe had a ſingle favour, and a very conſiderable one, to aſk of him. Mark repreſents the caſe thus, that her two ſons, James and John, came to Chriſt, and that they themſelves ſpoke to him, and addreſſed him in this manner: Maſter, we would that thou ſhouldſt do for us, whatſoever we ſhall deſire: which was a very odd requeſt, both as to the matter and manner of it; that they ſhould aſk, and inſiſt upon every thing to be done for them, they deſired; and ſuggeſt, that they expected that he would promiſe them this, before they declared the particular favour they had to aſk of him. The matter may be reconciled thus. Theſe two diſciples, having obſerved what Chriſt had ſaid concerning the twelve diſciples ſitting on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Iſrael, and what he had juſt related, concerning his riſing again the third day, which they might underſtand of ſome diſplay of his glory; and concluding from all this, that the ſetting up of his temporal monarchy was at hand, inform their mother of it, and move to her, to uſe her intereſt with Chriſt, in their favour; and which they did, partly to ſhun the envy and ill-will of the reſt of the diſciples; and partly, to conceal their own pride and vanity; as alſo, they might think a requeſt from her, on their behalf, would be more eaſily granted: accordingly, ſhe agreeing to the motion, they all three came, as Matthew relates, and the mother is the mouth, and ſpeaks for her ſons; ſo that they may be ſaid to make ſuch a requeſt by her, ſhe perſonating them; or they joined in the petition with her; or as ſoon as ſhe had made it, they ſeconded it, and made it their own.

Ver. 21. And he ſaid unto her, what wilt thou? &c.] Mark ſays, he ſaid unto them; her two ſons, James and John, what would you that I ſhould do for you? Both is true; what is this ſingular favour? what buſineſs of moment and importance is it, you would have me do for you, you are ſo eager and preſſing for, and ſo ſollicitous of? This he ſaid, not as being ignorant of the matter; he knew the corruption of their hearts, the vanity of their minds, their carnal, worldly, and ambitious views; but to lead them on to ſay all they had to ſay upon this head; in which may be obſerved the goodneſs, humanity, and patience of Chriſt, in not upbraiding them with their pride and inſolence, in bearing with their raſhneſs and folly, and in giving them room to believe, that he ſhould anſwer their requeſt in every thing that was right and reaſonable to be done. She ſaith unto him, grant that theſe my two ſons may ſit, the one on thy right hand, and the other on the left in thy kingdom; or, as in Mark, in thy glory: that is, in thy glorious kingdom; meaning a temporal one, which would outvie all the kingdoms of the world, in external glory, pomp, and ſplendor, as they imagined: to ſit one on the right hand, and the other on the left hand of Chriſt, when he ſhould be ſeated, literally, on the throne of his father David, ſignifies to be neareſt to his perſon; to be next to him in power and authority; to have the higheſt poſts of honour, and places of truſt and profit; to be his prime miniſters; and, in a word, to have the greateſt ſhare next to him of worldly honour, riches, and power. To ſit at the right hand, was, with the Jews, reckoned a great mark of honour and affection; ſee 1 Kings ii. 19. and ſo with other nations: with the Egyptians eſpecially, it was accounted a great honour to be placed on the right hand, but the greateſt to be in the middle; which was equally obſerved among the Romans, and the ſame with the Africans and Numidians; tho' Xenophon relates, that Cyrus, with a ſingular prudence, that he might receive his gueſts the more honourably, uſed to place them at the left hand, accounting that part, as neareſt the heart, to be the more worthy [g]. Theſe two, the beſt and moſt honourable places, this woman was for engroſſing for her two ſons, who joined with her in the requeſt; for Mark ſays, that they ſaid unto him, grant unto us that we may ſit, &c. and Chriſt's anſwer here, which follows, implies as much.

Ver. 22. But Jeſus anſwered and ſaid, &c.] To her two ſons, ye know not what ye aſk. They were ignorant of the nature of Chriſt's kingdom, which is ſpiritual, and not of this world; or they would never have aſked ſuch a queſtion, or ſued for that which will never be enjoyed by any: and ſuppoſing that Chriſt's kingdom had been ſuch as they imagined, yet in aſking for honours and riches, they might not know what they aſked for; they might promiſe themſelves much pleaſure and happineſs in the enjoyment of them, and yet, if indulged with them, might be diſappointed, and find unexpected troubles and uneaſineſs. It would have been much more proper and ſeaſonable, on hearing of Chriſt's being mocked, ſcourged, ſpit upon, and crucified, if they had put ſuch a queſtion to themſelves, Chriſt here directs to, are ye able to drink of the cup that I ſhall drink of, and to be baptized with the baptiſm I am baptized with? meaning his reproaches, ſorrows, ſufferings, and death; which becauſe of the diſagreeableneſs of them, he compares to a bitter cup of vengeance, wrath, fury, and indignation; and becauſe they were appointed to him, and allotted for him, they were his portion, therefore he expreſſes them by a cup; and becauſe they were ſo many and great, of ſuch an overwhelming nature, that he ſeemed to be plunged into them, and covered with them, therefore he likens them to a baptiſm; and which the ordinance of water-baptiſm, performed by immerſion, is a lively repreſentation of. Now Chriſt ſuggeſts to theſe diſciples, that inſtead of indulging their ambitious deſires of worldly grandeur, that they would do well to conſider what a bitter cup he had to drink of, and what a ſea of ſorrows and ſufferings he was about to be plunged into, and drenched in; and whether they could think of enduring any thing of the like kind, for his ſake, which was moſt likely to be in a ſhort time, what they would be called unto, and not to honours, eaſe, and pleaſure; and what they muſt be ſure, more or leſs, to undergo, before they entered the everlaſting kingdom of glory: they ſay unto him, we are able; not conſidering the nature of theſe ſufferings, and their own weakneſs; but partly thro' ignorance of themſelves, and a vain confidence which poſſeſſed them; and chiefly thro' a vehement deſire of the places in his kingdom, they aſked for, and which they thought drinking his cup, and being baptized with his baptiſm, were the condition, and the means of enjoying; and ſo raſhly affirm their ability, and which includes their willingneſs to comply herewith.

Ver. 23. And he ſaith unto them, ye ſhall drink indeed of my cup, &c.] Not of the ſelf-ſame, but of what was like unto it; meaning, that they ſhould endure much perſecution for his name's ſake, as all that will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus muſt expect in one ſhape or another. Thus James, who was one of theſe perſons, was ſlain with the ſword by Herod; John, the other, was impriſoned, and beaten by the order of the Jewiſh ſanhedrim, was baniſhed into the iſle of Patmos by Domitian; and, ſome ſay, was caſt into a cauldron of boiling oil, tho' ſaved in it: ſo that theſe words ſeem to be a prophecy of what they ſhould ſuffer for Chriſt, inſtead of enjoying places of worldly honour and profit under him, they were ſeeking for. And be baptized with the baptiſm that I am baptized with: this clauſe is here, and in the former verſe, omitted by the Vulgate Latin, and Ethiopic verſions, and in ſome Greek copies, and is thought to be tranſcribed hither out of Mark's Goſpel; but the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions have it, and ſo has Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel, and it appears in many Greek copies. James, being bathed in his own blood, when killed with the ſword, and John being caſt into a veſſel of ſcalding oil, theſe are fitly expreſſed by a baptiſm. But to ſit on my right hand, and on my left, is not mine to give; in the ſenſe in which they aſked it, ſince he was no temporal prince; nor was his kingdom of this world; nor had he any ſuch external favours, or worldly honours: and as to the true and ſpiritual ſenſe of ſuch a phraſe, it was not a point to be fixed now by him, as man, and according to his own will; as who ſhould reign with him in the kingdom of heaven, who ſhould ſit down on the ſame throne with him, and enjoy all the glories and happineſs of the world to come; and though, as mediator, all this glory was given to him, and he had it in his hands to give to others, yet to none but thoſe for whom, ſays he, it is prepared of my father: for this is the true reading and ſenſe of the laſt clauſe; ſignifying, that eternal life, or the heavenly glory, is a kingdom prepared by his father, from the foundation of the world, and not for any body, and every perſon, but for ſome only, according to his father's ſovereign will and pleaſure; and that this is an affair that was fixed by him, in his eternal counſels and purpoſes, and in the covenant of his grace, and not to be adjuſted now; nor was the deſignation of it to be, nor will the diſtribution of it be according to the merits of men, but the free grace of God; and though he, as mediator, was appointed to beſtow both grace and glory on men, yet only on thoſe the father had given to him, for whom grace was laid up in him, and glory prepared.

Ver. 24. And when the ten heard it, &c.] The other ten apoſtles, who either were within hearing the requeſt made, and Chriſt's anſwer, or had by ſome means information of it: they were moved with indignation againſt the two brethren; the two ſons of Zebedee, James and John: they were not ſo much diſpleaſed with the mother of them, who aſked the favour for them, as with her ſons, knowing that they had put her upon making this motion to Chriſt; nor were they ſo much moved with indignation nation at the action, deteſting all notions of ſuperiority and pre-eminence; for they were all tinctured with the ſame carnal principle, and each was deſirous of the chief place for himſelf; but they were angry, and out of all temper, that theſe two brethren ſhould move for that, which they thought they had as good a right unto, as any of them: wherefore, as Mark ſays, they began to be much diſpleaſed with them, and to ſhew their reſentment, not only by their looks and geſtures, but by words; and very probably they would have roſe to very high words, and a downright quarrel, had not Chriſt interpoſed; as, from the following verſe, it appears he did.

---

[g] Alex. ab Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 2. c. 19.

Ver. 25. But Jeſus called them unto him, &c.] All his twelve diſciples, perceiving that the ſame ambitious views prevailed in them all: to diſcourage which, and to prevent their quarrelling one with another, he called them to him, and made uſe of the following reaſonings: and ſaid, ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exerciſe dominion over them, and they that are great exerciſe authority upon them; appealing to them in a caſe that was well known by them, what the princes of the Gentiles did; or, as Mark expreſſes it, they which are accounted, or ſeem to rule over the Gentiles; who know not God, the king of kings, and lord of lords, who neither ſerve and obey him, or have any dependance on him, but aſſume a power of governing others, take upon them to rule the nations of the world, and are acknowledged as ſuch by them: theſe claim a ſuperiority over others, and exerciſe lordly power over them; and they that are their great ones, their lords, and nobles under them; theſe alſo aſſert a pre-eminence, and exerciſe authority on thoſe that are below them; which they have received from thoſe that are above them: this is the uſual way and method of the governments of the kingdoms of this world: wherefore, for the apoſtles to affect and deſire a ſuperiority to each other, in the kingdom of Chriſt, was to imitate the Gentiles, and to act according to worldly forms of government; which is very unſuitable to the followers of the meek and lowly Jeſus, whoſe kingdom is ſpiritual, and not of this world.

Ver. 26. But it ſhall not be ſo among you, &c.] This is not to be extended to Chriſtian nations, as if there were to be no order of magiſtracy ſubſiſting in them; but that all muſt be on a level, and no diſtinction of princes and ſubjects, of governors and governed; nor to Chriſtian churches, as if there was no eccleſiaſtical authority to be uſed, or any church-government and power to be exerciſed; none to rule, whom others are to obey and ſubmit themſelves to; but is to be reſtrained to the apoſtles as ſuch, among whom there was an entire equality; being all apoſtles of Chriſt, being equally qualified and ſent, and put into the ſelf-ſame office by him: the ſame holds good of all paſtors of churches, who have no ſuper-intendency and pre-eminence over one another, or can, or ought to exerciſe any lordly power and authority, one, or more, over the reſt; being equally inveſted with the ſame office-power, one as another: for otherwiſe Chriſt's kingdom would appear like the nations of the world, and to be of a worldly nature; whereas it is ſpiritual, and does not lie in worldly pomp and grandeur, and in external ſuperiority and pre-eminence of one another; but in the ſpiritual adminiſtration of the word and ordinances; which every paſtor of a church has an equal right to exerciſe, and obedience to them lies in a ſubmiſſion to theſe things: but whoſoever will be great among you, let him be, or, as in Mark, ſhall be, your miniſter: whoever would be reckoned a great man in the kingdom of Chriſt, or under the Goſpel-diſpenſation, muſt be a miniſter to others: if he is deſirous of being truly great in the eſteem of God, and of men, he muſt do great ſervice for Chriſt, and to the ſouls of men; and ſeek to bring great glory to God, by faithfully miniſtring the word and ordinances, and by denying himſelf worldly honour and glory, and by ſerving others, through much reproach, difficulty, and oppoſition.

Ver. 27. And whoſoever will be chief among you, &c.] Or firſt, or have the pre-eminence, the firſt place in the kingdom of the Meſſiah, let him be your ſervant; or, as in Mark, ſhall be ſervant of all: not only a miniſter, but a ſervant; not a ſervant of ſome only, but of all. This was verified in the apoſtle Paul, who became a ſervant to all men, tho' he was free, that he might gain ſome to Chriſt; and by ſo doing was the chief, tho' he reckoned himſelf the leaſt of the apoſtles, yea, leſs than the leaſt of all ſaints. The Jews have a ſaying ſomewhat like this, that [h] "every one that makes himſelf כעבד, as a ſervant, for the words of the law in this world, ſhall be made free in the world to come."

Ver. 28. Even as the ſon of man, &c.] Meaning himſelf, the ſeed of the woman, the ſon of Abraham, and of David, according to the fleſh; and whom he propoſes as an example of humility, and as an argument to draw them off from their ambitious views of worldly grandeur, and from all thoughts of the Meſſiah's ſetting up a temporal kingdom; ſince he came not to be miniſtred unto; by others; to be attended on in pomp and ſtate, to have a numerous retinue about him, waiting upon him, and miniſtring to him; as is the caſe of the princes, and great men of the world; tho' he is Lord of all, and king of kings; but to miniſter; in the form of a ſervant unto others, going about from place to place to do good, both to the bodies and ſouls of men: he came forth from his father, down from heaven, into this world, by his aſſumption of human nature, to miniſter in the prophetic office, by preaching the Goſpel, and working miracles, in confirmation of it; and in the prieſtly office, one branch of which is expreſſed in the next clauſe, and to give his life a ranſom for many: what he came to give was his life, which was his own, and than which nothing is more dear and precious: beſides, his life was an uncommon one, being not only ſo uſeful to men, and entirely free from ſin in its ſelf, but was the life of the man Jeſus, who is in union with the ſon of God: this he came to give, and did give into the hands of men, to the juſtice of God, and death itſelf; which giving, ſuppoſes it to be his own, and at his own diſpoſal; was not forfeited by any act of his, nor was it forced from him, but freely laid down by him; and that as a ranſom, or redemption-price for his people, to deliver them from the evil of ſin, the bondage of ſatan, the curſes of a righteous law, from eternal death, and future wrath, and, in ſhort, from all their enemies: which ranſom-price was paid for them in their room and ſtead, by Chriſt, as their ſubſtitute; who put himſelf in their law-place, and laid himſelf under obligation to pay their debts, and clear their ſcores, and redeem them from all their iniquities, and the evil conſequences of them: and this he did for many; for as many as were ordained to eternal life; for as many as the father gave unto him; for many out of every kindred, tongue, and people, and nation; but not for every individual of human nature; for many are not all.

---

[h] T. Bab. Bava Metzia, fol. 85. 2.

Ver. 29. And as they departed from Jericho, &c.] Which was diſtant about ten parſas, or miles, from Jeruſalem[i], thro' which Chriſt juſt paſſed, and had met with Zaccheus, and called him, and delivered the parable concerning a nobleman's going into a far country. The Syriac and Perſic verſions render the words, when Jeſus departed from Jericho; and the Arabic, when he went out of Jericho; not alone, but with his diſciples, as Mark ſays; and not with them only, for a great multitude followed him out of the city; either to hear him, or be healed by him, or to ſee him, or behold his miracles, or to accompany him to Jeruſalem; whither he was going to keep the feaſt of the paſſover, and where they might be in ſome expectation he would ſet up his kingdom. The Ethiopic verſion reads it, as they went out from Jeruſalem, contrary to all copies and verſions.

Ver. 30. And behold, two blind men, &c.] Mark and Luke make mention but of one; which is no contradiction to Matthew; for they neither of them ſay that there was but one. A greater difficulty occurs in Luke's account; for whereas Matthew and Mark both agree, that it was when Jeſus came out of Jericho, that this cure was wrought, Luke ſays it was when he came nigh unto it; which ſome reconcile by obſerving, that that phraſe may be rendered, while he was near Jericho; and ſo only ſignifies his diſtance from it, and not motion to it; but this will not ſolve the difficulty, becauſe we after read of his entrance into it, and paſſing thro' it. Some therefore have thought, that Chriſt met with, and cured one blind man before he entered the city, and another when he came out of it, and that Matthew has put the hiſtory of both together: but to me it ſeems, that there were three blind men cured; one before he went into Jericho, which Luke only relates, and two as he came out of Jericho, which Matthew here ſpeaks of; and one of which, according to Mark, was by name Bartimeus, the ſon of Timeus; for ſo Bartimeus ſignifies. Tima, or Timeus, was a name in uſe among the Jews: we often read of R. Judah, בן תימא, Ben Tima[k], the ſon of Tima, or Timeus. Origen[l] thinks, he had his name from the Greek word Τιμη, which ſignifies honour; and ſo טימי, Time, with the Jews, is uſed for honour and profit[m]. This man's father might have been a very honourable and uſeful man, tho' the ſon was fallen into poverty and diſtreſs, thro' blindneſs; for which reaſon he may be mentioned, as being a perſon well known to the Jews. Sitting by the way-ſide; Mark ſays, begging, where ſuch were wont to ſit, in order to aſk alms of perſons, as they paſſed by: when they heard that Jeſus paſſed by; who, upon perceiving that there was an unuſual concourſe of people, might aſk the reaſon of it, when it was told them that Jeſus of Nazareth was coming that way: or, without aſking, they might hear the people ſpeak of him; and inaſmuch as they had heard many things concerning him, and the miracles he wrought, applied to him for help, and cried out, ſaying, have mercy on us, O Lord, thou ſon of David: in which may be obſerved the titles of honour they give him, which declare their faith in him; calling him Lord, expreſſing their ſenſe of his deity, dominion, and power; and ſon of David, thereby owning and profeſſing him to be the Meſſiah, that being a common name of him, well known among the Jews; ſee the note on Matt. i. 1. the petition they make is, that he would have mercy on them, who, thro' blindneſs, were in a poor, helpleſs, and miſerable condition; and this was made with great vehemency: they cried out aloud, that he might hear them, and take pity on them; being eagerly deſirous of having their ſight, and firmly believing that he was able to reſtore it to them.

Ver. 31. And the multitude rebuked them, &c.] Who were either the friends or enemies of Chriſt: if his friends, they might rebuke them, that they might not be ſo troubleſome to him, and judging it unworthy of him to have any thing to do with ſuch mean perſons, and ſuppoſing that their buſineſs was only to aſk alms of him; or if they were his enemies, or not ſo well affected to him, they might chide them for giving him ſuch high characters, as Lord, and ſon of David; and therefore being diſpleaſed with ſuch encomiums, reproved them, becauſe they ſhould hold their peace; be ſilent, and ſay no more of that kind, leſt others ſhould take up the ſame notion of him, and it ſhould prevail among the people. But they cried the more, ſaying, have mercy on us, O Lord, thou ſon of David. They lifted up their voice higher, and cried the more loudly, that their voice might be above the noiſe of the people, and be heard by Chriſt; and renewed their requeſt with more eagerneſs and importunity, repeating the characters they before gave him, being not in the leaſt intimidated by the rebukes of the people: their faith in Jeſus, as the Meſſiah, being more increaſed, and their deſires of his pity and compaſſion being more enlarged, they grew bolder, and more reſolute, as faith often does by oppoſition, and trials.

Ver. 32. And Jeſus ſtood ſtill, &c.] Made a full ſtop, when he was near, or right againſt where theſe blind men ſat; which ſhews the ſtrength of faith, the force of prayer, and the great regard Chriſt has to both: and called them; himſelf, being near unto them, and within the reach of his voice; or he commanded them to be brought to him, as Mark ſays: he ordered others to call them, or let them know, that it was his will they ſhould come to him; upon which they threw away their garments, their long upper garments, which were ſome hindrance to a quick motion, at leaſt Bartimeus did; that they might be the ſooner with him: and when they were come to him, he ſaid, what will ye that I ſhall do unto you? is it alms you want? or would you have your ſight reſtored? This queſtion he put, not as being ignorant of their deſires, but to ſhew both his power and willingneſs to do any thing for them they ſhould aſk; and that their faith in him might be made manifeſt, and the people have their expectations raiſed, and they prepared to attend the miracle now to be wrought.

Ver. 33. They ſay unto him, Lord, that our eyes may be opened.] That is, that their ſight might be reſtored to them; for being deprived of that, it was all one as if their eyes were ſo cloſed, that they could not open them; and ſo the recovery of it is expreſſed by an opening of them. The opening of the eyes of the blind was propheſied of, as what ſhould be done in the days of the Meſſiah, and by him, as an evidence of his being that perſon,

---

[i] Bartenora in Miſn. Tamid, c. 3. §. 8.

[k] T. Hieroſ. Nazir, fol. 52. 1. Erubin, fol. 19. 4. T. Bab. Gittin, fol. 84. 1. Bava Metzia, fol. 94. 1. Maſſech. Semachot, c. 9. Juchaſin, fol. 159. 2.

[l] Comment. in Matt. vol. 1. p. 428. Ed. Huet.

[m] Targum in Eſth. iii. 8. & ℣. 13. T. Hieroſ. Peah, fol. 15. 4.

Iſ. xxxv. 5. which prophecy theſe blind men might be acquainted with, and be an encouragement to their faith to expect a cure from him. They don't aſk for alms, but for the recovery of their ſight; which, being granted, they would be able to get their bread in another way; for they were not like ſome idle perſons that chuſe rather to be under ſuch a calamity, or any other, that they might not be obliged to work with their hands for a livelihood. Their requeſt ſhews, that they made no doubt of it, but firmly believed that Chriſt was able to do this for them, tho' the thing was impoſſible to be done by man; who therefore muſt conclude that he was not a mere man, but the ſon of the living God.

Ver. 34. So Jeſus had compaſſion on them, &c.] His bowels moved towards them as a man; he pitied their miſerable and diſtreſſed condition, and diſcovered the tenderneſs of his heart towards them by ſome outward ſign, by his looks, or by ſome geſture or another: and touched their eyes; with his bare hand, without the uſe of any inſtrument or medicine. The Ethiopic verſion adds; and ſaid unto them, according to your faith ſhall it be unto you; which ſeems to be taken out of ch. ix. 29. The Evangeliſt Mark relates, that Jeſus ſaid unto him (Bartimeus) go thy way, thy faith hath made thee whole: not that the virtue of healing came from the act of faith, but from the object of it; his faith was not the cauſe of, nor the reaſon why, but the way and means in and by which he received the cure: and immediately their eyes received ſight; or, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions render the words, that moment their eyes were opened: the cure was wrought at once, directly; a clear proof of the omnipotence of Chriſt, and of his true and proper deity: the words, their eyes, are not in ſome copies; and are omitted by the Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions, which read thus, they immediately ſaw. The Perſic verſion adds, and they ſaw the world; the men and things of it, which they either had never ſeen before, or, at leaſt, for a conſiderable time; which muſt be a very ſurprizing and agreeable ſight to them. And they followed him; in a corporal ſenſe; they joined the multitude, and went after him to Jeruſalem; partly to expreſs their gratitude for ſuch a wonderful favour beſtowed upon them; and partly that they might be witneſſes of the power of his deity, and the truth of his Meſſiahſhip, as they went along, and at Jeruſalem: and in a ſpiritual ſenſe; they became his diſciples, they embraced his doctrines, believed in him as the Meſſiah, ſubmitted to his ordinances, imitated him in the exerciſe of grace, and in the performance of duty: for, at the ſame time he reſtored their bodily ſight, he gave them a ſpiritual one to look to him, and follow him, the light of the world, that they might enjoy the light of life in another world.

CHAP. XXI.

Ver. 1. AND when they drew nigh unto Jeruſalem, &c.] The Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions read, when he drew nigh, or was near; but not alone, his diſciples were with him, and a multitude of people alſo; as is evident from the following account. They might well be ſaid to be near to Jeruſalem, ſince 'tis added, and were come to Bethphage; which the Jews ſay [n] was within the walls of the city of Jeruſalem, and was in all reſpects as the city itſelf, and was the outermoſt part of it [o]; and that all within the outward circumference of the city of Jeruſalem was called Bethphage [p]: it ſeems to me to be part of it within the city, and part of it without, in the ſuburbs of it, which reached to Bethany, and that to the mount of Olives. Various are the derivations and etymologies of this place: ſome ſay it ſignifies the houſe, or place of a fountain, from a fountain that was in it; as if it was a compound of Beth, an houſe, and πηγη, pege, a fountain: others, the houſe of the mouth of a valley; as if it was made up of thoſe three words, בית פי גיא, becauſe the outward boundary of it was at the foot of the mount of Olives, at the entrance of the valley of Jehoſhaphat: others ſay, that the ancient reading was Bethſphage, the houſe of ſlaughter; and Jerom ſays [q], it was a village of the prieſts, and he renders it, the houſe of jaw-bones: here indeed they might bake the ſhew-bread, and eat the holy things, as in Jeruſalem [r]; but the true reading and ſignification of it is, בית פאגי, the houſe of figs; ſo called from the fig-trees which grew in the outward limits of it near Bethany, and the mount of Olives: hence we read of [s] פגי בית היני, the figs of Bethany; which place is mentioned along with Bethphage, both by Mark and Luke, where Chriſt, and thoſe with him, were now come: the latter ſays, they were come nigh to theſe places, for they were come to the mount of Olives; near to which were the furthermoſt limits of Bethany, and Bethphage, from Jeruſalem. This mount was ſo called from the abundance of olive-trees which grew upon it, and was on the eaſt-ſide of Jeruſalem [t]; and it was diſtant from it a ſabbath-day's journey, Acts i. 12. which was two thouſand cubits, or eight furlongs, and which made one mile: then ſent Jeſus two diſciples; who they were is not certain, perhaps Peter and John, who were afterwards ſent by him to prepare the paſſover, Luke xxii. 8.

Ver. 2. Saying unto them, go into the village over-againſt you, &c.] Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel reads before you; not Jeruſalem, as ſome have thought, for that would never be called a village; tho' the Ethiopic verſion reads it, the city; but rather Bethany, which was near to Bethphage, and is mentioned with it; tho' the Jews ſay [u], the name of the village was Nob, and was near to Jeruſalem, and own, that Chriſt had an aſs from hence, on which he rode to Jeruſalem, and applied to himſelf the prophecy in Zech. ix. 9. And it is very likely this was the village; for Nob was very near to Jeruſalem; it was over-againſt it, within ſight of it, and from thence might be taken a view of the whole city, according to the Jews; who ſay [w], that Sennacherib ſtood in Nob, a city of the prieſts, over-againſt the walls of Jeruſalem, and ſaw the whole city, and it was little in his eyes; and he ſaid, is not this the city of Jeruſalem, &c. and ſtraightway, or, as in Mark, as ſoon as ye be entered into it; and in Luke, at your entring, at the town's end, at one of the firſt houſes in it, at the door thereof, ye ſhall

---

[n] Gloſſ. in T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 14. 2. & Peſach, fol. 91. 1.

[o] Gloſſ. in T. Bab. Peſach. fol. 63. 2. & 91. 1.

[p] Gloſſ. in T. Bab. Sota, fol. 45. 1. & Bava Metzia, fol. 90. 1.

[q] In loc. & ad Euſtoch. fol. 59. 3. tom. 1.

[r] Miſn. Menachot, c. 11. §. 2. T. Bab. Menachot, fol. 63. 1. & 78. 2. Maimon. Hilch. Peſul. Hamukdaſh, c. 12. §. 16. Gloſſ. in Peſach, fol. 63. 2.

[s] T. Bab. Peſach, fol. 53. 1. & Erubin, fol. 28. 2.

[t] Zech. xiv. 4. Targum in Ezek. xi. 23. & Bartenora in Miſn. Middot, c. 1. §. 3.

[u] Toldos Jeſu, p. 9.

[w] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 95. 1. Targum, Jarchi, & Kimchi in Iſ. x. 32.

ſhall find an aſs tied, and a colt with her. The other Evangeliſts only make mention of the colt, or young aſs; but, no doubt, both were ſpoken of by Chriſt, and both were found by the diſciples, the aſs, and the colt by her, and both were brought away by them; and on both of them, very probably, Chriſt rode; firſt on one, and then on the other, as the prophecy hereby fulfilled ſeems to require, and as the ſequel of the account ſhews. The ancient allegorical ſenſe of the aſs and colt is not to be deſpiſed: that the aſs may ſignify the Jews, who had been uſed to bear the burdenſome rites and ceremonies of the law; and the colt, the wild and untamed Gentiles, and the coming of Chriſt, firſt to the one, and then to the other: looſe them, and bring them unto me, both aſs and colt. So the Arabic verſion reads it, looſe both, and bring them both to me.

Ver. 3. And if any man ſay ought unto you, &c.] As, what buſineſs have you with the aſs and colt? why do you looſe them? as certain perſons, the owners of them did, as Mark and Luke relate; ye ſhall ſay, the Lord hath need of them: he that is our Lord, and your Lord, and the Lord of theſe creatures, and of all things elſe, wants them for his preſent ſervice; and ſtraightway he will ſend them: which is either a continuation of what the diſciples ſhould ſay to any that ſhould aſk them the reaſon of their looſing the aſs and colt, in order to make them eaſy; that the Lord, who had need of them, as ſoon as he had done with them, would ſend them back to their proper owners, ſafe and well: or they are ſpoken for the encouragement of the diſciples to go, and not be diſheartened, tho' they ſhould be thus examined; for immediately upon ſaying, that the Lord ſtood in need of them, and had an uſe for them at that time, the owners thereof, without any more words, would immediately ſend them along with them; which latter rather ſeems to be the ſenſe of the clauſe; and which is confirmed by Mark: a very clear proof is this of the omniſcience of Chriſt. He knew, that there were an aſs, and a colt, in ſuch a village, faſtened to ſuch a door, juſt at the entrance into the town: he knew the owners of it would examine the diſciples about looſing and taking them away, and prepares them to give an anſwer; and he knew that the minds of theſe owners would be immediately wrought upon, and inclined to let them go directly and quietly.

Ver. 4. All this was done, &c.] The diſciples were ſent to the neighbouring village for the aſs and colt, and they brought them, and Chriſt rode upon them; not becauſe of the diſtance of the place from Jeruſalem, for he was juſt at it; or becauſe he was weary, or it would be very fatiguing to him to walk thither on foot; for he had been uſed to travelling, and had gone thro' moſt parts of Galilee and Judea; but that it might fulfilled which was ſpoken by the prophet: the Ethiopic verſion adds, Iſaiah; for the former part of the following citation ſtands in Iſ. lxii. 11. as the latter does in Zech. ix. 9. It was uſual with the Jews to cite ſcripture in this manner, by taking a part from one writer, and another from another, and joining them together: ſaying, the following words.

Ver. 5. Tell ye the daughter of Zion, &c.] Theſe words ſeem to be taken out of Iſ. lxii. 11. where it is ſaid, ſay ye to the daughter of Zion, behold thy ſalvation cometh, or thy ſaviour cometh; meaning, without doubt, the Meſſiah: by the daughter of Zion is meant, not the city of Jeruſalem, but the inhabitants thereof, the Jewiſh ſynagogue; or, as the Targum renders it, כנישת דציון, the congregation of Zion, the people of the Jews; particularly the elect of God among them, thoſe that embraced the true Meſſiah, and believed in him: behold, thy king cometh unto thee: this, and what follow, are cited from Zech. ix. 9. and to be underſtood of the king Meſſiah, who, in a little time after this prophecy was given out, was to come to Zion, and redeem Jacob from all his iniquities, and was now come. One of the Jewiſh commentators ſays [x], that interpreters are divided about the ſenſe of this prophecy; but obſerves, that there are ſome that ſay this is the Meſſiah: and another [y] of them affirms, that it is impoſſible to explain it of any other than the king Meſſiah; and that it can be underſtood of no other, I have elſewhere [z] ſhewn. Meek; in the prophecy of Zechary 'tis, עני, poor, as the Meſſiah Jeſus was, in a temporal ſenſe; but the word, both by the Septuagint, and our Evangeliſt, is rendered meek; as it is by the Targum, Jarchi, and Kimchi, who all explain it by ענותן, lowly, humble, or meek: and a character it is, that well agrees with Jeſus, who, in the whole of his deportment, both in life, and in death, was a pattern of meekneſs, and lowlineſs of mind: and ſitting upon an aſs, and a colt, the fole of an aſs. This is applied to the Meſſiah by the Jews, both ancient [a] and modern [b], who conſider this as an inſtance and evidence of his humility: they ſuppoſe this aſs to be a very uncommon one, having an hundred ſpots on it; and ſay, that it was the fellow of that which was created on the eve of the ſabbath [c]; and is the ſame that Abraham and Moſes rode upon: and they own, as before obſerved, that Jeſus of Nazareth rode on one to Jeruſalem, as is here related. Their ancient governors, patriarchs, princes, and judges, uſed to ride on aſſes, before the introduction and multiplication of horſes in Solomon's time, forbidden by the law of God: whereſore, though this might ſeem mean and deſpicable at this preſent time, yet was ſuitable enough to Chriſt's character as a king, and as the ſon of David, and king of Iſrael; ſtrictly obſerving the law given to the kings of Iſrael, and riding in ſuch manner, as they formerly did.

Ver. 6. And the diſciples went, &c.] The two diſciples, as the Arabic verſion reads, to the village over-againſt them; and, as Mark ſays, found the colt tied to the door without, in a place where two ways met: the houſe was juſt at the entrance of the village, at the door of which, on the outſide in the ſtreet, was the colt faſtened, where were two ways of going into, and coming out of the town; ſo that it was a public place; the colt was eaſily ſeen, nor could it well be taken away without being obſerved, as it was by the owners of it: and did as Jeſus commanded them; they looſed the colt; and whereas whilſt they were looſing it, the owners of it aſked them, what they meant by ſo doing? they returned for anſwer what Chriſt had directed them to ſay; upon which they were ſatiſfied, and let them go with it; ſee Mark xi. 4, 5, 6. This is a very conſiderable inſtance of the faith of the diſciples in Chriſt, and their ready and chearful obedience to him; who might have objected the appearance of theft, the ſcandal that might be brought upon them, and the trouble they might be expoſed to hereby; but they make no heſitation, but go and do as he had ordered them; and in which, they are worthy of the imitation of all the followers of Jeſus.

---

[x] Aben Ezra in Zech. ix. 9. [y] Jarchi in ib. [z] Propheſies of the Meſſiah literally fulfilled in Jeſus, c. 9. p. 151, &c.

[a] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 98. 1. & 99. 1. Bereſhith Rabba, fol. 66. 2. & 85. 3. Midraſh Kohelet, fol 63. 2. Zohar in Gen. fol. 127. 3. & in Num. fol. 83. 4. & in Deut. fol. 117. 1. & 118. 3. Raya Mehimna in Zohar in Lev. fol. 38. 3. & in Num. fol. 97. 2. [b] Jarchi in Iſ. xxvi. 6. Baal Hatturim in Exod. fol. 88. 2. Abarbinel, Maſhmia Jeſhua, fol. 15. 4. [c] Pirke Eliezer, c. 31. Caphtor, fol. 81. 2.

Ver. 7. And brought the aſs and the colt, &c.] To Jeſus, as Mark and Luke add, and who only make mention of the colt: both were undoubtedly brought; the colt being unlooſed and taken away, the aſs, its dam, followed after: and put on them their cloaths; their looſe upper garments, to be inſtead of ſaddles and trappings, and that Chriſt might ſit thereon with eaſe and decency: the other Evangeliſts ſay, that they caſt their garments on the colt; and the Syriac verſion here reads, they put their garments on the colt, and Jeſus rode upon it: but as both were brought, it is clear from hence, that their cloaths were put upon both; not knowing which Chriſt would chuſe to ride on. And it ſhould ſeem, that it was not unuſual to put garments on aſſes to ride on; for the Targumiſt on Judg. v. 10. repreſents the princes of Iſrael as riding upon aſſes, ſtrewed or ſaddled with all kind ציורין, of painted garments. The Perſic verſion, without the leaſt colour of authority from the original text, renders it, and Jeſus put his own garment on the colt, and ſat thereon; which is ridiculous, as well as contrary to truth: and they ſat him thereon, or on them; meaning either on the aſs and colt, that is, on one of them, or both ſucceſſively, or on the cloaths they put upon them.

Ver. 8. And a very great multitude, &c.] Which conſiſted partly of the great multitude which followed Chriſt from Jericho, and partly of the much people that were come up to the feaſt of the paſſover from divers parts, and met him from Jeruſalem; ſee John xii. 12, 13. Theſe, many of them, for it can't be thought to be done by them all, ſpread their garments in the way; either in the middle of the road, inſtead of carpets, to ride upon; the Perſic verſion adds, that he might paſs over them: this they did, in honour to him as a king. So when Jehu declared to the princes of Iſrael, that he was anointed king of Iſrael, they haſtened, and took every man his garment, and put it under him, 2 Kings ix. 13. that is, to tread upon; though the Jewiſh writers [x] ſay, it was done that he might be higher than them all, ſuitable to the dignity of a king: and it is reported [y] of Cato Uticenſis, the emperor, that his ſoldiers ſtrewed their garments for him to walk upon: or theſe garments were ſpread by the way-ſide. Dr. Lightfoot conjectures, that little tents might be raiſed by them along the road, upon which they ſpread their garments to make a ſhow, in imitation of the feaſt of tabernacles, to which there is a very great reſemblance in many things which occur in this account; when they uſed to ſpread linen cloth, garments, and fruits, over their booths, for decoration and ornament; as appears from their traditions about theſe things: "פירס עליה סדין, if a man ſpreads a linen cloth "over it, (his booth) becauſe of the ſun, or under "it, becauſe of the falling of leaves, &c. or "ſpreads it over a canopy, it is not right; but he "may ſpread it over the bed-poſts [z]." That is, for ornament, as the commentators obſerve [a]. Again, "פרש עליה בגד, if a man ſpreads a garment "over it, (his booth) or if he ſpreads it under it, "becauſe of what falls, it is not right; but if he "ſpreads it ſo as that it is, לנאותה, for ornament, it "is right; and ſo if he covers it according to the "tradition of it, and encompaſſes it with various "kinds of fruits, and precious things, and veſſels "which hang upon it, whether on its walls, or on "its covering, ſo they be for ornament, 'tis "right [b]." In like manner, the multitude might hang their garments, to make the ſhow the greater, either on ſuch booths, or on the houſes and trees, that were upon the road, as they went along. Others cut down branches from the trees; from the olive-trees, as the Perſic verſion expreſſes it, which grew in great plenty hereabout; and alſo from the palm-trees, the branches of which, with the boughs of other trees, were what the Jews uſed to carry in their hands on the feaſt of tabernacles; ſee Levit. xxiii. 40. and the Evangeliſt John expreſsly ſays, that the people which met Chriſt from Jeruſalem at this time, did take branches of palm-trees in their hands, John xii. 13. And though this was not the time of the feaſt of tabernacles, but of the paſſover, yet it was common with the Jews to ſignify their joy upon any occaſion, by ſuch ways and methods they uſed at that feaſt: ſo upon the cleanſing of the tower of Jeruſalem, by Simon Maccabeus, the Jews entered into it with thankſgiving, and branches of palm-trees, &c. 1 Maccab. xiii. 51. Likewiſe upon purifying the temple, which had been polluted by Antiochus, they kept eight days with gladneſs as in the feaſt of tabernacles, and bare branches and fair boughs, and palms alſo, 2 Maccab. x. 6, 7. But here 'tis ſaid, and they ſtrewed them in the way: not in the middle of the road, which would have been an hindrance to riding; but by the way-ſide, upon the booths, or houſes in the road, in honour of him; juſt as the Jews [c] ſay, "the ſtreets were ſtrewed with myrtles, and the "courts with purple, when Mordecai went out of "the king's gate."

Ver. 9. And the multitudes that went before, &c.] That is, that went before Chriſt; accordingly the Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions, and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel read, that went before him: theſe ſeem to be the much people that met him from Jeruſalem, and that followed him; which were perhaps thoſe that came from Jericho, and other parts; cried, ſaying, Hoſanna to the Son of David: by calling Jeſus the ſon of David, they owned and proclaimed him to be the Meſſiah; this being the uſual title, by which the Meſſiah was known among the Jews; ſee the note on Matt. i. 1. and by crying and ſaying Hoſanna to him, which was done with loud acclamations, and the united ſhouts of both companies, before and behind; they aſcribe all praiſe, honour, glory, and bleſſing to him, and wiſh him all proſperity, happineſs, and ſafety. The word is an Hebrew word, and is compounded of נא, and הושיעה, which ſignifies, ſave I beſeech; and which words ſtand in Pſal. cxviii. 25. to which the multitude had reference, as appears from what follows; and are formed into one word, הושענא, Hoſana, or Hoſanna, in which form it frequently appears in the Jewiſh writings; and becauſe of the often uſe of it at the feaſt of tabernacles, that feaſt was called Hoſanna, and the ſeventh day of it was called, הושענא רבה, the great Hoſanna [d]. Moreover, the Lulabs, or the bundles made of branches of palm-trees, and boughs of willow and myrtle, which they carried in their hands at the feaſt of tabernacles, often go by this name: 'tis ſaid [e], "the Egyptian myrtle is "right or fit, להושענא, for the Hoſanna." That is, to be put into the Lulab, or bundle of boughs and branches, which was carried about, and ſhaken at the above feaſt. Again [f], 'tis a tradition of R. “ Meir, that it was the practice of the honourable “ men of Jeruſalem, to bind their Lulabs with “ golden threads —— ſays Rabbah, theſe are they, “ מגדלי הושענא, that bind the Hoſanna: the Gloſs “ on it is, that bind the Lulabs, of the houſe of “ the head of the captivity; for in binding the “ Hoſanna of the houſe of the head of the captivity, they leave in it an hand's breadth —— and “ ſays the ſame Rabbah, a man may not hold an “ Hoſanna in a linen cloth.” Once more [g], “ ſays “ R. Zera, a man may not prepare, הושענא, an “ Hoſanna for a child, on a good day.” Sometimes the Hoſanna ſeems to be diſtinguiſhed from the Lulab, and then by the Lulab is meant, only the branches of palm-tree; and by the Hoſanna, the boughs of willow and myrtle; as when [h], “ Rabbah “ ſays, a man may not fix the Lulab, בהושענא, “ in the Hoſanna.” And a little after ſays the ſame, “ a man may not bind the Lulab with the Hoſanna.” Now theſe bundles might be ſo called, becauſe they were lifted up and ſhaken, when the above words out of Pſal. cxviii. 25. were recited: for thus it is ſaid [i], “ when do they ſhake, that is, their Lu- “ labs, or Hoſanna's? At thoſe words, O give thanks “ unto the Lord, Pſal. cxviii. 1. the beginning and “ end; and at thoſe words, Save now I beſeech thee, “ ver. 25. The houſe of Hillell, and the houſe of “ Shammai ſay alſo at thoſe words, O Lord I beſeech “ thee, ſend now proſperity: ſays R. Akiba, I have “ obſerved Rabban Gamaliel and Rabbi Joſhua, “ that all the people ſhook their Lulabs, but they “ did not ſhake, only at thoſe words, Save now I “ beſeech thee, O Lord.” Hence ſome have thought, that theſe are meant by the Hoſanna in this text; and that the ſenſe is, that the multitude cried, ſaying, Theſe branches of palm-trees we carry in our hands, and ſtrow by the way-ſide, are in honour to the Son of David, the true Meſſiah, Jeſus of Nazareth: but then this ſenſe will not agree with the following clauſe, Hoſanna in the higheſt: it may therefore be further obſerved, that certain prayers and ſongs of praiſe, were called Hoſanna's: hence we read [k] of, הושענות של שבת, the Hoſanna's of the ſabbath; which conſiſted of various ſentences in praiſe of the ſabbath, and thankſgiving to God for it, and are concluded with this word Hoſanna; and of various petitions that God would ſave them, as he had done others; and at the end of each petition is this word. As alſo of [l], הושענות של הושענא רבה, the Hoſanna's of the great Hoſanna; which are certain words of prayer and praiſe, uſed on the ſeventh day of the feaſt of tabernacles: and whereas at that feaſt the Hallell, or hymn, was ſung, which concluded with the cxviiith Pſalm, where the words, Save now I beſeech thee, O Lord, ſtand, from whence this word is formed; the true ſenſe and meaning of it here appears to be this; that the multitude that attended Chriſt to Jeruſalem, as they went along, ſung ſongs of praiſe to him, as the true Meſſiah; particularly, applying the above paſſage to him, and earneſtly wiſhed him all ſucceſs and proſperity; and importunately prayed for ſalvation by him; adding, Bleſſed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord: which words are taken alſo out of Pſal. cxviii. 26. and is an aſcription of bleſſing and praiſe to Jeſus, the Meſſiah; who being ſent by God, came from him with his authority, as his apoſtle, and as repreſenting him; and contains another petition for him, that he might be crowned with the bleſſings of divine goodneſs, for his people; and be bleſſed and praiſed by them, for all the ſpiritual bleſſings they are bleſſed with in him. And very properly and pertinently were thoſe words uſed and applied to Chriſt, ſince the Pſalm from whence they are taken belongs to him: the whole of it is, by ſome Jewiſh interpreters [m], ſaid to be ſpoken concerning him; and particularly, he is deſigned in ver. 22. by the ſtone the builders refuſed, as is clear from ver. 42. of this chapter, and from Acts iv. 11. and 1 Pet. ii. 7. and which is allowed by ſome Jewiſh writers, ancient and modern [n]; and ver. 27. the words following theſe, are by them interpreted of the days of the Meſſiah, the times of Gog and Magog, and the future age [o]. And others of them ſaid, as Mark obſerves, ch. xi. 10. Bleſſed be the kingdom of our father David, that cometh in the name of the Lord; ſee the note there. Moreover, as it may be thought others of the people ſaid, as Luke relates, ch. xix. 38. Bleſſed be the king that cometh in the name of the Lord; ſee the note there. To which is added, Hoſanna in the higheſt; that is, let ſongs of praiſe be ſung to God, who is in the higheſt heavens, for all his grace and goodneſs vouchſafed to the ſons of men, through Chriſt his beloved Son; or let not only all ſalvation, happineſs, and proſperity, attend the Meſſiah, David's ſon, here on earth, but all glory and felicity in the higheſt heavens, above which he will be exalted.

---

[x] R. Levi ben Gerſom, & R. Samuel Laniado in loc. [y] Plutarch in Alcibiade. [z] Miſn. Succa, c. 1. §. 3. [a] Maimon. & Bartenora in ib. [b] Maimon. Hilch. Succa, c. 5. §. 17. [c] Targum in Eſther viii. 15. [d] Seder Tephillot, fol. 298. 2. [e] T. Bab. Succa, fol. 33. 1.

Ver. 10. And when he was come into Jeruſalem, &c.] The metropolis of the nation, the ſeat of the ancient kings of Judah, and of his father David, entering into it in this very publick manner, as he never did before; riding in the manner the ancient judges and kings of Iſrael did, attended with a numerous retinue, ſhouting as they went along, and ſinging their Hoſanna's to him: all the city was moved; as Bethlehem was, when Naomi with Ruth returned thither; and of which the ſame phraſe is uſed, as here, Ruth i. 19. all the city was moved about them; which the Chaldee paraphraſe renders, “ all the inhabitants of the city were gathered in “ troops about them.” And ſo here the ſenſe is, that the inhabitants of the city of Jeruſalem were in general alarmed at the uncommon apparatus, and ſhouting, and ran in great numbers to enquire what was the matter: ſaying, who is this? They knew him not; for though he had preached unto them, and wrought miracles among them, yet they had never ſeen him in any ſuch pomp and ſtate; and could not deviſe who he ſhould be, that entered their city in ſuch a manner, amidſt the ſhouts and acclamations of ſo great a multitude: it ſeemed greatly to affect them, and fill them with concern, aſtoniſhment, and fear.

Ver. 11. And the multitude ſaid, &c.] Or the people, as the Vulgate Latin, and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel read; the common people, that went before, and followed after him: theſe knew Chriſt better than the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, the Scribes and Phariſees, and rulers of the people. This is Jeſus the prophet; that prophet Moſes ſpoke of, in Deut. xviii. 15. and the nation of the Jews in general expected: of Nazareth of Galilee; who, tho' he was not born there, yet being educated, and having lived much in that place, is ſaid to be of it; and which was the common opinion of the people.

Ver. 12. And Jeſus went into the temple of God, &c.] At Jeruſalem, which was built by his order, and dedicated to his worſhip, and where the Shekinah,

---

[f] T. Bab. Succa, fol. 37. 1.

[g] Ib. fol. 46. 2. Vid. Maimon. Hilch. Lulab, c. 8. §. 10.

[h] Ib. fol. 37. 2.

[i] Miſn. Succa, c. 3. §. 9.

[k] Seder Tephillot, fol. 297. 1.

[l] Ib. fol. 298. 2.

[m] Vid. Kimchi in Pſal. cxviii. 1.

[n] Zohar in Exod. fol. 93. 3. Jarchi in Mic. v. 2.

[o] T. Hieroſ. Megilla, fol. 73. 1.

nah, or the divine preſence was. Chriſt went not to the tower of David, the ſtrong hold of Zion, the palace of his father David; for he entered not as a temporal king; but he went to the houſe of his heavenly Father, as the Lord and proprietor of it, to preach in it, and purge it; whereby the glory of the latter houſe became greater than that of the former; and ſo ſeveral prophecies had their accompliſhment, particularly Hagg. ii. 7, 9. Mal. iii. 1. though this was not the firſt time by many, of Chriſt's being in the temple; yet this his entrance was the moſt publick and magnificent of any: after he had alighted from the colt, and ſent back that and the aſs to their proper owners, as is very probable, he went in by the eaſtern gate, called the king's gate, 1 Chron. ix. 18. into the temple: and caſt out all them that ſold and bought in the temple; not in the holy of holies, nor in the holy place, nor in the court of the prieſts, nor in the court of the Iſraelites, but in the court of the Gentiles, and in the mountain of the houſe, in which were ſhops, where various things were ſold, relating to ſacrifices. What theſe perſons bought and ſold, whom Chriſt caſt out, is not ſaid, but may be collected from John ii. 14. where beſides doves, of which hereafter, mention is made of ſheep and oxen; which were brought to be ſold, on account of the paſſover, for it was then near their time of paſſover as now; for beſides the lambs and kids, which were here alſo ſold and bought for the paſſover ſupper, ſheep and oxen were here alſo killed and ſold for the Chagiga, or feaſt [p], which was the day following: here likewiſe the drink-offerings were bought and ſold, of which take the following account. "There were fifteen preſidents, במקדש, "in the ſanctuary: Jochanan ben Phinehas was over "the tickets, and Abijah over the drink-offerings, "&c.———He that enquired for drink-offerings, "went to Jochanan, who was appointed over the "tickets: he gave him the money, and took a "ticket; he then went to Abijah, that was appointed over the drink-offerings, and gave him "the ticket, and received from him the drink-"offerings; and in the evening they came together, and Abijah produced the tickets, and took "for them the money [q]." This was one way of buying and ſelling in the temple: and overthrew the tables of the money-changers; of which ſort were they, who ſat in the temple at certain times, to receive the half ſhekel, and change the money of ſuch, who wanted one, by which they gained ſomething to themſelves. It was a cuſtom in our Lord's time, for every Iſraelite, once a year, to pay half a ſhekel towards the temple charge and ſervice, which was founded upon the orders given by God to Moſes in the wilderneſs; that upon his numbering the people, to take of every one that was twenty years of age and upwards, rich or poor, half a ſhekel, Exod. xxx. 13, 14, 15. though this does not ſeem to be deſigned as a perpetual rule. However, it now obtained, and was annually paid: "On the firſt "day of Adar (which anſwers to our February) "they proclaimed concerning the ſhekels [r]." That is, they gave publick notice, in all the cities in Iſrael, that the time of paying the half ſhekel was near at hand, that they might get their money ready, for every one was obliged to pay it: the Jews [s] ſay, "it is an affirmative command of the law, that "every man in Iſrael ſhould pay the half ſhekel "every year; even though a poor man that is "maintained by alms, he is obliged to it, and "muſt beg it of others, or ſell his coat upon his "back and pay it, as it is ſaid, Exod. xxx. 15. "The rich ſhall not give more, &c. —— All are "bound to give it, prieſts, Levites, and Iſraelites, "and ſtrangers, and ſervants, that are made free; "but not women, nor ſervants, nor children." Notice being thus given [t], "on the fifteenth day "(of the ſame month) שולחנות, tables were placed "in the province, or city (which Bartenora [u] interprets of Jeruſalem; but Maimonides [w] ſays, the "word uſed is the name of all the cities in the "land of Iſrael, excepting Jeruſalem) and on the "twenty-fifth they ſit, במקדש, in the ſanctuary." The ſame is related by Maimonides [x], after this manner: "On the firſt of Adar they proclaim concerning the ſhekels, that every man may prepare his half ſhekel, and be ready to give it on "the fifteenth; השולחנים the exchangers ſit in "every province or city, and mildly aſk it; every "one that gives them it, they take it of them; "and he that does not give, they don't compel "him to give: on the twenty-fifth, they ſit in the "ſanctuary to collect it; and henceforward they "urge him that does not give, until he gives; "and every one that does not give, they oblige "him to give a pledge, and they take his pledge, "whether he will or no, and even his coat." This gives us a plain account of theſe money-changers; of their tables, and of their ſitting at them in the temple, and on what account. Now theſe exchangers had a profit in every ſhekel they changed [y]. "When a man went to an exchanger, and changed "a ſhekel for two half ſhekels, he gave him an "addition to the ſhekel; and the addition is called, "קלבון, Kolbon: wherefore, when two men gave a "ſhekel for them both, they were both obliged to "pay the Kolbon." Would you know what this Kolbon, whence theſe exchangers are called, Κολλυβισταὶ, Collybiſtæ, in this text, or the gain which theſe men had, take the queſtion and anſwer in their own words [z]. "How much is the Kolbon? A ſilver Meah, according to R. Meir; but the wiſe "men ſay, half an one." Or as it is elſewhere expreſſed [a], "what is the value of the Kolbon? At "that time they gave two-pence for the half ſhekel; the Kolbon was half a Meah, which is the "twelfth part of a penny; and ſince, a Kolbon leſs "than that is not given." Now a Meah was the half of a ſixth part of the half ſhekel, and the twenty-fourth part of a ſhekel, and weighed ſixteen barley corns; half a Meah was the forty-eighth part of a ſhekel, and weighed eight barley [b] corns; a Meah was of our money, the value of ſomewhat more than a penny, and half an one more than a half-penny. This was their gain, which in ſo large a number that paid, muſt amount to a great deal of money. There ſeems to be nothing lie againſt theſe men being the very perſons, whoſe tables Chriſt overturned, unleſs it ſhould be objected, that this was not the time of their ſitting; for it was now within a few days of the paſſover, which was in the month Niſan; whereas it was in the month Adar, that the half ſhekel was paid: but it ſhould be obſerved, according to the above account, that they did not begin to ſit in the temple to receive this money, until the twenty-fifth of Adar; and it was now but the tenth of Niſan, when Chriſt entered the temple and found them there: ſo that there was but fifteen days between the one and the other; and conſidering the large numbers that were obliged to pay, and the backwardneſs and poverty of many, they may reaſonably be thought to be ſtill ſitting on that account: and what Maimonides before relates deſerves notice, and will ſtrengthen this ſuppoſition; that on the twenty-fifth of Adar, they ſate in the temple to collect this money; and that henceforward they urged and compelled perſons to pay it. Moreover, theſe men had other buſineſs, in a way of exchange, than this to do; and eſpecially at ſuch a time as the paſſover, when perſons came from different parts to attend it; and who might want to have their foreign money changed for current coin; or bills of return, to be changed for money: add to all this the following account, which will ſhew the large and perpetual buſineſs of theſe men [c]. "In the ſanctuary there were before them, תמיד, continually, or daily, thirteen cheſts; (and there were as many tables [d]) every cheſt was in the form of a trumpet: the firſt was for the ſhekels of the preſent year, the ſecond for the ſhekels of the year paſt; the third for every one that had a Korban, or vow upon him to offer two turtle-doves, or two young pidgeons; the one a burnt-offering, the other a ſin-offering: their price was caſt into this cheſt: the fourth for every one that had the burnt-offering of a fowl only on him, the price of that was caſt into this cheſt. The fifth was for him, who freely gave money to buy wood, to be laid in order on the altar; the ſixth, for him that freely gave money for the incenſe; the ſeventh, for him that freely gave gold for the mercy-ſeat; the eighth, for the remainder of the ſin-offering; as when he ſeparated the money for his ſin-offering, and took the ſin-offering, and there remained of the money, the reſt he caſt into this cheſt: the ninth, for the remainder of the treſpaſs-offering; the tenth, for the remainder of the doves for men and women in fluxes, and women after child-birth; the eleventh, for the remainder of the offerings of the Nazarite; the twelfth, for the remainder of the treſpaſs-offering of the leper; the thirteenth, for him that freely gave money for the burnt-offering of a beaſt." And the ſeats of them that ſold doves; which were the offerings of the poor ſort after child-bearing, and on account of running iſſues; which caſes were very frequent, and ſometimes raiſed the price of doves very high, of which what follows is an inſtance [e]. "It happened at a certain time, that doves were ſold in Jeruſalem for a golden penny each; ſaid Rabban ben Simeon Gamaliel, by this habitation (or temple which he ſwore by) I will not lodge, (or lie down) this night, until they are ſold for a ſilver penny each: he went into the council-houſe and taught, that if a woman had five certain births, or five certain iſſues, ſhe ſhould bring one offering, and eat of the ſacrifices, nor ſhould there remain any debt upon her; and doves were ſold that day for two fourths." That is, for a ſilver penny; now a golden penny, was the value of twenty-five ſilver pence [f]; ſo that the price, by this means, was ſunk very much: but not only doves were ſold in the markets in Jeruſalem, but in the temple itſelf [g]. "There was a preſident over the doves, which was he with whom they agreed, who ſold doves for the offerings, ſo and ſo by the ſhekel; and every one that was obliged to bring a pair of turtle-doves, or two young pidgeons, brought the price of them, למקשד, to the ſanctuary; and the preſident gave the doves to the maſters of the offerings, and made up the account with the treaſurers." Now at a feaſt time as this was, there was a greater demand for doves than uſual; for women who had lain in, and ſuch as had fluxes, whether men or women, who lived in diſtant parts, reſerved their offerings till they came up to the feaſt [h]; and which in conſequence muſt occaſion a greater call for theſe creatures, and furniſhes out a reaſon, why there ſhould be ſo many ſitting at this time in the temple to ſell doves. Some have thought, that thoſe perſons are here meant, which are often mentioned by the Jewiſh doctors [i], as an infamous ſort of men, who are not admitted as witneſſes in any caſe; and are reckoned among thieves, robbers, uſurers, and players at dice; who מפריחי יונים teach doves to fly, either to decoy other doves from their dove-houſes, or to out-fly others for money, or to fight one againſt another; and theſe ſate in the temple to ſell this ſort of doves, which was ſtill more heinous; but the other ſenſe is more agreeable.

---

[p] Vid. R. Sol. Jarchi, in Deut. xvi. 2.

[q] Miſn. Shekalim, c. 5. §. 4. Maimon. Cele Hamikdaſh, c. 7. §. 10, 11, 12.

[r] Miſn. Shekalim, c. 1. §. 1.

[s] Maimon. Hilch. Shekalim, c. 1. §. 1. 7.

[t] Miſn. Shekalim, c. 1. §. 3.

[u] In ib.

[w] In ib.

[x] Hilch. Shekalim, c. 1. §. 9.

[y] Ib. c. 3. §. 1.

[z] Miſn. Shekalim, c. 1. §. 7.

[a] Maimon. Hilch. Shekalim, c. 3. §. 7.

[b] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Shekalim, c. 1. §. 7. & Cholin, c. 1. §. 7.

Ver. 13. And ſaid unto them, it is written, &c.] In Iſa. lvi. 7. My houſe ſhall be called the houſe of prayer. Theſe are the words of God, calling the temple his houſe, which was built according to the plan he gave; and was the place of his worſhip, and where he dwelt, and vouchſafed his preſence to his people; and ſignifying, that in time to come, it ſhould be an houſe of prayer; not for the Jews only, but for the Gentiles alſo: for all people, as it is expreſſed by the prophet, and cited by Mark; and particularly this part of it, in which were the money-changers and ſellers of doves; for that was the court of the Gentiles, where they were admitted to pray, and perform other parts of worſhip. Theſe words are rightly applied by Chriſt to the temple; nor can the Jews themſelves deny it; for their own Targum paraphraſes it thus, בית המקדשי, the houſe of my ſanctuary ſhall be called an houſe of prayer; or ſhall be one; for the meaning is not that it ſhould go by ſuch a name, but ſhould be for ſuch uſe, and not for buying and ſelling, and merchandize, to which uſe the Jews now put it: hence it follows, but ye have made it a den of thieves. Theſe are the words of Chriſt, affirming what is complained of in Jer. vii. 11. and applying it to the preſent caſe, on account of the wicked merchandize, unlawful gain, avarice and extortion, of the prieſts and other officers of the temple, who had a conſiderable ſhare in theſe things; and to whom the temple was, and by them uſed, as a den is to and by thieves and robbers, where they ſhelter themſelves; for theſe perſons robbed both God and man, and the temple was a ſanctuary to them: here they ſkreened themſelves, and, under the appearance of religion and devotion, devoured widows houſes, plundered perſons of their ſubſtance, and were full of extortion and exceſs.

Ver. 14. And the blind and the lame came to him, &c.] The Syriac and Ethiopic verſions read, they brought unto him the blind and the lame. The blind could not come to him unleſs they were led, nor the lame, unleſs they were carried: the ſenſe therefore is, they came, being brought to him: in the temple; that part of it, the court of the Gentiles, and mountain of the houſe, out of which he had caſt the buyers and ſellers, &c. and in the room of them, were brought in theſe objects of his pity: and he healed them; to the blind he reſtored ſight, and cauſed the lame to walk; which miracles he wrought in confirmation of the doctrine he preached: for all the other Evangeliſts relate, that he taught in the temple.

---

[c] Maimon. Hilch. Shekalim, c. 2. §. 2.
[d] Miſn. Shekalim, c. 6. §. 1.
[e] Miſn. Cerithot, c. 1. §. 7.
[f] Maimon. & Bartenora in ib.
[g] Maimon. Hilch. Cele Hamikdaſh, c. 7. §. 9.
[h] Gloſſ. in T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 11. 1.
[i] T. Bab. Erubin, fol. 82. 1. T. Sanhedrin, fol. 25. 2. & Gloſſ. in ib. Miſn. Sanhedrin, c. 3. §. 3. Maimon. Bartenora, & Ez. Chayim in ib. & Edayot, c. 2. 7. & Bartenora in ib. Maimon. Hilch. Gazela veabada, c. 6. §. 7. Toen unitan, c. 2. §. 2. & Eduth, c. 10. §. 4.

Ver. 15. And when the chief-prieſts and Scribes, &c.] The inveterate enemies of Chriſt; who upon hearing the ſhouts of the people at Chriſt's entrance into the city, and paſſage thro' it to the temple; and underſtanding that it was Jeſus of Nazareth that was come thither, they came alſo to awe the people, and pick up what they could againſt him: who, when they ſaw the wonderful things that he did; as the over-turning the tables of the money-changers, and the ſeats of thoſe that ſold doves, without any oppoſition, when theſe traders were ſo many, and in great power, and he a ſingle perſon, and unarmed; and that the blind received their ſight, and the lame were cured, and the children crying in the temple; who came from the various parts of the city, with their parents, to ſee the ſight; who, when the multitude had done, they began the ſame ditty: and ſaying, Hoſanna to the ſon of David; proclaiming Jeſus to be the Meſſiah, and aſcribing praiſe and glory to him, and wiſhing him all happineſs and proſperity: the form they had taken up from the people, and might be encouraged by their parents; and which they pronounced without fear of the high-prieſts, and Scribes, being diſpoſed, directed, and over-ruled hereunto by the providence of God. It was indeed no unuſual thing for children to ſing the Hoſanna at the feaſt of tabernacles; for, according to the Jewiſh canons [k], "a child "that knew how to ſhake, was obliged to carry "the lulab," or bundle of myrtle, and willow-boughs, and palm-tree branches, at the ſhaking of which Hoſanna was ſaid: but that they ſhould cry Hoſanna to Jeſus, as David's ſon, was very extraordinary, and what the high-prieſts, and Scribes, took notice of with great reſentment: they were ſore diſpleaſed; at the children, that ſo ſaid, at their parents that ſuffered them, and eſpecially at Chriſt, who did not forbid them. The Perſic verſion renders it, it diſpleaſed the prieſts; the Arabic reads, they murmured; and the Ethiopic has it, it was not pleaſant to them.

Ver. 16. And ſaid unto him, heareſt thou what theſe ſay? &c.] Suggeſting, that if he did, he ought to reprove them, or elſe he would be a very vain, as well as a weak man, to take ſuch things to himſelf, which did not belong to him, and that from ſuch poor, little, ſilly creatures, ſo void of knowledge and underſtanding: and Jeſus ſaid unto them, yea; ſignifying he did hear, and well approved of what they ſaid, and was ready to vindicate it; and did, by putting the following queſtion to them, have ye never read; that paſſage of ſcripture in Pſ. viii. 2. out of the mouth of babes and ſucklings thou haſt perfected praiſe? in the orginal text it is, thou haſt ordained, or founded ſtrength; and which is rendered by the Septuagint, as it is by Matthew here; and glory and ſtrength are mentioned together, as being to be given to God, Pſ. xxix. 1. and ſo ſtrength and praiſe by the Targumiſt in Iſ. xiii. 3. by which is meant ſtrong glory, or glory and praiſe expreſſed with a ſtrong voice, or in a very vehement manner, as it was by theſe babes and ſucklings; and this owing to God's diſpoſing them hereunto, putting it into their mouths, and ſtrengthening them to declare it in a very ſtrong and powerful manner; ſo that his ſtrength was made perfect in their weakneſs, and his praiſe the more glorious. In the Pſalm 'tis added, becauſe of thine enemies, that thou might ſtill the enemy, and the avenger: by whom are meant the high-prieſts, Scribes, and Phariſees, the mortal enemies of Chriſt, who were full of enmity againſt him, and wanted to revenge themſelves on him for ſpoiling their market at this time; but were ſtilled by the hoſannas of the children, and Chriſt's defence of them. The Jews themſelves ſeem to be conſcious, that theſe words relate to the Meſſiah; for they ſay [l], that "babes and ſuck-"lings, יהבין הוקפא, ſhall give ſtrength to the king "Meſſiah;" manifeſtly referring to this paſſage.

Ver. 17. And he left them, &c.] The high-prieſts and Scribes, confounded and put to ſilence, and as unworthy of his company and converſation; and went out of the city; of Jeruſalem, partly to prevent being apprehended by his enemies before his time, and partly to remove all ſuſpicion of ſeizing the city and government, and ſetting himſelf up as a temporal prince: to Bethany; which was about fifteen furlongs from Jeruſalem, or almoſt two miles, John xi. 18. Hither he went to converſe with his dear friends, Lazarus, and Martha, and Mary, who were all of this place, and where he could lodge and reſt quietly. The name of the town is variouſly interpreted: according to ſome ancient writers [m], it ſignifies the houſe of obedience; ſo Chriſt went from the diſobedient and faithleſs city, to a place of obedience, where he had ſome faithful and obedient diſciples: others read it, and ſo Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel, בית עניה, the houſe of affliction; a ſuitable place for Chriſt to go to, who was about to ſuffer for the ſins of his people. The Syriac verſion renders it בית עניא; and which is interpreted an houſe, or place of buſineſs, as this town of Bethany was. We read [n] of חנויות של בית הינו, the ſhops of Bethany, which were deſtroyed three years before Jeruſalem, becauſe they made their affairs to ſtand upon the words of the law; that is, as the Gloſs explains it, they found that what was forbidden by the wiſe men, was free by the law: a great trade might be drove here for olives, dates, and figs, which grew hereabout in great plenty: mention is made in the Talmud of [o] פגי בית היני, the figs of Bethany: hence, as Chriſt departed from this place, the next morning he ſaw a fig-tree. But the true etymology and ſignification of the name is בית אהיני, the houſe, or place of dates, the fruit of the palm-tree: hence they that came from Jeruſalem to meet Chriſt, might have their palm-tree branches. One part of mount Olivet abounded with olives, from whence it had its name; another part bore palm-trees, and that was called Bethany, from whence this town over-againſt it had its name; and another part had great plenty of fig-trees growing on it, and this was called Bethphage; and that part of Jeruſalem which was neareſt to it went by the ſame name. We read [p] alſo of מרחץ של בית היני, the waſhing-place of Bethany; which ſeems to me to be not a place for the waſhing and purification of unclean men and women, as Dr. Lightfoot thinks, but for waſhing of ſheep; for the ſtory is, that "a fox "tore a ſheep in pieces at the waſhing-place of "Bethany, and the affair came before the wiſe men;" that is, at Jeruſalem, to know whether that ſheep might be eaten or no, ſince that which was torn was forbidden. And ſome have interpreted Bethany, an houſe,

---

[k] T. Bab. Succa, fol. 42. 1. Erachin, fol. 2. 2. Maimon. Hilch. Lulab, c. 7. §. 19.

[l] Zohar in Exod. fol. 4. 2.

[m] Jerom. in loc. Origen. in Joan. p. 131. T. 2. & in Matt. p. 435, 446, 447. T. 1. Ed. Huet.

[n] T. Bab. Bava Metzia, fol. 88. 1.

[o] T. Bab. Peſachim, fol. 53. 1. & Erubin, fol. 28.

[p] T. Bab. Cholin, fol. 53. 1.

houſe, or place of ſheep: but ſo much for this town, and what account is given of it. And he lodged there; either in the houſe of Lazarus, and his two ſiſters, or in that of Simon the leper; for it was even-tide when he went out of Jeruſalem, as Mark obſerves. The Ethiopic verſion adds, and reſted there; and ſo Origen [q] reads it; and, according to Harpocratian [r], the word uſed by the Evangeliſt ſignifies to lie down, and ſleep, and take one's reſt. Chriſt lodged here all night.

Ver. 18. Now in the morning, &c.] Gr. in the firſt, or morning-light, in the dawn, or break of day, the firſt ſpring of light; ſo the Latins [s] uſe prima luce for early in the morning, as ſoon as ever day breaks: ſo early did Chriſt riſe, and return from Bethany to Jeruſalem; and as he returned to the city. The Perſic verſion renders it, they returned; which, tho' not a good verſion, gives a true ſenſe; for, as Chriſt went with the twelve to Bethany, as Mark affirms, ſo theſe returned with him, as is clear from what follows. Thus Chriſt, day after day, went to and from Jeruſulem: in the evening he went to Bethany, or to ſome part of the mount of Olives, and there abode all night, and returned in the day-time to Jeruſalem, and taught in the temple; for it does not appear that he was one night in Jeruſalem, before the night of the paſſover. He hungred; riſing ſo early before his friends were up, he had eaten nothing that morning, and ſo before he had got far from Bethany, found himſelf hungry; which proves the truth of his human nature, which was in all reſpects like to ours, excepting ſin.

Ver. 19. And when he ſaw a fig-tree, &c.] In the Greek text 'tis, one fig-tree, one remarkable fig-tree: he muſt ſee a great many, as he went along; for a large tract of the mount of Olives was full of fig-trees, and therefore called Bethphage; and notice has been taken already of the figs of Bethany: but he ſaw none that had ſuch large and ſpreading leaves as this; for it was the time when the fig-tree was juſt budding, and putting forth its leaves; wherefore he took notice of it; and tho' it was afar off, as Mark ſays, yet being hungry, he made up to it, expecting, from its promiſing appearance, to find fruit on it. This fig-tree was in the way; by the road-ſide, and probably had no owner; was common to any body, and ſo no injury was done to any perſon by loſing it: he came to it, and found nothing thereon but leaves only: Mark ſays, he came, if haply he might find any thing thereon; which muſt be underſtood of him as man; for as he hungred as man, ſo he judged and expected as man, from the appearance of this fig-tree, that he might find fruit upon it; and which is no contradiction to his deity, and his having the Spirit of God, as the Jew [t] objects; and eſpecially ſince, as Biſhop Kidder [u] obſerves, ſuch an expectation is attributed to God himſelf, in Iſ. v. 2, 4. and it may be added, and with regard to that people, of which this fig-tree was an emblem, and deſigned by Chriſt to be conſidered as ſuch in what he did to it. The ſame Evangeliſt further obſerves, and when he came to it, he found nothing but leaves, for the time of figs was not yet. The word yet is not in the original text; which laſt clauſe is a reaſon, either why he found no fruit, or nothing but leaves upon it, becauſe it was not a time, or ſeaſon of figs: it was not a good fig year, ſo Dr. Hammond interprets it; and yet though it was not, ſince this tree was ſo very flouriſhing, fruit might have been expected on it: and alſo, it furniſhes out a reaſon why Chriſt took ſo much pains to go to it, ſeeing there were very few figs to be had elſewhere, and this bid very fair to ſupply him with ſome in this time of ſcarcity: or elſe, as a reaſon why, beſides its promiſing appearance, he expected fruit upon it, becauſe the time of figs, that is, of the gathering of the figs, was not come: in which ſenſe the phraſe is uſed in ver. 34. of this chapter; and is Biſhop Kidder's interpretation of the paſſage: and ſince therefore the time was not come for the in-gathering of the figs, none had been taken off of it, the more might be expected on it. This ſenſe would be very probable, did it appear that figs were uſually ripe about this time; but the contrary ſeems manifeſt, both from ſcripture, which repreſents the fig-tree putting forth its leaves, as a ſign the ſummer is nigh, Matt. xxiv. 32. and from the Talmudiſts, who ſay [w], that the beginning of leaves, or putting forth of the leaves of trees, is in the month Niſan, the month in which the paſſover was kept, and ſo the then preſent time of the year; and who, from this time, reckon three times fifty days, or five full months before the figs are ripe [x]: ſo that theſe words are rather a reaſon why Chriſt did not expect to find figs on other trees, which he ſaw in great abundance as he paſſed along, becauſe the time of common, ordinary figs being ripe, was not come; and why he particularly expected to find ſome on this tree, becauſe it being full of leaves, appeared to be of a different kind from other fig-trees: and was either of that ſort which they call בנות שוח, Benoth Shuach, as Dr. Lightfoot conjectures, which were a kind of white figs that were not ripe till the third year [y]. This tree put forth its fruit the firſt year, which hung on it the ſecond, and were brought to perfection on the third: ſo that when it was three years old, it had fruit of the firſt, ſecond, and third year on it: this being ſuch a tree, by its being full of leaves, when others had none, or were juſt putting out, fruit of one year, or more might have been expected on it, when it had none at all, and therefore was curſed: or it might be one of that ſort which brought forth fruit twice a year; for of ſuch ſort of fig-trees we read in the Jewiſh writings [z]: and therefore tho' it was not the time of the common figs being ripe, yet this being one of the ſeaſons, in which this tree bore ripe fruit, and being ſo very flouriſhing, might reaſonably be expected from it: but there being none, he ſaid unto it, let no fruit grow on thee henceforward for ever; or, as it is expreſſed in Mark, no man eat fruit of thee hereafter for ever: for if none grew on it henceforward, no man could hereafter eat of it. Both expreſſions deſign the ſame thing, the perpetual barrenneſs of the fig-tree: and preſently the fig-tree withered away; immediately, upon Chriſt's ſaying theſe words, its ſap was dried up, it loſt its verdure; its leaves were ſhrivell'd and ſhrunk up, and dropp'd off, and the whole was blaſted. This tree was an emblem of the Jews: Chriſt being hungry, and very deſirous of the ſalvation of men, came firſt to them, from whom, on account of their large profeſſion of religion, and great pretenſions to holineſs, and the many advantages they enjoyed, humanly ſpeaking, much fruit of righteouſneſs might have been expected; but, alas! he found nothing but mere words, empty boaſts, an outward ſhew of religion, an external profeſſion, and a bare performance of trifling ceremonies, and oral traditions; wherefore Chriſt rejected them, and in a little time after, the kingdom of God, the Goſpel, was taken away from them, and their temple, city, and nation entirely deſtroyed.

---

[q] In Matt. p. 447. [r] Lexic. Decem Orator, p. 55. [s] Cæſar. Comment. l. 1. p. 14 & paſſim. Curtius, l. 5. c. 5. paſſim. Apulei Metamorph. l. 9. p. 134. [t] R. Iſaac, Chizzuk Emuna, pars 2. c. 30. p. 421. [u] Demonſtration of the Meſſiah, par. 2. p. 38. [w] Jarchi & Bartenora in Miſn. Sheviith, c. 4. §. 10. [x] T. Hieroſ. Sheviith, fol. 35. 4. [y] Miſn. Sheviith, c. 5. §. 1. & Demai, c. 1. §. 1. & Maimon. & Bartenora in ib. [z] Miſn. Demai, c. 1. §. 1. & Maimon. in ib. T. Bab. Erubin, fol. 18. 1.

Ver. 20. And when the diſciples ſaw it, &c.] The next day in the morning, as Mark ſays: they had heard what Chriſt had ſaid to it the day before, as the ſame Evangeliſt obſerves; but did not take notice of the immediate withering of the tree; but the next morning, as they returned from Bethany, they ſaw it dried up from the roots: they marvelled; not that Chriſt ſhould curſe it, but that it ſhould wither away ſo ſoon, and upon his ſaying what he did; which was a conſiderable inſtance of his power and Godhead, all creatures, animate and inanimate, being at his command and diſpoſal: ſaying, how ſoon is the fig-tree withered away? This was ſaid by Peter, in the name of the reſt, who recollecting what Jeſus had ſaid to it the day before, and obſerving how the event had anſwered his words ſo ſoon, addreſſed Chriſt after this manner: maſter, behold the fig-tree which thou curſedſt is withered away; expreſſing his wonder at it, and aſcribing it to the power of Chriſt; of which this was an amazing proof and evidence.

Ver. 21. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, &c.] His diſciples wondring at his power, in cauſing the fig-tree to wither ſo ſuddenly: verily I ſay unto you, if ye have faith; that is, in God, in his power, which reaches to all things: the object of faith is expreſſed in Mark, and by way of exhortation, have faith in God, that he will enable you to perform whatſoever ye ſhall deſire; which muſt be underſtood, not of ſpiritual faith in the promiſes of God, and perſon of Chriſt, but of the faith of miracles, or faith in the power of God to perform things that are above the ſtrength of nature: and doubt not; either of the power, or will of God to do for you, and by you, the thing deſired; for this kind of faith wont admit of the leaſt degree of doubting: there muſt be no heſitation in the mind, no reaſoning upon the thing, how it can be performed; the mind muſt not be divided between the power and will of God, and the difficulties and diſcouragements which attend the caſe, but muſt believe in hope againſt hope, with a full perſuaſion of accompliſhment: for want of this faith, without doubting, the diſciples could not cure the child that was lunatic. Ye ſhall not only do this which is done to the fig-tree; cauſe one to be dried up, and wither away by a word, as Chriſt had done to this, which, comparatively ſpeaking, was but a leſſer ſort of miracle; but alſo, if ye ſhall ſay to this mountain; the mount of Olives, where Chriſt and his diſciples now were, and were paſſing over, or, at leaſt, were very near it; or any other mountain wherever they might be, to which they ſhould, upon any occaſion, think fit to ſay, be thou removed, and caſt into the ſea; which was many miles off from mount Olivet, and muſt be a very ſurprizing performance for a mountain to be rooted up, ſo large as that was, and be carried ſeveral miles from its former ſituation, and be thrown into the ſea; and yet, as difficult and amazing as this may ſeem, it ſhall be done: that is, provided the perſon doubts not; or, as it is ſaid in Mark, ſhall not doubt in his heart, but ſhall believe that thoſe things, which he ſaith ſhall come to paſs, he ſhall have whatſoever he ſaith: for this muſt not be confined to the particular inſtances of drying up a fig-tree, or removing a mountain, but the doing of any ſort of miracle, how great ſoever. Nor is it our Lord's meaning that they ſhould do theſe particular things; nor is it certain that they ever did: but his ſenſe is, that, had they faith, they ſhould be able not only to do ſuch leſſer miracles, as, comparatively ſpeaking, the withering of the fig-tree was, but they ſhould be able to perform things much more difficult and ſurprizing, when ever the good of the ſouls of men, the propagation of the Goſpel, and the glory of God required them.

Ver. 22. And all things whatſoever, &c.] Not only miracles, but any other thing which may be for the honour of God, the intereſt of religion, the ſpreading of the Goſpel, the enlargement of the kingdom of Chriſt, their own ſpiritual good, and the welfare of immortal ſouls, ye ſhall aſk in prayer, believing. Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel reads it, in prayer, and in faith; and the Arabic verſion renders it, in prayer with faith; both to the ſame purpoſe, and aptly expreſs the ſenſe of the words, which deſign the prayer of faith; or that prayer which is put up in the ſtrength of faith, and is of great avail with God: for whatever is aſked in faith, agreeable to the will of God, which is contained in his covenant, word, and promiſes, and makes for his glory, and the good of his people, ſhall be given, be it what it will; tho' to carnal ſenſe and reaſon it may ſeem impracticable and impoſſible: ye ſhall receive; of God, through Chriſt, freely and fully, and ſhall have and enjoy them, either they themſelves, if aſked for themſelves, or others, for whom they are aſked.

Ver. 23. And when he was come into the temple, &c.] The day following the curſing the fig-tree: for the withering of it, and the notice the diſciples took of it, and our Lord's diſcourſe with them about it, were not in one and the ſame day, as is clear from the account the Evangeliſt Mark gives; but on the morning that Chriſt had converſed with his apoſtles by the way, from Bethany to Jeruſalem, concerning the ſtrength of faith in prayer, and the ſucceſs of it; when they were come into the city, and to the temple, whither he directly went, and entered upon his work of preaching to the people, the chief-prieſts and elders of the people came unto him. The chief-prieſts were not the high-prieſt, and his ſagan, or deputy, but the principal of the prieſthood, who were choſen from the reſt of their brethren, to ſit in the ſanhedrim; and the elders of the people were the laity that were choſen from among the people, to be members of the ſame grand council: in this ſenſe the Jewiſh writers interpret the word elders, in Deut. xxi. 2. thy elders, and thy judges; that is, "thy elders, who are thy judges: "it is a tradition, R. Eliezer ben Jacob ſays, "זקניך זה בי״ד הגדול, thine elders; this is the great "ſanhedrim[a]." The other Evangeliſts Mark and Luke add to theſe, Scribes, who alſo were a part of this great aſſembly; ſo that the principal members of it, if not the whole ſanhedrim, came in a body together, if poſſible, by their preſence and authority, to daunt Chriſt, diſcourage his miniſtry, bring it into contempt with the people, and ſtop his proceedings and ſucceſs. And this they did as he was teaching; the people, that is, preaching the Goſpel to them, as Luke explains it: he was inſtructing them in the things relating to himſelf, and his kingdom, diſpenſing the myſteries of his grace, the doctrines of regeneration, juſtification, and ſalvation. Mark ſays, 'twas as he was walking in the temple; and at the ſame time teaching the people, who flocked about him in like manner, as the Peripatetic philoſophers taught their ſcholars walking; whence they had their name. And ſaid, by what authority doſt thou theſe things? that is, drive out the buyers and ſellers out of the temple, which greatly provoked them, their own gain and intereſt being concerned therein; and perform theſe miracles of reſtoring ſight to the blind, and cauſing the lame to walk; which he had very lately wrought in the temple; and particularly preach theſe doctrines, the work in which he was then engaged: and who gave thee this authority? They don't object to his doctrines, or diſpute whether they were true or falſe; nor examine his miracles, whether they were of God, or of the devil: in theſe points they might fear he would be able to put them to ſilence and confuſion, of which ſome of them had had an experience before; but they proceed in another way, in which they might hope for ſucceſs, and attack him about his commiſſion and authority under which he acted, whether he pretended to derive his authority from God, or from men: by this they deſigned to enſnare him, and hoped they ſhould gain their point, let him anſwer in what form he would. Should he ſay that God gave him the authority to do theſe things, they would charge him with enthuſiaſm and blaſphemy, urging, that it was wickedneſs and preſumption in any man to pretend to be ſent immediately from God; ſince the order of the prieſthood, and of teaching, was fixed, and none were to take upon them the office of a prieſt, or of a teacher of the people, but by their appointment; or none were called and ſent, but thro' them, or by their means: and if he ſhould ſay, that he had his authority from men, they would confront him, and abſolutely deny that he had any from them, who only had the power of giving men an authority of preaching in the temple; wherefore he muſt be an uſurper of this office, and a turbulent, ſeditious perſon, that ſought to deſtroy all order, civil and eccleſiaſtical.

---

[a] T. Hieroſ. Sota, fol. 23. 3. Jarchi in Deut. xxi. 2.

Ver. 24. And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, &c.] Not by replying directly to their queſtion, but by putting another queſtion to them, whereby he eſcaped the ſnare he ſaw they laid for him: I alſo will aſk you one thing, word, or queſtion, which if ye tell me; honeſtly, and plainly anſwer to it, I likewiſe will tell you by what authority I do theſe things: which was putting the thing upon ſuch a foot, and in ſuch a form, as they could not well object to; for Chriſt promiſes, that if they would return a plain anſwer to the queſtion he had to put to them, and which was no unreaſonable, nor impertinent one, he would thoroughly ſatisfy them in this point; and expreſsly declare his commiſſion and authority, what it was, and from whence he had it. The queſtion is as follows:

Ver. 25. The baptiſm of John, whence was it? &c.] By the baptiſm of John, is meant the ordinance of water-baptiſm, which was firſt adminiſtred by him; from whence he took the name of John the Baptiſt; and the doctrine which he preached concerning it, and previous to it, and even the whole of his miniſtry; which is denominated from a principal part of it, and which greatly diſtinguiſhed his miniſtry from all others: and the queſtion put by Chriſt concerning it is, whence it was? by what authority did John adminiſter the ordinance of water-baptiſm, which had never been adminiſtred before by any? who ſent him to preach the baptiſm of repentance for the remiſſion of ſins, a doctrine the world had never heard of before? who gave him a commiſſion to diſcharge the ſeveral parts of his miniſtry, which he performed in ſuch a wonderful and powerful manner? did he receive his authority from heaven, or of men? that is, from God or man? as the oppoſition requires; and as it was uſual for the Jews to call God by the name of heaven: in this ſenſe 'tis uſed by them, when they ſay [b], that ſuch have no part in the world to come, who affirm, that the law is not מן השמים, from heaven, that is, from God; which is exactly the phraſe here: and when they obſerve [c], that care ſhould be taken that a man does not pronounce שם שמים, the name of heaven, that is, God, in vain: and when they tell [d] us of a certain man that built large buildings by the way-ſide, and put food and drink there, ſo that every one that came went in and eat, and drank, וברך לשמים, and bleſſed heaven; that is, bleſſed, or gave thanks to God: and when they ſpeak of [e] מיתה לשמים, death by heaven; that is, death which is immediately inflicted by God. So when Chriſt here aſks, whether John's baptiſm was from heaven, or of men, his meaning is, whether it was of divine inſtitution, and that John acted by divine authority, and commiſſion; or whether it was an human device of his own, or of other men, and that he took the office of preaching and baptizing upon himſelf of his own head, or by ſome human appointment: to this he requires a direct anſwer, as is ſaid in Mark, anſwer me; whether it was from the one, or from the other; and they reaſoned with themſelves; either within themſelves, as the Arabic verſion renders it; in their own minds, as the Syriac; or they took ſome little time and privately conferr'd together, what anſwer they ſhould return; when they argued the point among themſelves, ſaying, if we ſhall ſay from heaven; if we ſhall return for anſwer, that the baptiſm and miniſtry of John were of divine appointment, and that he acted by a divine authority, he will ſay unto us, why did ye not believe him? why did not ye believe the doctrine that he preached? and receive the teſtimony that he gave concerning the Meſſiah? and why were ye not baptized by him? why did ye reject the counſel of God againſt yourſelves? They ſaw plainly, that if they owned the divine authority of John's baptiſm and miniſtry, they muſt allow Jeſus to be the true Meſſiah, John bore witneſs to; and conſequently, that it was by a divine authority he did what he did; and then there was an end of their queſtion, and is the very thing that Chriſt had in view.

Ver. 26. But if we ſhall ſay of men, &c.] They reaſoned with themſelves, that ſhould they give their anſwer in this form, and ſay, that the miniſtry and baptiſm of John were merely human, and what he took up of himſelf, or which he performed by an authority derived from men, we fear the people; that were then upon the ſpot, in the temple; who, as many of them were now the followers of Chriſt, more of them had been the admirers of John, and probably had been baptized by him: wherefore the ſanhedrim were afraid of them, leſt if they ſhould affirm, that the authority by which John acted was human, they would immediately riſe up againſt them; and, as Luke ſays, ſtone them: ſo high a veneration had they for him, and ſo dear was his memory ſtill unto them. For all held John as a prophet. Theſe are the words of the high-prieſts and elders, and not of the Evangeliſt, expreſſing the reaſon of their fears from the people, who, in general, general, were thoroughly perſuaded, as Luke expreſſes it, and firmly believed that John was a prophet, that was raiſed up, and ſent immediately by God; and did not derive his authority and commiſſion to preach and baptize from any men, or ſett of men, whatever.

[b] T. Hieroſ. Sanhedrin, fol. 27. 3. Vid. ib. fol. 19. 3. T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 99. 1.

[c] T. Bab. Megilla, fol. 3. 1. Abot R. Nathan, c. 7. fol. 3. 2.

[e] Ib. c. 11. fol. 4. 1. Vid. ib. c. 14. fol. 4. 4. & 5. 1. & c. 27. fol. 7. 1.

Ver. 27. And they anſwered Jeſus and ſaid, we cannot tell, &c.] They ſaw the dilemma they were brought into; they choſe rather therefore to ſpeak againſt their own conſciences, and tell a wilful lye, and incur the reproach of ignorance; who, at other times, took upon them to judge of a prophet, whether he was a true or a falſe one, and by what authority he acted, whether of God, or man: but now being reduced to this wretched condition, contrary to their office and character, declare they did not know, and could not tell from whence John had his commiſſion, and who gave him his authority: and he ſaid unto them, neither tell I you by what authority I do theſe things: ſince, according to the propoſal of Chriſt, and the agreement he enter'd into with them, they did not give him a direct anſwer to his queſtion, he looked upon himſelf under no obligation to inform them, what was his authority, and from whence he had it; though by the queſtion he put to them he tacitly ſuggeſts, that he had his authority not from man, but from God; and by this his anſwer ſignifies, that ſince John preached and baptized without their authority and approbation, ſo might he; nor was he dependant on them, or accountable to them.

Ver. 28. But what think you? &c.] See the note on ch. xviii. 12. a certain man had two ſons. This is a parable; the deſign of which is to ſhew the hypocriſy and deceit of the Scribes and Phariſees, in pretending to works of righteouſneſs, and not doing them; and to reprove them for their diſbelief and rejection of John's miniſtry; and to make it appear, that the worſt of ſinners in the Jewiſh nation were preferable to them; and that many of them were, and would be, happy, when they would be miſerable. By the certain man, in the parable, God is deſigned; who, tho' he is not a man, nor to be repreſented by any human form; yet, as man, is the image of God, he is therefore, in an improper and figurative ſenſe, compared to man, and ſet forth by him; which may be allowed in a metaphorical and parabolical way: and tho' the ſon of God only aſſumed human nature, and really became man; yet God, the Father, ſeems rather to be here intended, who is ſometimes compared to a huſbandman and a vine-dreſſer; ſee John xv. 1, 2. and as appears from the relation of the two ſons unto him: by whom are meant not Jews and Gentiles; for the latter can never be intended by the firſt ſon; for theſe were not ſons in ſuch ſenſe as the Jews were, nor were upon an equal foot of ſonſhip with them, as the parable ſuppoſes; much leſs were they called firſt, and bid to work in the vineyard: but, on the contrary, John the Baptiſt, Chriſt, and his apoſtles, were firſt, and only ſent to the Jews; and God, as yet, was not come even in the external miniſtry of the word to the Gentiles; nor were they brought to repentance and obedience: but by them are meant two ſorts of people, among the Jews, the Scribes and Phariſees, and publicans and ſinners; as the application of the parable, by our Lord himſelf, moſt clearly ſhews: theſe were both the ſons of God; not only by creation, as all men are, all having, in this ſenſe, but one common father, whoſe offspring they be; but alſo by national adoption; for to all, who were Iſraelites, according to the fleſh, whether good men, or bad men, alike belonged the general privilege of adoption, Rom. ix. 4. This publicans and ſinners had an equal right to, as well as the Scribes and Phariſees, though they were not all the ſons of God by ſpecial grace, or ſpiritual adoption: and he came to the firſt; the publicans and ſinners among the Jews, by the miniſtry of John the Baptiſt, Chriſt, and his diſciples, who firſt and chiefly preached to ſuch ſort of perſons; and ſaid, ſon, go work to-day in my vineyard: by the vineyard, is meant the kingdom of God, or of heaven, the Goſpel church-ſtate, the then preſent diſpenſation of things, which was ſet up, and which men were called to embrace and enter into; the doors of which the Phariſees, who pretended to have the key of knowledge, did all they could to ſhut up, and hinder perſons going in, as they refuſed to do themſelves: this is called a vineyard; ſee the note on ch. xx. 1. To work in it ſignifies to hear the word preached, to believe in the Meſſiah, embrace his doctrines, and ſubmit to his ordinances, particularly the ordinance of baptiſm, which was the then principal ordinance of that diſpenſation. The time of working in it is to-day; directly, immediately, and whilſt it is day; for the hour cometh when no man can work, and when all theſe means and ordinances will be at an end, and attending on them will be over: the argument uſed to engage hereunto, is taken from the relation the perſon ſtood in as a ſon, highly favoured by God, with the bleſſing of national adoption, beſides that of natural ſonſhip common to all mankind.

Ver. 29. He anſwered and ſaid, I will not, &c.] Which anſwer fitly expreſſes the language and practice of openly profane and unregenerate ſinners, who will not come to Chriſt, that they may have life; nor will they ſerve the Lord, but are bent upon indulging their luſts; nor will they be ſubject to the law of God; nor will they hear and receive the Goſpel of Chriſt, or ſubmit to his ordinances, and are averſe to every good work: where's man's free-will? this is the true picture of it; man has no will naturally to that which is good. But afterward he repented, and went: a change of mind was wrought in him, and this produced a change of life and converſation: ſo, many of the publicans and ſinners repented of their ſins of diſobedience, and rebellion againſt God, under the miniſtry of John the Baptiſt, Chriſt, and his apoſtles; not of themſelves, for men do not naturally ſee their ſin, or need of repentance; their hearts are hard and obdurate; nor have they any ſpiritual ſenſe and feeling; nothing will bring them to repentance, not the moſt powerful miniſtry, the ſevereſt judgments, or the kindeſt mercies, without the grace of God: but it was of God, and owing to his powerful and efficacious grace, that they repented: 'twas his will they ſhould come to repentance; he called them to it, and gave it to them, as a free-grace gift of his: and they repented not in a mere legal way, with a legal repentance, which lies in a mere conviction of the outward acts of ſin; in an external ſorrow for it, in horror and terror of mind about it, and in ſhedding tears for it, accompanied with a ceſſation from the groſſer acts of ſin, and an outward reformation of life and manners: but they repented in an evangelical manner, as ſuch do, who are really converted, and ſpiritually inſtructed; who are true believers in Chriſt, have views, and, at leaſt, hopes of pardoning grace and mercy; and have the love of God ſhed abroad in their hearts by the Spirit: the repentance of ſuch lies in a ſpiritual ſight and ſenſe of ſin, of the evil nature of in-dwelling ſin, and the exceeding ſinfulneſs of it, as well as of the outward actions of life; in a hearty, godly ſorrow for it, becauſe committed againſt a God of purity, grace, and goodneſs; in a loathing it, and themſelves for it; in a holy ſhame, and bluſhing, on account of it; and is attended with an ingenuous confeſſion of it, and forſaking it: the conſequence of which is, that ſuch go readily and chearfully into the Lord's vineyard; hear the word with all diligence, receive it with gladneſs; walk in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord; and are taught, by the grace that has appeared to them, to live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly in this world.

Ver. 30. And he came to the ſecond, &c.] The Scribes and Phariſees, by the miniſtry of John the Baptiſt, Chriſt, and his apoſtles alſo: and ſaid likewiſe; the ſame things as to the other ſon, the publicans and ſinners; calling them into the Goſpel-diſpenſation, to hear the word, embrace truth, attend on ordinances, and labour in promoting the kingdom, and intereſt of the Meſſiah, whilſt they had the light of the Goſpel with them. Urging alſo the relation they ſtood in to God, as a part of the Jewiſh body; to whom, among other external privileges, the adoption belonged: and he anſwered and ſaid, I go, ſir, and went not: the word go is not in the generality of the Greek copies; the phraſe is only I ſir, tho' it is rightly enough ſupplied as to the ſenſe. Beza ſays, it was in his moſt ancient copy; and ſo it is in the Arabic and Perſic verſions, and in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel; tho' it is not in the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions. So, the Scribes and Phariſees ſeemed pleaſed with the miniſtry of John for a while, and at firſt were forward to ſubmit to his baptiſm, and were very inquiſitive about the Meſſiah; yet, when he was declared in John's miniſtry, and by his own doctrine, and miracles, they refuſed to give in to the belief of him; they would neither enter into the Goſpel-kingdom, embrace the doctrines, and obey the commands of it themſelves, nor ſuffer others to enter in; but, as much as in them lay, by their reproaches, menaces, and excommunications, deterr'd them from it. They were like ſome other perſons, who promiſe fair, and talk much of doing good works, but do none; teach the people to do them, but do not perform them themſelves, though they would ſeem to do them; make great pretenſions to them, boaſt of them, and truſt in them; and therefore, of all men, ought to be careful to maintain them, and yet do the leaſt.

Ver. 31. Whether of them twain did the will of his father? &c.] This is the queſtion put by Chriſt, upon the preceding parable to the chief-prieſts, elders, and Scribes; they ſay unto him, the firſt: an anſwer which natural reaſon, and common ſenſe, directed them to; and therefore they give it out at once, directly, without ſtaying upon it, and demurring about it; tho' they ſeemed not to be aware of the application of it to themſelves, which follows: Jeſus ſaith unto them, verily I ſay unto you, that the publicans and the harlots; that is, ſuch who had been ſo; ſee the note on ch. ix. 10. go into the kingdom of God before you. They are ſignified by the firſt ſon, who repenting went, and did the will of his father: theſe repented under John's miniſtry, were called, and brought to repentance by the preaching of Chriſt, and his apoſtles: theſe juſtified God, their father, by being baptized with John's baptiſm: theſe embraced the Meſſiah, believed in him, and were the firſt in his kingdom, and ſet an example to the chief among the Jews to follow: and it is eaſy to obſerve, that a poor, profane ſinner may, by the grace of God, be brought to repentance, that before was obſtinate, rebellious, and diſobedient, and be made willing to go and work in the Lord's vineyard here, and be at laſt glorified; when a ſelf-righteous perſon, notwithſtanding all his fair promiſes and reſolutions to do good, his profeſſions of, and pretenſions to religion, neither repents of his ſins, nor believes in Chriſt; has no ſhare in the kingdom of grace here, nor will he enter into the kingdom of glory.

Ver. 32. For John came unto you in a way of righteouſneſs, &c.] He had a commiſſion from God; he was no impoſtor; the doctrine he taught was true, and which he faithfully delivered; his life and converſation were unblameable; there was nothing in his credentials, miniſtry, and conduct, that could juſtly be found fault with: and ye believed him not; to be the fore-runner of the Meſſiah, or the Elias that was to come; nor attended to the doctrine of repentance preached by him; nor were ſubject to the ordinance of baptiſm he adminiſtred; nor gave any aſſent, or credit, to the Meſſiah he ſo manifeſtly pointed out: but the publicans and harlots believed him; what he ſaid concerning the wrath to come, and the miſerable ſtate and danger they were in; and they repented of their ſins, and confeſſed them, and were baptized of him in Jordan; believing the teſtimony he gave of Jeſus of Nazareth being the Meſſiah, and Son of God: and ye, when ye had ſeen it; the repentance and faith of theſe perſons, and what a wonderful reformation was wrought in them, repented not afterwards; of their diſobedience, impenitence, and unbelief, after they had ſeen the effects of John's miniſtry on theſe very profligate ſinners, and after the death of John; who, by his conſtancy, zeal, and faithfulneſs, had ſhewn himſelf to be a true, and upright miniſter of the word; and afterwards under the miniſtry of Chriſt, and his apoſtles, by whom the ſame doctrines were preached, and the ſame ordinances adminiſtred, that ye might believe him; the teſtimony he has left behind him concerning the Meſſiah.

Ver. 33. Hear another parable, &c.] Which, though Luke ſays was ſpoken to the people, who were gathered round about him, yet was directed to, and againſt the chief prieſts; who continued with him till it was delivered, and the application of it made; when they perceived it was ſpoken of them. The deſign of it is, to ſet forth the many favours and privileges beſtowed on the Jewiſh nation; their unfruitfulneſs, and the ingratitude of the principal men among them; and their barbarous uſage of the ſervants of the Lord, and particularly of the Son of God himſelf; the conſequence of which would be, the removal of the Goſpel from them, and the miſerable deſtruction of them. So that this parable is partly a narrative of ſome things paſt, and partly a prophecy of ſome things to come: there was a certain houſholder; by whom the Great God of heaven and earth is meant; who may be ſo called, either with reſpect to the whole world, which is an houſe of his building, and the inhabitants of it are his family, who live, are nouriſhed, and ſupplied by him; or to the church, the houſe of the living God, the family in heaven and in earth, called the houſhold of God, and of faith; or to the people of Iſrael, often called the houſe of Iſrael, the family, above all the families of the earth, God took notice of, highly favoured, and dwelt among. Which planted a vineyard: of the form of a vineyard, the manner of planting it, and the bigneſs of it, the Jews ſay many things in their Miſna[f]. "He that plants a row of five vines, the ſchool

---

[f] Miſna Kilaim, c. 4. §. 5, 6. Maimon. Hilch. Kilaim, c. 7. §. 7.

“ of Shammai ſay, it is a vineyard; but the ſchool “ of Hillell ſay, it is not a vineyard, unleſs there “ are two rows——he that plants two vines over-“ againſt two, and one at the tail or end, “ הרי זה כרם, lo! this is a vineyard (it was a “ little vineyard) but if two over-againſt two, and “ one between the two, or two over-againſt two, “ and one in the midſt, it is no vineyard, unleſs “ there are two over-againſt two, and one at the “ tail, or end.” Again [g], “ a vineyard that is “ planted with leſs than four cubits (between every “ row) R. Simeon ſays, is no vineyard; but the “ wiſe men ſay it is a vineyard.” And the deciſion is according to them. Now by this vineyard is meant, the houſe of Iſrael and the men of Judah, the nation of the Jews, as in Iſa. v. 7. from whence our Lord ſeems to have taken many of the ideas expreſſed in this parable; who were a people ſeparated from the reſt of the world, and ſet with valuable plants, from whom fruit might reaſonably be expected: the planting of them deſigns the removing them out of Egypt, the driving out the natives before them, and ſettling them in the land of Canaan, where they were planted with choice vines, ſuch as Joſhua, Caleb, &c. and where they ſoon became a flouriſhing people; though, for their iniquities, often expoſed to beaſts of prey, the neighbouring nations, that were ſuffered at times to break in upon them. The Jews often ſpeak [h] of the houſe of Iſrael, as the vineyard of the Lord of hoſts, and even call their ſchools and univerſities vineyards: hence we read [i] of כרם ביבנה, the vineyard in Jabneh, where the ſcholars were placed in rows, as in a vineyard. And hedged it round about; as it was uſual to ſet a hedge, or make a wall round a vineyard, which, according to the Jewiſh writers, was to be ten hands high, and four broad; for they aſk [k], “ אי זה גדר, what is a hedge? That which is “ ten hands high.” And elſewhere [l], “ An hedge “ that encompaſſes a vineyard, which is leſs than “ ten hands high, or which is ten hands high, but “ not four hands broad, it has no circuit (or void “ place between that and the vines)——an hedge “ which is ten hands high, and ſo a ditch which is “ ten hands deep, and four broad, lo! this is lawful “ to plant a vineyard on one ſide of it, and herbs “ on the other; even a fence of reeds, if there is “ between the reeds the ſpace of three hands, lo! “ this divides between the vineyard and the herbs, “ as an hedge.” By this hedge is deſigned, either the law, not the oral law, or the traditions of the elders, which the Jews [m] call, סיג לתורה, an hedge for the law, which was none of God's ſetting, but their own; but either the ceremonial law, which diſtinguiſhed them from other people, was a middle wall of partition between them, and the nations of the world, and kept them from coming among them, and joining together; or the moral law, which taught them their duty to God and man, and was the means of keeping them within due bounds; or elſe, the protection of them by the power of God, which was an hedge about them, is here intended; and which was very remarkable at the time of their three feaſts of paſſover, pentecoſt, and tabernacles; when all their males went up to Jeruſalem, and the whole country was left an eaſy prey to the nations about them; but God preſerved them, and, according to his promiſe, ſuffered not their neighbours to have any inclination or deſire after their land. And digged a wine-preſs in it; which is not חריץ, the ditch, that went through a vineyard; for this can't be ſaid of a wine-preſs, and is Dr. Lightfoot's miſtake [n]; but גת, the wine-fat, in which they ſqueezed the grapes and made the wine, and this uſed to be in the vineyard: the rule about it is this, “ הגת שבכרם, the wine-“ preſs that is ten hands deep and four broad, R. “ Eliezer ſays, they may ſett in it; but the wiſe “ men do forbid it [o].” By this may be meant, the altar where the drink-offerings of wine were poured forth; and ſo the Targumiſt [p] renders it by מדבחי, my altar I have given them, to atone for their ſins: though one of their commentators [q], by it, underſtands the prophets, who taught Iſrael the law, that their works might be good before God and men; they urged and preſſed them to the performance of them, as grapes are ſqueezed in the wine-preſs: and built a tower; the ſame the Jews call שומרה, the watch-houſe; which was an high place, in which the watchman ſtood to keep the [r] vineyard, and which was built in the vineyard; of this they ſay, “ שומרה שבכרם, the watch-houſe which is “ in the vineyard, that is ten hands high and four “ broad, they ſett in it [s].” By this is meant, either the city of Jeruſalem, which ſtood in the midſt, and on the higheſt part of the land of Iſrael; or the temple, which ſtood on the higheſt part of Jeruſalem, where the prieſts and Levites kept their watch every night; and ſo the Targumiſt [t] interprets it, by מקדשי, my ſanctuary I built among them; that is, the temple: and let it out to huſbandmen; of which there were different ſorts, as there were different methods of hiring and letting out fields and vineyards among the Jews: one ſort was called השוכר, and ſuch was he, who hired of his neighbour a field to ſow in it, or a vineyard to eat of the fruit of it, for a certain ſum of money yearly; ſee Cant. viii. 11. another ſort was called החוכר, and this was one that hired a field, or a vineyard, and agreed to give the proprietor of it yearly, ſo many meaſures of the fruit thereof, whether it yielded more or leſs; and there was a third ſort, called אריס, or מקבל, and ſuch was he, who agreed to give the owner half, or a third, or a fourth part of the increaſe of the field, or vineyard [u]. Now it is not of the former, but of the latter ſort of letting out and farming, that this is to be underſtood; not of letting it out for money, but for fruit, as appears from ver. 34. and by the huſbandmen are meant, the rulers of the Jews, civil and eccleſiaſtical, eſpecially the latter; the prieſts, Levites, and Scribes, who were entruſted with the care of the Jewiſh people, to guide and inſtruct them, and cultivate the knowledge of divine things among them, that they might bring forth fruits of righteouſneſs; and to offer their gifts and ſacrifices, and the like, which are meant by letting out the vineyard to them: and went into a far country; which muſt be interpreted conſiſtent with the omnipreſence of God, who is every where, and can't be ſaid properly to move from place to place; but fills heaven and earth with his preſence, and cannot be contained in either: but this phraſe ſeems to deſign, his taking up his reſidence in the thick darkneſs, in the tabernacle and temple, when the civil and eccleſiaſtical ſtate of the Jews were ſettled, and God did not appear to them in that viſible manner he had done before; but having fixed their order of government, worſhip, and duty, left them to themſelves and their rulers, for many years; in which he expreſſed much long-ſuffering and patience towards them.

---

[g] Ib. c. 5. §. 2, Maimon. ib. §. 1.
[h] Tzeror Hammor, fol. 148. 2. Zohar in Exod. fol. 2. 1.
[i] T. Hieroſ. Beracot, fol. 7. 4. T. Bab. Yebamot, fol. 42. 2.
[k] Miſn. Kilaim, c. 4. §. 3.
[l] Maimon. Hilch. Kilaim, c. 7. §. 14, 15.
[m] Pirke Abot, c. 1. §. 1.
[n] Horæ in Mark xli. 1.
[o] Miſn. Kilaim, c. 5. §. 3.
[p] Targum Jon. in Iſa. v. 2. Vid. T. Hieroſ. Succa, fol. 54. 4.
[q] R. David Kimchi in loc.
[r] Maimon. in Miſn. Kilaim, c. 5. §. 3. Aben Ezra in Iſa. v. 2.
[s] Miſn. Kilaim, c. 5. §. 3. Maimon. Hilch. Kilaim, c. 7. §. 22.
[t] Targum Jon. in Iſa. v. 2.
[u] T. Hieroſ. Demai, fol. 25. 1. Gloſſ. in T. Bab. Moed Katon, fol. 11. 2. & in Bava Metzia, fol. 103. 1. in Avoda Zara, fol. 21. 2. Maimon. Hilch. Sheeirut, c. 8. §. 1, 2. Bartenora in Miſn. Pea, c. 5. §. 5. & in Demai, c. 6. §. 1.

Ver. 34. And when the time of the fruit drew near, &c.] Of gathering the fruit, when it was ripe, and might be eaten, or profit made of it, according to the law in Lev. xix. 23, 24, 25. The fruit of all manner of trees, for the firſt three years, was uncircumciſed; it was not to be eaten, nor any profit made of it, and on the fourth year it was to be holy to praiſe the Lord with; being either given to the prieſts, or eaten by the owners before the Lord at Jeruſalem; and on the fifth year it might be eaten, and made uſe of for profit, and henceforward every year; which law regarded the fruit of the vine, as any other fruit: hence 'tis ſaid [w], that "the grapes of the vineyard of the fourth year, the Sanhedrim ordered that they ſhould be brought up to Jeruſalem, a day's journey on every ſide, ſo that they might crown or adorn the ſtreets with fruits." To this time of fruit, and the cuſtom of bringing it up to Jeruſalem, the alluſion ſeems to be here. Thus, God after a long time, after he had waited a great while for fruit from the Jewiſh nation, from whom much might have been expected, by reaſon of the advantages they enjoyed; he ſent his ſervants to the huſbandmen: by his ſervants are meant, the prophets of the Old Teſtament; who were ſent by God from time to time, to the kings, prieſts, and people of the Jews; to inſtruct them in their duty, to exhort them to the performance of it, to reprove them for their ſins, to ſtir them up to repentance, and to bring forth fruits meet for it, ſignified in the next clauſe: that they might receive the fruits of it; of the vineyard from the huſbandmen, for the uſe of the owner; for fruits of juſtice and judgment, of righteouſneſs and holineſs, might be juſtly expected and demanded of ſuch perſons, to be brought forth by them, to the honour and glory of God.

Ver. 35. And the huſbandmen took his ſervants, &c.] They ſeized and laid hold on them in a rude and violent manner: ſo far were they from treating theſe ſervants with reſpect, as they ought to have done; conſidering whoſe they were, from whom they came, and upon what account; and alſo ſo far from delivering to them the fruit due to their maſter, or excuſing their inability to make a ſuitable return, as might be expected, they uſe them very roughly: and beat one; either with the fiſt, as Jeremiah was ſtruck by Paſhur, the ſon of Immer, the prieſt, one of theſe huſbandmen, Jer. xx. 1, 2. and as Micaiah was ſmitten on the cheek by Zedekiah, the ſon of Chenaanah, the falſe prophet, 2 Chron. xviii. 23. or with a ſcourge, and may refer to the puniſhment of beating with forty ſtripes ſave one, by which the ſkin was flead off, as the word here ſignifies; for ſome of theſe ſervants had trial of cruel mockings and ſcourgings, Heb. xi. 36. And killed another; that is, with the ſword. There were four kinds of death in the power of the Sanhedrim, of which this is one, and what follows is another; and were theſe, ſtoning, burning, killing (i. e. beheading with the ſword) and ſtrangling: the manner of executing this puniſhment here expreſſed, was this; "They cut off the perſon's head, בסייף, with a ſword, in the manner the government orders it. R. Judah ſays, this is indecent (i. e. to cut off his head ſtanding, they do not do ſo) but they put his head upon a block, and cut it off with an ax; they reply to him, there's no death more abominable than this [x]." So the prophets, in the time of Elijah, were killed with the ſword, 1 Kings xix. 14. ſee alſo Dan. xi. 33. And ſtoned another; as they did Zechariah, 2 Chron. xxiv. 21. and doubtleſs many others; ſince Jeruſalem had the character of killing the prophets, and ſtoning them that were ſent unto her, Matt. xxiii. 37. theſe ſeemed ſuch that were ſtoned, but not killed; but as Mark ſays, were wounded in the head with the ſtones thrown at them, and ſhamefully handled, and ſadly abuſed.

Ver. 36. Again he ſent other ſervants, &c.] Meaning, perhaps, ſuch as ſuffered in the times of the Maccabees: more than the firſt; their number was greater, though their office was the ſame, at leaſt not higher: and they did unto them likewiſe; they beat them with rods, they killed them with the ſword, and ſtoned them, Heb. xi. 36, 37.

Ver. 37. But laſt of all, &c.] In the laſt times, in the laſt days, in the end of the world, the Jewiſh world, at the cloſe of their eccleſiaſtic and civil ſtate; after all the prophets had been ſent, and finiſhed their courſe, came the great prophet of all, to ſeal up the viſion and prophecy: he ſent unto them his ſon; not a ſervant as before, but a ſon; his own ſon, his only begotten ſon, the ſon of his love, his dearly beloved one; him he ſent to theſe huſbandmen the Jews. The Son of God, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, was ſent only to the houſe of Iſrael: he was the miniſter of the circumciſion; he was the great prophet raiſed up among them, and was ſent to bleſs them, by turning them from their iniquities; he came to them, to his own, to them of his own nation, but they received him not: ſaying, they will reverence my ſon. The Son of God is to be reverenced equally as his Father, ſince he is in nature and glory equal to him; and it is the will of his Father he ſhould be ſo reverenced, as he is by the angels in heaven, and by the ſaints, both in heaven and in earth; but did theſe huſbandmen reverence him? no; they deſpiſed and rejected him; they reproached and traduced him, as the vileſt of men, and uſed him in the moſt cruel and barbarous manner. And did not his Father know this? yes; this is certain from his omniſcience, which reaches to all future events, the moſt minute and contingent; and from the predictions of the uſage of theſe perſons of him, delivered long before it came to paſs. Luke ſays, it may be they will reverence him: ſo that it was not a poſitive affirmation, that they would do it, and which alſo is to be underſtood after the manner of men; that humanly ſpeaking, it might be expected that they would give him reverence, in conſideration of the dignity of his perſon, his character, and relation to God, which was his due and their duty; but he had a very different treatment from them.

Ver. 38. But when the huſbandmen ſaw the ſon, &c.] Whom many of them knew, though ſome did not: ſome were entirely ignorant of him; ſome knew him, but durſt not confeſs him, yet were not injurious to him; others acted againſt light and conſcience, with ſpite and malice, as did theſe men. They expected the Meſſiah about this time; they knew, by prophecy, it could not be long e'er he appeared: when they ſaw Jeſus of Nazareth, they knew by various circumſtances, by all the characters of the Meſſiah meeting in him, and by his miracles, racles, that he muſt be the ſame. They ſaid among themſelves; privately, not openly to the people, this is the heir; as indeed he is of all things, as the Son of God, and as the Mediator of the new covenant: he is heir of all that his Father has, as he is his natural, eſſential, and only begotten Son; and, as Mediator, he is heir of all things, natural, ſpiritual, and eternal, for the uſe and benefit of his church and people, who are alſo his portion and inheritance: but here it ſeems to denote, his being heir to the throne of Iſrael, the government of the Jewiſh nation, as he was the Son of David; and the Jews confeſs [y], that becauſe it was ſaid that Jeſus of Nazareth was קרוב למלכות, near to the kingdom, therefore they put him to death: come let us kill him, and ſeize on his inheritance; concluding, that could they be rid of him, their nation would be in peace, their temple would ſtand, and temple worſhip and ſervice continue, and they remain in their office and authority undiſturbed; the contrary of which they feared, ſhould he be ſuffered to live; though what they feared from his life, befel them upon, and in conſequence of his death, quite beyond all their counſels and expectations.

---

[w] Maimon. Hilch. Maaſer Sheni, c. 9. 5. Miſn. Maaſer Sheni, c. 5. §. 2.

[x] Miſn. Sanhedrin, c. 7. §. 1, 3.

Ver. 39. And they caught him, &c.] Seized and laid hold on him, in a rude and violent manner, as they had ſome of the ſervants before. This regards their apprehending of Chriſt in the garden, by a band of ſoldiers and officers, ſent by the chief prieſts and Phariſees, who with ſwords and ſtaves took him, bound him, and led him away: and caſt him out of the vineyard; which is not to be underſtood of their caſting him out of the ſynagogue, which is never ſaid of them; nor does it ſo much relate to the leading of him without the gates of Jeruſalem, where they crucified him, though this is a ſenſe not to be deſpiſed and rejected; but rather, to the delivery of him to thoſe, that were without the vineyard of the Jewiſh church and nation, to the Gentiles; to be mocked, ſcourged, and put to death by them: and ſlew him; for though the ſentence of death was pronounced on him by Pilate, an heathen governour, and was executed by the Roman ſoldiers; yet it was through the inſtigation, and at the preſſing importunity of theſe huſbandmen, the Jewiſh rulers; and who were afterwards frequently charged by the apoſtles with the murder of him.

Ver. 40. When the Lord therefore of the vineyard cometh, &c.] In a way of providence, to call theſe huſbandmen to an account; not only for the fruit they were to bring to him; but for their barbarity to his ſervants, the prophets, time after time; and eſpecially, for the inhuman uſage and murder of his own ſon; what will he do unto thoſe huſbandmen? This queſtion is put to the chief prieſts, elders, and Scribes; and they themſelves who are deſigned hereby, are made judges in this caſe, juſt as the inhabitants of Jeruſalem and men of Judah are, in Iſa. v. 4. which paſſage of ſcripture our Lord had greatly in view, when he ſpake this parable.

Ver. 41. They ſay unto him, &c.] Either the common people that were about him; or rather the chief prieſts, Scribes, and elders, to whom he put the queſtion; little thinking then, that they were the perſons intended in this parable: he will miſerably deſtroy thoſe wicked men: in ſaying which, they own that perſons guilty of ſuch crimes, as beating, killing, and ſtoning, ſervants ſent to them by the proprietor of the vineyard, to receive his due and proper fruit, and at laſt murdering his ſon and heir, were very wicked perſons, and deſerved the ſevereſt puniſhments to be inflicted upon them, and that without mercy; nor could it be thought, but this muſt and would be unavoidably their caſe, when the Lord of the vineyard ſhould come: thus tacitly did they condemn themſelves as wicked men, and as deſerving the worſt of deaths, who in a few days after this, were concerned in the death of the Son of God: and will let out his vineyard unto other huſbandmen; allowing it to be a very juſt thing, not only to put theſe men to the moſt miſerable and tormenting death that could be deviſed, but to take the vineyard out of the hands of their poſterity, and let it out to other perſons; as it was a righteous thing with God, to remove the church-ſtate, Goſpel and ordinances from the Jews, and deliver them to the Gentiles: which ſhall render him the fruits in their ſeaſons; that is, his due, and that in proper time. The other Evangeliſts relate theſe words, as ſpoken by Chriſt: for the reconciliation of which let it be obſerved, that they were firſt ſpoken by the Jews, as is here ſignified; and after that were ſpoken by Chriſt, confirming what they ſaid, and applying it to them; upon which they ſaid, God forbid; that we ſhould ever be guilty of ſuch crimes, incur ſuch puniſhment, and this ſhould be our caſe: but in proof of it, that ſo it would be, our Lord alledges the following words.

Ver. 42. Jeſus ſaith unto them, did ye never read in the ſcriptures, &c.] The paſſage which ſtands in Pſal. cxviii. 22, 23. The ſtone which the builders rejected, the ſame is become the head of the corner: this is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes. Very appoſitely is this ſcripture cited, and applied to the preſent caſe; which expreſſes the rejection of the Meſſiah by the Jewiſh builders, prieſts, and Scribes: the whole pſalm may be underſtood of the Meſſiah. R. David Kimchi owns [z], that there is a diviſion among their Rabbins about it: ſome ſay that the pſalm is ſpoken of David, and others, that it is ſpoken of the days of the Meſſiah; and theſe are certainly in the right; and as for this particular paſſage, it is applied by ſome of them to the Meſſiah: ſo on mentioning Hoſ. iii. 5. they [a] ſay, "David was king in this world, and David ſhall "be king in the time to come: wherefore 'tis ſaid, "the ſtone which the builders refuſed, &c." And one of their noted commentators [b] on thoſe words, though thou be little among the thouſands of Judah, has this note: "It is fit thou ſhouldſt be little a-"mong the families of Judah, becauſe of the im-"purity of Ruth the Moabiteſs, which is in thee: "out of thee ſhall come forth unto me, Meſſiah, "the Son of David; for ſo he ſaith, the ſtone which "the builders refuſed, &c." Chriſt is often in ſcripture compared to a ſtone, and is called the ſtone of Iſrael; is ſaid to be a ſtone of ſtumbling to ſome, and a precious tried ſtone to others; is repreſented as a ſtone cut out of the mountain without hands, and on which are ſeven eyes: and is fitly compared to one, for his uſefulneſs in the ſpiritual building the church, where he is as both the foundation and corner-ſtone, and for his ſtrength and duration. Chriſt is the ſure, firm, and everlaſting foundation, which God has laid in Zion, and the only one of any avail; nor can any other be laid to any purpoſe; and if he is neglected, and laid aſide, in the miniſtration of the word, the building which men endeavour to rear, or exhort unto, will come to nothing. Whoever build on him are ſafe, and on nothing elſe: Chriſt is the foundation, on which the church, and every believer, are built, and therefore will abide; for the gates of hell cannot prevail againſt them: the covenant of grace is immoveable, being eſtabliſhed in him; its mercies are ſure, and its promiſes yea and amen: the ſalvation of immortal ſouls is certain, reſting upon him; the faith and hope of the ſaints, fail not, being directed to, and ſettled on him: the houſe not made with hands, which is in heaven, is an eternal one; and the city, which has foundations, is a continuing one, becauſe of the concern that Chriſt has in it; and tho' he is of ſuch eminent uſe and importance in the building, yet, as ſuch, the builders rejected him: by the builders are meant, the Jewiſh rulers, both political and eccleſiaſtical, eſpecially the latter, who pretended to inſtruct and build up the people in knowledge and underſtanding; but in a very bad way did they do it, and upon a very ſandy foundation, upon their fleſhly privileges, their moral righteouſneſs, and the obſervance of the ceremonial law, and the traditions of the elders. The Jews uſed to call their doctors and their ſcholars builders[c]: ſays R. Jochanan, "the diſciples of the wiſe men are called "בנאין, builders, becauſe they ſtudy in the building "of the world all their days, which is the law." Theſe rejected the Meſſiah, refuſed to receive, and acknowledge him as ſuch: they diſallowed and diſapproved of him, as baſe and vile, and the moſt contemptible of mortals, and ſet him at nought, and had him in the utmoſt ſcorn and deriſion. And ſo he is rejected by ſome who bear the characters of builders among chriſtians: as when his proper deity, and eternal ſonſhip are denied, and he is treated as a mere creature; when his ſatisfaction and atoning ſacrifice are either wholly rejected, or little regarded, leſſened, and depreciated, and repentance and good works are put in the room of them; when his imputed righteouſneſs is oppoſed, and laid aſide, and the righteouſneſs of men preferred unto it, and cried up as the matter of juſtification in the ſight of God; when his efficacious grace is repreſented as unneceſſary to regeneration, converſion, and ſanctification, and to the performance of good works; and when he is left out of public miniſtrations, as the way of life and ſalvation, as the fountain of all grace, and foundation of all happineſs, and human power, free-will, and moral righteouſneſs are put in his room. But notwithſtanding the former and preſent rejection, and ill treatment of him, he is become the head of the corner: he is the corner-ſtone in the building which knits and cements it together, angels and men, Jews and Gentiles, Old and New Teſtament ſaints; ſaints above, and ſaints below, and in all ages and places, all meet, and are united together in this corner-ſtone; which alſo ſtrengthens and ſupports the building, and holds it together, and is the ornament and beauty of it: he is the chief corner-ſtone; he is higher than the kings of the earth; he is ſuperior to angels, and the chiefeſt among ten thouſands of his ſaints; he is exalted above all creatures, angels, and men, who, by the Jewiſh builders, was deſpiſed and rejected, and ſcarce allowed to be worthy the name of a man: this is the Lord's doing; this ſtone is laid in the building by him: the rejection of him is according to his determinate counſel and fore-knowledge; and the exaltation of him, above every name, is owing to him, and he is by, and at his own right hand: and is marvellous in our eyes; in the eyes of all the ſaints; there being in all this ſuch a wonderful diſplay of the wiſdom, grace, mercy, power, and faithfulneſs of God.

---

[y] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 43. 1.

[z] In Pſal. cxviii. 1.

[a] Zohar in Exod. fol. 93. 3.

[b] Jarchi in Mic. v. 2.

Ver. 43. Therefore I ſay unto you, &c.] This is the application of the parable; and the words are directed to the chief-prieſts, elders, Scribes, and people of the Jews; and are delivered as what would be in conſequence of the builders rejecting the Meſſiah, the foundation and corner-ſtone of the building. The kingdom of God ſhall be taken from you: by which is meant, not their political eſtate, their civil government, which was of God, and in a ſhort time was to depart from them, according to ancient prophecy, and which is come to paſs, as the event ſhews; nor their legal national church-ſtate and ordinances only, or the prieſthood, and the appendages of it; all which, in a little while, were ſhaken and removed; but the Goſpel, which had been preached among them by John the Baptiſt, Chriſt, and his apoſtles; ſo called, becauſe it treats of the kingdom of God, and things pertaining to it, and ſhews men both their right and meetneſs for it; the one, as in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and the other in the regenerating and ſanctifying grace of the Spirit, which Goſpel may be taken away from a people, as from the Jews, becauſe of their contempt of it, and oppoſition to it, or lukewarmneſs and indifferency about it, or unfruitfulneſs under it; and when God has no more ſouls to gather in by it in ſuch a place, and which is a very unhappy caſe, whenever it is the caſe of any people: for when the Goſpel is taken away, the riches of a people are gone; the glory of a nation is departed; the light of it is put out; the ſpiritual bread of a people is no more; the means of converſion and ſpiritual knowledge ceaſe: all which have a melancholy aſpect on poſterity. Moreover, the Goſpel church-ſtate, which was ſet up in Judæa, may be here meant; which, tho' it continued and flouriſhed a while, in proceſs of time was to be removed: and which may be done elſewhere, as it has been in Judæa, by God's ſuffering perſecution to ariſe, as he did againſt the church of Jeruſalem, whereby the miniſters of the Goſpel are driven into corners, or ſcattered abroad; or by ordering his miniſters to preach no more unto ſuch a people, as the apoſtles were ordered to turn from the Jews to the Gentiles; or by taking away miniſters and members of churches by death, and not raiſing up others in their room; or by with-holding a bleſſing from the word; or by permitting the growth of errors and hereſies, which, in courſe of time, muſt iſſue in the diſſolution of the church-ſtate in ſuch a place, and which neceſſarily follows upon the removing of the Goſpel: and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. Tho' God may take away the Goſpel from a people, as he did from the Jews; yet he does not, nor will he, as yet, take it out of the world: he gives it to another nation; to the Gentiles, to all the nations of the world, whither he ſent his apoſtles to preach it, and where it muſt be preached before the end of the world comes, in order to gather his elect out of them: for not one particular nation is meant, unleſs the nation of God's elect, among all nations, can be thought to be deſigned. It may be obſerved, that the Goſpel, where-ever it comes, it comes as a gift; it is given: to have it only in the external miniſtration of it, is a favour; and more eſpecially to underſtand it ſpiritually; this is an unmerited gift; as is alſo ability to preach it: and it is likewiſe a national mercy where-ever it comes; for tho' it comes in power only to a few, in a nation, yet it is, more or leſs, a bleſſing to the whole: nor is it eaſy to ſay what temporal advantages a nation enjoys thro the miniſtration of the Goſpel in it: and where it is given, and comes in power, it brings forth fruit, as it did in all the world of the Gentiles; even the fruits of grace, and righteouſneſs, and every good work; all which come from Chriſt, under the influence of his Spirit; and by the word and ordinances, as means, and highly become the Goſpel, and the profeſſors of it; and for want of which it is removed ſometimes from one nation to another: for this cauſe it was taken from the Jews, and given to the Gentiles. One of the Jewiſh commentators [d] on theſe words, in Jer. xiii. 17. my ſoul ſhall weep in ſecret places for your pride, has this note; "becauſe of your grandeur, which ſhall ceaſe; becauſe of the excellency of the kingdom of heaven, שתנתן לפסילים, which ſhall be given to the profane;" i. e. the nations of the world.

---

[c] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 114. 1. Vid. En Iſrael, fol. 64. 3. & Juchaſin, fol. 80. 2. & 81. 1.

Ver. 44. And whoſoever ſhall fall on this ſtone, &c.] This is not to be underſtood of believing in Chriſt, or of a ſoul's caſting itſelf on Chriſt, the foundation-ſtone; relying on him, and building all its hopes of happineſs and ſalvation on him; which is attended with contrition and brokenneſs of heart, or repentance unto life, which needed not to be repented of: nor of a believer's offending Chriſt by evil works, whereby his conſcience is wounded, his ſoul is grieved, and his faith ſhaken; and tho' he is hereby in great danger, he ſhall not be utterly deſtroyed, but being recovered by repentance, ſhall be preſerved unto ſalvation; but of ſuch to whom Chriſt is a ſtone of ſtumbling, and a rock of offence: for as he is the foundation and corner-ſtone to ſome, and is ſet for the riſing of them, and to whom he is precious; ſo he is a ſtone ſet for the fall of others, and at which they ſtumble and fall, and fall upon it: and ſuch are they who are offended at Chriſt's ſtate of humiliation on earth; at the manner of his birth, the meanneſs of his parentage, and education; the deſpicable figure he made in his perſon, diſciples, and audience; and at his ſufferings and death: and theſe ſhall be broken: as a man that ſtumbles at a ſtone, and falls upon it, breaks his head, or his bones, or, at leaſt, bruiſes himſelf, does not hurt the ſtone, but the ſtone hurts him; ſo all ſuch as are offended at Chriſt, injure their own ſouls, being filled with prejudices againſt him, and contempt and diſbelief of him, which, if grace prevents not, will iſſue in their everlaſting deſtruction: but whilſt there is life, the means of grace continue, the kingdom of God is not taken away; there is hope that ſuch may be recovered from their impenitence and unbelief: but on whomſoever it ſhall fall, it will grind him to powder. Juſt as if a mill-ſtone, or any ſtone of ſuch-like weight and bulk, was to fall upon an earthen veſſel; or, as the ſtone cut out of the mountain without hands, by which the Meſſiah, and his kingdom, are deſigned, brake in pieces the image in Nebuchadnezzar's dream, ſo that it became like the chaff of the ſummer threſhing-floor. As the former part of this verſe expreſſes the ſin of unbelievers, and the danger they are expoſed unto by it, this ſets forth their puniſhment; antl has reſpect both to the vengeance of Chriſt, on the Jewiſh nation, at their deſtruction, which would fall heavy from him in his ſtate of exaltation, for their evil treatment of him in his ſtate of humiliation; and to his ſevere wrath, which will be executed at the day of judgment on all unbelievers, impenitent, Chriſtleſs ſinners, who have both offended him, and been offended at him; when their deſtruction will be inevitable, their ſalvation irretrievable, and their ſouls irrecoverably loſt, and ruin'd. Some have thought, that there is an alluſion in theſe words to the manner of ſtoning among the Jews, which was this [e]: "the place of ſtoning was two mens heighths; one of the witneſſes ſtruck him on his loins, to throw him down from thence, to the ground: if he died, it was well; if not, they took a ſtone, which lay there, and was as much as two men could carry, and caſt it, with all their might, upon his breaſt: if he died, it was well; if not, he was ſtoned by all Iſrael." Maimonides obſerves [f], that "ſtoning, or throwing down from the high place, was, that he might fall upon the ſtone, or that the ſtone might fall upon him; and which of them either it was, the pain was the ſame."

Ver. 45. And when the chief-prieſts and Phariſees, &c.] Which latter, tho' not before mentioned, were many of them of the grand Sanhedrim, as well as the chief-prieſts, Scribes, and elders: had heard his parables; that of the two ſons being ſent into the vineyard, and that of the letting out the vineyard to huſbandmen, they perceived that he ſpake of them: they plainly ſaw that they were deſigned by the ſon, that promiſed to go into the vineyard, but did not; only talked of works, but did not do them: and that they were the huſbandmen that acted the ungrateful part to the houſholder, and the cruel one to his ſervants, and would to his ſon. Their own conſciences told them they were the men. They knew that the whole was levelled againſt them, and deſigned for them, and exactly hit their caſe.

Ver. 46. But when they ſought to lay hands on him, &c.] Not that they attempted by any outward action to apprehend him, and carry him off, or by any immediate act of violence to take away his life; but they ſecretly wiſhed, and earneſtly deſired to do it: they were ſo irritated and provoked, that they could ſcarcely keep their hands off of him, and could have been glad of an opportunity of ſatiating their revenge upon him; and whereby they would but have fulfilled what he in this parable had prophetically ſaid of them: and yet ſo hardened were they, though they underſtood his meaning, they were not deterr'd thereby, but on another account: they feared the multitude; which were now about Chriſt, leſt there ſhould be a tumult, and they ſhould take the part of Chriſt againſt them, to which they ſeemed inclined; when their lives, had they attempted any thing of this nature, would have been in a great deal of danger: becauſe they took him for a prophet; by the doctrines which he taught, by the boldneſs and freedom of ſpeech he uſed, and by the miracles he wrought: wherefore, tho' they might not all of them believe that he was the Meſſiah, or that prophet Moſes ſpoke of; yet ſince it was exceeding manifeſt, that he was a teacher ſent of God, and endowed with very wonderful gifts; and from whom many of them had received ſingular benefits, if not for their ſouls, yet for their bodies; being healed by him of their lameneſs, or blindneſs, or other diſeaſes; therefore would not ſuffer him to be abuſed, and ill-treated by them: ſo that, as Mark ſays, they left him, and went their way; to conſult together what was proper to be done, and wait for a better opportunity to ſeize him.

---

[d] Jarchi in Jer. xiii. 17.

[e] Miſn. Sanhedrin, c. 6. §. 4. T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 45. 1, 2. Maimon. Hilch. Sanhedrin, c. 15. §. 1. Moſes Kotſenſis Mitzvot Tora pr. Affirm. 99.

[f] In Miſn. Sanhedrin, c. 6. §. 4.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXII.

Ver. 1. AND Jeſus anſwered and ſpake unto them again, &c.] Not to the multitude only, but to the chief-prieſts, elders, Scribes, and Phariſees: for tho' Mark ſeems to intimate, that upon the delivery of the laſt parable of the vineyard, they left him, and went their way; yet ſince he does not relate the following parable, they might not leave him until they had heard that, which is ſpoken with much the ſame deſign as the former, and might increaſe their reſentment the more: or if the chief-prieſts and elders did go away, the Phariſees remained behind, as is clear from ver. 15. to whom he ſpake by parables, ſimilitudes, and compariſons, taken from earthly things, and againſt whom he directed the following one; and ſaid, as hereafter related.

Ver. 2. The kingdom of heaven is like unto a certain king, &c.] The Goſpel diſpenſation which had now taken place, the methods of divine grace in it, and the behaviour of men under it, may be fitly illuſtrated by the following ſimile, or parable; the deſign of which is to expreſs the great love of God the father, who is repreſented by this certain king, in eſpouſing any of the children of men to his own ſon: as, that he a king, who is the king of kings, and Lord of Lords, ſhould concern himſelf in this manner; and eſpecially, that he ſhould eſpouſe ſuch mean and unworthy creatures to his own, his only, and beloved ſon, his equal, and his heir: alſo, the view of it is to ſet forth the plenteous proviſions of grace made under the Goſpel diſpenſation in the word and ordinances; the great neglect and contempt of theſe by the Jews, who were externally called unto them; the wrath of God upon them for their abuſe of them, and ill uſage of his ſervants; the calling of the vileſt among them, or of the Gentiles, and how far perſons may go in a profeſſion of religion without the wedding-garment, and at laſt be loſt: which made a marriage for his ſon: which may be underſtood either of contracting and bringing him into a marriage-relation, or of making a marriage-feaſt on that account: in the former ſenſe, the perſons concerned are the father, the bridegroom, and the bride: the parties contracted are the ſon of God and ſinful creatures. The bridegroom is no other than the only-begotten of God the father, his only ſon and heir, the maker and governor of the univerſe, who has all the perfections of the deity, and fulneſs of the Godhead in him; and, as mediator, has all accompliſhments and excellencies: he has all the riches of grace and glory; all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge; all lovelineſs, beauty, and amiableneſs in his perſon, and every thing to recommend him as the chiefeſt among ten thouſand: on the other hand, the bride is the church, which conſiſts of a ſett of perſons choſen by God, in Chriſt, before the foundation of the world; who were conſidered as ſinleſs creatures, and viewed as ſuch when firſt betrothed to Chriſt in the everlaſting covenant; but for the further demonſtration of his love to them, were ſuffered to fall in Adam, with the reſt of mankind, and to be ſcattered abroad; when they loſt the image of God, came ſhort of his glory, paſs'd under a ſentence of condemnation, became liable to the curſe of the law, and eternal death; were defiled and polluted in their nature, and in their eſtate became bankrupts and beggars; and yet this hindred not the conſummation of the marriage between Chriſt and them. The perſon that contracted this relation between them, is the father of Chriſt, who choſe them for him to be his ſpouſe and bride; brought and preſented them to him, as he did Eve to Adam before the fall; and gave them to him, and made them one body and fleſh with him, in the everlaſting covenant; and draws them, and brings them to him by his powerful grace, in effectual vocation; there was a ſecret betrothing of all theſe perſons to him in eternity, at his own requeſt, and the full conſent of his father, who had the diſpoſal of them; there is an open eſpouſal of them, as particular perſons, at converſion; and there will be a more publick and general conſummate marriage of them, at the laſt day, when they are all called by grace, and brought home: moreover, this may be underſtood of the marriage-feaſt which the father makes on this extraordinary account. So the Syriac verſion renders the word by משתותא, a feaſt; and in this ſenſe is it uſed by the Septuagint in Gen. xxix. 22. by which is meant, not the latter day glory, or marriage-feaſt of the lamb, to which only ſaints will be invited, and partake of; nor the ultimate glory, when all the elect ſhall go with Chriſt into the marriage-chamber, and ſpend an eternity in endleſs joys and unſpeakable felicity with him; nor the ſpiritual bleſſings of grace enjoyed by believers now; but the external miniſtry of the word and ordinances, which are a feaſt of fat things, a rich entertainment, the particulars of which are after given; which many are invited to, who never partake thereof, and others do, and yet deſtitute of the grace of God; for both good and bad were gueſts at this feaſt. The alluſion is to the cuſtom of the Jews, and of other nations, in making feaſts and grand entertainments at ſuch times. The Jews uſed to make feaſts both at eſpouſals, and at marriage: hence we [g] read of סעודת אירוסין, a feaſt of eſpouſals, and of סעודת נישואין, a marriage-feaſt: the reference here is to the latter; and which uſed to be made at the charge of the father; for ſo runs one of their canons [h]: "a father marries his ſon, ועשה לו משתה, and " makes a feaſt for him, and the expence is the fa-" ther's, &c."

Ver. 3. And ſent forth his ſervants, &c.] The miniſters of the Goſpel, who are the ſervants of the moſt high God, of his chuſing and ordaining, of his calling and ſending, and of his qualifying and employing, and who voluntarily and chearfully ſerve him; and may intend John the Baptiſt, and the twelve apoſtles of Chriſt, who were ſent to call them that were bidden to the wedding; הקרואים, thoſe that were called, as in 1 Sam. ix. 13, 22. by whom are meant the Jews, who were the bidden, or called ones; called of God, and therefore ſtiled Iſrael my called, Iſ. xlviii. 12. and by the Targum interpreted מזמני, my bidden. They were called by the name of God, and called the people of God, and the children of God, and were the children of the kingdom; and were called to many valuable and external privileges; and had previous notice of the Goſpel diſpenſation, by the prophecies concerning Chriſt, and the bleſſings of his grace under the former diſpenſation; and by the ordinances and ſacrifices of it, which in a very ſignificant manner ſet him forth to that people; and how were called to embrace him, to receive his doctrines, and ſubmit to his ordinances, by the miniſtry of John the Baptiſt, and the diſciples of Chriſt. It ſeems, it was ſometimes cuſtomary to give two invitations to a feaſt, or to ſend a ſecond time to the perſons bidden to the feaſt [1]; to which the alluſion is here; and they would not come: which ſhews the inſolence and ingratitude of men, their natural averſion to the Goſpel, and the ordinances of it; the depravity of the will of man, with reſpect to things ſpiritual and evangelical; the inſufficiency of outward means, to work with effect, upon the minds of men; and the neceſſity there is of efficacious and unfruſtrable grace to bring men to believe in Chriſt, cordially to receive his truths, and be ſubject to his commands. There is a two-fold call by the miniſtry of the word; the one is internal, and that is, when the word comes not in word only, but in power; is the power of God unto ſalvation, and the ſavour of life unto life; for by the Goſpel are the elect of God called to the obtaining of the glory of Chriſt, 2 Theſſ. ii. 14. This call is of grace; it ſprings from the free grace and favour of God, and it is effected by the mighty power of his grace; and it is to ſpecial bleſſings of grace; it is a fruit of God's everlaſting love, and an evidence of it; and is according to the eternal purpoſe of God, which is never fruſtrated: it is a call to the enjoyment of ſpiritual bleſſings, as peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, and everlaſting happineſs; by it men are called to light and liberty, to the grace of Chriſt, and communion with him; to all the privileges of God's houſe here, and eternal glory hereafter; to which he that calls them, gives them a right and meetneſs, and infallibly brings them to it: and therefore it is ſtiled an heavenly calling, and the high calling of God in Chriſt; for this call is ever effectual, and the ends of it are always anſwered; it is unchangeable, irreverſible, and never repented of. But beſides this, there is a bare external call to the ſons of men, through the preaching of the word; which is not to make their peace with God, a thing impoſſible to be done by them, and which is contrary to the Goſpel, and reflects diſhonour on Chriſt, the peace-maker; nor to get an intereſt in him, which, wherever poſſeſſed, is given, and not gotten; nor to regenerate themſelves; this is the work of the Spirit of God, and in which men are as paſſive, as the infant in its natural generation, conception, and birth; nor to the exerciſe of evangelical grace, as faith, love, &c. which are not in them, and no man can exerciſe that which he has not, nor ſhould he be called to it; nor to any ſpiritual vital act, ſince men are dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, and can't put forth any: but this call in the word, is to the natural duties of religion, as to hear, read, and pray; to attend on the word, to wait at wiſdom's gates, and watch at the poſts of her door, and ſo lie in the way of being effectually called by the grace of God; but this call may be where election does not go before, and where ſanctification does not follow, and where there may be no ſalvation, Matt. xx. 16. and is often ſlighted, neglected, and of no effect, which is the caſe here.

---

[g] T. Bab. Yebamot, fol. 43. 1, 2.

[h] Maimon. Hilch. Nechalot, c. 9. §. 13. Vid. Miſn. Sheviith, c. 7. §. 4. & Juchaſin, fol. 88. 1.

Ver. 4. Again he ſent forth other ſervants, &c.] The ſeventy diſciples, and other miniſters of the Goſpel, as Barnabas and Saul, and others that were joined to, and were helpers of the apoſtles, who were ſent, and preached to the Jews, any time before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem: ſaying, tell them which are bidden; for theſe preachers of the word were firſt ſent to the Jews, and preached unto them, until they by their carriage and conduct, ſhewed themſelves to be unworthy of the bleſſing. Theſe men had notice of the Goſpel-feaſt by the prophets, and were invited to it, by the forerunner of of Chriſt, by him, and his diſciples, and again by them, and others; which ſtrongly expreſſes the goodneſs, grace, and condeſcenſion of God to theſe people, and aggravates their ſtupidity, ingratitude, and wickedneſs: behold, I have prepared my dinner. The miniſtry of the word and ordinances under the Goſpel diſpenſation, is ſignified by a dinner; of God's preparing and providing; which is a full meal at noon, and in it is plenty of food, and of that which is wholeſome to the ſouls of men, ſweet and ſavoury to a ſpiritual taſte, and very nouriſhing and ſatiſfying; and this dinner is a feaſt, a rich banquet, a grand entertainment; in which are a variety of proviſions, ſuited to all ſorts of perſons, and plenty of the richeſt dainties, attended with the largeſt expreſſions of joy; and this feaſt is a marriage one, and that not for an ordinary perſon, but for the king's ſon, the ſon of the king of kings; it is large, grand, and noble, rich and coſtly, and yet all free to the gueſts; it is kept in the king's palace, the banqueting houſe, the church, is common to all, and of long continuance, it will laſt unto the end of the world. What privileges the patriarchs and prophets, and the people of the Jews enjoyed, in the morning of the world, before the coming of Chriſt, who made the bright and full day of the Goſpel, were but as a breakfaſt, a ſhort meal; the means of grace were not ſo rich and plentiful, and their knowledge of ſpiritual things not ſo large; they had but as it were, a taſte of what is plentifully beſtowed under the Goſpel diſpenſation, and therefore that is called a dinner; grace and truth in all their fulneſs, coming by Jeſus, by whom God has delivered at once his whole mind and will; whereas, before it was delivered by piece-meals, at ſundry times and divers manners; and this is diſtinguiſhable from the ſupper of the Lamb, in the evening of the world, in the latter day, when the Jews will be converted, and will not act the part they are repreſented to do in the parable; and the fulneſs of the Gentiles will be brought in, and the Goſpel will have a general ſpread all over the world. The dinner is the ſame with the feaſt of fat things, which God is ſaid to make for all people, Gentiles as well as Jews, in his holy mountain the church, Iſa. xxv. 6. and the table which wiſdom has furniſhed, Prov. ix. 2. with all ſorts of ſuitable food, proper to perſons of every age: here's milk for babes, even the ſincere milk of the word, that their ſouls may grow thereby, who are new born babes, and have taſted of the grace of God; namely, the plainer and more eaſy truths of the Goſpel, to be taken in, underſtood, fed upon, and digeſted; and meat for ſtrong men, the more ſublime doctrines of it, which ſuch as are ſtrong in faith, receive, reliſh, and live upon, and are greatly refreſhed and edified with: here's the wine of God's everlaſting love ſet forth, in the election, redemption, juſtification, pardon, adoption, regeneration, and ſalvation of his people; and fruits ſerved up both new and old, for their comfort, delight, and pleaſure; in the ordinances of the Goſpel, are the fleſh and blood of Chriſt, the Lamb of God, and fatted calf, whoſe fleſh is meat indeed, and whoſe blood is drink indeed; here's every thing for delight and nouriſhment, for faith to feed and live upon; and therefore may well be called a dinner, and what is worthy of him, who is the maker of it, and exceedingly well ſuited to the perſons who are to partake of it. My oxen and my fatlings are killed; in alluſion to feaſts and large entertainments, when oxen and fatted calves, and the beſt of the flock were killed and dreſſed; or to the ſacrifices of oxen and other creatures, under the law, as typical of the ſacrifice of Chriſt; and may here repreſent Chriſt as crucified and ſlain, held forth in the miniſtry of the word and ordinances; who as ſuch, is ſuitable food for believers, is ſpiritual, ſolid, and ſubſtantial, and greatly to be deſired; is nouriſhing and ſtrengthening, comforting and quickening, delightful and ſatisfying: and all things are ready; for upon the crucifixion and death of Chriſt, and after the renewed commiſſion of Chriſt to his diſciples, to preach the Goſpel, beginning at Jeruſalem, it might be juſtly repreſented in the miniſtry of the word, that all things were now ready. Redemption was obtained by Chriſt; an everlaſting righteouſneſs was wrought out and brought in; pardon of ſin was procured; peace and reconciliation were made; the ſacrifice of Chriſt was offered up, and full ſatisfaction given to law and juſtice; the covenant of grace, with all the bleſſings and promiſes of it, were ratified and confirmed; and all were ready in Chriſt's hands to diſtribute, to as many as came to him; in whom are life and ſalvation, and every thing neceſſary for peace and comfort here, and eternal happineſs hereafter. This ſhows the compleatneſs and perfection of the Goſpel diſpenſation, this being that better thing, which God has provided for his people in the laſt times, that former ſaints might not be perfect without them, Heb. xi. 40. The law made nothing perfect; there was nothing got ready by that; the works, ſacrifices, rites, and ceremonies of it, could not juſtify mens perſons, nor ſanctify their hearts, nor purge the conſciences of the worſhippers, nor take away ſin, nor pacify God, or give ſatisfaction to his juſtice, or procure peace, pardon and ſalvation; but now all theſe things are declared to be ready in the Goſpel: but this is not owing to man, it is all of God; it is of his providing and preparing; and he is a rock, and his work is perfect; and nothing can be brought by the creature to be added to it, nor does it need it; there's every thing exhibited in the Goſpel that a poor ſinner ſtands in need of, or can deſire, even that can make him comfortable here, and happy hereafter. Come unto the marriage; the marriage-feaſt; come into the Goſpel diſpenſation, attend the word and ordinances: the invitation is preſſing, the arguments are ſtrong and moving, but the perſons invited were averſe, ſelf-willed, ſtubborn, obſtinate, and inflexible.

---

[1] Vid. Joſeph. apud Grotium in loc.

Ver. 5. But they made light of it, &c.] The invitation. They neglected the miniſtry of the Goſpel; they did not care for it, nor ſhewed any regard to it: and this is the caſe, when either it is not attended on, though there is an opportunity, yet having no heart to embrace it, and no value for it, neglect attendance on it; and which often ariſes from an over-love of the world: or when it is attended on, but in a very negligent and careleſs manner; when men pull away the ſhoulder, or ſtop their ears; when they don't mind what they hear, let it ſlip and forget it; when they are unconcerned for it, and their thoughts are employed about other things: or when the Goſpel and the ordinances of it, are looked upon as things of no importance; not knowing the real worth and value of them; ſeeing no wiſdom in them, having never taſted the ſweetneſs, or felt the power of them, or ſeen the need of the things revealed by them: as alſo when there is an averſion to the Goſpel, a loathing of it, as a novel, upſtart doctrine, received but by a few, and theſe the meaneſt and moſt illiterate; as contrary to reaſon, and tending to licentiouſneſs; and eſpecially, when it is contradicted and blaſphemed, as it was by the Jews, and its miniſters deſpiſed: ſome men make light of it, becauſe of the loſs of time from worldly employments; becauſe of the charge attending it; becauſe it teaches them to deny ungodlineſs and worldly luſts; and becauſe they prefer their bodies to their ſouls, and things temporal, to things eternal. The aggravations of their ſin, in ſlighting and neglecting the Goſpel and Goſpel ordinances are, that this is a grand entertainment, a very expenſive proviſion, as well as a very plentiful one; that it was a wedding-dinner, a feaſt of love, they were invited to; that it was prepared by ſo great a perſon as a king, and who is the king of kings, and the only potentate; who provided this dinner of his own ſovereign good-will and pleaſure, in the everlaſting council and covenant of grace and peace; for the things of which it conſiſts, there was a ſcheme ſo early contrived to bring them about; and that this was made on the account of the marriage of his Son, the Meſſiah, who had been ſo often ſpoken of by the prophets of the Old Teſtament, theſe men profeſſed a value for; one ſo long expected by their forefathers, and is the meſſenger of the covenant, whoſe coming they themſelves deſired and ſought for; and that they ſhould be invited to it again and again, and one ſett of ſervants ſent after another, and the moſt ſtriking and moving arguments made uſe of; and yet they ſlighted and made light of all this, and were careleſs and unconcerned; to which may be added, that the things they were invited to, were ſuch as concerned their immortal ſouls, and the ſpiritual and eternal welfare of them; in ſhort, it was no other than the great ſalvation, wrought out by the great God, and our Saviour, for great ſinners, at the expence of his blood and life, which they neglected; ſee Heb. ii. 3. And went their ways, one to his farm, another to his merchandize: they all turned their backs on the Goſpel, and the miniſtration of it, and purſued their own worldly inclinations, ways, and methods of life: thoſe that were brought up in a rural way, lived a country life, and were concerned in meaner employments, went every one to their village, as the Vulgate Latin, and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel read it, and to their farms, there to manage their cattle, and till their ground; and others, that lived in larger towns and cities, and were concerned in greater buſineſs of life, betook themſelves to trade at home, or traffick abroad; placing their happineſs in the affluence of this life, which they preferred to the word and ordinances of Chriſt. Such a diviſion of worldly employment is made by the Jews [k]; "the way of that hoſt is like "to a king, who makes a grand entertainment and "ſays to the children of his palace, all the reſt of "the days ye ſhall be every one in his houſe; this "ſhall do his buſineſs, ודא אזיל בסחרתיה, and this "ſhall go about his merchandize, ודא אזיל בחקליה, "and this ſhall go to his field, except on my day."

Ver. 6. And the remnant took his ſervants, &c.] They that went to their ſeveral worldly callings and occupations of life, troubled themſelves no further about the Meſſiah, his doctrines and ordinances; but others of them were more ſpiteful and injurious: they not only ſlighted the meſſage, and took no notice of the invitation, but alſo abuſed the meſſengers; ſome of the ſervants they laid hold upon, and put them in the common priſon, and detained them there a while; as they did the apoſtles quickly after our Lord's aſcenſion, particularly Peter and John: and entreated them ſpitefully; gave them very hard words, and reproachful language; menacing and threatening them what they would do to them, if they did not forbear preaching in the name of Jeſus; though they were not intimidated hereby, but rejoiced that they were counted worthy to ſuffer ſhame on ſuch an account; and even their malice and wickedneſs proceeded ſo far, as to take away the lives of ſome of them: and ſlew them; thus they ſtoned Stephen to death, the proto-martyr for Chriſt; and killed James, the brother of John, with the ſword; which laſt, though he was put to death by Herod, yet with the conſent and good liking of the Jews.

---

[k] Zohar in Lev. fol. 40. 2.

Ver. 7. But when the king heard thereof, &c.] Of this male-treatment, and barbarous uſage of his ſervants, their cries coming up into his ears, and their blood calling for vengeance at his hands; and he full well knowing what they did unto them, and upon what account, being the omniſcient God; and obſerving their malignity and wickedneſs, he was wroth; who, though ſlow to anger, bears much, and ſuffers long; yet was now highly incenſed and provoked, and ſtirred up all his wrath, determining to take vengeance on ſuch a vile generation of men. Chriſt, when he was here on earth, was ſometimes provoked by the Jews, through their unbelief, their obſtinacy, and the hardneſs of their hearts, and was angry with them, being grieved for them, Mark iii. 5. but then was not the proper time to execute his wrath; he then appeared as the Lamb of God, to take away the ſin of the world; he came to ſave men, and not to deſtroy their lives, nor to condemn the world: when his martyr Stephen was ſuffering, he was ſeen by him ſtanding at the right-hand of God, being riſen from his ſeat, as one incenſed at the uſage his ſervant met with from the wicked Jews; but the time of his vengeance was not yet come, more patience and forbearance were to be exerciſed towards them: but now his kingdom came with power, and he appears as the Lion of the tribe of Judah; and pours out his wrath to the uttermoſt upon them, deſtroys their city and temple, and puts an end to their civil and eccleſiaſtical ſtate, and cuts them off from being a nation; and now it was, that he ordered theſe his enemies, who would not have him to rule over them, brought before him, and ſlain in his preſence; and in all this, he ſhewed his kingly power and authority; and by removing the ſceptre from them, and all ſhew of dominion and government, made it fully appear that he, the Meſſiah, was come. Well had it been for them, had they taken the advice of the Pſalmiſt, Kiſs the ſon, the Son of God, believe in him as ſuch, embrace him as the Meſſiah, yield ſubjection and obedience to his word and ordinances, leſt he be angry, and ye periſh from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little, Pſal. ii. 12. But now his wrath was kindled very much, and was poured out like fire, and there was no ſtanding before it; the day of the Lord burned like an oven, and deſtroyed the Jews root and branch: the manner and means, in and by which this utter ruin was brought about, are as follow: and he ſent forth his armies; not the angels, who are the armies and hoſts of heaven; nor deſolating judgments only, as peſtilence and famine, though the latter was ſeverely felt by the Jews, but chiefly the Roman armies are here meant; called his, becauſe they came by the Lord's appointment and permiſſion; and were uſed by him, for the deſtruction of theſe people: and deſtroyed thoſe murtherers; of Chriſt and his apoſtles, as their fathers had been of the prophets before them: and burnt up their city; the city of Jeruſalem, the metropolis of the Jews, and where the principal of theſe murtherers dwelt; and which was burnt and deſtroyed by the Roman army, under Titus Veſpaſian. And a worſe puniſhment than this, even the vengeance of eternal fire, may all the neglecters of the Goſpel, and perſecutors of the miniſters of it expect, from him, whoſe vengeance is, and who will repay it; for if judgment began at the houſe of God, the people of the Jews who were ſo called, what will be the end of them that obey not the Goſpel of Chriſt? how ſore a puniſhment ſhall they be thought worthy of, who trample under foot the Son of God, count his blood a common thing, and do deſpite to the Spirit of grace? if the law, when tranſgreſſed, demanded a juſt recompence of reward, or inflicted deſerved puniſhment, how ſhall the neglecters of the great ſalvation revealed in the Goſpel eſcape?

Ver. 8. Then ſaith he to his ſervants, &c.] That were preſerved from their rage and malice, and outlived their implacable enemies, and ſaw their utter ruin and deſtruction: the wedding is ready; meaning not the marriage-contract, which was ſecretly performed in eternity; or the calling of God's elect among the Jews, and their open eſpouſal to Chriſt, which for the preſent was now over; but the marriage-feaſt, or the Goſpel diſpenſation, which was uſhered in, and the miniſtry of it, to which nothing was wanting; all the promiſes, prophecies, types, and ſhadows, of the former diſpenſation, were now accompliſhed; the Lamb of God was ſlain, and all things to be done by him were now finiſhed; the miniſters of the Goſpel, the apoſtles, were called, their commiſſion enlarged, and they qualified with a greater meaſure of the Spirit, and were ſent to preach both to Jews and Gentiles: but they which were bidden were not worthy; that is, the Jews, who had notice of this diſpenſation by the prophets, were told by John the Baptiſt, that it was at hand; were once, and again, externally called unto it by the miniſtry of the apoſtles; but they were not only unworthy in themſelves, as all men are, of ſuch a bleſſing and privilege, but they behaved towards it in a very unworthy manner; they were ſo far from attending on it in a diligent and peaceable way, as becomes all ſuch perſons that are bleſſed with the external miniſtry of it; who, when they do ſo, may be ſaid to behave worthily, and in ſome ſenſe, to be worthy of ſuch a privilege being continued with them; ſee Matt. x. 13. compared with Luke x. 6. that they contradicted and blaſphemed it, and by their own outragious carriage, ſhewed plainly that they were unworthy of it; and were ſo judged by Chriſt and his apoſtles, who ordered them to turn from them, and go to the Gentiles, and which may be intended in the following words.

Ver. 9. Go ye therefore into the high-ways, &c.] Either of the city, which were open and publick, and where much people were paſſing to and fro; or of the fields, the high-roads, where many paſſengers were travelling; and may deſign the Gentile world, and Gentile ſinners, who, in reſpect of the Jews, were far off; were walking in their own ways, and in the high-road to deſtruction; and may denote their being the vileſt of ſinners, and as having nothing to recommend them to the divine favour, and to ſuch privileges as this entertainment expreſſes: and as many as ye ſhall find, bid to the marriage; to the marriage-feaſt, not the marriage-ſupper, but the dinner, ver. 4. their orders were to go into all the world, and preach the Goſpel to every creature, Jew or Gentile, high or low, rich or poor, outwardly righteous, or openly profane, greater or leſſer ſinners, and exhort them to attend the Goſpel miniſtry, and ordinances.

Ver. 10. So theſe ſervants went out into the highways, &c.] Turned from the Jews, and went among the Gentiles, preaching the Goſpel to them; particularly the apoſtle Paul, with Barnabas, and others: and gathered together all, as many as they found, both good and bad: the Perſic verſion reads it, known or unknown. The Goſpel miniſtry is the means of gathering ſouls to Chriſt, and to attend his ordinances, and into his churches; and of theſe that are gathered by it into churches, and to an attendance on outward ordinances, ſome are good and ſome bad, as the fiſhes gathered in the net of the Goſpel are ſaid to be, in ch. xiii. 47, 48. which may either expreſs the character of the Gentiles before converſion, ſome of them being outwardly good in their civil and moral character; cloſely adhering to the law and light of nature, doing the things of it, and others notoriouſly wicked; or rather, how they proved when gathered in, ſome being real believers, godly perſons, whoſe converſations were as became the Goſpel of Chriſt; others hypocrites, empty profeſſors, having a form of godlineſs, and nothing of the power of it; deſtitute of grace in their hearts, and of holineſs in their lives; and the whole ſets forth the diligence of the ſervants, in executing their maſter's orders, with ſo much readineſs and exactneſs: and the wedding was furniſhed with gueſts; that is, the wedding-chamber, or the place where the wedding was kept, and the marriage-dinner was prepared, and eat; ſo the Syriac renders it, בית משתותא, the houſe of the feaſt, or where the feaſt was kept; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion: the Perſic verſion reads it, the houſe of the nuptial-feaſt; which deſigns the houſe and church of God, into which large numbers of the Gentiles were brought, by the miniſtry of the apoſtles; ſo that it was filled with perſons that made a profeſſion of Chriſt and his Goſpel.

Ver. 11. And when the king came in to ſee the gueſts, &c.] Profeſſors of religion, members of churches, whom God takes particular notice of; he is an omniſcient being, and his eyes are upon all men and their actions, and eſpecially on ſuch as are called by his name: he takes notice how they behave in the exerciſe of grace, and diſcharge of duty, and diſtinguiſhes hypocrites from real believers; the latter of which he has a ſpecial affection for, makes rich and large proviſions for them, and protects and defends them: he knows them that are his, and gives them marks of reſpect; and he ſpies out ſuch as are not, and will in his own time diſcover them, to their utter confuſion and ruin. There are certain times and ſeaſons, when God may be ſaid to come in to ſee his gueſts; as ſometimes in a way of gracious viſits to his dear children, when he bids them welcome to the entertainment of his houſe, and invites them to eat and drink abundantly; and ſometimes in a way of providence, againſt formal profeſſors and hypocrites; and at the laſt judgment, when he'll ſeparate the ſheep from the goats, and diſcern between the righteous and the wicked: he ſaw there a man which had not on a wedding garment; by which is meant, not good works, or a holy life and converſation, nor any particular grace of the Spirit, as faith, or charity, or humility, or repentance, or any other; nor the whole work of ſanctification, nor the Holy Ghoſt, but the righteouſneſs of Chriſt: for though good works are the outward converſation garments of believers, and theſe greatly become them and adorn the doctrine of Chriſt, yet they are imperfect, and have their ſpots, and need waſhing in the blood of Chriſt, and can't in themſelves recommend them to God; and though the Holy Spirit and his graces, his work of holineſs upon the heart, make the ſaints all glorious within, yet not theſe, but the garment of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, is their cloathing of wrought gold, and raiment of needle-work, in which they are brought into the king's preſence: this, like a garment, is without them, and put upon them; and which covers and protects them, and beautifies and adorns them; and which may be called a wedding-garment, becauſe it is that, in which the elect of God were betrothed to Chriſt; in which they are made ready and prepared for him, as a bride adorned for her huſband; and in which they will be introduced into his preſence, and be by him preſented, firſt to himſelf, and then to his Father, without ſpot, or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing. This man had not on this garment, this robe of righteouſneſs; it was not imputed to him; he had no knowledge of it; or if he had any, it was only a ſpeculative one; he had no true faith in it; he had never put on Chriſt, as the Lord his righteouſneſs; he had got into a church-ſtate without it, though there's no entrance into the kingdom of heaven but by it.

Ver. 12. And he ſaith unto him, friend, &c.] Either in an ironical way, or becauſe he profeſſed to be a friend of God and Chriſt: how cameſt thou in hither, not having a wedding garment? Which way didſt thou come in hither? ſince he did not come in by faith, in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; intimating, that he climbed up ſome other way, and was a thief and robber; or with what face, or how couldſt thou have the aſſurance to come in hither in ſuch a dreſs, having nothing but the filthy rags of thine own righteouſneſs? How couldſt thou expect to meet with acceptance with me, or to be ſuitable company for my people, not being arrayed with the garments of ſalvation, and robe of righteouſneſs, as they are? And he was ſpeechleſs; or muzzled; his mouth was ſtopped, he had nothing to ſay for himſelf: not but that there will be pleas made uſe of by hypocrites, and formal profeſſors, another day; who will plead either their preaching and propheſying in Chriſt's name; or their attendance on outward ordinances; or the works they have done, ordinary or extraordinary; but then theſe will all be ſuperſeded and ſilenced, their own conſciences will condemn them, their mouths will be ſtopped, and they'll have nothing to ſay in vindication of themſelves; their righteouſneſs won't anſwer for them in a time to come. The Jews have a tradition[1], that "Eſau the wicked, will veil himſelf with his "garment, and ſit among the righteous in paradiſe, "in the world to come; and the holy bleſſed God "will draw him, and bring him out from thence, "which is the ſenſe of thoſe words, Obad. v. 4. "Though thou exalt thyſelf as the eagle, and though "thou ſet thy neſt among the ſtars, thence will I bring "thee down, ſaith the Lord."

---

[1] T. Hieroſ. Nedarim, fol. 38. 1.

Ver. 13. Then ſaid the king to his ſervants, &c.] By whom are meant, either the miniſters of the Goſpel, and paſtors of churches, who by the order of Chriſt, and in the name of the churches, caſt out all ſuch, as appear by their bad principles and evil practices, to be without the grace of God, and righteouſneſs of Chriſt; or rather, the angels, who will bind up the tares in bundles, and burn them, and gather out of Chriſt's kingdom, all that offend and do iniquity; and ſever the wicked from the juſt, and uſe them in the manner here directed to: bind him hand and foot; as malefactors uſed to be, to denote the greatneſs of his crime, his unparalleled inſolence, and the unavoidableneſs of his puniſhment; ſuch methods being taken, that there could be no eſcaping it: and take him away; from hence, to priſon; a dreadful thing, to go out of a church of Chriſt to hell. This clauſe is not in the Vulgate Latin, nor in the Syriac and Arabic verſions, nor in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel, but is in all the ancient Greek copies: and caſt him into utter darkneſs, there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 12.

Ver. 14. For many are called, but few choſen.] See the note on Matt. xx. 16.

Ver. 15. Then went the Phariſees, &c.] After they had heard the parables of the two ſons being bid to go into the vineyard, of the vineyard let out to huſbandmen, and of the marriage-feaſt; for it is clear from hence, that theſe ſtaid and heard the laſt of theſe parables, in all which they ſaw themſelves deſigned; and though they were irritated and provoked to the laſt degree, they were obliged to hide their reſentments, nor durſt they uſe any violence for fear of the people; wherefore they retired to ſome convenient place, to the council-chamber, or to the palace of the high prieſt, or where the chief prieſts were gone, who ſeem to have departed ſome time before them: and took counſel; among themſelves, and of others, their ſuperiors; not how they ſhould behave more agreeably for the future, and eſcape due puniſhment and wrath to the uttermoſt, which the king of kings would juſtly inflict on them, very plainly ſignified in the above parables; but how they might intangle him in his talk, or take hold of his words, as in Luke; or catch him in his words, as in Mark: they conſulted to draw him into a converſation, on a dangerous and inſnaring ſubject; when they hoped a word might drop unwarily from him, which they might catch at, lay hold on, and improve to his diſadvantage; either with the common people, or the government, and eſpecially the latter; as is to be learned from Luke, who expreſsly ſays their end was, that ſo they might deliver him unto the power and authority of the governor; the Roman governor, Pontius Pilate, ſhould he ſay any thing againſt Cæſar, which they endeavoured to inſnare him into; by which means, they doubted not of ſetting the populace againſt him, and of ſcreening themſelves from their reſentments; and of gaining their main point, the delivery of him up into the hands of the civil government, who for treaſon and ſedition, would put him to death.

Ver. 16. And they ſent out unto him their diſciples, &c.] Who were trained up in the ſame way of thinking with themſelves, had imbibed the ſame tenets, and were ſtrenuous defenders of them; and no doubt they ſelected the moſt crafty and artful among them, and who were the beſt verſed in their principles and ſophiſtic method of arguing: theſe they the rather ſent, imagining they would not be known, as they themſelves were; and from their age and air of ſimplicity, might be taken for innocent perſons, who in great ſincerity, came to be inſtructed by him, with the Herodians: learned men are very much divided in their ſentiments, about theſe men; ſome think they were Gentiles under the government of Herod; but it is not likely, that the Phariſees would join themſelves with ſuch, whoſe company they carefully ſhunned; others, that they were Gentile proſelytes, as Herod was; but that on either of theſe accounts, they ſhould be called by his name, there ſeems to be no reaſon: others ſay, they were Greeks, whom Herod brought out of a deſert into his own country, and formed a ſect, which from him were called Herodians: this way went Druſius, in which he was followed by ſeveral learned men, until the miſtake was detected; who took it from a paſſage in the Hebrew Lexicon, called Baal Aruch, miſtaking the word, יונים, for Greeks, which ſignifies doves; the Jewiſh writer referring to a paſſage in the Miſna [m], which ſpeaks of, יוני הרדסיאות, Herodian doves; that is, tame ones, ſuch as were brought up in houſes: for that theſe are meant, is clear from the Miſnic and Talmudic writers, and their commentators [n]; and were ſo called, becauſe that Herod was the firſt that tamed wild doves, and brought up tame ones, in his own palace; and ſo Joſephus [o] ſays, that he had many towers ſtored with tame doves, which was a new thing in Judæa. Others, that they were Sadducees, which carries ſome appearance of truth in it; ſince what is ſtiled the leaven of the Sadducees, in Matt. xvi. 6. is called the leaven of Herod, in Mark viii. 15. And very probable it is, that Herod was a Sadducee, and that his courtiers, at leaſt many of them, were of the ſame ſect; but yet it is certain, that the Sadducees are ſpoken of, as diſtinct from theſe Herodians, in ver. 23. of this chapter. Others, that they were a ſett of men, that formed a new ſcheme of religion, conſiſting partly of Judaiſm, and partly of Gentiliſm, approved and eſpouſed by Herod, and therefore called by his name; and others, that they were ſuch as held, that Herod was the Meſſiah; but it is certain, that Herod did not think ſo himſelf, nor the people of the Jews in common; and whatever flatterers he might have in his life-time, it can hardly be thought, that this notion ſhould ſurvive his death, who was ſo odious to the Jewiſh nation: others think, that they were ſuch, who were not for paying tribute to Cæſar, but to Herod, and were encouraged and defended by him and his courtiers, as much as they could; ſince he and his family looked upon themſelves to be injured by the Romans, and ſecretly grudged that tribute ſhould be paid unto them: others, on the contrary, ſay, that theſe were ſuch, who pleaded that tribute ought to be paid to Cæſar, by whoſe means Herod enjoyed his government, and was ſupported in it; and were juſt the reverſe of the Phariſees, with whom they are here joined, in their attempts on Chriſt. The Syriac verſion renders the word by, דבית הרודס, thoſe of the houſe, or family of Herod, his courtiers and domeſticks: in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel, they are called, עבדי הורודוס, the ſervants of Herod; and certain it is, that Herod was at Jeruſalem at this time, Luke xxiii. 7. We read [p] of Menahem, who was one while an aſſociate of Hillell, who with eighty more clad in gold, went

---

[m] Cholin, c. 12. §. 1.

[n] T. Bab. Cholin, fol. 139. 2. & Betza, fol. 24. 1. & 25. 1. Miſn. Sabbat. c. 24. 3. & Cholin, c. 12. § 1. & Maimon. & Bartenora in ib.

[o] De Bello Jud. l. 6. c. 13.

[p] Juchaſin, fol. 19. 1.

לעבודת המלך, into the ſervice of the king, that is, Herod, and hence might be called Herodians. Wherefore theſe ſeem rather to be the perſons deſigned, whom the Phariſees choſe to ſend with their diſciples, though they were of Herod's party, and were on the other ſide of the queſtion from them; being for giving tribute to Cæſar, by whom their maſter held his government; that ſhould Chriſt be enſnared by them, as they hoped he would, into any ſeditious or treaſonable expreſſions againſt Cæſar, theſe might either accuſe him to Herod, or immediately ſeize him, and have him before the Roman governor. Luke obſerves, that theſe men, the diſciples of the Phariſees and the Herodians, were ſent forth as ſpies, which ſhould feign themſelves juſt men; men of religion and holineſs, and who were upright and ſincere in their queſtion, and who had ſtrong inclinations to become his diſciples: the Jews themſelves own, that they ſent ſuch perſons to Jeſus, whom they mention by name, in ſuch a diſguiſed manner to deceive him: their words are theſe[q]; “ They “ (the Sanhedrim) ſent unto him Ananiah and Abaziah, honourable men of the leſſer Sanhedrim, “ and when they came before him, they bowed “ down to him——and he thought that they be- “ lieved in him, and he received them very courte- “ ouſly.” Saying, maſter; as if they were his diſciples, or at leaſt were very willing to be ſo: however, they allow him to be a doctor or teacher, and a very conſiderable one: we know that thou art true; a true and faithful miniſter, that teacheſt truth, and ſpeakeſt uprightly; one of great integrity, and to be depended upon: and teacheſt the way of God in truth; rightly opens the word of God, gives the true and genuine ſenſe of the law of God, faithfully inſtructs men in the worſhip of God; and with great ſincerity, directs men to the way of coming to God, and enjoying eternal happineſs with him; having no ſiniſter ends, or worldly intereſt in view: neither careſt thou for any man; be he ever ſo great and honourable, in ever ſo high a ſtation, be he Cæſar himſelf; ſignifying, that he was a man of ſuch openneſs and integrity, that he always freely ſpoke the real ſentiments of his mind, whether men were pleaſed or diſpleaſed; being in no fear of man, nor in the leaſt to be intimidated by frowns and menaces, or any danger from men: for thou regardeſt not the perſon of men; as he had not the perſons of the high prieſts and elders, the grand Sanhedrim of the nation, who had lately been examining him in the temple: and ſeeing therefore he made no difference among men, whether learned or unlearned, rich or poor, high or low; whether they were in exalted ſtations and high offices, or not; he feared no man's face, and accepted no man's perſon, but gave his ſenſe of things, without fear or flattery; they hoped he would give a direct anſwer to the following queſtion, though Cæſar himſelf was concerned in it.

Ver. 17. Tell us therefore, what thinkeſt thou, &c.] Since, as they ſuggeſted, he was a perſon of great underſtanding and ſincerity, they earneſtly deſire that he would be pleaſed, according to his uſual frankneſs and openneſs, to give them his opinion; in which they intimate, they ſhould ſit down ſatisfied and contented: whether is it lawful to give tribute unto Cæſar, or not? Meaning, according to the law of God: this was a queſtion among the Jews; the Herodians were for it, the Phariſees were againſt it, at leaſt ſecretly; and, indeed, this latter was the general ſenſe of the nation, who looked upon themſelves to be, or however ought to be, a free people, being the children of God, and the ſeed of Abraham; and who urged, that according to their law, none but one of their own brethren, who was of their own nation and religion, was to be ſet as king over them; whereas Cæſar, the Roman emperor, was a ſtranger, one of another nation, and an idolater; and ſome openly refuſed it, and made mutinies and inſurrections on account of it, as Theudas, and Judas of Galilee: now by putting this queſtion to Chriſt, in the preſence of different parties, they hoped to get an advantage of him either way; for had he been ſilent, they would have reproached him, as not being the honeſt, faithful, frank, and open man, they pretended to take him to be; and if he had anſwered either in the affirmative or negative, they were prepared to make uſe of it to his injury; had he ſaid that it was lawful to give tribute to Cæſar, this being contrary to the general notions of the people, they would have improved it to draw them from him, and to ſet them againſt him; and had he affirmed it was not lawful to do it, they would then have accuſed him to the Roman governor, and delivered him up into his hands, to judge and condemn him, according to the Roman laws; which latter was what they were wiſhing for.

Ver. 18. But Jeſus perceived their wickedneſs, &c.] Luke ſays, their craftineſs; and Mark ſays, knowing their hypocriſy; for there was a mixture of malice, hypocriſy, and artfulneſs, in the ſcheme they had formed; but Chriſt being the omniſcient God, ſaw the wickedneſs of their hearts, knew their hypocritical deſigns, and was well acquainted with all their artifice; he judged not according to the outward appearance of their affection for him, and opinion of him, of religion, righteouſneſs, and holineſs in themſelves, and of a ſincere deſire to have their conſcience ſatisfied about this matter; the ſnare they laid was viſible to him, the maſk they put on could not ſcreen them from him, nor impoſe upon him: and ſaid, why tempt ye me, ye hypocrites? as he might well call them, who feigned themſelves juſt perſons, pretended a great deal of reſpect for him, call him maſter, compliment him with the characters of a faithful, ſincere, and diſintereſted preacher; yet by putting the above queſtion, deſigned no other than to enſnare him, and bring him into diſgrace or trouble.

Ver. 19. Shew me the tribute money, &c.] Not any money, or any ſort of coin that was current among them; but that in which the tribute was uſually paid, which was Roman money: and they brought unto him a penny; not as being what was the uſual ſum that was paid for tribute at one time, but as a ſample of what ſort of money it was paid in, in Roman pence; one of which, was ſeven pence halfpenny of our money.

Ver. 20. And he ſaith unto them, &c.] Having the penny in one hand, and pointing to it with the other, whoſe is this image and ſuperſcription? or inſcription? for the penny that was brought him had an image upon it, the form of a man's head ſtruck on it, and round about it an inſcription, or writing, ſhewing who it was the image of, and whoſe money it was, and when it was coined: this is enough to ſhow, that this penny was not a Jewiſh, but a Roman one; for the Jews, though they put inſcriptions, yet no images on their coin; and much leſs would they put Cæſar's thereon, as was on this: it is aſked[r], “ What is the coin of Jeruſalem? “ The anſwer is, David and Solomon on one ſide, “ and Jeruſalem the holy city on the other ſide, i. e.

---

[q] Toldos Jeſu, p. 8.

[r] T. Bab. Bava Kama, fol. 97. 2. Vid. Bereſhit Rabba, §. 39. fol. 34. 4. & Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 95. 4.

"as the Gloſs obſerves, David and Solomon were "written on one ſide, and on the other ſide were "written Jeruſalem the holy city." It follows, "and what was the coin of Abraham our father? "an old man and an old woman, (Abraham and "Sarah) on one ſide, and a young man and a "young woman (Iſaac and Rebekah) on the other "ſide." The Gloſs on it is, "not that there was "on it the form of an old man, and an old wo-"man on one ſide, and of a young man and a "young woman on the other, for it is forbidden "to make the form of a man; but ſo it was writ-"ten on one ſide, an old man and an old woman, "and on the other ſide, a young man and a young "woman."

Ver. 21. They ſay unto him, Cæſar's, &c.] Either Auguſtus Cæſar's; for there was a coin of that Emperor's, as Dr. Hammond reports, from Occo, which had his image or picture on it, and in it theſe words written, Auguſtus Cæſar, ſuch a year, after the taking of Judæa; which if this was the coin, was a ſtanding teſtimony of the ſubjection of the Jews to the Romans; and this being current with them, was an acknowledgment of it by them, and carried in it an argument of their obligation to pay tribute to them; or it might be Tiberius Cæſar's, the then reigning Emperor, in the nineteenth year of whoſe reign, Chriſt was crucified; and ſeeing he had reigned ſo long, it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe, his money was very common, and moſt in uſe: we read in the Talmud [s], of דינרא קיסראנה, a Cæſarean penny, or Cæſar's penny, the ſame ſort with this: now this penny having Cæſar's image and inſcription on it, our Lord tacitly ſuggeſts, that they ought to pay tribute to him; ſince his money was allowed of as current among them, which was in effect owning him to be their king; and which perfectly agrees with a rule of their own, which runs thus [t]: "A king whoſe coin is current in "any country, the inhabitants of that country "agree about him, and it is their joint opinion, "שהוא אדוניהם והם לו עבדים, that he is their "Lord, and they are his ſervants." This being the caſe now with the Jews, Chriſt's advice is, render therefore unto Cæſar the things which are Cæſar's, and unto God the things that are God's: give Cæſar the tribute and cuſtom, and fear, and honour, and obedience, which are due to him; which may be done without interfering with the honour of God, and prejudicing his intereſt and glory, when care is taken, that all the worſhip and obedience due to God are given to him: ſubjection to civil magiſtrates is not inconſiſtent with the reverence and fear of God; all are to have their dues rendered unto them, without intrenching upon one another. And the Jews themſelves allow, that a king ought to have his dues, whether he be a king of Iſrael, or of the Gentiles: "A publican, or tax-gatherer, "they ſay [u], that is appointed by the king, whe-"ther a king of Iſrael, or of the Gentiles, and "takes what is fixed by the order of the govern-"ment; 'tis forbidden to refuſe payment of the "tax to him, for דינא דמלכות דינא, the right of "a king is right." Juſt and equitable, and he ought to have his right.

Ver. 22. When they had heard theſe words, &c.] This anſwer returned unto them, this advice which was given them, which they could not gainſay or deny to be good, they marvelled; were amazed and aſtoniſhed, at his prudence and wiſdom, in anſwering them, in ſuch an unexpected and cautious manner: they left him; being ſilenced, confounded, and diſappointed: and went their way; not being able to get any advantage againſt him, neither to bring him into contempt with the people, and alienate their affections from him; nor to charge him with ſedition or treaſon to the Roman governor; and ſo had but a very indifferent account of their ſucceſs, to report to them that ſent them.

Ver. 23. The ſame day came to him the Sadducees, &c.] Quickly after the Phariſees and Herodians had left him; and which ſhews, that the Herodians and Sadducees were not the ſame; but that the Sadducees were a diſtinct ſect, both from the Phariſees and the Herodians. Theſe underſtanding that the former had not ſucceeded, came with a knotty queſtion, with which they had often puzzled the Phariſees, and hoped they ſhould nonpluſs Chriſt with it, ſhewing the abſurdity of the doctrine of the reſurrection, an article which they denied; as it follows, which ſay, that there is no reſurrection of the dead: they denied that there were angels and ſpirits, and the immortality of the ſoul; they affirmed, that the ſoul died with the body, and that there was no future ſtate: the riſe of this ſect, and of theſe notions of theirs, was this, as the Jews relate [w]. "Antigonus a man of Socho, uſed to ſay, "be not as ſervants, that ſerve their maſter on ac-"count of receiving a reward, but be as ſervants "that ſerve their maſter, not on account of receiv-"ing a reward; and let the fear of heaven (God) be "upon you, ſo that your reward may be double in "the world to come: this man had two diſciples, "who altered his words, and taught the diſciples, "and the diſciples their diſciples, and they ſtood and "narrowly examined them, and ſaid, what did our "fathers ſee, to ſay this thing? Is it poſſible, that "a labourer ſhould work all day, and not take his "reward at evening? But if our fathers had known "that there is another world, and that there is, "תחיית המתים, a reſurrection of the dead, they "would not have ſaid thus: they ſtood and ſepa-"rated from the law, and of them there were two "parties, the Sadducees and Baithuſites; the Sadducees on account of Sadoc, and the Baithuſites on "account of Baithus." The Syriac verſion reads, and they ſaid, and the Ethiopic verſion alſo, ſaying, there is no reſurrection of the dead; taking the ſenſe to be, that they at this time declared their ſenſe of this doctrine, and according to a ſettled notion of theirs, affirmed before Chriſt, that there was no ſuch thing; that never any was raiſed from the dead, nor never will; and they were deſirous of entering into a controverſy with him about it: and aſked him; put the following queſtion to him, in order to expoſe the weakneſs and abſurdity of ſuch a doctrine.

Ver. 24. Saying, maſter, &c.] Rabbi, or doctor, as he was uſually called; Moſes ſaid, in Deut. xxv. 5. if a man die having no children, his brother ſhall marry his wife, and raiſe up ſeed unto his brother; which, though not expreſſed in the ſelf-ſame words, yet is the ſenſe of the paſſage referred to, and was a practice in uſe before the times of Moſes, as appears from the caſe of Er and Onan; the deſign of which was, to preſerve families, and keep their inheritances diſtinct and entire. This law only took place, when a man died without children; for if he left any children, there was no need for his brother to marry his wife; yea, as a Jewiſh writer obſerves [x], ſhe was forbidden, it was not lawful for him to marry her, and was the caſe if he had children of either ſex, or even grand-children: for as another of their commentators notes[y], his having no child, regards a ſon or a daughter, or a ſon's ſon, or a daughter's ſon, or a daughter's daughter; and it was the eldeſt of the brethren, or he that was next in years to the deceaſed, that was obliged by this law[z], though not if he had a wife of his own; and accordingly in the following caſe propoſed, each of the brethren married the eldeſt brother's wife in their turn, according to the courſe of ſeniority; and by this law, the firſt child that was born after ſuch marriage, was reckoned the ſeed of the deceaſed, and was heir to his inheritance. The Jews in their Miſna, or oral law, have a whole tract on this ſubject, called Yebamot, which contains various rules and directions, for the right obſervance of this law.

---

[s] T. Bab. Avoda Zara, fol. 6. 2.

[t] Maimon. Hilch. Gezala, c. 5. §. 18.

[u] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Nedarim, c. 3. §. 4. & Maimon. Hilch. Gezala, c. 5. §. 11.

[w] Abot R. Nathan, c. 5. fol. 3. 1.

[x] Aben Ezra, in Deut. xv. 5.

Ver. 25. Now there were with us ſeven brethren, &c.] That is, there was in the city, town or neighbourhood, where theſe Sadducees dwelt, probably at Jeruſalem, a family, in which were ſeven ſons, all brethren by the father's ſide; for brethren by the mother's ſide, were not counted brethren, nor obliged by this law[a]; whether this was a feigned caſe which is here and in the following verſes put, or whether it was real fact, which is poſſible, it matters not: and the firſt, when he had married a wife, deceaſed, and having no iſſue, left his wife unto his brother: the eldeſt of theſe ſeven brethren married a wife, and after ſome time died, having no children, ſon or daughter, by his wife; and therefore, according to the above law, leaves her to his next brother to marry her, and raiſe up ſeed unto him; which according to the Jewiſh canons[b], could not be done before ninety days, or three months after the deceaſe of his brother; for ſo long they were to wait and ſee, whether ſhe was with child by his brother or no; for if ſhe was, it was not neceſſary, yea, it was unlawful for him to marry her.

Ver. 26. Likewiſe the ſecond alſo, &c.] The eldeſt of the ſurviving brethren, having married his brother's wife, after ſome time died alſo without children, and left her to his next brother to marry her; and the third brother accordingly did marry her, and in proceſs of time died likewiſe, leaving no iſſue behind him; and thus they went on in courſe, unto the ſeventh; the fourth, fifth, and ſixth, married her in turn, and ſo did the ſeventh; and all died in the ſame circumſtances, having no children by her.

Ver. 27. And laſt of all the woman died alſo.] A widow and childleſs, having never married another perſon but theſe ſeven brethren; and the caſe with them being alike, no one having any child by her, upon which any peculiar claim to her could be formed, the following queſtion is put.

Ver. 28. Therefore in the reſurrection, &c.] As aſſerted by the Phariſees and by Chriſt, ſuppoſing that there will be ſuch a thing, though not granting it; for theſe men denied it, wherefore the Ethiopic verſion reads it hypothetically, if therefore the dead will be raiſed; upon ſuch a ſuppoſition, whoſe wife ſhall ſhe be of the ſeven? for they all had her, or were married to her. By putting this queſtion, they thought to have got ſome advantage againſt Chriſt, and in favour of their notion; they hoped, either that he would give into their way of thinking, and relinquiſh the doctrine of the reſurrection upon this, and join with them againſt the Phariſees, and ſo there would be no need of an anſwer to the queſtion; or they judged, that if he returned an anſwer, it would be either that he did not know whoſe wife ſhe ſhould be, and then they would traduce him among the common people, as weak and ignorant; or ſhould he ſay, that ſhe would be the wife of one of them only, naming which of them, or of them all, or of none of them, they fancied that ſuch abſurd conſequences would follow on each of theſe, as would expoſe the doctrine of the reſurrection to ridicule and contempt; but they miſſed their aim, and were ſadly diſappointed by Chriſt's anſwer and reaſonings which follow.

Ver. 29. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, &c.] The Sadducees: as idle and impertinent as the caſe they put may ſeem to be and really was, our Lord thought fit to return an anſwer to them, thereby to expoſe their ignorance, and put them to ſilence and confuſion: ye do err; not only in that they denied the immortality of the ſoul and the reſurrection, but that ſuppoſing that there would be a reſurrection, things in that ſtate would be juſt they were in this; as particularly for inſtance, that there would be the ſame natural relation of huſband and wife, which their queſtion ſuppoſes. Mark reads theſe words by way of interrogation, do ye not therefore err, becauſe? &c. And by Luke they are wholly omitted, as alſo what follows, not knowing the ſcriptures, nor the power of God. Theſe two things were the ſpring and ſource of their errors: they had not a true knowledge, and right underſtanding of the ſcriptures; which if they had had, it muſt have appeared to them from many places in the Old Teſtament; that the ſoul remains after death, and that the body will be raiſed from the dead: they owned the authority of the ſcriptures, and allowed of all the writings of the Old Teſtament; for it ſeems to be a miſtake of ſome learned men, who think that they only received the five books of Moſes, and that therefore Chriſt takes his proof of his doctrine from thence; but though they had the greater eſteem for the law, and would admit of nothing that was not clearly proved from that; yet they did not reject the other writings, as what might ſerve to confirm and illuſtrate what was taught in the law; but then, though they approved of the ſcriptures, and read them, yet they did not underſtand them, and ſo fell into thoſe groſs errors and ſad miſtakes; nor did they attend to the power of God, which, as it was able to make men out of the duſt of the earth, was able to raiſe them again, when crumbled into duſt; but this was looked upon by them, as a thing impoſſible, and ſo incredible; ſee Acts xxvi. 8.

Ver. 30. For in the reſurrection, &c.] At the time of the reſurrection, and in that ſtate, when the bodies and ſouls of men ſhall be re-united, they neither marry, nor are given in marriage; neither the men marry wives, nor are the women given in marriage to men, which is done by their parents here, generally ſpeaking, they having the right of diſpoſing of children in marriage: but, as Luke ſays, they which ſhall be accounted worthy; not through their own works of righteouſneſs, but through the grace of God and righteouſneſs of Chriſt, to obtain the world, the world to come, a future ſtate of happineſs, and the reſurrection of the dead, that which will be unto everlaſting life and glory, neither marry nor are given in marriage; ſhall not enter into any ſuch natural and carnal relation; and this agrees with the notion of the other Jews, who ſay[c]; that "In the world to come, there is neither eating nor "drinking, ולא פריה ורביה, nor fructification, nor "increaſe (of children,) no receiving and giving, "(no commerce) nor envy, nor hatred, nor contention."

---

[y] Jarchi in ib. Vid. Maimon. Hilch. Yebum, c. 1. §. 3.

[z] Jarchi in Deut. xxv. 5. Miſn. Yebamot, c. 2. §. 8. & 4, 5. Maimon. Hilch. Yebum, c. 2. §. 6.

[a] Maimon. ib. c. 1. §. 7.

[b] T. Bab. Erubin, fol. 47. 1. Maimon. ib. c. 1. §. 19.

[c] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 17. 1.

“tention.” But are as the angels of God in heaven; or, as in Luke, are equal unto the angels; and which he explains of their immortality: neither can they die any more; no more than the angels can: for this muſt not be extended to every thing; not in every thing will the ſaints be like, or equal to the angels; they will not be incorporeal, as the angels are, but then, even their bodies will be ſpiritual, and in ſome reſpects like ſpirits; they will not ſtand in any need of ſuſtenance, by eating and drinking, any more than the angels; nor will there be any ſuch things as marriage, and procreation of children among them, any more than among angels; for they are the children of God, being the children of the reſurrection: they will then appear to be the children of God by adopting grace, through their enjoying the adoption, even the redemption of their bodies; and poſſeſſing in ſoul and body, the heavenly inheritance they are heirs of: indeed, the ſouls of the ſaints before the reſurrection, during their ſeparate ſtate, are in ſome ſenſe like the angels, to which may be applied thoſe words of Maimonides[d]. “In the world to come, there is no body, but the ſouls of the righteous only, without a body, כמלאכי השרת, as the miniſtring angels; and ſeeing there is no body, there's no eating nor drinking in it, nor any of all the things which the bodies of the children of men ſtand in need of in this world; nor does any thing befal which happens to bodies in this world, as ſitting or ſtanding, or ſleep or death, or grief, or laughter, or the like.” And according to the ſenſe of the Jews, they will be like to the angels after the reſurrection: ſo God is by them introduced ſpeaking[e]; “At the appointed time known by me, to quicken the dead, I will return to thee that body which is holy and renewed, as at the firſt, to be כמלאכים קדושים, as the holy angels.” This was an uſual way of ſpeaking with them, to compare ſaints in a ſtate of immortality, to angels[f]. Chriſt, by making mention of angels, ſtrikes at another notion of the Sadducees, that there were no angels, Acts xxiii. 8.

Ver. 31. But as touching the reſurrection of the dead, &c.] In proof of that doctrine, and which will greatly ſerve to confirm and eſtabliſh it, and that it may appear that the dead are, or will be raiſed, and to put it out of all doubt, have ye not read that which was ſpoken unto you by God, as Mark adds, in the book of Moſes; which was written by him, the book of Exodus, ch. iii. 6. and though the words were ſpoke to Moſes, yet were deſigned for the uſe, inſtruction, and comfort of the Iſraelites; not only at that time, but in ſucceeding ages, they being the poſterity of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob; whoſe God the Lord, there declares himſelf to be. Moreover, whereas theſe words were ſpoken by God to Moſes, there is ſome little difficulty occaſioned, by Luke's repreſenting them to be the words of Moſes; for he ſays, Moſes ſhewed at the buſh, when he calleth the Lord, the God of Abraham, &c. which may be removed by obſerving, that the ſenſe is, that when Moſes ſhewed to the children of Iſrael, what he heard and ſaw at the buſh on mount Sinai, he called the Lord by theſe names, in which he ſpoke of himſelf to him; he recited to them what the Lord ſaid to him; and indeed he was bid to ſay to them theſe words; ſee Exod. iii. 14, 15, 16. ſaying, as follows,

Ver. 32. I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob, &c.] The Sadducees expreſsly denied, that the reſurrection could be proved out of the law. “Says R. Eliezer, with R. Joſe[g], I have found the books of the Sadducees to be corrupt; for they ſay that the reſurrection of the dead is not to be proved out of the law: I ſaid unto them, you have corrupted your law, and ye have not cauſed any thing to come up into your hands, for ye ſay the reſurrection of the dead is not to be proved out of the law; lo! he ſaith, Numb. xv. 33. That ſoul ſhall be utterly cut off, his iniquity ſhall be upon him; he ſhall be utterly cut off in this world; his iniquity ſhall be upon him, is not this ſaid with reſpect to the world to come?” Hence, in oppoſition to this notion of the Sadducees, the other Jews ſay[h], that “Though a man confeſſes and believes that the dead will be raiſed, yet that it is not intimated in the law, he is an heretick; ſince it is a fundamental point, that the reſurrection of the dead is of the law.” Hence they ſet themſelves, with all their might and main, to prove this doctrine from thence, of which take the following inſtances[i]. “Says R. Simai, from whence is the reſurrection of the dead to be proved out of the law? From Exod. vi. 4. as it is ſaid, I have alſo eſtabliſhed my covenant with them, to give them the land of Canaan: to you it is not ſaid, but to them; from hence then, the reſurrection of the dead may be proved out of the law.” The Gloſs upon it is, “the ſenſe is, that the holy bleſſed God, promiſed to our fathers Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, that he would give to them the land of Iſrael; and becauſe he gave it to them, has he not given it to their children? But we learn from hence, that they ſhall be raiſed, and that God will hereafter give them the land of Iſrael.” And which, the learned Mr. Mede takes to be the ſenſe of the words of this text, cited by our Lord; and this the force of his reaſoning, by which he proves the reſurrection of the dead. Again, “the Sadducees aſked Rabban Gamaliel, from whence does it appear that the holy bleſſed God will quicken the dead? He ſaid unto them, out of the law, and out of the prophets, and out of the Hagiographa; but they did not receive him (or regard him:) out of the law, as it is written, Thou ſhalt ſleep with thy fathers, and riſe up, Deut. xxxi. 16.——And there are that ſay from this ſcripture, Deut. iv. 4. But ye that did cleave unto the Lord your God, are alive every one of you this day: as this day all of you ſtand, ſo in the world to come, all of you ſhall ſtand.” Thus our Lord having to do with the ſame ſort of perſons, fetches his proof of the doctrine of the reſurrection out of the law, and from a paſſage which reſpects the covenant relation God ſtands into his people, particularly Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob; and which reſpects not their ſouls only, but their bodies alſo, even their whole perſons, body and ſoul; for God is the God of the whole: and therefore as their ſouls now live with God, their bodies alſo will be raiſed from the dead, that they, with their ſouls, may enjoy everlaſting glory and happineſs; which is the grand promiſe, and great bleſſing of the covenant of grace. God is not the God of the dead, but of the living; as all the ſaints are; for though their bodies are dead, their ſouls are alive, and their bodies will be raiſed in conſequence of their covenant-intereſt in God, to enjoy an immortal life with him: ſo the Jews are wont to ſay, that the righteous, even in their death, are called living[k]: "from whence is it proved, ſay "they, that the righteous, even in their death, "קרויין חיים, are called living?" from Deut. xxxiv. 4. as it is written, and he ſaid unto him, this is the land which I have ſworn to Abraham, to Iſaac, and to Jacob, ſaying. Menaſſeh ben Iſrael, a learned Jew, of the laſt century, has produced[l] this ſame paſſage of ſcripture, Chriſt here does in proof of the immortality of the ſoul, and argues from it in much the ſame manner; having mentioned the words, he adds, "for "God is not the God of the dead, for the dead are not, "but of the living, for the living exiſt; therefore "alſo the patriarchs, in reſpect of the ſoul, may "rightly be inferr'd from hence to live."

---

[d] Hilch. Teſhuba, c. 8. §. 2.

[e] Midraſh Hanneelam in Zohar in Gen. fol. 66. 4.

[f] Vid. Abot. R. Nathan, c. 1. fol. 1. 3. Caphtor, fol. 18. 2. Philo de Sacrific. Abel & Cain, p. 131.

[g] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 90. 2.

[h] Gloſſ. in ib. col. 1.

[i] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 90. 2.

Ver. 33. And when the multitude heard this, &c.] This wiſe and full anſwer of Chriſt to the poſing queſtion of the Sadducees, with which perhaps they had puzzled many, and never had met with their match before: they were aſtoniſhed at his doctrine; concerning the pure, perfect, and angelic ſtate of the righteous in the world to come; and how ſtrongly and nervouſly he proved the immortality of the ſoul, and the reſurrection of the dead, which were both denied by the Sadducees; and who were ſo confounded with his anſwer, proof, and reaſonings, that Luke ſays, after that they durſt not aſk him any queſtion at all: and the Scribes were ſo pleaſed therewith, that certain of them applauded him, ſaying, maſter, thou haſt well ſaid.

Ver. 34. But when the Phariſees had heard, &c.] Either with their own ears, they being ſome of them preſent; or rather from the relation of others, from the Scribes, who expreſſed their approbation of Chriſt's anſwer to the Sadducees: for the Phariſees, with the Herodians, in a body, had left him, and were gone to their reſpective places of abode; or to them that ſent them, being baffled and confounded by him: but now hearing that he had put the Sadducees to ſilence, or ſtopped their mouths, having nothing to reply, which, itſelf, was not diſagreeable; for they were as oppoſite as could be to them in the doctrine of the reſurrection, and in other things, and were their ſworn and avowed enemies: and yet it ſadly gravelled them, that Chriſt ſhould be too hard for, and get the victory over all ſects among them. Wherefore, conſidering that ſhould he go on with ſucceſs in this manner, his credit with the people would increaſe yet more and more; and therefore, tho' they had been ſo ſhamefully defeated in two late attempts, yet they were gathered together in great hurry upon this occaſion. The Ethiopic verſion reads it, they were gathered to him, that is, to Chriſt; and ſo reads the copy that Beza gave to the univerſity of Cambridge: but the other reading, as it is general, ſo more ſuitable to the place: they gathered together at ſome certain houſe, where they conſulted what to do, what methods to take, to put a ſtop to his growing intereſt with the people, and how they might bring him into diſgrace with them; and they ſeemed to have fixed on this method, that one among them, who was the ableſt doctor, and beſt ſkilled in the law, ſhould put a queſtion to him relating to the law, which was then agitated among them, the ſolution of which was very difficult; and they the rather choſe to take this courſe by ſetting a ſingle perſon upon him, that ſhould he ſucceed, the victory would be the greater, and the whole ſect would ſhare in the honour of it; and ſhould he be ſilenced, the public diſgrace and confuſion would only fall on himſelf, and not the whole body, as in the former inſtances. This being agreed to, they went unto him.

Ver. 35. Then one of them, which was a lawyer, &c.] Or that was learned, or ſkilful in the law, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions, and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel read. The Ethiopic verſion calls him, a Scribe of the city, of the city of Jeruſalem; but I do not meet with any ſuch particular officer, or any ſuch office peculiar to a ſingle man any where: mention is made of the Scribes of the people in Matt. ii. 4. and this man was one of them, one that interpreted the law to the people, either in the ſchools, or in the ſynagogues, or both; and Mark expreſly calls him a Scribe; and ſo the Arabic verſion renders the word here; and from hence it may be concluded that the lawyers and Scribes were the ſame ſort of perſons. This man was by ſect a Phariſee, and by his office a Scribe, or interpreter of the law, and ſuitable to his office and character, aſked him a queſtion, tempting him, and ſaying: he put a difficult and knotty queſtion to him, and thereby making a trial of his knowledge and underſtanding of the law; and laying a ſnare for him, to entrap him if he could, and expoſe him to the people, as a very ignorant man; and delivered it in the following form.

Ver. 36. Maſter, which is the great commandment in the law?] He calls him maſter, rabbi, or doctor, as the Sadducees had in ver. 24. either becauſe he was uſually ſo called by his diſciples, and by the generality of the people; or merely in complaiſance to engage his attention to him, and his queſtion; and might hereby ſuggeſt, that ſhould he return a proper and ſatisfactory anſwer to it he ſhould be his maſter. The queſtion is not which of the laws was the greateſt, the oral, or the written law: the Jews give the preference to the law delivered by word of mouth; they prefer the traditions of the elders before the written law of Moſes; ſee the note on ch. xv. 2. but the queſtion was about the written law of Moſes; and not merely about the decalogue, or whether the commands of the firſt table were greater than thoſe of the ſecond, as was generally thought; or whether the affirmative precepts were not more to be regarded than negative ones, which was their commonly received opinion; but about the whole body of the law, moral and ceremonial, delivered by Moſes: and not whether the ceremonial law was to be preferred to the moral, which they uſually did; but what particular command there was in the whole law, which was greater than the reſt: for as there were ſome commands that were light, and others that were weighty, a diſtinction often uſed by them[m], and to which Chriſt alludes in chap. xxiii. 23. It was moved that it might be ſaid which was the greateſt and weightieſt of them all. Some thought the commandment of the ſabbath was the greateſt: hence they ſay[n], that he that keeps the ſabbath is as if he kept the whole law; yea, they make the obſervance of the three meals, or feaſts, which, according to the traditions of the elders, they were obliged to eat on the ſabbath, to be at leaſt one of the greateſt of them. "Theſe "three meals, ſays one of their writers[o], are a great "matter, for it is one מהמצות הגדולות שבתורה, "of the great commandments in the law." Which is the very phraſeology uſed in this queſtion. Others give the preference to circumciſion, on which they beſtow the greateſt encomiums; and, among the reſt [p], ſay, it drives away the ſabbath, or that is obliged to give place unto it. Others [q] ſay of the phylacteries, that the holineſs of them is the greateſt of all, and the command to be arrayed with them all the day, is more excellent than all others; and even of the fringe upon the borders of their garments, others obſerve [r], that a man that is guilty of that command, is guilty of all others, and that ſingle precept is equal to all the reſt. In this multiplicity of opinions, Chriſt's is deſired on this ſubject, tho' with no good intention.

---

[k] T. Hieroſ. Beracot, fol. 4. 4. Midraſh Kokelet, fol. 78. 2. Tzeror Hammor, fol. 158. 3.

[l] De reſurrect. mort. l. 1. c. 10. §. 6.

[m] Pirke Abot, c. 2. §. 1. & c. 4. §. 2.

[n] Zohar in Exod. fol. 37. 1.

[o] Tzeror Hammor, fol. 3. 3.

Ver. 37. Jeſus ſaid unto him, &c.] Directly, without taking time to think of it; and though he knew with what deſign it was put to him; yet, as an anſwer to it might be uſeful and inſtructive to the people, as well as ſilence and confound his adverſaries, he thought fit to give one; and is as follows, being what is expreſſed in Deut. vi. 5. thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy ſoul, and with all thy mind; that is, with all the powers and faculties of the ſoul, the will, the underſtanding, and the affections; in the moſt ſincere, upright, and perfect manner, without any diſſimulation and hypocriſy, and above all objects whatever, for this the law requires; and which man, in his ſtate of innocence, was capable of, tho' now fallen, he is utterly unable to perform; ſo far from it, that without the grace of God, he has no true love at all to God, in his heart, ſoul, and mind, but all the reverſe; his carnal mind is enmity againſt God, and every thing that is divine and good, or that belongs unto him: and though this is now the caſe of man, yet his obligation to love the Lord in this manner is ſtill the ſame; and when the Spirit of God does produce the grace and fruit of love in his ſoul, he does love the Lord ſincerely; becauſe of the perfections of his nature, and the works of his hands, and becauſe of the bleſſings of grace beſtowed, and eſpecially for Chriſt, the unſpeakable gift of his love; and moſt affectionately does he love him, when he is moſt ſenſible of his everlaſting and unchangeable love to him, and when that is ſhed abroad by the Spirit; for we love him, becauſe he firſt loved us, 1 John iv. 19. inſtead of, with all thy mind, as here, in Deut. vi. 5. 'tis read, with all thy might; and which clauſe is here added by the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions, as it is in Mark xii. 30. The Hebrew phraſe ſeems to denote the vehemency of affections, with which God is to be beloved. Tho' the Jewiſh writers [s] paraphraſe and interpret it, with all thy ſubſtance, or money; and in the Miſna [t], the following interpretation is given of the whole; " with all thy heart, " with thy imaginations, with the good imagination, and with the evil imagination; and with " all thy ſoul, even if he ſhould take away thy " ſoul; and with all thy ſtrength, with all thy mammon, or riches; or otherwiſe, with all thy might, " with every meaſure he meaſures unto thee, do " thou meaſure unto him;" that is, as one of the commentators ſays [u], whether it be good or evil; or, as another [w], in every caſe that happens give thanks to God, and praiſe him. And certain it is, that as God is to be loved in the ſtrongeſt manner we are capable of, and with all we have, and are; ſo always, at all times, under all diſpenſations of his providence, and upon all accounts, and for all he does towards, in, upon, and for us.

Ver. 38. This is the firſt and great commandment.] Whether the object of it is conſidered, who is the firſt and chief good; or the manner in which it is to be obſerved, which requires and engroſſes the whole heart, ſoul, and mind, and all the ſtrength and power of man; or its being the principle from whence all the duties, and actions of men ſhould flow, and the end to which all are to be referred; and is not only a compendium of the duties of the firſt table of the decalogue, but of all others that can be thought to, and do, belong to God. This is the firſt command in order of nature, time, dignity, and cauſality; God being the firſt cauſe of all things, infinitely above all creatures, and love to him, being the ſource, ſpring, and cauſe of love to the neighbour; and it is the greateſt in its object, nature, manner, and end. That this command, and theſe words our Lord cites, are ſo full and comprehenſive, the Jews themſelves cannot deny. A noted writer of theirs [x] ſays, " the root " of all the commandments is, when a man loves " God with all his ſoul, and cleaves unto him." And, ſays [y] another, " in this verſe only, thou ſhalt " love the Lord thy God, &c. כלולים י הדברות, " the ten words, or decalogue, are comprehended."

Ver. 39. And the ſecond is like unto it, &c.] For there is but a ſecond, not a third: this is ſuggeſted in oppoſition to the numerous commandments in the law, according to the opinion of the Jews, who reckon them in all to be ſix hundred and thirteen; of which there are three hundred and ſixty-five negative ones, according to the number of the days of the year; and two hundred and forty-eight affirmative ones, according to the members of a man's body [z]. Chriſt reduces all to two, love to God, and love to the neighbour; and the latter is the ſecond in order of nature, time, dignity, and cauſality; the object of it being a creature; and the act itſelf being the effect of the former, yet like unto it: for tho' the object is different, yet this commandment regards love as the former, and requires that it be as that, true, hearty, ſincere, and perfect; that it be with ſingleneſs of heart, always, and to all men; and that it ſpring from love to God, and be performed to his glory: and which is expreſſed in the words written in Lev. xix. 18. thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thyſelf; as heartily and ſincerely, and as a man would deſire to be loved by his neighbour; and do all the good offices to him he would chuſe to have done to himſelf by him. This law ſuppoſes, that men ſhould love themſelves, or otherwiſe they cannot love their neighbour; not in a ſinful way, by indulging themſelves in carnal luſts and pleaſures; ſome are lovers of pleaſures more than lovers of God; but in a natural way, ſo as to be careful of their bodies, families, and eſtates; and in a ſpiritual way, ſo as to be concerned for their ſouls, and the everlaſting happineſs of them: and in like manner, ſhould men love their neighbours, in things temporal do them all the good they can, and do no injury to their perſons or property; and in things ſpiritual pray for them, inſtruct them, and adviſe as they would their own ſouls, or their neareſt and deareſt relations. And this is to be extended to every man; though the Jews reſtrain it to their friend and companion, and one of their own religion. " Thy neighbour;

---

[p] Miſn. Nedarim, c. 3. §. 11.

[q] Maimon. Hilch. Tephillin, c. 4. §. 25, 26.

[r] T. Bab. Menachot, fol 43. 2.

[s] Targum Onk. & Jarchi in Deut. vi. 5.

[t] Beracot, c. 9. §. 5. Vid. Targum Jon. in Deut. vi. 5.

[u] Bartenora in Miſn. ib.

[w] Maimon. in ib.

[x] Aben Ezra in Exod. xxxi. 18.

[y] Tzeror Hammor, fol. 138. 1.

[z] T. Bab. Maccot, fol. 23. 2.

“ that is, ſay they [a], thy friend in the law; and “ this is the great comprehenſive rule in the law, to “ ſhew that it is not fit there ſhould be any diviſion, or ſeparation, between a man and his companion, but one ſhould judge every man in the balance of equity: wherefore, near unto it is, I am “ the Lord; for as I the Lord am one, ſo it is fit “ for you that ye ſhould be one nation without diviſion; but a wicked man, and one that does “ not receive reproof, it is commanded to hate “ him; as it is ſaid, do not I hate them that hate “ me?” But our Lord intends by it to include, that love, benevolence, and good-will, which are due to every man; and ſuggeſts, that this comprehends not only all that is contained in the ſecond table of the decalogue, but all duties that are reducible thereunto, and are obligatory on men one towards another whatever; all which ſhould ſpring from love, and be done heartily and ſincerely, with a view to the neighbour's good, and God's glory: and with this Maimonides agrees, ſaying [b], that “ all “ the commands, or duties, reſpecting a man, and “ his neighbour, נכנסות בגמילות חסדים, are “ comprehended in beneficence.”

Ver. 40. On theſe two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.] Not that all that is contained in the five books of Moſes, and in the books of the prophets, and other writings of the Old Teſtament, is comprehended in, and is reducible to theſe two precepts; for there are many things delivered by way of promiſe, written by way of hiſtory, &c. which cannot, by any means, be brought into theſe two general heads: but that every thing reſpecting duty that is ſuggeſted in the law, or is more largely explained and preſſed in any of the writings of the prophets, is ſummarily comprehended in theſe two ſayings: hence love is the fulfilling of the law; ſee Rom. xiii. 8, 9. Gal. v. 14. The ſubſtance of the law is love; and the writings of the prophets, as to the preceptive part of them, are an explanation of the law, and an enlargement upon it: hence the Jews have a ſaying [c], that all the prophets ſtood on mount Sinai, and received their prophecies there, becauſe the ſum of them, as to the duty-part, was then delivered. Beza thinks, that here is an alluſion to the phylacteries, or front-lets, which hung upon their fore-heads and hands, as a memorial of the law. And certain it is, that the firſt of theſe commands, and which is ſaid to be the greateſt, was written in theſe phylacteries. Some take the phraſe, on theſe—hang all the law and the prophets, to be a mere Latiniſm, but it is really an Hebraiſm, and often to be met with in the Jewiſh writings: ſo Maimonides ſays [d], “ the knowledge “ of this matter is an affirmative precept, as it is “ ſaid, I am the Lord thy God; and he that imagines there is another God beſides this, tranſgreſſes a negative, as it is ſaid, thou ſhalt have no “ other Gods before me; and he denies the fundamental point, for this is the great foundation, “ שהכל תלוי בו, on which all hang:” and ſo the word is uſed in many other places [e]. The ſenſe is plainly this, that all that are in the law and prophets are conſiſtent with, and dependant on theſe things; and are, as the Perſic verſion renders the word, comprehended in them, and cannot be ſeparated from them.

Ver. 41. While the Phariſees were gathered together, &c.] Or rather, when they were gathered together, and while they continued ſo, before they left him: for this is to be underſtood not of their gathering together, to conſult privately about him; this is expreſſed before in ver. 34. but of their gathering together about Chriſt, to hear what anſwer he would return to the queſtion their learned doctor would put to him: and he having given an anſwer to that, which the Scribe was obliged to allow was a good one; and he having no more to ſay, Chriſt directs his diſcourſe not to him ſingly, but to all the Phariſees before he parted with them, and puts a queſtion to them, in his turn; and which would lead on to another they could not anſwer, and they muſt therefore leave him once more with great ſhame and confuſion. Jeſus aſked them: as the lawyer put a queſtion to him ſuitable to his office and character, Chriſt puts another to the Phariſees ſuitable to his office and character, as a Goſpel-preacher; ſuggeſting by it, that ſalvation was not by the law, and the works of it, which they ſet up for doctors and interpreters of, and advocates for, but by the Meſſiah, who was promiſed to their fathers, and they expected.

Ver. 42. Saying, what think ye of Chriſt, &c.] Or the Meſſiah; he does not aſk them whether there was, or would be ſuch a perſon in the world. He knew, that he was ſo plainly ſpoken of in the writings of the Old Teſtament, which they had in their hands, that they could not be ignorant, that ſuch a perſon was propheſied of: he knew that they believed that he would come, and that they were in continual expectation of his coming; wherefore he aſks them what they thought of him, what were their ſentiments and opinions concerning him; as about his perſon, whether they thought him to be divine, or human, a mere man, or God, as well as man; what they thought of his work and office he came to perform, whether it was a ſpiritual, or temporal ſalvation, they expected he ſhould be the author of; and ſo of his kingdom, whether it would be of this world or not; and particularly, what thoughts they had of his ſonſhip, and who was his father; whoſe ſon is he? and which the Phariſees underſtanding only as reſpecting his lineage and deſcent as man, as, of what family he was? who were his anceſtors and progenitors? they ſay unto him the ſon of David. This they ſaid directly, without any heſitation, it being a generally received notion of theirs, and was very right, that the Meſſiah ſhould be of the ſeed and family of David: and hence he is frequently, in their writings, called by no other name, than the ſon of David; ſee the note on ch. i. 1. If this queſtion was put to ſome perſons, it would appear, that they have no thoughts of Chriſt at all. The atheiſt has none: as God is not in all his thoughts, nor in any of them, for all his thoughts are, that there is no God; ſo neither is Chriſt the ſon of God. The deiſt thinks nothing of him, for he does not believe the revelation concerning him. The epicure, or voluptuous man, he thinks only of his carnal luſts and pleaſures: and the worldling, or covetous man thinks nothing but of his worldly ſubſtance, and of the much good things he has laid up for many years: to ſay nothing of the heathens, who have never heard of him; others, and ſuch as bear the chriſtian name, have very wrong thoughts of Chriſt, mean, and under-valuing. The Arrian thinks he is a created God, of a like, but not of the ſame nature with the father. The Socinian thinks he is a God by office, and did not exiſt until he was born of the virgin Mary; and has no notion of his ſacrifice, and ſatisfaction for the ſins of men. The Arminian thinks meanly of his righteouſneſs, and denies the imputation of it to them that believe. And indeed, all ſuch think wrongly of Chriſt, who divide their ſalvation between their works and him, and make them their Chriſt, or their frames their Chriſt, or their graces, and particularly their believing in him; that is, that aſcribe that to them, which properly belongs to him. And as for thoſe who do not bear the name of Chriſtians, it is no wonder that they entertain wrong and low thoughts of Chriſt. The Jews thought him to be a mere man, and the carpenter's ſon. The Phariſees thought he was an Antinomian, a libertine, a looſe, and licentious perſon, that had no regard to the law, and good works: hence thoſe words of his, think not that I am come to deſtroy the law, Matt. v. 17. Yea, they thought him to be a Samaritan, and to have a devil, and to caſt out devils by Beelzebub, the prince of devils. The Mahometans, tho' they allow him to be a prophet, yet think that he is inferior to Mahomet their prophet. There are others that think well of Chriſt, admire the lovelineſs of his perſon, and the fulneſs of his grace, but are afraid Chriſt does not think well of them: they think well of the ſuitableneſs there is in Chriſt, of his righteouſneſs to juſtify, of his blood to cleanſe and pardon, and of the fulneſs of his grace to ſupply all wants, but think theſe are not for them: they often revolve in their minds his ability to ſave, and firmly believe it, but queſtion his willingneſs to ſave them: they often think of Chriſt, what he is to others, but can't think of him for themſelves; only believers in Chriſt have a good thought of him, to their own joy and comfort: faith is a good thought of Chriſt; to them that believe, he is precious; and ſuch, thro' believing in him, are filled with joy unſpeakable, and full of glory; ſuch think often, and well, of the dignity of Chriſt's perſon, of the excellency and uſefulneſs of his offices, of the virtue of his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice, and of the ſufficiency of his grace for them: they think well of what he did for them in eternity, as their ſurety, in the council and covenant of peace; and of what he has done for them in time, by ſuffering and dying for them in their room and ſtead; and of what he is now doing for them in heaven, as their advocate and interceſſor.

---

[a] Moſes Kotſenſis Mitzvot Tora pr. affirm. 9.

[b] In Miſn. Peah, c. 1. §. 1.

[c] Jarchi in Iſ. xlviii. 16. & in Mal. i. 1.

[d] Hilch. Yeſode Hatorah, c. 1. §. 6.

[e] Vid. Abkath Rokel. l. 1. p. 3.

Ver. 43. He ſaith unto them, &c.] Not denying it to be a truth they affirmed; but rather granting and allowing it: he argues upon it, tho' he tacitly refuſes their ſenſe and meaning of the phraſe, thus, how then doth David in ſpirit call him Lord? that is, if he is a mere man, if he is only the ſon of David, according to the fleſh, if he has no other, or higher deſcent than from him, how comes it to paſs, that David, under the inſpiration of the Spirit of God, by which he wrote his book of Pſalms, ſee 2 Sam. xxiii. 1, 2. where the paſſage, after cited, ſtands, to call him Lord; which ſuppoſes him to be more than barely his ſon, and to be a greater perſon than himſelf, one ſuperior in nature and dignity to him? for the phraſe in ſpirit, is not to be connected with the word Lord; as if the deſign of it was to ſhew, that the Meſſiah was Lord, or God, in ſpirit, or with reſpect to his divine nature, but, with the word call, expreſſing the influence of the Spirit of God, under which David wrote; otherwiſe the Phariſees would have had a direction how to have anſwered the queſtion, which ſo much puzzled them: ſaying, as in Pſ. cx. 1.

Ver. 44. The Lord ſaid unto my Lord, &c.] By the Lord that ſaid, is meant Jehovah the Father, who ſaid the following words at the time of Chriſt's aſcenſion, and entrance into heaven, after he had finiſhed the great work of man's ſalvation; prophetically delivered by the Pſalmiſt, under the inſpiration of the Spirit of God, being what was before purpoſed and promiſed: by my Lord, the perſon ſpoken to, the Meſſiah is deſigned, who was David's Adon, or Lord, by right both of creation and redemption: as God, he made him; and as the Meſſiah and Saviour redeemed him; and on both accounts had a right to rule over him. The words ſaid unto him are, ſit thou on my right hand; which is a figurative phraſe, and expreſſive of the exaltation, dignity, power, and authority of the Meſſiah; and of an honour done to him, which was never granted to the angels, nor to any mere man: till I make thine enemies thy footſtool; till all the enemies of him, and his people, are ſubdued under him; carnal profeſſors, as the Phariſees, and profane ſinners, who neither of them would have him to rule over them; the world, the devil, antichriſt, and all the powers of darkneſs, and the laſt enemy, death itſelf. That theſe words were ſpoken of the Meſſiah, and therefore pertinently cited, and properly applied to him, by Jeſus, is evident from the ſilence of the Phariſees; for had it not been the generally received ſenſe of the Jewiſh church, they would, at once, have objected it to him; which might, in ſome meaſure, have relieved them under that diſtreſs, into which they were brought by this paſſage propoſed unto them: but by their ſilence they acknowledged, that the pſalm was wrote by David; that it was wrote by him under the inſpiration of the Spirit of God; and that the Meſſiah was the ſubject of it. And the ſame is owned by ſome of their doctors, ancient, and modern. “Says “R. Joden, in the name of R. Chijah, in time to “come the holy bleſſed God will cauſe the king “Meſſiah to ſit at his right hand; as it is ſaid, the “Lord ſaid unto my Lord, &c.[f]” And the ſame ſays, R. Berachiah, in the name of R. Levi, elſewhere[g]. And, ſays another of their writers[h], “we “don't find any man, or prophet, whoſe birth “was propheſied of before the birth of his father “and mother, but Meſſiah our righteouſneſs; and “of him it is intimated, from the womb of the “morning, &c. i. e. before the womb of her that “bore thee was created, thy birth was propheſied “of: and this theſe words reſpect, before the ſun, “his name is Yinnon, Pſ. lxxii. 17. i. e. before the “creation of the ſun, the name of our Meſſiah was “ſtrong and firm, and he ſhall ſit at the right “hand of God; and this is what is ſaid, ſit at my “right hand.” In ſome writings of the Jews, eſteemed by them, very ancient[i], the Adon, or Lord, to whom theſe words are ſpoken, is interpreted of Meſſiah ben Joſeph, whom they make to ſit at the right hand of Abraham; which, tho' a falſe interpretation of the words, carries in it ſome marks and traces of the ancient ſenſe of them: yea, even ſome of the more modern Jews[k] have owned, that they belong to the Meſſiah, and apply them to him. Tho' others, obſerving what confuſion their fore-fathers were thrown into by Jeſus, and what improvement his followers have made of this ſenſe of the words ſince, have quitted it, and introduced ſtrange and foreign ones. Some [l] of them would have Abraham the patriarch to be the ſubject of this pſalm; and that it was compoſed either by Melchizedek, or by Eliezer, the ſervant of Abraham; or by David, on account of the victory Abraham obtained over the four kings, in reſcuing his kinſman Lot: but Melchizedek could not be the author of it, becauſe he was a far greater perſon than Abraham; he bleſſed him, and took tithes of him, and therefore would not call him Lord. Eliezer might indeed, as being his ſervant; but then he could not aſſign to him a ſeat at the right hand of God, or ſay of him, that he had an everlaſting prieſthood, after the order of Melchizedek: and tho' the pſalm was compoſed by David, yet not on the above account, for the ſame reaſons. Nor is David the ſubject of it, as others [m] have affirmed; for it cannot be thought that David would ſay this of himſelf, or call himſelf his Lord, which this ſenſe of the words makes him to do: and whereas others of them ſay, that it was wrote by one of the ſingers concerning him; it may be replied, that the title declares the contrary: beſides, David is not aſcended into heaven, nor is he ſet down at the right hand of God, nor had he any thing to do with the prieſthood, much leſs was he a prieſt after the order of Melchizedek, and that for ever: but all is true of the Meſſiah Jeſus, of whoſe kingdom and prieſthood, ſufferings, and exaltation, conqueſt of his enemies, and ſucceſs of his Goſpel, this whole pſalm is a very plain and manifeſt prophecy.

---

[f] Midraſh Tillim in Pſ. xviii. 35. apud Galatin. de Cath. ver. arcan. l. 8. c. 24.

[g] R. Moſes Hadarſan in Gen. xviii. 1. apud ib.

[h] R. Iſaac Arama in Gen. xlvii. 6. apud ib. l. 3. c. 17.

[i] Zohar in Num. fol. 99. 2. & Raya Mehimna, in ib. in Gen. fol. 87. 3.

[k] R. Saadiah Gaon in Dan. vii. 13. Nachman. diſp. cum Paulo, p. 36, 55.

Ver. 45. If David then call him Lord, &c.] That is, the Meſſiah, which is taken for granted, nor could the Phariſees deny it, how is he his ſon? The queſtion is to be anſwered upon true and juſt notions of the Meſſiah, but unanſwerable upon the principles of the Phariſees; who expected the Meſſiah only as a mere man, that ſhould be of the ſeed of David, and ſo his ſon; and ſhould ſit upon his throne, and be a proſperous and victorious prince, and deliver them out of the hands of their temporal enemies: they were able to make anſwer to the queſtion, ſeparately conſidered, as that he ſhould be of the lineage and houſe of David; ſhould lineally deſcend from him, be of his family, one of his offspring and poſterity, and ſo be properly and naturally his ſon; but how he could be ſo, conſiſtent with his being David's Lord, puzzled them. Had they underſtood and owned the proper divinity of the Meſſiah, they might have anſwered, that as he was God, he was David's Lord, his maker, and his king; and, as man, was David's ſon, and ſo both his root and offspring; and this our Lord meant to bring them to a confeſſion of, or put them to confuſion and ſilence, which was the conſequence.

Ver. 46. And no man was able to anſwer him a word, &c.] They ſaw the dilemma they were reduced to, either to acknowledge the deity of the Meſſiah, or confeſs their ignorance; and neither of them they cared to do, and therefore judged it to be the wiſeſt part to be ſilent. Neither durſt any man from that day forth aſk him any more queſtions: neither Phariſees nor Sadducees, for the ſame is obſerved by Luke xx. 40. of the Sadducees particularly, and was true of all ſorts, and every ſect of men among them: and thus our Lord was freed from a cavilling, captious, and troubleſome generation of men, from this time forward, to the time of his ſufferings, which was not very long after; for this was the third day before the paſſover, as appears from ch. xxvi. 1, 2.

CHAP. XXIII.

Ver. 1. THEN ſpake Jeſus to the multitude, &c.] To the common people that were about him in the temple; the high-prieſts and elders, Scribes, Phariſees, and Sadducees, having left him, being all nonpluſſed and ſilenced by him: and now, leſt on the one hand, the people ſeeing the ignorance and errors of theſe men detected by Chriſt, ſhould be tempted to conclude there was nothing in religion, and to neglect the word and worſhip of God, on account of the concern theſe men had in it; and, on the other hand, becauſe of their great authority and influence, being in Moſes's chair, leſt the people ſhould be led into bad principles and practices by them, he directs them in what they ſhould obſerve them, and in what not: that they were not altogether to be rejected, nor in every thing to be attended to; and warns them againſt their oſtentation, pride, hypocriſy, covetouſneſs, and cruelty; and, at the ſame time, removes an objection againſt himſelf, proving that he was no enemy to Moſes, and the law, rightly explained and practiſed: and to his diſciples; not only the twelve, but to all that believed in him, and were followers of him.

Ver. 2. Saying, the Scribes and Phariſees, &c.] The Perſic verſion adds, the prieſts: but Chriſt does not here ſpeak of the ſanhedrim, or grand council of the nation, and of their legiſlative power; but of thoſe that were the teachers of the people, and the interpreters of the law; and of thoſe, who, though they corrupted the word with their gloſſes and traditions, yet retained ſome truth, and at leaſt came nearer truth, then the Sadducees; who therefore are omitted, and only Scribes and Phariſees mentioned, who gave the literal and traditional ſenſe of the ſcriptures; of whom he ſays, they ſit in Moſes's ſeat: not that they were his ſucceſſors in his office as a legiſlator and mediator; tho' the Perſic verſion reads it, ſit in the place and chair of Moſes; but they read his law, and explained it to the people: this poſt and place, as yet, they kept in the office they were, and were to continue; and the people were to regard them ſo far as they ſpoke conſiſtent with the law, until it had its full accompliſhment in Chriſt. The alluſion is not to the chairs in which the ſanhedrim ſat in trying and determining cauſes, but to thoſe in which the doctors ſat when they expounded the law; for tho' they ſtood up when they read the law, or the prophets, they ſat down when they preached out of them: this cuſtom of the ſynagogue was obſerved by our Lord; ſee Luke iv. 16, 20.

Ver. 3. All therefore whatſoever they bid you obſerve, &c.] This muſt be reſtrained to things that were agreeable to the chair of Moſes, in which they ſat, to the law of Moſes, which they read and explained, to other parts of ſcripture and truth in general; for otherwiſe many of their gloſſes and traditions were repugnant to the law, and ought not to be obſerved, as appears from ch. v. and ch. xv. 6. The word obſerve, in this clauſe, is omitted by the Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions, and in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel; and Beza ſays, 'tis wanting in one ancient copy, but is in others; and is retained in the Syriac and Perſic verſions: that obſerve and do; hearken to what they ſay, give diligent heed unto it, take notice of it, and act according to it: but do not ye after their works; let their doctrine be the rule of your lives, ſo far as it agrees with the law of Moſes; but let not their actions be drawn into an example by you; conform to their inſtructions, but don't imitate their practices: for they ſay, and do not; they talk of good works, but do none; they bid others do them, but don't practiſe them themſelves; they very ſtrictly and ſeverely enjoin them on others, but are very careleſs themſelves to obſerve them; and of this the Jews are ſo conſcious, that they ſuggeſt the ſame doctrine [n]. "The daughter of another (a wicked man) came before Rabbi; ſhe ſaid to him, Rabbi, ſupply me with the neceſſaries of life: he replied to her, daughter, who art thou? ſhe anſwered him, the daughter of another: he ſaid to her, is there any of his ſeed in the world? for lo! it is written, Job xviii. 19. He ſhall neither have ſon, nor nephew, among his people, nor any remaining in his dwellings: ſhe replied to him, זכור לתורתו ואל תזכור מעשין, remember his law, or doctrine, but don't remember his works.—— Says R. Jochanan, what is that which is written, Mal. ii. 7. For the prieſts lips ſhould keep knowledge, and they ſhould ſeek the law at his mouth; for he is the meſſenger of the Lord of hoſts? If the doctor is like to an angel, or meſſenger of the Lord of hoſts, they ſhould ſeek the law at his mouth; and if not, they ſhould not ſeek the law at his mouth. Says Reſh Lekiſh, R. Meir found and explained that ſcripture, Prov. xxii. 17. Bow down thine ear, and hear the words of the wiſe, and apply thine heart to my knowledge: to their knowledge it is not ſaid, but to my knowledge. R. Chanina ſays, hence, Pſal. xlv. 10. Hearken, O daughter, and conſider, incline thine ear, forget thine own people, and thy father's houſe: on which the Gloſs is, forget their works, and do not learn them: he that knows how to take care not to learn their works, may learn the law from their mouths."——And a little after, "the diſciples of the wiſe men are like to a nut; as a nut, though it is defiled with mire and filth, yet that which is within it is not to be rejected; ſo a ſcholar, or a diſciple of a wiſe man, though he act wickedly, his law, or doctrine, is not to be deſpiſed." Good doctrine is not the worſe for being taught by bad men; nor are good works to be ſlighted and neglected, becauſe they are not done by all that teach them; but it muſt be owned that examples are very uſeful and forcible, and practice greatly recommends doctrine; and it is to be wiſhed, that they both always went together.

---

[l] Zohar in Gen. fol. 60. 3. Jarchi in Pſ. cx. 1. Vet. Nizzachon, p. 179, 180. R. Iſaac Chizuk Emuna, par. 1. c. 40. p. 321.

[m] Kimchi & Aben Ezra in Pſ. cx. 1.

Ver. 4. For they bind heavy burdens, &c.] Meaning not the rites and ceremonies of the law of Moſes, circumciſion, and other rituals, which obliged to the keeping of the whole law, which was a yoke men were not able to bear; but the traditions of the elders, which the Scribes and Phariſees were very tenacious of, and very ſeverely enjoined the obſervance of, and are called their heavy things [o]. "It is a tradition of R. Iſhmael, there are in the words of the law, that which is bound or forbidden, and that which is looſe or free; and there are in them light things, and there are in them heavy things; but the words of the Scribes, כולן חמורין הן, all of them are heavy." And a little after, "the words of the elders, חמורים, are heavier then the words of the prophets." Hence frequent mention is made, of "the light things of the ſchool of Shammai, ומחומרי, and of the heavy things of the ſchool of Hillell [p];" two famous doctors, heads of two univerſities, in being in Chriſt's time: theſe are alſo called, מכות פרושין, the blows, or wounds of the Phariſees [q]; not as Bartenora explains them, the wounds they gave themſelves, to ſhew their humility; or which they received, by beating their heads againſt the wall, walking with their eyes ſhut, that they might not look upon women, under a pretence of great chaſtity; but, as Maimonides ſays, theſe are their additions and heavy things, which they add to the law. Now the binding of theſe heavy things, means the impoſing them on men, obliging them to obſerve them very ſtrictly, under great penalties, ſhould they omit them. The alluſion is, to thoſe frequent ſayings in uſe among them, ſuch a thing is bound, and ſuch a thing is looſed; ſuch a Rabbi binds, and ſuch an one looſes; that is, forbids, or allows of ſuch and ſuch things; ſee the note on Matt. xvi. 19. and grievous to be born. This clauſe is left out in the Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions; but is in all the Greek copies, and ſerves to illuſtrate and aggravate, the burdenſome rites and inſtitutions of theſe people: and lay them on men's ſhoulders, but they themſelves will not move them with one of their fingers: the ſenſe is, not that they were ſo rigid and hard-hearted, that they would not move a finger, to remove theſe burdens from the ſhoulders of men, or eaſe them in the leaſt degree, or diſpenſe with their performance of them in the leaſt meaſure, upon any conſideration, though this alſo was true in many reſpects; but that they were ſo ſlothful and indolent themſelves, that though they ſo ſtrictly enjoined the obſervance of their numerous and unwritten traditions on the people, yet in many caſes, where they could without public notice, they neglected them themſelves, or at leaſt, made them lighter and eaſier to them, as in their faſtings, &c. In the Miſna [r], mention is made of a crafty wicked man, along with a woman Phariſee, and the blows of the Phariſees before ſpoken of; and in the Gemara [s], is explained by R. Hona, of one, "that makes things light for himſelf, and makes them heavy for others." Such crafty wicked men were the Scribes and Phariſees; though R. Meir pretended, that he made things light to others, and heavy to himſelf [t].

Ver. 5. But all their works they do for to be ſeen of men, &c.] All their prayers, alms-deeds, and faſtings, were all done in a publick manner, that men might behold them, and they might have applauſe and glory from them: they ſought neither the glory of God, nor the good of their fellow-creatures, nor any ſpiritual advantage and pleaſure to themſelves, in their performances; they neither attended to moral duties, nor ceremonious rites, nor the traditions of their fathers, any further than they could be ſeen by men in them, and keep up their credit and eſteem among them. Hence, they make broad their phylacteries: theſe were four ſections of the law, wrote on parchments, folded up in the ſkin of a clean beaſt, and tied to the head and hand. The four ſections were theſe following, viz. the firſt, was Exod. xiii. 2. to ver. 11. the ſecond, was Exod. xiii. 11. to ver. 17. the third, was Deut. vi. 4. to ver. 10. the fourth, was Deut. xi. 13. to

---

[n] T. Bab. Chagiga, fol. 15. 2.

[o] T. Hieroſ. Beracot, fol. 3. 2.

[p] T. Hieroſ. Sota, fol. 19. 2. Yom Tob. fol. 60. 2. & Beracot, fol. 3. 2.

[q] Miſn. Sota, c. 3. §. 4.

[r] Ubi ſupra.

[s] T. Bab. Sota, fol. 21. 2.

[t] T. Hieroſ. Beracot, fol. 3. 1.

ver. 22. Thoſe that were for the head, were written and rolled up ſeparately, and put in four diſtinct places, in one ſkin, which was faſtened with ſtrings to the crown of the head, towards the face, about the place where the hair ends, and where an infant's brain is tender; and they took care to place them in the middle, that ſo they might be between the eyes. Thoſe that were for the hand, were written in four columns, on one parchment, which being rolled up, was faſtened to the inſide of the left arm, where it is fleſhy, between the ſhoulder and the elbow, that ſo it might be over-againſt the heart [u]. Theſe they imagined, were commanded them by God, in Exod. xiii. 16. and Deut. vi. 8. whereas the ſenſe of theſe paſſages only is, that the goodneſs of God in delivering them out of Egypt, and the words of the law, ſhould be continually before them, in their minds and memories, as if they had tokens on their hands, and frontlets between their eyes; but they underſtood them literally, and obſerved them in the above manner. Theſe the Jews call Tephillin, becauſe they uſe them in time of prayer, and look upon them as uſeful, to put them in mind of that duty: they are here called phylacteries, becauſe they thought they kept them in the fear of God, preſerved in them the memory of the law, and them from ſin; yea, from evil ſpirits, and diſeaſes of the body. They imagined there was a great deal of holineſs in, and valued themſelves much upon the uſe of them [w]; and the Phariſees, becauſe they would be thought to be more holy and religious, and more obſervant of the law than others, wore theſe things broader than the reſt of the people; and enlarge the borders of their garments. Theſe were the fringes which they put upon the borders of their garments, and on them a ribband of blue, to put them in mind of the commandments, to obey them, Numb. xv. 38. Deut. xxii. 12. The obſervance of this law is of ſo much conſequence with the Jews, that they make all the commandments to depend on it [x]; and ſay, that it is equal to them all, and that he that is guilty of the breach of it, is worthy of death [y]: they aſcribe the like virtue to theſe fringes, as to their phylacteries, and think themſelves much the better for the wearing them; and the Phariſees, becauſe they would appear with a greater air of ſanctity and devotion than others, made theirs larger. We [z] read of one Ben Tzitzith Hacceſeth, a man of this complexion, who was ſo called, becauſe his Tzitzith, or fringes, were drawn upon a pillow; and there are ſome that ſay, that the pillow was bore between the great men of Rome: it was drawn after him, not upon the ground, but upon a cloth or tapeſtry, and the train ſupported by noblemen, as is pretended. This was one of thoſe, that enlarged the Tzitzith, or fringes, beyond the ordinary ſize; hence Mark calls it, long cloathing.

Ver. 6. And love the uppermoſt rooms at feaſts, &c.] Or the firſt and chief places to ſit, or lie down on, at ordinary meals, and eſpecially at large entertainments, where the great ones ſat, as in 1 Sam. ix. 22. where Jarchi on the place obſerves, that by the manner of their ſitting, it was known who was the greateſt; and this the Scribes and Phariſees affected. With the Romans, the moſt honourable place was at the upper end of the table: ſome think it was more honourable to ſit in the middle, but the maſter of the feaſt ſat at the lower end; and to ſenior men, and who were venerable with age, or excelled in prudence and authority, the firſt ſitting down, and the more honourable place, were given; and when the table was taken away, they uſed to riſe firſt [a]: the middle place was the more honourable with the Numidians [b], and ſo it ſeems to be with the Romans [c], and alſo with the Jews; and this the Scribes and Phariſees loved, deſired, ſought for, and were not pleaſed if they had not it. It is ſaid [d] of Simeon ben Shetach, a noted Phariſee, about, or rather before the times of Chriſt, that having fled upon a certain account from king Jannai, he ſent for him, and when he came, "he ſat himſelf between the king and the queen: the king ſaid to him, why doſt thou mock me? he replied to him, I don't mock thee, thou haſt riches and I have learning, as it is written, Wiſdom is a defence, and money is a defence, Eccl. vii. 12.——He ſaid to him, but why doſt thou ſit between the king and queen? He replied, in the book of Ben Sira, it is written, Exalt her and ſhe ſhall promote thee, and cauſe thee to ſit among princes. He ordered to give him a cup, that he might aſk a bleſſing; he took the cup and ſaid, bleſſed be the food that Jannai and his friends eat." Thus on account of their wiſdom and learning, they thought they had a right to take the upper hand of kings themſelves: and the chief ſeats in the ſynagogues; for theſe were different; the ſeats of the ſenior men were turned towards the people, and the backs of them were towards the ark or cheſt, in which the holy books were put; and theſe ſeem to be what the Scribes and Phariſees coveted, that they might be in the full view of the people. And ſo ſays Maimonides [e], "How do the people ſit in the ſynagogues? The elders ſit, i. e. firſt, and their faces are towards the people, and their backs are to the temple, or holy place; and all the people ſit in rows, and the faces of one row are to the backs of the row that is before them; ſo that the faces of all the people are to the holy place, and to the elders, and to the ark."

Ver. 7. And greetings in the markets, &c.] They uſed to ſtrole about the markets, being publick places, where there was a great concourſe of people, on purpoſe to be taken notice of before multitudes, with ſingular marks of reſpect; as ſtretching out the hand, uncovering the head, and bowing the knee: and to be called of men, Rabbi, Rabbi; becauſe of their great authority, and largeneſs of their knowledge: the repetition of the word Rabbi, is not made in the Vulgate Latin, nor in the Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions, nor in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel, but is in all the Greek copies, and very juſtly; ſince it was uſual in the ſalutations of them, to double the word. It is reported [f] of R. Eleazar ben Simeon, of Migdal Gedur, that having reproached a deformed man he met in the road; when he came to the city where the man lived, "the citizens came out to meet him, and ſaid unto him, peace be upon thee, ר רבי מורי, Rabbi, Rabbi, Maſter, Maſter; he (Eleazar) ſaid to them, who do ye call Rabbi, Rabbi? They replied to him, he who followed thee: he ſaid unto them, if this be a Rabbi, let there not be many ſuch in Iſrael." The Jews pretend, that king Jehoſhaphat uſed to ſalute the doctors with theſe titles; though they forget, that they were not in uſe in his time, as will be hereafter obſerved: they ſay [g], “ whenever he “ ſaw a diſciple of the wiſe men, he roſe from his “ throne, and embraced and kiſſed him, and called “ him, אבי אבי רבי רבי מרי מרי, father, father, “ Rabbi, Rabbi, Maſter, Maſter.” Where you have the three different words uſed by our Lord in this and the following verſes, by which theſe men loved to be called, and he inveighed againſt; nay, they not only ſuggeſt, that kings gave them theſe honourable titles, and they expected them from them, but even they liked to be called kings themſelves. It is ſaid [h] of R. Hona and R. Chaſda, that as they were ſitting together, one paſſed by them, “ and ſaid to them, peace be to you kings, “ שלמא עליכו מלכי, peace be to you kings: they “ ſaid to him, from whence does it appear to thee, “ that the Rabbins are called kings? He replied to “ them, from what is written, by me kings reign, “ &c. They ſaid to him, from whence haſt thou “ it, that we are to double or repeat peace, or ſa“ lutation to kings? He anſwered them, that R. “ Judah ſaid, that Rab ſaid from hence, 1 Chron. xii. “ 18. Then the Spirit came upon Amaſai, &c.” This title began but to be in uſe in the times of our Lord, or a very little while before: none of the prophets had it, nor Ezra the ſcribe, nor the men of the great ſynagogue, nor Simeon the juſt, the laſt of them; nor Antigonus, a man of Socho, a diſciple of his: and it is obſerved by the Jews themſelves [i], that “ the five “ couple are never called by the name of Rabban, “ nor by the name of Rabbi, only by their own “ name.” By whom are meant, Joſeph ben Joezer, and Joſeph ben Jochanan; Joſhua ben Perachia, ſaid to be the maſter of Jeſus of Nazareth, and Nittai the Arbelite; Judah ben Tabai, and Simeon ben Shetach; Shemaiah and Abtalion; Hillell and Shammai. The ſons, or diſciples of the two laſt, firſt took theſe titles. Rabban Simeon, the ſon of Hillell, thought by ſome to be the ſame Simeon that had Chriſt in his arms, is [k] ſaid to be the firſt that was called by this name; and it is alſo obſerved by them [l], that Rabban was a name of greater honour than Rabbi, or Rab, and that Rabbi was more honourable than Rab; and to be called by a man's own name, was more honourable than any of them. The Karaite Jews make much the ſame complaint, and give much the ſame account of the pride and vanity of the Rabbinical doctors, as Chriſt here does; for ſo one of them ſays [m]; “ The Karaites don't uſe to act according “ to the cuſtom of the wiſe men among the Rab“ bans, to make to themſelves Gods of ſilver, and “ guides of gold, with this view, להקרא רב, to “ be called Rab; and alſo to gather wealth and food “ to fulneſs, &c.” [u] Targ. Jon. Jarchi, & Baal Hatturim in Exod. xiii. 16. & Deut. vi. 8. Maimon. Hilch. Tephillin, c. 1. §. 1. & c. 2. §. 2. & c. 3. §. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. & c. 4. §. 1, 2.

---

[w] Maimon. ib. c. 4. §. 25, 26. Moſes Kotſenſis Mitzvot Tora, pr. affirm. 3. 23. Targ. in Cant. viii. 3.

[x] Maimon. Hilch. Tzitzith, c. 3. §. 12.

[y] T. Bab. Nedarim, fol. 25. 1. Shebuot, fol. 29. 1. & Menachot, fol. 43. 2.

[z] T. Bab. Gittin, fol. 56. 1.

[a] Alex. ab Alex. Genial Dier, l. 5. c. 21.

[b] Salluſt. Bell. Jugurth. p. 45.

[c] Vid. Alſtorph. de lect. vet. p. 117. Minut. Felix, p. 3, 4.

[d] T. Hieroſ. Beraçot, fol. 11. 2. Bereſh. Rabba, §. 91. fol. 78. 4.

[e] Hilchot Tephilla, c. 11. §. 4.

[f] T. Bab. Taanith, fol. 20. 2.

Ver. 8. But be not ye called Rabbi, &c.] Don't be ambitious of any ſuch title, fond of it, or affect it, or be elated with it, ſhould it be given you; nor look upon yourſelves as men of power and authority over others; as having the dominion over mens faith, a power to make laws for others, impoſe them in a magiſterial way, and bind and looſe mens conſciences at pleaſure, as theſe men do: for one is your maſter, even Chriſt; meaning himſelf, the true Meſſiah, the head of the church, king of ſaints, and Lord of all; who had all power in heaven and in earth, to make laws, appoint ordinances, and oblige men to receive his doctrines, and obey his commands: the word Chriſt, is left out in the Vulgate Latin, the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions; but is in the Arabic verſion, and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel, and in all the ancient Greek copies Beza conſulted, excepting two: no other indeed can be meant; he is the great Rabbi, and doctor, that is to be hearkened to, and the maſter we are all to obey: and all ye are brethren; not merely as the deſcendants of Adam, but as being in a ſpiritual relation, the children of God, and diſciples of Chriſt, and ſo have no ſuperiority one over another: this may regard the diſciples, both as believers and chriſtians, partakers of the ſame grace, and ſtanding in the ſame relation to God, Chriſt, and one another, and having an equal right to the ſame privileges; and as apoſtles and miniſters, one as ſuch, no, not Peter; having no pre-eminence over the other, having the ſame commiſſion, doctrine, and authority, one as the other.

Ver. 9. And call no man your father upon the earth, &c.] Not but that children may, and ſhould call their natural parents, fathers; and ſuch who have been inſtrumental in the converſion of ſouls, may be rightly called by them their ſpiritual fathers; as ſervants and ſcholars alſo, may call thoſe that are over them, and inſtruct them, their maſters: our Lord does not mean, by any of theſe expreſſions, to ſet aſide all names and titles, of natural and civil diſtinction among men, but only to reject all ſuch names and titles, as are uſed to ſignify an authoritative power over mens conſciences, in matters of faith and obedience; in which, God and Chriſt are only to be attended to. Chriſt's ſenſe is, that he would have his diſciples not fond of any titles of honour at all; and much leſs aſſume an authority over men, as if they were to depend on them, as the founders of the chriſtian religion, the authors of its doctrines and ordinances; and to take that honour to themſelves, which did not belong to them; nor even chuſe to be called by ſuch names, as would lead people to entertain too high an opinion of them, and take off of their dependance on God the Father, and himſelf, as theſe titles the Scribes and Phariſees loved to be called by, did: and who were called not only by the name of Rabbi, but Abba, father alſo: hence we read of Abba Saul, or father Saul [n]; Abba Joſe ben Jochanan, a man of Jeruſalem [o]; Abba Chanan [p], Abba Chelphetha, a man of the village of Hananiah [q]; Abba Gorion [r], and others; and this name was, לשון כבוד כמו רבי, a name of honour, even as Rabbi [s], and of great authority: the wiſe men are ſaid to be, אבות הכל, the fathers of all [t], to whom all gave heed, and upon whom all depended, as ſo many oracles. There is a whole treatiſe in their Miſna, called Pirke Abot, which contains ſome of the oracles, and peculiar ſayings of theſe fathers, the Miſnic doctors, and which are preferred to the writings of Moſes, and the prophets. In this ſenſe, and upon this ſcore, our Lord inveighs againſt them, and cautions his diſciples againſt giving or taking all ſuch titles, in ſuch ſenſe. For one is your father, which is in heaven; who is ſo, both by creation and adoption, and is poſſeſſed of all paternal authority; and is to be honoured and obeyed by all; from whom all wiſdom and knowledge is derived, and who has the care and government of all in heaven and in earth.

Ver. 10. Neither be ye called maſters, &c.] Or guides and leaders; not but that the miniſters of the word, are in a ſenſe ſuch; it is their buſineſs to lead and direct ſouls to Chriſt, to guide their feet in the way of peace, and to go before them, as examples to them, in word, in converſation, faith, and purity; but then they are to guide them according to the word of God, and not their own dictates; and teach them to obſerve the rules, and obey the ordinances of Chriſt, and not what are of their own inventing and preſcribing; and to enforce the authority of their great Lord and Maſter, and not their own; and direct men to a dependance on Chriſt, as head of the church, who is the one Lord, as his faith is one, and his baptiſm one alſo: for one is your maſter, even Chriſt; which is ſaid before, in ver. 8. but being a matter of ſo much importance to the honour of Chriſt, and men being ſo apt to ſet up for maſters themſelves, in oppoſition to him, or in conjunction with him, or above him, it was neceſſary to repeat it; for in an authoritative ſenſe he is the one, and only maſter of the aſſemblies.

---

[g] T. Bab. Maccot, fol. 24. 1. & Cetubot, fol. 103. 2.
[h] T. Bab. Gittin, fol. 62. 1.
[i] Ganz. Tzemach David, par. 1. fol. 21. 1.
[k] Ib. fol. 25. 1.
[l] Ib.
[m] Eliahu Adderet, c. 6. apud Trigland. de Sect. Kar. c. 10. p. 164.
[n] Pirke Abot, c. 2. §. 8.
[o] T. Bab. Yebamot, fol. 53. 2.
[p] Ib. fol. 64. 1.
[q] T. Bab. Bava Metzia, fol. 94. 1. & Bava Bathra, fol. 56. 2.
[r] Maſſech. Sopherim, c. 15. §. 10.
[s] Juchaſin, fol. 31. 2. & 61. 2.
[t] Maimon in Miſn. Peah, c. 1. §. 1.

Ver. 11. But he that is greateſt among you, &c.] Either who really is ſo, having more grace, and greater gifts beſtowed upon him, than others; which doubtleſs was the caſe of ſome of the diſciples, or who deſired to be the greateſt, was ambitious of, and affected a ſuperiority over others, and to be in the higheſt poſt and place, as it is certain ſome of them did. This was what they were often contending about among themſelves, who ſhould be greateſt; and Chriſt here ſeems to have regard to that vain ſpirit, which appeared among them; and his view is, to check and reſtrain it: ſhall be your ſervant; or, let him be your ſervant. Service is the way to honour; he that would be moſt eſteemed, ought to do the moſt work; and the man that has the moſt grace, and the greateſt gifts, ought to employ them for the uſe and benefit of others; ſee the note on ch. xx. 27.

Ver. 12. And whoſoever ſhall exalt himſelf, &c.] Above his fellow-chriſtians, or fellow-miniſters, by entertaining too high an opinion of himſelf, by boaſting of his gifts, as preferable to others, and as if he had not received them; by aſſuming, or eagerly coveting titles of honour among men, or by affecting honour that don't belong to him, or abuſing what he has: ſhall be abaſed; or humbled by God, or men, or both; ſuch ſhall loſe the honour they have, and come greatly ſhort of what they are ambitious of; they ſhall fall into diſgrace with men, and are abominable in the ſight of God: and he that ſhall humble himſelf; by entertaining low thoughts, and a mean opinion of himſelf, behaving modeſtly among men; not being elated with his gifts, but acknowledging that they are owing to the grace and goodneſs of God; and uſing them in a humble manner, for the advantage of others; not coveting honour from men, nor lifted up with what is conferred on him: ſhall be exalted; by God, or men, or both; if not in this world, yet in the world to come: and indeed, generally ſpeaking, ſuch modeſt, humble perſons, are moſt eſteemed among men; and God gives more grace unto them, and will at laſt give them glory. This is a ſaying, often uſed by our Lord on different accounts, both with reſpect to his diſciples, for their inſtruction, and with regard to the Scribes and Phariſees, for their mortification; ſee Luke xiv. 11. and xviii. 14. It ſeems to be a proverbial expreſſion, and much in uſe among the Jews: it is ſaid in ſo many words in the Talmud [u], as here; "whoſoever ſhall humble himſelf, the holy bleſſed "God ſhall exalt him; and whoſoever ſhall exalt himſelf, the holy bleſſed God ſhall humble "him."

Ver. 13. But wo unto you Scribes and Phariſees, hypocrites, &c.] It ſeems from hence, that the Scribes and Phariſees had not left him, at leaſt not all of them, notwithſtanding the confuſion they were thrown into; but were ſtill about him, obſerving what he ſaid to the people, and watching an opportunity to take every advantage againſt him; whom he addreſſes in a very awful manner, calling them hypocrites, as he truly might; for they were ſuch, both to God and men: he had detected them already before the people, in ſeveral inſtances of hypocriſy; and gives ſufficient reaſons, in the following part of this chapter, to ſupport the character he gives of them, and his charge againſt them; denouncing a woe upon them in this world, and that which is to come, no leſs than eight times; expreſſing his abhorrence of their wickedneſs, his commiſeration of their caſe, and their certain deſtruction: for ye ſhut up the kingdom of heaven againſt men; not eternal life and happineſs, the entrance into which, can neither be opened nor ſhut by men: thoſe whom God determines to bring thither, ſhall have an entrance abundantly miniſtred to them, in ſpite of the oppoſition of men and devils; though theſe men did all that in them lay, to hinder perſons enjoying everlaſting glory. But the Goſpel diſpenſation is here meant, which was opened by the miniſtry of John the Baptiſt, Chriſt and his diſciples, and which the Scribes and Phariſees did all they could to ſhut; by diſcouraging the preaching of the Goſpel, and the adminiſtration of ordinances, in which this diſpenſation lay; and prejudicing the minds of men againſt it, that they might not embrace the doctrines of it, nor ſubmit to its ordinances: they, by their office, ought to have opened and explained the ſcriptures, the prophecies of the Old Teſtament relating to the Meſſiah, and led the people into a knowledge of the myſteries of his kingdom, and encouraged them to enter into this new ſtate of things; which, according to the true intent of ſcripture, was to take place, and now did; but inſtead of this, they ſhut up the ſcriptures, took away the key of knowledge, and laid it aſide; and darkened the ſcriptures by their falſe gloſſes, and obliged the people to obſerve the traditions of the elders, and which they call, סיג לתורה, an hedge for the law [w]; to which Beza thinks, the alluſion is here, and by which men were ſhut up, and kept from the true knowledge both of law and Goſpel: for ye neither go in yourſelves, neither ſuffer ye them that are entring to go in: they neither believed in the Meſſiah themſelves, nor embraced the doctrines relating to his perſon and office: have any of the Phariſees believed on him? No; they received him not, they rejected him, and alſo the counſel of God againſt themſelves, not being baptized with the baptiſm of John, the forerunner of Chriſt; nor would they ſuffer others, that were inclined to profeſs their faith in him, and be baptized, to do it; but diſcouraged them all they could, by their reproachful treatment of the perſon, miracles, and miniſtry of Chriſt, and by their threatnings and menaces, and by their excommunications of ſuch as made a confeſſion of him.

Ver. 14. Wo unto you Scribes and Phariſes, hypocrites, &c.] The ſame character is given as before, fore, and the ſame wo denounced, and a freſh reaſon given of it: for ye devour widows houſes; that is, the goods in the houſes of ſuch as were left with fatherleſs children, and but little to ſupport them; who being left alone, and none to adviſe them, and being weak, and prone to ſuperſtition; theſe greedy dogs, as Iſaiah calls them, who could never have enough, eaſily impoſed upon them, wormed them out of their ſubſtance, ſtripp'd them bare of the neceſſaries of life, prevailed on them to ſell their houſes and goods, and beſtow them on them; or got their little eſtates into their hands, pretending to take care, and diſpoſe of them for them, to their advantage: and for a pretence make long prayers; as if they were very holy, good men; or pretended that the ſubſtance of theſe widows, which they got into their hands, was for their long prayers for them; or they made long prayers for them in return for their ſubſtance. Maimonides[x] ſays, that “the ancient ſaints, or good men, uſed to ſtay an hour before prayer, and an hour after prayer, ויאריכם בתפלה שעה, and prolonged, or held an hour in prayer:” and this being three times a-day, nine hours every day, as is obſerved in the Talmud[y], were ſpent in this manner; and on this account they got the character of very devout and religious men, and hereby covered all their avarice, rapine, and oppreſſion of the poor: but God will not be mocked; therefore ye ſhall receive the greater damnation; both on account of their plundering and diſtreſſing the poor, the widows, and the fatherleſs; and alſo becauſe of their hypocriſy in doing this under the cover of religion and holineſs. Hence it appears, that there are degrees of puniſhment in hell, and that hypocrites, and all ſuch who oppreſs the poor, under the maſk of godlineſs, ſuppoſing gain to be that, will be partakers of the greateſt degree of it. In Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel it is called משפט ארוך, a long judgment, or damnation, in alluſion to their long prayers; and is the very reverſe of what they expect on account of them: they ſay[z], “three things prolong a man's days and years, המאריך בתפלתו, he that is long in his prayer” is the firſt metioned; and he that is long at his prayer, it is an excellency, they ſay; but inſtead of a long and happy life, he ſhall have a long damnation. This verſe is left out in ſome copies, and in others it ſtands before the former; in which order 'tis read in the Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions.

---

[u] T. Bab. Erubin, fol. 13. 2. & 54. 1. & Nedarim, fol. 55. 1.

[w] Pirke Abot, c. 1. §. 1.

Ver. 15. Wo unto you Scribes and Phariſees, hypocrites, &c.] The ſame character, and wo, are ſtill continued, and a new reaſon added, confirming the juſtneſs of them, in order to awaken and convince them, or, however, to caution the people againſt them: for ye compaſs ſea and land to make one proſelyte; that is, to the Jewiſh religion, and their particular ſect. There were two ſorts of proſelytes among them; one was called גר תושב, a proſelyte of the gate, one that might dwell in any of their towns, and cities, and who is thus deſcribed[a]; “who is a proſelyte of the gate? whoſoever takes upon him, before three neighbours, that he will not commit idolatry. R. Meir, and the wiſe men, ſay, whoſoever takes upon him the ſeven precepts which the ſons of Noah took upon them: others ſay, theſe don't come into the general rule of a proſelyte of the gate; who is then a proſelyte of the gate? this is a proſelyte, that eats what dies of itſelf, but takes upon him to fulfil all the commandments ſaid in the law, except that which forbids the eating of things that die of themſelves.” But the uſual account of ſuch an one is, who agrees to the ſeven precepts commanded the children of Noah[b], which were theſe[c]; the firſt forbad idolatry, the ſecond blaſphemy, the third murder, the fourth uncleanneſs, the fifth theft, the ſixth required judgments, or puniſhment on malefactors, the ſeventh forbad eating the member of any creature alive. The other proſelyte was called גר צדק, a proſelyte of righteouſneſs; and he was one that ſubmitted to circumciſion[d], and the reſt of the ceremonies of the law; and was in all reſpects as an Iſraelite himſelf; and of this ſort is the text to be underſtood. The Ethiopic verſion reads the words, baptize one proſelyte, and when he is baptized; referring to a cuſtom among the Jews, who baptized, or dipped their proſelytes in water, as well as circumciſed them; about which there are great diſputes in their writings; ſome alledging, that the dipping of them was neceſſary to the making them proſelytes; others affirming, that it was not: “a proſelyte that is circumciſed, and not dipped, dipped, and not circumciſed, the whole follows after, or depends on circumciſion, ſays R. Eliezer.” R. Joſhua ſays, even dipping delays it; (i. e. the want of it, hinders a man from being a proſelyte) but R. Joſhua ben Levi ſays, it ſhould go according to the tradition of Bar Kaphra; for the tradition of Bar Kaphra is, “that he that is circumciſed, and not dipped, lo! he is right; for there is no proſelyte but what is dipped, becauſe of pollutions that happen to him[e].” And elſewhere[f] this is debated in the following manner: “a proſelyte that is circumciſed, and not dipped, R. Eliezer ſays, lo! this is a proſelyte; for ſo we find concerning our fathers, that they were circumciſed, but not dipped. One that is dipped, and not circumciſed, R. Joſhua ſays, lo! this is a proſelyte; for ſo we find concerning our mothers, that they were dipped, but not circumciſed. The wiſe men ſay, one that is dipped, and not circumciſed, or circumciſed, and not dipped, is no proſelyte, until he is both circumciſed and dipped.” So the diſpute ended, and it became a ſettled point, that one ſhould never be reckoned a proſelyte, unleſs he was both circumciſed and dipped. And after this it became cuſtomary to receive proſelytes by circumciſion, dipping, and ſacrifice; and the manner was this[g]: “a ſtranger that comes to be made a proſelyte at this time, they ſay unto him, what doſt thou ſee, that thou comeſt to be made a proſelyte? doſt thou not know that the Iſraelites at this time are miſerable, baniſhed, drove about, and plundered, and chaſtiſements come upon them? If he ſays, I know this, but it does not ſatisfy me, they receive him immediately, and make known ſome of the light commands, and ſome of the heavy commands to him; and they acquaint him with the buſineſs of gleanings, the forgotten ſheaf, the corner of the field left ſtanding, and the poors tithe: they alſo inform him of the penalties of the commands, and ſay unto him, know thou, that before thou cameſt into this way, thou didſt eat fat, and was not puniſhed with cutting off; thou didſt profane the ſabbath, and was not puniſhed with ſtoning: but

---

[x] Hilch. Tephillah, c. 4. §. 16.
[y] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 32. 2.
[z] Ib. fol. 54. 2.
[a] T. Bab. Avoda Zara, fol. 64. 2.
[b] Maimon. Hilch. Obede Cochabim, c. 10. §. 6. & Maacalot Aſurot, c. 11. §. 7. & Iſſure Biah, c. 14. §. 7.
[c] Ib. Hilch. Melachim, c. 9. §. 1.
[d] Zohar in Exod. fol. 36. 1.
[e] T. Hieroſ. Kidduſhin, fol. 64. 4.
[f] T. Bab. Yebamot, fol. 46. 1, 2.
[g] Ib. fol. 47. 1, 2.

“now if thou eateſt fat, thou'lt be puniſhed with cutting off; and if thou profaneſt the ſabbath, thou'lt be puniſhed with ſtoning: and as they inform him of the penalties of the precepts, ſo they acquaint him with the giving of the rewards of them; ſaying to him, know thou that the world to come is not made but for the righteous; and the Iſraelites at this time can't receive neither much good, nor much puniſhment: but they don't multiply words, nor critically enquire of him; if he receives theſe things, they immediately circumciſe him; and if there remain in him obſtructions, hindering circumciſion, they circumciſe him a ſecond time; and when he is healed they immediately dip him; and two diſciples of the wiſe men ſtand over him, and acquaint him with ſome of the light commands, and ſome of the heavy commands; then he dips, and comes up, and is as an Iſraelite in all reſpects: if a woman, the women ſet her in water up to her neck, and two diſciples of the wiſe men ſtand by her without, and inform her of ſome of the light commands, and ſome of the heavy commands.” And, as Maimonides[h] adds, who gives a larger account of this matter, “ſhe ſits in the water, and after that dips herſelf before them; and they turn away their faces, and go out, ſo that they do not ſee her, when ſhe comes out of the water.” From all which it appears, that this affair was moved after our Lord's time; was not a ſettled point till a good while after; and is a cuſtom that has obtained ſince the Jews were drove out of their own land; tho' they pretend to ſay it was an ancient practice of their fathers, of which they can give no ſufficient proof: wherefore there could be no regard had to it in this text, and conſequently the Ethiopic verſion of it is not a right one; nor can the dipping of proſelytes by the Jews be what Chriſtian baptiſm takes its riſe from, or in any reſpect be modell'd according to it, between which, in many things, there is a wide difference. Now the Jews were very diligent and induſtrious, which is meant by compaſſing of ſea and land: they uſed all kinds of methods, ways, and means, to gain ſuch a point, and ſometimes very wicked ones. “Rabbenu Tam[i] allowed a daughter of Iſrael to change her religion, and a ſtranger to lie with her, that ſhe might confirm it, when he became a proſelyte.” And this they were ſo exceeding fond of, not out of any regard to the glory of God, or the good of the ſouls of men; nor did they really love the proſelytes: and it is often ſaid by them[k], that “proſelytes are hard, or uneaſy to Iſrael, as the itch or ſcab.” The Gloſs ſays, becauſe they were not expert in the commandments, and were the cauſe of puniſhment, and the Iſraelites were apt to imitate their works; but they coveted to make them, becauſe hereby either they ſtrengthened their own party, or filled their purſes with their ſubſtance, or got applauſe and credit among the common people; for the making a proſelyte was reckoned a very great action, and is aſcribed to the patriarchs Abraham and Jacob, and made equal to creation[l]. “Says R. Eliezer, in the name of R. Joſe ben Zimra, if all that come into the world were gathered together to create even one fly, they would not be able to put breath into it: but you'll object what he ſaith, the ſouls they made in Haran, Gen. xii. 5. but theſe are the proſelytes whom Abraham proſelyted; but why does he ſay made, and not proſelyted? to teach thee, that whoever brings near a ſtranger, and proſelytes him, is as if he created him. You will ſay Abraham made proſelytes, but not Sarah: the text is, the ſouls which they made in Haran; which he made is not written, but which they made: Abraham proſelyted the men, and Sarah proſelyted the women.” And a little after, “Jacob made proſelytes, as it is written, Gen. xxxv. 2. Jacob ſaid unto his houſhold, &c.” And in imitation of theſe they might be fond of making proſelites, but no further than their own intereſt was ſome way or other concerned: and when he is made, ye make him two-fold more the child of hell than yourſelves; for to their former errors in heatheniſm, ſome of which they might ſtill retain, they added new ones, they received from them, equally as bad, and were but more and more deſerving of hell, and even more than their maſters; and beſides, were trained up by them in the moſt bitter prejudices againſt Chriſt, and his Goſpel; and many of them proved more violent perſecutors of the followers of Chriſt, than the original Jews themſelves; ſee Acts xv. 50. and xiv. 2, 19. Our Lord here ſeems to oppoſe a common notion and ſaying of theirs[m], that when “one was made a proſelyte, he became entirely like a new-born babe;” but ſo far from being like one in innocence and harmleſſneſs, that he became a child of hell, filled with wrath and malice, and fitted for deſtruction; and ſo oppoſes another notion of theirs, that hell-fire has no power over their diſciples, nor even over the tranſgreſſors of Iſrael[n]: but they'll find it, by experience, that neither their deſcent from Abraham, nor their learning, nor their religion, will ſave them from the devouring flames, which their ſins have made them ſo deſerving of, and ſo are בני גיהנם, children of hell[o]; a Talmudic phraſe; the meaning of which they underſtood well enough, and which was applicable to them, and more ſo to their proſelytes; and that as owing to them, which was an aggravation of their own guilt and condemnation.

Ver. 16. Wo unto you, you blind guides, &c.] Meaning the ſame perſons, the Scribes and Phariſees, as before, tho' not named, who pretended to be guides of the blind, Rom. ii. 19. but were themſelves blind, and ſo very unfit to be guides of others: they were as they were born, ignorant of divine things, of God in Chriſt, of the true Meſſiah, of the true meaning of the ſcriptures, of the ſpirituality of the law, and of the Goſpel of Chriſt, and the way of ſalvation by him; and their minds were blinded by the God of this world, and with a greedy and inſatiable covetouſneſs after the things of it, of which Chriſt here gives an inſtance: which ſay, whoſoever ſhall ſwear by the temple it is nothing; meaning, either that it was no ſin to uſe ſuch an oath, or it was not binding upon a man: he might chuſe whether he would abide by what he ſwore by the temple he would do; and thus they ignorantly and wickedly encouraged vain ſwearing and perjury. It was uſual with them to ſwear by the temple: take an inſtance, or two. “Says R. Jochanan[p], היכלא, by the temple, it is in our hands; but what ſhall I do?” The Gloſs upon it is; “it is an oath by the temple of God, that it is in our power to reveal the illegitimacy of the families

---

[h] Hilch. Iſſure Biah, c. 14. §. 6.

[i] Piſke Toſeph. Cetubot, art. 7.

[k] T. Bab. Yebamot, fol. 47. 2. & 109. 2. Kidduſhin, fol. 70. 2. & Nidda, fol. 13. 2.

[l] Bereſhit Rabba, §. 39. fol. 35. 1. & §. 84. fol. 72. 3, 4. Maimon. Hilch. Iſſure Bia, c. 14. §. 11. & Eduth, c. 13. §. 2.

[m] T. Bab. Yebamot, fol. 22. 1. & 48. 2. & 62. 1. & 97. 2.

[n] T. Bab. Chagiga, fol. 27. 1.

[o] T. Bab. Roſhhaſhanah, fol. 17. 1.

[p] T. Bab. Kidduſhin, fol. 71. 1.

“ lies of the land of Iſrael.” “ Says R. Zechariah ben “ Hakatzab [p], המעון הזה, by this habitation, (mean- “ ing the temple) her hand was not removed from “ my hand from the time the Gentiles entered into “ Jeruſalem, to the time they went out.” Jarchi and Bartenora's note on it is, this is an oath. Again, “ ſays R Simeon ben Gamaliel [q], המעון הזה, by this “ habitation; I will not reſt this night until they “ (doves) are ſold for pence a-piece.” The Gloſs on it is, “ he ſwore by the ſanctuary.” But whoſoever ſhall ſwear by the gold of the temple he is guilty; or is bound, or is a debtor, to make good his oath; he cannot be excuſed, but muſt be obliged to fulfil it; or if he does not, he is guilty of perjury. This is to be underſtood not of the gold that covered any part of the temple; nor of the golden veſſels in it; but of the gold, or money, or gifts which were offered for the ſervice of the temple: and the ſenſe is, that whoſoever ſwore by Korban, and that this, or that ſhould be as Korban, he ſhould not go back from it; he was obliged to give it. This ſhewed the covetous diſpoſition of theſe men, who made nothing of oaths that were ſwore by the temple; but thoſe that were made by the Korban, or the gifts of it, were binding, becauſe their intereſt was in it; it was for their gain.

Ver. 17. Ye fools, and blind, &c.] That argue after ſo ridiculous a manner, that make uſe of ſuch thin ſophiſtry, that every body may ſee through it; who muſt be ſtupid and ſottiſh to the laſt degree, and their minds fooliſhly blinded with avarice, as to pleaſe and ſatisfy themſelves with ſo poor a diſtinction, that would by no means ſerve them, but make againſt them: for whether is greater, the gold, or the temple that ſanctifieth the gold? the temple to be ſure: for that was the ſeat of the divine majeſty, built for him to dwell in, and in which he took up his reſidence; and was dedicated to his ſervice, and in it was divine worſhip performed unto him. The temple was ſanctified by the preſence of God in it; and the gold ſanctified by the temple, being devoted to the ſervice of it: whatever holineſs it had, it had it from the temple, and therefore the temple muſt be greater than that; and conſequently it muſt be moſt extravagantly ridiculous and fooliſh in them, to make oaths by the gold of the temple, and gifts dedicated to its ſervice, and on that ſcore ſanctified by it, more binding and ſacred than ſuch as were by the temple itſelf.

Ver. 18. And whoſoever ſhall ſwear by the altar, it is nothing, &c.] Theſe are again the words or ſayings of the Scribes and Phariſees, and expreſs their ſentiments and practice: it was uſual with them to ſwear by the altar; and this was reckoned either no ſin at all, or ſuch an oath was not accounted binding on a man; he might break, or keep it, as he thought fit: of this kind of ſwearing, we have the following inſtances. One ſaid to another [r], “ ſwear “ to me that thou wilt not diſcover me, and he “ ſwore to him; by what did he ſwear? ſays R. “ Joſe bar Chanina, במזבח הפנימי, by the inner- “ moſt altar.” Again, it is ſaid of Zedekiah [s], that “ he (Nebuchadnezzar) made him to ſwear; by “ what did he make him to ſwear? ſays R. Joſe, “ by the covenant he made him to ſwear; Rabbi “ ſays במזבח, by the altar he made him to ſwear.” And elſewhere [t] it is ſaid of him, “ and he alſo re- “ belled againſt king Nebuchadnezzar, who made him “ ſwear by God, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 13. By what did “ he make him ſwear? ſays R. Joſe bar Chanina, “ by the horns of the innermoſt altar he made him “ ſwear.” But whoſoever ſweareth by the gift that is upon it, he is guilty; of perjury, if he does not make good his oath; he is bound to perform it, it is obligatory; whatever he ſwore ſhould be a gift for the altar, he was indiſpenſably obliged to bring it; for whatever he ſwore by Korban, or the gift, could never be put to any other uſe.

Ver. 19. Ye fools, and blind, &c.] This is very juſtly repeated, ſince this is no leſs an inſtance of their folly, blindneſs, and ſtupidity. In three copies of Beza's the word fools is not; nor is it in the Vulgate Latin, nor in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel; but the Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions have it: for whether is greater, the gift, or the altar that ſanctifieth the gift? The gift, or offering, before it was devoted to ſacred uſe, and brought, and laid upon the altar, was common, had no ceremonial ſanctity in it, and might be put to any uſe; but when it was brought, and laid upon the altar, it became holy; for, according to the law, whatever touched the altar, and indeed all, or any of the veſſels of the ſanctuary, was holy, Exod. xxix. 37. and xxx. 29. Chriſt ſpeaks the ſenſe of the law, and their own traditions, and in their own language, and argues from the ſame to the confutation of them: המזבח מקדש, the altar, they ſay [u], ſanctifies that which is fit for it; that is, that which is proper to be offered up upon it: “ as, the altar “ ſanctifies that which is fit for it, ſo the aſcent “ unto it ſanctifies; and as the altar, and the aſcent, “ ſanctify what is fit for them, ſo the veſſels ſanc- “ tify; the veſſels for liquids, ſanctify the liquids, “ and the dry meaſures ſanctify the dry; the veſ- “ ſels for liquids don't ſanctify the dry, nor the “ dry meaſures ſanctify the liquids; the holy veſ- “ ſels, which are bored, (or broken) when they do “ the ſervice they uſed to do, when whole, ſanctify, “ if not, they do not ſanctify; nor does any thing “ ſanctify but in the ſanctuary.” Now, ſince this is a clear caſe, that the altar ſanctifies the gift, and not the gift the altar, our Lord's queſtion is, which is the greater? A man that has the leaſt ſhare of common ſenſe will eaſily ſee, that the altar muſt be the greater: wherefore theſe Scribes and Phariſees muſt be wretchedly ſtupid to give out, that an oath made by the altar was not binding, when one that was made by the gift, or Korban, was binding; ſeeing the gift, or offering, received its ſanctity from the altar: hence, of the two, an oath made by the altar ſhould be more ſacred and obligatory than one made by the gift.

Ver. 20. Whoſoever therefore ſhall ſwear by the altar, &c.] Not that Chriſt allowed of ſwearing by the altar, or by the temple, or by heaven, or by any creature, animate or inanimate; for ſuch ſwearing is elſewhere diſapproved of by him, and forbid; but if a man did ſwear by the altar, he ought to know, and conſider, that he not only ſweareth by it, but by all the gifts and offerings that are brought, and laid upon it, and by all things thereon; whatever gifts and ſacrifices are offered upon it; which, by being put there, become holy, as the altar itſelf: ſo that he that ſwears by the altar, ſwears alſo by the gifts of the altar; and conſequently, according to their own traditions, ſuch oaths muſt be binding.

---

[p] Miſn. Cetubot, c. 2. §. 9. Juchaſin, fol. 56. 1.

[q] T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 166. 1. Miſn. Ceritot, c. 1. §. 7. Vid. c. 6. §. 3.

[r] Echa Rabbati, fol. 54. 1.

[s] Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 78. 1.

[t] Midraſh Megillat Eſther, fol. 89. 1.

[u] Miſn. Zebachim, c. 9. §. 7.

Ver. 21. And whoſo ſhall ſwear by the temple, &c.] As we have before ſeen they uſed to do, and as appears from what the poet ſays [w]:

Ecce negas, juraſque mihi per templa tonantis
Non credo: jura, verpe, per Anchialum.

in which he intimates, that if the Jew ſwore by the temple, he would not believe him; as well he might not, ſince ſuch an oath was accounted nothing; but bids him ſwear by Anchialus, that is, by חי אלוה, Chi Eloah, or חי עלין, Chi Alon, or Elion, the living God, or חי העולם, Chi Haolam, he that lives for ever [x]; and ſuggeſts, that he ſhould then believe him. Now our Lord, though he did not allow of ſuch ſwearing, yet juſtly argues, that he that ſweareth by the temple, not only ſweareth by it, which could not be a witneſs of what was ſwore; but he muſt be interpreted to ſwear by the inhabitant of it, and by him that dwelleth in it; that is, God, for whom it was built, to whom it was dedicated; where he was worſhipped, and where he vouchafed to reſide; taking up his dwelling between the cherubim upon the mercy-ſeat, in the moſt holy place; from whence he communed with men, and gave tokens of his preſence; and who only could be the proper witneſs of the truth, or falſhood, of what was ſwore; and therefore an oath, by the temple, ought to be looked upon as if made by God himſelf, and ſo to be ſacred and binding.

Ver. 22. And he that ſhall ſwear by heaven, &c.] As the Jews were wont to do in common, but did not look upon ſuch an oath as obligatory on them; ſee the note on Matt. v. 34. though ſuch an one ſweareth by the throne of God; for heaven is God's throne, where he ſits, and, in an eminent manner, diſplays the glory of his majeſty: and by him that ſitteth thereon, by God himſelf. Thus ſwearing by any thing that has any relation to God, is implicitly ſwearing by him; and therefore ought to be conſidered as binding, as if he was expreſſed in it; ſince an appeal can't be made to things inanimate, nor indeed to any creature, but to God, the ſearcher of hearts.

Ver. 23. Wo unto you Scribes and Phariſees, hypocrites, &c.] Chriſt returns to the former epithets he had very rightly given to theſe men, and very pertinently repeats them here; and which are confirmed by the inſtances of their conduct and practice here alledged, which abundantly ſhew their hypocriſy and deceit; ſince they were very ſtrict in obſerving ſome outward things, which gave them credit with the people, and eſpecially the prieſts and levites, ſome little trifling ceremonies and traditions of their elders, whilſt they neglected internal religion, and thoſe things which were of the greateſt moment and importance: for ye take tithe of mint, and aniſe, and cummin; which, tho' not commanded by the law, they were obliged to by the traditions of the elders. Mint is an herb well known, and has its name in the Greek from its ſweet ſmell; on account of which the Jews uſed to ſtrow it on the floors of their ſynagogues [y]. This was one of the herbs that was ſubject to the law of the ſeventh year [z], and is mentioned with thoſe which were to be tithed [a]. The Ethiopic verſion, inſtead of mint reads hyſſop; and which alſo was an herb that was obliged to be tithed [b]. Aniſe is a ſeed alſo well known, and which the Jews call שבת; and of which they often obſerve, that it is ſubject to tithing, both ſeed, herb, flowers, or ſtalks [c]: inſtead of this Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel has פיגם, rue; and which, in the Miſna [d], is mentioned along with mint, as it is by Luke, ch. xi. 42. and ſaid to be one of the things the Phariſees gave tithe of; tho' in their oral law it is reckoned among the things that are free from tithe [e]; and therefore this muſt be a ſort of work of ſuperoragation, to give tithe of that, which they were not obliged to. Cummin is a ſort of aniſe; its ſeed is much like fennel-ſeed, and which pigeons are very fond of: mention is made of it in Iſ. xxviii. 25, 27. and is reckoned with figs, dates, carobes, or Egyptian figs, and rice, which were obliged to be tithed [f], and was what was alſo bound to the offering of the firſt-fruits to the prieſt [g]. Chriſt mentions theſe particular herbs and ſeeds, as a ſpecimen of what they paid tithes of. In Luke, 'tis added, and all manner of herbs: for, according to the traditions of the elders, they were in general ſubject to tithes: and it is a common ſaying, or maxim of the Jews, that the tithing of corn is from the law, but מעשר ירק דרבנן, the tithing of herbs is from the Rabbins [h]; 'tis a conſtitution of theirs, and not of Moſes: and have omitted the weightier matters of the law. The diſtinction of the commandments of the law into lighter and heavier, or weightier, to which Chriſt here refers, is frequent with the Jews. When one comes to be made a proſelyte, they acquaint him with ſome of מצות קלות, the light commands, and ſome of מצות חמורות, the heavy, or weighty commands [i]. So again, they paraphraſe the words in Iſ. xxxiii. 18. where is the Scribe? he that numbers all the letters in the law. Where is the receiver? who weighs the light things, וחמורין שבתורה, and heavy, or weighty things in the law [k]. Again [l], "in the words of the law there are ſome things "light, and ſome things heavy, or weighty:" but thoſe weighty things they omitted, and regarded thoſe that were light; yea, that had no foundation in the law at all: and no wonder, ſince, in the place laſt cited, they ſay [m], that "the words of the Scribes "are all of them weighty, and that the ſayings of "the elders are more weighty than the words of "the prophets." The things our Lord refers to, and inſtances in, are as follow; judgment, mercy, and faith. Judgment may mean the adminiſtration of juſtice in courts of judicature; the putting in execution good judgments, righteous laws and ſtatutes; protecting, and relieving the injured and oppreſſed, and doing that which is right and equitable between man and man: but, on the contrary, theſe men devoured widows houſes, and oppreſſed the poor and fatherleſs. Mercy includes all acts of compaſſion to the diſtreſſed, relieving the neceſſitous, diſtributing to their wants, and ſhewing all kindneſs and beneficence to the poor and needy; which the Scribes and Phariſees very little practiſed, being a ſett of cruel, hard-hearted, and covetous perſons. Faith may not only deſign faithfulneſs in a man's keeping his word and promiſe, and fidelity to a truſt repoſed in him; but alſo faith in God, as the God of providence, and as the God of grace and mercy; believing in his word and promiſes, and worſhipping him, which the law requires;

---

[w] Martial. Epigr. l. 11. Ep. 60.

[x] Vid. Selden. Prolegomena ad lib. de Succeſſionibus.

[y] Jarchi in Miſn. Oketzim, c. 1. §. 2.

[z] Miſn. Sheviith, c. 7. §. 1, 2.

[a] T. Hieroſ. Demai, fol. 22. 3.

[b] Miſn. Maaſerot, c. 3. §. 9.

[c] Ib. c. 4. §. 5. T. Hieroſ. Maaſerot, fol. 51. 2. T. Bab. Avoda Zara, fol. 7. 2. Jarchi & Maimon. in Miſn. Oketzim, c. 3. §. 4.

[d] Oketzim, c. 1. §. 2.

[e] Miſn. Sheviith, c. 9. §. 1.

[f] Miſn. Demai, c. 2. §. 1.

[g] Miſn. Trumot, c. 10. §. 4.

[h] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 83. 2. & T. Hieroſ. Challah, fol. 60. 2. & Maaſerot, fol. 48. 3.

[i] T. Bab. Yebamot, fol. 47. 1. Maimon. Hilch. Iſſure Bia, c. 14. §. 2, 6, 9. Moſes Kotſenſis Mitzvot Tora, pr. neg. 116.

[k] T. Bab. Chagiga, fol. 15. 2. & Sanhedrin, fol. 106. 2.

[l] T. Hieroſ. Beracot, fol. 3. 2.

[m] Ib.

quires; and the rather this ſeems to be intended, becauſe Luke, inſtead of faith, puts the love of God, which faith includes, and works by, and is the end of the commandment, ariſing from faith unfeigned: ſo that Chriſt inſtances in the weightier matters of both tables of the law, which theſe men neglected, and the latter, as well as the former; not believing the revelation of the Goſpel, nor the Meſſiah, who was promiſed, and propheſied of by God, in the writings of the Old Teſtament: theſe ought ye to have done; more eſpecially, and in the firſt place, as being of the greateſt uſe and importance: and not to leave the other undone; meaning either the lighter matters, and leſſer commands of the law; or even their tithes of herbs: if they thought themſelves obliged to them, Chriſt would not diſpute the matter with them; if they thought fit to obſerve them, they might, ſo long as they did not interfere with, and take them off from things of greater moment. But alas! theſe men preferred the rituals of the ceremonial law, and the traditions of the elders, above the duties of the moral law; and reckoned that the latter were nothing, if the former were wanting; for they [n] ſay, that “ the words of the Scribes, are more lovely “ than the words of the law.” And alſo [o], that “ he that prophanes the holy things, and deſpiſes “ the ſolemn feaſts, and makes void the covenant “ of Abraham our father, (circumciſion) and be“ haves impudently towards the law, (ceremonial) “ although the law and good works are in his [p] hands, he has no part in the world to come.” The Perſic verſion renders the words thus; theſe ought ye to do, and not them; as if it was our Lord's ſenſe, that they ought to obſerve the weightier matters of the moral law, and not regard their tithing of herbs, and other traditions of their fathers.

Ver. 24. Ye blind guides, &c.] As in ver. 16. who ſtrain at a gnat and ſwallow a camel: the Syriac and Perſic verſions read the words in the plural number, gnats and camels. The Jews had a law, which forbid them the eating of any creeping thing, Lev. xi. 41. and of this they were ſtrictly obſervant, and would not be guilty of the breach of it for ever ſo much. “ One that eats a flea, or a gnat, they ſay [p] is מומר, an apoſtate;” one that has changed his religion, and is no more to be reckoned as one of them. Hence they very carefully ſtrained their liquors, leſt they ſhould tranſgreſs the above command, and incur the character of an apoſtate; and at leaſt, the penalty of being beaten with forty ſtripes, ſave one; for, “ whoever eats a “ whole fly, or a whole knat, whether alive or “ dead, was to be beaten on account of a creeping “ flying thing [q].” Among the accuſations Haman is ſaid to bring againſt them to Ahaſuerus, and the inſtances he gives of their laws being different from the kings, this is one [r]; that “ if a fly falls “ into the cup of one of them, זורקו ושותהו, he “ ſtrains it, and drinks it; but if my Lord the king “ ſhould touch the cup of one of them, he would “ throw it to the ground, and would not drink of “ it.” Maimonides ſays [s], “ He that ſtrains wine, “ or vinegar, or ſtrong liquor, and eats Jabchuſhin “ (a ſort of ſmall flies found in wine-cellars [t], on ac“ count of which they ſtrained their wine,) or gnats, “ or worms, which he hath ſtrained off, is to be “ beaten on account of the creeping things of the “ water, or on account of the creeping flying “ things, and the creeping things of the water.” Moreover, 'tis ſaid [u], “ a man might not pour his “ ſtrong liquors through a ſtrainer, by the light “ (of a candle or lamp) leſt he ſhould ſeparate and “ leave in the top of the ſtrainer (ſome creeping “ thing) and it ſhould fall again into the cup, and “ he ſhould tranſgreſs the law, in Lev. xi. 41.” To this practice Chriſt alluded here; and ſo very ſtrict and careful were they in this matter, that to ſtrain at a gnat, and ſwallow a camel, became at length a proverb, to ſignify much ſollicitude about little things, and none about greater. Theſe men would not, on any conſideration, be guilty of ſuch a crime, as not to pay the tithe of mint, aniſe, and cummin, and ſuch like herbs and ſeeds; and yet made no conſcience of doing juſtice, and ſhewing mercy to men, or of exerciſing faith in God, or love to him. Juſt, as many hypocrites, like them, make a great ſtir, and would appear very conſcientious and ſcrupulous, about ſome little trifling things, and yet ſtick not, at other times, to commit the groſſeſt enormities, and moſt ſcandalous ſins in life.

Ver. 25. Wo unto you Scribes and Phariſees, hypocrites, &c.] Our Lord cannot be thought to bear too hard upon theſe men, nor does he continue this character of them, and denunciations of woe againſt them, without a reaſon: for ye make clean the outſide of the cup and platter, but within they are full of extortion and exceſs. The alluſion is to their traditions about waſhing their cups and pots, and brazen veſſels; ſee Mark vii. 4. which they ſtrictly obſerved. In their oral law is a whole tract, called Mikvaot, which gives rules about the places where they waſhed, the things to be waſhed, and the manner of waſhing them; about which they were very nice, pretending to much outward cleanneſs, but had no regard to inward purity. Chriſt's ſenſe is, that they took much pains, and were very careful, that the cup they drank out of, and the platter, or diſh they eat out of, ſhould be very clean; when at the ſame time, the food and drink that were within them, were got by oppreſſion and rapine; by devouring widows houſes, by making undue claims upon, and extorting unjuſt ſums from the fatherleſs, the poor, and the needy; and were abuſed by them, to luxury and intemperance. In like manner the Jews themſelves ſay of hypocrites [w]; “ They make ſhow of a pure and clean ſoul, but “ under it lies hid a leproſy: they are like to veſſels “ full of uncleanneſs; they are outwardly waſhed “ with the water of fraud and craftineſs; but “ whatſoever is within, in the midſt of them, is un“ clean.” The Vulgate Latin verſion of the text, inſtead of exceſs, reads uncleanneſs, and ſo does Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel: many copies read unrighteouſneſs. Exceſs is thought to be a ſin the Phariſees were not guilty of, though they were of extortion, injuſtice, and uncleanneſs.

Ver. 26. Thou blind Phariſee, &c.] Well might Chriſt call ſuch an one a blind Phariſee, who was ſo ſcrupulouſly careful to cleanſe his cup and platter; and yet made no conſcience of filling them with what was gotten in an unjuſt way, and ſo defiled himſelf and them: cleanſe firſt that which is within the cup and platter, that the outſide of them may be clean alſo: get food and drink in an honeſt way, remove all extortion and oppreſſion out of thine hands, and luxury and intemperance from thy table; and ſo ſhall the outward cleanneſs of thy cup and diſh, be no reproach unto thee, or teſtimony againſt thee, of thine hypocriſy. So the great concern of all men ſhould be, inward purity; that their hearts be purified by faith in the blood of Chriſt, and ſprinkled from an evil conſcience by the ſame; that principles of grace and holineſs, be formed in them by the Spirit of God; and then their outward lives and converſations being influenced thereby, will be honourable and agreeable to their profeſſions. Otherwiſe, an external reformation, or an outward ſhow of holineſs, and bare pretenſions to it, without internal grace, will never be of any avail in the ſight of God.

---

[n] T. Hieroſ. Beracot, fol. 3. 2. [o] T. Hieroſ. Peſachim, fol. 33. 2. [p] T. Bab. Avoda Zara, fol. 26. 2. & Horaiot, fol. 11. 1. [q] Maimon. Hilch. Maacolot Aſurot, c. 2. §. 22. [r] T. Bab. Megilla, fol. 13. 2. Vid. T. Hieroſ. Sota, fol. 17. 1. [s] Ubi ſupra, §. 20. [t] Gloſſ. in T. Bab. Cholin, fol. 67. 1. [u] Ib. [w] R. Sol. Gabirol in Cether Malcuth apud L. Capell. in loc.

Ver. 27. Wo unto you Scribes and Phariſees, hypocrites, &c.] 'Tis much theſe men could bear to hear themſelves ſo often called by this name; and it ſhows great courage in our Lord, ſo freely to reprove them, and expoſe their wickedneſs, who were men of ſo much credit and influence with the people: for ye are like unto whited ſepulchres; or covered with lime, as the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions, render it. For the Jews uſed to mark their graves with white lime, that they might be known; that ſo prieſts, Nazarites, and travellers, might avoid them, and not be polluted with them. This appears from various paſſages in their writings: "The vineyard of the fourth year, they "marked with clods of earth, and an uncircum- "ciſed one with duſt, ושל קברות בסיד, and "graves with chalk, mixed (with water) and pour- "ed (on them [x].") Of this marking of the graves, the reaſon of it, the time and manner of doing it, Maimonides [y] gives us this account: "Whoever "finds a grave, or a dead carcaſs, or any thing "for the dead that defiles, by the tent he is "obliged to put a mark upon it, that it may "not be a ſtumbling to others; and on the inter- "mediate days of a feaſt, they go out from the "Sanhedrim, to mark the graves.——With what "do they mark? בסיד ממחה, with chalk infuſed "in water, and poured upon the unclean place: "they don't put the mark upon the top of the un- "clean place, (or exactly in it,) but ſo that it may "ſtand out here and there, at the ſides of it, that "what is pure may not be corrupted; and they "don't put the mark far from the place of the "uncleanneſs, that they mayn't waſte the land of "Iſrael; and they don't ſet marks on thoſe that "are manifeſt, for they are known to all; but up- "on thoſe that are doubtful, as a field in which a "grave is loſt, and places that are open, and want "a covering." Now becauſe when the rains fell, theſe marks were waſhed away, hence on the firſt of Adar (February) when they uſed to repair the highways, they alſo marked the graves with white lime, that they might be ſeen and known, and avoided; and ſo on their intermediate feaſt days [z]: the reaſon why they made uſe of chalk, or lime, and with theſe marked their graves, was becauſe it looked white like bones [a]; ſo that upon firſt ſight, it might be thought and known what it was for, and that a grave was there: hence this phraſe, whited ſepulchres: which indeed appear beautiful outward; eſpecially at a diſtance, and when new marked: but within are full of dead men's bones, and of all uncleanneſs; worms and rottenneſs, which ariſe from the putrified carcaſſes, and are very nauſeous and defiling.

Ver. 28. Even ſo ye alſo outwardly appear righteous, &c.] By making broad their phylacteries, enlarging the borders of their garments, praying long prayers, compaſſing ſea and land to make one proſelyte, paying tithes of all manner of herbs, and cleanſing the outſide of the cup and platter, and doing all their works, prayers, faſtings, and almsdeeds, to be ſeen of men. This is the accommodation of the above ſimile; by reaſon of theſe things they looked like whited ſepulchres, outwardly beautiful: ſo theſe appeared outwardly righteous, they looked like righteous perſons, and were not; they were what Hagar, as the Jews ſay, charged her miſtreſs with being; for ſo they interpret theſe words, her miſtreſs was deſpiſed in her eyes, Gen. xvi. 4 [b]. "She ſaid, this Sarah is not "ſecretly, what ſhe is openly; ſhe appears, "כאילו היא צדקת, as if ſhe was righteous, and ſhe "is not righteous." The ſame they ſay of [c] Leah. This was a miſrepreſentation; but the repreſentation Chriſt gives of theſe men, is right; they were of that ſort of the Phariſees, which they call, הצבועין, the dyed, or coloured ones: it is ſaid of Jannai the king, that he ſhould ſay to thoſe of his family [d]; "Don't be afraid of them that are Pha- "riſees, (that are truly ſo) nor of them that are "not Phariſees; but of them that are, הצבועין, "dyed, for they are like to Phariſees; for their "works, are as the works of Zimri, (adulterers, "as theſe were) and they expect the reward as "Phinehas." The Gloſs upon it is, "the Phari- "ſees hated him, becauſe he had ſlain many of "their wiſe men, and was turned Sadducee; and "when he was dying, his wife was afraid of them, "leſt they ſhould take away the kingdom from "her ſons, and ſhe deſired him to ſeek their fa- "vour for her; but he ſaid unto her, don't be "afraid of the Phariſees, for they are righteous, "and will not render evil to thee, nor to thy ſons; "for they have not ſinned againſt them; nor of "them that are not Phariſees, for they are their "friends; but of the dyed ones: as if he had ſaid, "their appearance is not according to their nature, "but they are dyed without, ואין תוכן כברם, "and their inſide is not as their outſide; for their "works are as the work of Zimri, for they are "ungodly; and they expect the reward as Phine- "has, ſaying to men, to honour them as Phine- "has." But this outward ſhew and appearance of righteouſneſs, was only unto men, not unto God: they did not appear ſo to him, who is the ſearcher of hearts, and knows what is in man, and knew all the ſecret wickedneſs that was in them; for though they impoſed upon, and deceived men, they could not deceive God; nor was their iniquity hid from Chriſt, who adds, but within ye are full of hypocriſy and iniquity: and which was evident from their ambition and vain-glory, in deſiring the uppermoſt rooms at feaſts, the chief places in the ſynagogue, greetings in the markets, and titles of honour and grandeur; from their avarice and cruel oppreſſion of the widows, and fatherleſs, under a pretence of long prayers; from their neglecting the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith, and practiſing extortion and exceſs: that ſaying of theirs [e], may be applied to themſelves; "every "diſciple of a wiſe man, שאין תוכו כברו, whoſe "inſide is not as his outſide, is no diſciple of a wiſe "man." And it is expreſsly aſcribed by ſome of their writers to one ſort of the Phariſees, of whom they ſay [f], "they are deſirous to appear to men to "be holy, but their inſide is not as their outſide;

---

[x] Miſn. Maaſer Sheni, c. 5. §. 1.

[y] Hilch. Tumath Meth, c. 8. §. 9.

[z] Miſn. Shekalim, c. 1. §. 1. & Moed Katon, c. 1. §. 2. Maimon. & Bartenora in ib.

[a] Jarchi in Miſn. Moed Katon, c. 1. §. 2. & Bartenora in Miſn. Maaſer Sheni, c. 5. §. 1.

[b] Bereſhit Rabba, §. 45. fol. 40. 3. Jarchi in Gen. xvi. 4.

[c] Bereſhit Rabba, §. 71. fol. 63. 2.

[d] T. Bab. Sota, fol. 22. 2.

[e] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 72. 2.

[f] Bartenora in Miſn. Sota, c. 3. §. 4.

which is much the ſame Chriſt here ſays of them. What our Lord charges theſe men with, is owned by their own doctors; they ſay [g], that "the iniquity of thoſe that were under the firſt temple, "was open and manifeſt, but the iniquity of thoſe "that were under the ſecond temple, was not open." But as the Gloſs ſays, "the children of the ſecond "temple, רשעים היו בסתר, were ſecretly wicked."

Ver. 29. Wo unto you Scribes and Phariſees, hypocrites, &c.] This is the ſeventh and laſt time, in which theſe words are delivered in this exact form by our Lord, in this chapter; and expreſſes the certainty, both of their ſin and puniſhment: and the inſtance annexed to it, no leſs diſcovers the hypocriſy of theſe perſons, and ſupports the character given of them; as alſo furniſhes out a ſufficient reaſon, why a woe is denounced upon them: becauſe ye build the tombs of the prophets, and garniſh the ſepulchres of the righteous; meaning by the prophets and righteous men, the ſame perſons, the prophets, who were righteous men; or elſe the prophets, and alſo other righteous men beſides them. Rightly is the word build, uſed of tombs and ſepulchres: the Jews have a canon, which runs thus [h]; "they "don't dig graves nor ſepulchres, on a feaſt-day." The commentators [i] on it ſay, that the graves are the holes which they dig in the earth, and the ſepulchres are the buildings over the graves. In the Gemara it is aſked [k], "what are the graves? and "what are the ſepulchres? Says R. Judah, the "graves are made by digging, and the ſepulchres "or tombs, בבנין, by building;" and theſe edifices which they built over the graves of ſome of their prophets, and righteous men, were very grand and beautiful. The Cippi Hebraici, furniſh us with many inſtances of this kind: in Hebron, in the land of Canaan, which is Kirjath Arba, is the cave of Macpelah; in which were buried the fathers of the world, Adam and Eve, Abraham and Sarah, Iſaac and Rebekah, Jacob and Leah; and over it is a wonderful, ונאה, and beautiful building, and it is the building of David the king; and over-againſt the city, in the mountain, is a beautiful building, and there was buried Jeſſe, the father of David the king: in the way from Hebron to Jeruſalem, is Chalchul, where Gad, David's ſeer was buried; and Tekoah, where Iſaiah the prophet was buried, and over him a beautiful ſtructure: at the mount of Olives is a beautiful fabrick, which they ſay is the ſepulchre of Huldah, the propheteſs; at the bottom of the mount, is a very great cave, attributed to Haggai the prophet, and in the middle of it are many caves: near it, is the ſepulchre of Zechariah the prophet, in a cave ſhut up, and over it, is כיפה נאה, a beautiful arch, or vault of one ſtone: between Rama and Jeruſalem, are caves aſcribed to Simeon the juſt, and the ſeventy (elders of the) Sanhedrim; at Rama, Samuel was buried, alſo his father Elkana, and Hannah his mother, and in a cave ſhut up, and over the cave buildings: at Cheres, which is Timnath Cheres, in mount Ephraim, are buried Joſhua the ſon of Nun, and Nun his father, and Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh, and over them are trees. At Avarta is the ſchool of Phinehas, the ſon of Eleazar the prieſt, and Eleazar is buried upon the mountain; and below the village, between the olive-trees, Ithamar, and over him a large monument: at the barns is a temple of the Gentiles, with a vault and a cave, where they ſay are buried ſeventy elders. At Belata, a village about a ſabbath day's journey from Shechem, Joſeph the righteous, was buried: at mount Carmel, is the cave of Elijah the prophet, and there was buried Eliſha, the ſon of Shaphat the prophet: at Jordan was buried Iddo the prophet, and over it is a great elm-tree, and it is in the form of a lion; and there was buried Shebuel, the ſon of Gerſhom, the ſon of Moſes, over whom is a great oak-tree: at Geba, in mount Lebanon, is buried Zephaniah the prophet, in the middle of a cave ſhut up. On a mountain, a ſabbath day's journey from Zidon, Zebulon was buried, in a beautiful vault; at Cephar Noah, was buried Noah the juſt; and at Kadeſh Nephtalim, Barak the ſon of Abinoam, and Deborah his wife, and Jael; and at Timnath, Shamgar the ſon of Anath, over whom are two marble pillars. At Cephar Cana, is buried Jonah, the ſon of Amittai, on the top of a mountain, in a temple of the Gentiles, in a beautiful vault: at Jakuk, was buried in the way, Habakkuk the prophet; and at the north of the village of Raam, was buried Obadiah the prophet: at Suſan the palace, was buried Mordecai the Jew, and over him a beautiful ſtone ſtatue; and on it written, this is the ſepulchre of Mordecai, the ſon of Jair, the ſon of Shimei, the ſon of Kiſh, a man of Jemini; and near the river Hiddekel, Ezekiel the prophet was buried. In this account, many things may be obſerved, which confirm and illuſtrate the words of the text. And certain it is, that it was accounted very honourable and laudable in perſons, to beautify the ſepulchres of the patriarchs and prophets. Among the excellent characters given of Benaah, R. Jochanan's maſter, it is ſaid [l], "that he was a "very wiſe man, and a judge, and underſtood "myſteries and parables; וציין מערת, and painted "the cave of Adam the firſt, and the cave of Abra-"ham." Though perhaps this is to be underſtood of him in a figurative ſenſe, but yet muſt allude to a literal one: the ſepulchres of the prophets, were eſpecially very ſacred: "all ſepulchres they "ſay [m], might be removed, but the ſepulchres of "a king, and the ſepulchres of a prophet; they ſay "unto him, were not the ſepulchres of the ſons of "David removed? and the ſepulchres of the ſons "of Huldah, were in Jeruſalem, and a man might "not touch them, to remove them for ever. R. "Akiba replied to them, becauſe of decency it was "forgiven, (or allowed) there, and from thence the "uncleanneſs being channelled, went out to the brook "Kidron." Now our Lord muſt not be underſtood, as blaming them for barely building the tombs of the prophets, and garniſhing the ſepulchres of the righteous, which they might have done without blame. But becauſe they did all this, that they might be thought to be very innocent and holy men, and far from being guilty of the crimes their forefathers were; when they were of the very ſelf-ſame bloodthirſty, perſecuting ſpirit; and did, and would do the ſame things to the prophets and apoſtles of the New Teſtament, their fathers had done to the prophets of the old. They have a ſaying [n], that "they don't erect monuments for the righteous; for "their words are their memorial." But this can only mean, that there is no need of monuments for them; ſince their ſayings are ſufficient to keep up the memory of them. Hence Dr. Lightfoot thinks, that our Lord reproves them out of their own mouths, for deſpiſing the words of the prophets; imagining they performed piety enough, by beſtowing coſt in adorning their ſepulchres; when they themſelves own, their ſayings are the beſt remembrancers of them, and therefore ought to be regarded more than their tombs.

---

[g] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 9. 2.

[h] Miſn. Moed Katon, c. 1. ſ. 6.

[i] Maimon. & Bartenora in ib.

[k] T. Bab. Moed Katon, fol. 8. 2.

[l] Juchaſin, fol. 86. 1.

[m] T. Hieroſ. Nazir, fol. 57. 4.

[n] T. Hieroſ. Shekalim, fol. 47. 1.

Ver. 30. And ſay, if we had been in the days of our fathers, &c.] Their anceſtors and predeceſſors: ſignifying, that if they had lived in the times they did, or had been in the ſame poſt and office with them, they ſhould have oppoſed, at leaſt not conſented to their meaſures: we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets; would not have joined them in perſecuting the prophets, and in ſhedding their blood, and putting them to death; but would have received them as the prophets of the Lord, have hearkened to their advice and meſſage, and have honoured and obeyed them as ſuch; and this they thought they ſufficiently declared, by building and adorning their tombs.

Ver. 31. Wherefore ye be witneſſes unto yourſelves, &c.] Or againſt yourſelves, as the Syriac reads; for what they ſaid was a plain acknowledgment, and a full confeſſion, what their fathers had done, and whoſe offſpring they were; and from whom better things were not to be expected; ſince they were their fathers own children, and of the ſame temper and diſpoſition with them: that ye are the children of them that killed the prophets. They plainly owned, that their fathers killed the prophets, and that they deſcended from them; though they meant not ſo much to reproach their anceſtors, as to give themſelves a greater character; yet it did not with thoſe, that knew them; not with our Lord: for as their own words teſtified againſt them, that they were a ſeed of evil doers; their practices ſhewed them to be of the ſame ſpirit and principles with their progenitors.

Ver. 32. Fill ye up then the meaſure of your fathers.] Of their ſins; for there were bounds and limits ſet how far they ſhould proceed, and no further; as yet they had not got to the end of their iniquity: their fathers had gone great lengths in ſin, but their iniquity was not yet full, as is ſaid of the Amorites, Gen. xv. 16. theſe their ſons were to fill it up. They had ſhed the blood of many of the prophets; and indeed there were none of them but they had perſecuted and abuſed, in one ſhape or another: ſome they intreated ſhamefully, others they beat; ſome they ſtoned, and others they put to death with the ſword, or otherwiſe; and now their children were about to fill the meaſure brimful, by crucifying the Son of God, which they were at this time meditating and contriving; and by perſecuting and ſlaying his apoſtles, and ſo would bring upon them the vengeance of God. The Jews well enough underſtood theſe words, which were ſpoken to them in an ironical way, and expreſſing what they were about, and what they would hereafter do, and what would be the iſſue and conſequence of it: they have a ſaying [o], that "the holy bleſſed God does not take vengeance on "a man, עד שתתמלא סאתו, until his meaſure is "filled up; according to Job xx. 22." Which the Chaldee paraphraſe renders, "when his meaſure is "filled up, then ſhall he take vengeance on him;" and that this is Chriſt's ſenſe, appears from what follows.

Ver. 33. Ye ſerpents, ye generation of vipers, &c.] The latter of theſe names, John the Baptiſt calls the Sadducees and Phariſees by, in ch. iii. 7. and Chriſt, in ch. xii. 34. both expreſs their craft and ſubtlety, their inward poiſon, and venemous nature; their fair outſide, and ſpecious pretences; their hypocriſy, malice, and wickedneſs; in which they were like to the old ſerpent, their father the devil, and to their anceſtors, that murdered the prophets; nor could any good thing be expected, from ſuch a viperous generation: how can ye eſcape the damnation of hell! ſignifying, that it was impoſſible that they ſhould; nor could they ſurely expect it themſelves, who muſt be conſcious to themſelves of their wickedneſs, malice, and deceit. The Perſic verſion reads it, where can ye eſcape? &c. and ſo Beza ſays it was read, in one antient copy of his; and the ſenſe is, whither can ye flee? to whom, or what can you have recourſe to, to ſkreen you from the wrath to come? Rocks and mountains, caves and dens, will be of no ſervice. The phraſe, דינה של גיהנם, the judgment, or damnation of hell, is a phraſe often uſed in the Talmud [p], and Midraſhes [q] of the Jews; and intends future torment, and the everlaſting vengeance and wrath of God, the unquenchable fire prepared for the devil and his angels, and which impenitent unbelieving ſinners cannot eſcape.

Ver. 34. Wherefore, behold I ſend unto you prophets, &c.] To try them, whether they would ſhew the reſpect to prophets, they pretended to have for them; by building and beautifying their ſepulchres; by exclaiming againſt their forefathers for ſhedding their blood; and by declaring, that had they lived in their days, they would not have joined with them in it; and to make it appear, that theſe were all empty words, and ſpecious pretences; and that they had the ſame malicious and bloody principles in them; and would be guilty of the ſame practices, and ſo fill up the meaſure of their fathers ſins; and bring upon them the puniſhment of everlaſting burnings hereafter, as well as ruin and deſtruction on their nation, city, and temple now. Chriſt here ſpeaks, as one having power and authority, to qualify and ſend forth men, under the ſeveral characters here mentioned, and of what he ſhould do after his reſurrection: for notwithſtanding the people of the Jews would crucify him, and uſe him as they did, in a barbarous manner; yet after all this, he would ſend his miniſters to them, to gather his elect out from among them, to render the reſt inexcuſable, and to ſhew his longſuffering and patience. The perſons deſigned by prophets, wiſe men, and Scribes, are his apoſtles: called prophets; becauſe they were divinely inſpired to write, and preach in his name; had the gift of foretelling future events, and of explaining with the greateſt clearneſs and exactneſs, the prophecies of the Old Teſtament; ſhewing their reſpect unto, and accompliſhment in Chriſt: wiſe men; becauſe they were made wiſe unto ſalvation, and capable of inſtructing others: they were filled with all ſpiritual and evangelical wiſdom, and preached the wiſdom of God in a myſtery, even the hidden wiſdom: and Scribes; becauſe they were well inſtructed in the kingdom of heaven, and had the true knowledge of the law, and could rightly interpret it, as well as make known the Goſpel of the grace of God. Chriſt chuſes to uſe theſe names and titles, becauſe the Jews pretended to have great veneration for the ancient prophets, and theſe he ſhould ſend, would not be a whit inferior to them, but in many things exceed them; and they had great eſteem for their wiſe men and Scribes, who would

---

[o] T. Bab. Sota, fol. 9. 1.

[p] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 61. 1. Erubin, fol. 18. 2. Yebamot, fol. 102. 2. Sota, fol. 4. 2. & 5. 1. & Bava Bathra, fol. 10. 1.

[q] Bemidbar Rabba, fol. 203. 1. Shirhaſhirim Rabba, fol. 14. 2. & Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 76. 1.

be vaſtly exceeded by theſe miniſters of his, and yet would be uſed very badly by them: and ſome of them ye ſhall kill; as Stephen, the firſt martyr, who was ſtoned to death by them; and James, the brother of John, whom Herod, to their good liking, killed with the ſword; and the other James they threw headlong from off the pinnacle of the temple, and killed him with a fuller's club[r]. And crucify; ſo Simeon, the ſon of Cleophas, was crucified at the inſtigation of the Jews, as Euſebius relates[s]. And ſome of them ye ſhall ſcourge in your ſynagogues; as John, Peter, and Paul: and perſecute them from city to city; as they did Paul and Barnabas, as the Acts of the Apoſtles teſtify.

Ver. 35. That upon you may come all the righteous blood, &c.] Or the blood of all the righteous men, as the Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions read; for there is no righteouſneſs in blood, nor any conveyed by it: all men are of one blood, and that is tainted; they that are righteous, are not ſo naturally, nor by any righteouſneſs of their own, but by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt: and ſuch were the perſons here meant, whoſe blood being ſhed in the cauſe of righteouſneſs, God would revenge; and the puniſhment of ſuch a crime, and the vengeance of God for it, were to come upon the nation of the Jews by this means, through their crucifying of Chriſt, and killing, and perſecuting his apoſtles; whereby they would make it manifeſt, that they approved of, and conſented to, what others had done to all the righteous men, whoſe blood had been ſhed upon the earth; whether in Judæa, or elſewhere; and continued in the ſame wicked practices, or committed worſe, and ſo juſtly incurred the wrath of God to the uttermoſt; which would quickly come upon them, when the meaſure of their fathers ſin were filled up by them, from the beginning of time, to the preſent age: even from the blood of righteous Abel; who was the firſt perſon in the world that was killed, and that for righteouſneſs ſake too, becauſe his works were righteous, his perſon being ſo; not by his works, but thro' the righteouſneſs and ſacrifice of the Meſſiah, which were to be brought in; in the faith of which he offered up his ſacrifice, whereby he obtained a teſtimony from God, that he was righteous, having reſpect to his perſon in Chriſt, and ſo to his offering. This epithet of righteous ſeems to be what was commonly given him by the Jews: hence, with a peculiar emphaſis, he is called הבל הצדיק, Abel the righteous[t]; as he is alſo ſaid to be ראש לנהרגים, the head of them that are killed[u]; he being the firſt man that was ſlain; for which reaſon he is mentioned here by Chriſt; and alſo, becauſe his blood cried for vengeance, and ſtill continued to do, upon all ſuch perſons that ſhould commit the like crime. 'Tis an obſervation frequently made by the Jews, on thoſe words in Gen. iv. 10. the voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me, that "it is not ſaid in the Hebrew text, the blood of thy brother, but the bloods of thy brother; his blood, and the blood of his ſeed[w]; and that from hence may be learned, that the blood of his children, and of his childrens children, and of all his offspring, to the end of all generations, that ſhould proceed from him, all ſtood and cried before the Lord[x]." The Jeruſalem Targum paraphraſes the words in this remarkable manner; "the price of the bloods of the multitude of the righteous, that ſhall ſpring from Abel thy brother." And Onkelos thus, "the voice of the blood of the ſeed that ſhall riſe from thy brother, &c." unto the blood of Zecharias, ſon of Barachias, whom ye ſlew between the temple and the altar. Learned men are very much divided about this perſon, who he was. Some think our Lord ſpeaks prophetically of Zechariah, the ſon of Baruch; who, as Joſephus ſays[y], was ſlain in the middle of the temple, juſt before the ſiege of Jeruſalem; and who was, as he alſo relates, a rich man, of an illuſtrious family, a hater of wickedneſs, and a friend to liberty: and becauſe, as Abel was the firſt man that was ſlain, and this man being killed in the temple, at the cloſe of the Jewiſh ſtate; and becauſe the words may be rendered, whom ye ſhall have ſlain, therefore he is thought to be intended: but there are ſeveral things that don't agree with him, beſides, its being a narration of a fact, as paſt, according to the uſual rendering of the word; for this Zecharias was the ſon of Baruch, and not Barachias, which are two different names; he was killed in the middle of the temple, not between the temple and the altar; nor does he appear to be a man of ſuch great character, as to be diſtinguiſhed in this manner; and beſides, his death was what the Jews did not conſent to in general, and therefore could not be charged with it; he was acquitted by the ſanhedrim of the charge of treachery laid againſt him, and was aſſaſſined by two zealots. Others have thought that Zecharias, the father of John the Baptiſt, is meant, who is ſuppoſed to be murdered by the Jews very lately; and it being a recent action, is mentioned by our Lord: the reaſon of it is a tradition, which ſeveral ancient writers[z] ſpeak of, and is pretended to be this; that there was a place in the temple appropriated to virgins, and that Mary, the mother of our Lord, after his birth, came and took her place here, as a virgin, when the Jews, knowing her to have a child, objected to it; but Zechariah, who was acquainted with the myſtery of the incarnation, ordered her to keep her place, upon which the Jews ſlew him upon the ſpot: but this tradition is not to be depended on; nor does it appear that there ever was any ſuch particular place in the temple aſſigned to virgins; nor that the father of this Zecharias was Barachias; or that the ſon was ſlain by the Jews, and in this place. Others have been of opinion, that Zechariah the prophet is deſigned; and indeed, he is ſaid to be the ſon of Barachiah, the ſon of Iddo, Zech. i. 1. and the Jewiſh Targumiſt ſpeaks of a Zechariah, the ſon of Iddo, as ſlain by the Jews in the temple. His words are theſe[a]; "as ye ſlew Zechariah, the ſon of Iddo, the high-prieſt, and faithful prophet, in the houſe of the ſanctuary of the Lord, on the day of atonement; becauſe he reproved you, that ye might not do that evil which is before the Lord." And him the Jews make to be the ſame with Zechariah the ſon of Jeberechiah, in Iſ. viii. 2. and read Berechiah[b]: but the Targumiſt ſeems to confound Zechariah, the ſon of Jehoiada, with him; for the prophet Zechariah was not an high-prieſt, Joſhua was high-prieſt in his time; nor does it appear from any writings, that he was killed by the Jews; nor is it probable that they would be guilty of ſuch a crime, juſt upon their return from captivity; and beſides, he could not be ſlain in ſuch a place, becauſe the temple, and altar, were not yet built: it remains, that it muſt be Zechariah, the ſon of Jehoiada the prieſt, who was ſlain in the court of the houſe of the Lord, 2 Chron. xxiv. 20, 21, 22. who, as Abel was the firſt, he is the laſt of the righteous men whoſe death is related in the ſcriptures, and for whoſe blood vengeance was required, as for Abel's. He was ſlain in the court of the houſe of the Lord; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion here renders it, in the midſt of the holy houſe. 'Tis often ſaid by the Jewiſh writers[c], that "R. Joden, (ſometimes 'tis R. Jonathan) aſked R. Acha, "whether they ſlew Zechariah, in the court of the "Iſraelites, or in the court of the women? he an"ſwered him, neither in the court of the Iſraelites, "nor in the court of the women, but in the court of "the prieſts." And elſewhere they ſay[d], that they "ſlew a prieſt and a prophet in the ſanctuary; this "is Zechariah the ſon of Jehoiada." Now it ſhould be obſerved, that the temple, or ſanctuary, is ſometimes put for the whole ſacred building, with all its courts and appurtenances; and ſometimes, as in this text, for that part of it that was covered, between which, and the altar of burnt-offerings, in the court of the prieſts, which muſt be here meant, and not the altar of incenſe, in the moſt holy place, was a ſpace of twenty-two cubits[e], frequently called, in Jewiſh writings, the ſpace between the porch and the altar; that is, the porch which led into the temple, and the brazen altar in the court of the prieſts, which was open to the air, and is the very ſpot here intended. Now this was a very ſacred place, and is mentioned as an aggravation of the ſin of the Jews, that they ſhould enter where none but prieſts might; nor theſe neither that had any defect in them; and defile it alſo by ſhedding innocent blood. "The court of the Iſraelites is "holier than the court of the women; becauſe "thoſe that wanted atonement might not enter "there; and a defiled perſon that entered there, "was obliged to be cut off: the court of the prieſts "was holier than that; becauſe the Iſraelites might "not enter there, but in the time of their neceſſi"ties, for laying on of hands for atonement, for "killing and waving: the place between the porch "and the altar was holier than that; for ſuch that had "any blemiſhes, or were bare-headed, or had their "garments rent, might not enter[f]." Hence they ſay[g], that "the Iſraelites committed ſeven tranſ"greſſions on that day: they ſlew a prieſt, and "a prophet, and a judge; and they ſhed inno"cent blood, and they blaſphemed God, and de"filed the court, and it was a ſabbath-day, and "the day of atonement." The chief objections to its being this Zechariah are, that the names do not agree; the one being the ſon of Jehoiada, the other the ſon of Barachias; and the killing of him was eight hundred years before this time; when it might have been thought our Lord would have inſtanced in a later action; and this he ſpeaks of, he aſcribes to the men of that generation: to which may be replied, that as to the difference of names, the father of this Zechariah might have two names, which is no unuſual thing; beſides, theſe two names ſignify much the ſame thing; Jehoiada ſignifies praiſe the Lord, and Barachias bleſs the Lord; juſt as Eliakim and Jehoiakim are names of the ſame perſon, and ſignify the ſame thing, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 4. Moreover, Jerom tells us, that in the Hebrew copy of this Goſpel, uſed by the Nazarenes, he found the name Jehoiada inſtead of Barachias: and as to the action being done ſo long ago, what has been ſuggeſted already may be an anſwer to it, that it was the laſt on record in the writings of the Old Teſtament; and that his blood, as Abel's, is ſaid to require vengeance: and Chriſt might the rather pitch upon this action, becauſe it was committed on a very great and worthy man, and in the holy place, and by the body of the people, at the command of their king, and with their full approbation, and conſent: and therefore, tho' this was not done by the individual perſons in being in Chriſt's time, yet by the ſame people; and ſo they are ſaid to ſlay him, and his blood is required of them: and their horrible deſtruction was a puniſhment for that load of national guilt, which had been for many hundreds of years contracting, and heaping upon them.

---

[r] Euſeb. Eccl. Hiſt. l. 2. c. 23.
[s] Ib. l. 3. c. 32.
[t] Tzeror Hammor, fol. 8. 2.
[u] Juchaſin, fol. 5. 2.
[w] Bereſhit Rabba, §. 22. fol. 20. 1. Miſn. Sanhedrin, c. 4. §. 5. Moſes Kotſenſis Mitzvot Tora pr. affirm. 98.
[x] Abot R. Nathan, c. 31.
[y] De Bello Jud. l. 5. c. 1.
[z] Origen. in Matth. T. 3. Homil. 26. fol. 44. Greg. Nyſſen. in diem nat. Chriſt. vol. 2. p. 777. Baſil. de human. gen. Chriſt. & Theophylact. in loc.
[a] Targum in Lam. ii. 20.
[b] T. Bab. Maccot, fol. 24. 2.

Ver. 36. Verily I ſay unto you, &c.] An uſual form of introducing ſomething of moment to raiſe attention to it, and to aſcertain the truth of it: all theſe things ſhall come upon this generation; all the things which Chriſt had foretold ſhould come to paſs in the preſent age; as that the apoſtles and miniſters of the word he ſhould ſend to them, ſome of them they would kill and crucify, and others they would ſcourge in their ſynagogues, or perſecute from place to place; and all the horrible murders and blood-ſhed in any age, committed by that people, would be placed to the account of the men of that generation; and the guilt of them imputed to them, and the puniſhment due unto them be inflicted on them. And which came to paſs, and had its full accompliſhment about forty years after this, in the utter deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and the whole nation; ſo that many now living were perſonally involved in that temporal ruin, as well as eſcaped not the damnation of hell, ver. 33.

Ver. 37. O Jeruſalem, Jeruſalem, &c.] The metropolis of Judæa, the ſeat of the kings of Judah, yea, the city of the great king; the place of divine worſhip, once the holy and faithful city, the joy of the whole earth; wherefore it was ſtrange that the following things ſhould be ſaid of it. The word is repeated to ſhew our Lord's affection and concern for that city, as well as to upbraid it with its name, dignity, and privileges; and deſigns not the building of the city, but the inhabitants of it; and theſe not all, but the rulers and governors of it, civil and eccleſiaſtical; eſpecially the great ſanhedrim, which were held in it, to whom beſt belong the deſcriptive characters of killing the prophets, and ſtoning them that were ſent by God unto them; ſince it belonged to them to take cognizance of ſuch who called themſelves prophets, and to examine, and judge them, and, if falſe, to condemn them[h]; hence that ſaying of Chriſt, Luke xiii. 33. which goes before the ſame words, as here, it cannot be that a prophet periſh out of Jeruſalem: and who are manifeſtly diſtinguiſhed from their children; it being uſual to call ſuch as were the heads of the people, either in a civil or eccleſiaſtick ſenſe, fathers, and their ſubjects and diſciples children: beſides, our Lord's diſcourſe throughout the whole context is directed to the Scribes and Phariſees, the eccleſiaſtick guides of the people, and to whom the civil governors paid a ſpecial regard. Thou that killeſt the prophets; that is, with the ſword, with which the prophets in Elijah's time were ſlain by the children of Iſrael, 1 Kings xix. 10. and which was one of the capital puniſhments inflicted by the Jewiſh ſanhedrim[i]; and alſo that

---

[c] T. Hieroſ. Taanioth, fol. 69. 1. Præfat. ad Echa Rabbati, fol. 36. 4. & Echa Rabbati, fol. 52. 4. & 58. 3. Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 68. 3.

[d] Echa Rabbati, fol. 55. 1.

[e] Miſn. Middot, c. 3. §. 6.

[f] Maimon. Beth. Habbechira, c. 7. §. 18, 19, 20. Bemidbar Rabba, §. 7. fol. 188. 4.

[g] T. Hieroſ. Taanioth, fol. 69. 1. Echa Rabbati, fol. 53. 1. & 58. 3. Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 68. 4.

[h] Miſn. Sanhedrin, c. 1. §. 5.

[i] Ib. c. 7. §. 1.

which follows was another of them. And ſtoneſt them which were ſent unto thee; as particularly Zechariah, the ſon of Jehoiada, before mentioned. The Jews themſelves are obliged to own, that this character belongs to them: ſay [k] they, "when the "word of God ſhall come, who is his meſſenger, "we will honour him. Says R. Saul, did not the "prophets come, והרגנום, and we killed them, and "ſhed their blood, and how ſhall we receive his "word? or how ſhall we believe?" And a celebrated writer of theirs, on thoſe words [l], but now murderers, has this note; "they have killed Uriah, "they have killed Zechariah." How often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! Chriſt here ſpeaks as a man, and the miniſter of the circumciſion, and expreſſes an human affection for the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, and an human wiſh, and will for their temporal good; which he very aptly ſignifies by the hen, which is a very affectionate creature to its young, and which it endeavours to ſkreen from danger, by covering with its wings. So the Shekinah with the Jews is called, צפרא קדישא, the holy bird [m]; and that phraſe, לחסות תחת כנפי השכינה, to betake ones ſelf, or to come to truſt under the wings of the Shekinah, is often uſed [n] for to become a proſelyte to the true religion, and worſhip of God, as Jethro, and Ruth the Moabiteſs did. An expreſſion much like to this here is uſed by an Apocryphal writer, 2 Eſdras i. 30. I gathered you as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, but now, what ſhall I do unto you? I will caſt you out from my face. It ſeems to be a ſimile much in uſe with that people. Our Lord is to be underſtood not of his divine will, as God, to gather the people of the Jews internally, by his ſpirit and grace, to himſelf; for all thoſe whom Chriſt would gather, in this ſenſe, were gathered, notwithſtanding all the oppoſition made by the rulers of the people; but of his human affection and will, as a man, and a miniſter, to gather them to him externally, by, and under the miniſtry of his word, to hear him preach; ſo as that they might be brought to a conviction of, and an aſſent unto him as the Meſſiah; which, tho' it might fall ſhort of faith in him, would have been ſufficient to have preſerved them from temporal ruin, threatened to their city and temple, in the following verſe. Inſtances of the human affection, and will of Chriſt, may be obſerved in Mark x. 21. Luke xix. 41. and xxii. 42. which will of his, tho' not contrary to the divine will, but ſubordinate to it, yet not always the ſame with it, nor always fulfilled; whereas his divine will, or his will as God, is always fulfilled: who hath reſiſted his will? this cannot be hindered, and made void; he does whatſoever he pleaſes: and farther, that this will of Chriſt to gather the Jews to himſelf, is to be underſtood of his human, and not divine will, is manifeſt from hence, that this will was in him, and expreſſed by him at certain ſeveral times, by intervals; and therefore he ſays, how often would I have gathered, &c. whereas the divine will is one continued, invariable, and unchangeable will, is always the ſame, and never begins or ceaſes to be, and to which ſuch an expreſſion is inapplicable; and therefore theſe words do not contradict the abſolute and ſovereign will of God, in the diſtinguiſhing acts of it, reſpecting the choice of ſome perſons, and the leaving of others. And it is to be obſerved, that the perſons whom Chriſt would have gathered, are not repreſented as being unwilling to be gathered; but their rulers were not willing that they ſhould, and be made proſelytes to him, and come under his wings. It is not ſaid, how often would I have gathered you, and you would not! nor, I would have gathered Jeruſalem, and ſhe would not; nor, I would have gathered thy children, and they would not; but, how often would I have gathered thy children, and ye would not! Which obſervation alone is ſufficient to deſtroy the argument founded on this paſſage in favour of free-will. Had Chriſt expreſſed his deſire to have gathered the heads of the people to him, the members of the Jewiſh ſanhedrim, the civil and eccleſiaſtical rulers of the Jews; or had he ſignified how much he wiſhed, and earneſtly ſought after, and attempted to gather Jeruſalem, the children, the inhabitants of it in common, and neither of them would not; it would have carried ſome appearance of the doctrine of free-will, and have ſeemed to have countenanced it, and have imputed the non-gathering of them to their own will: tho' had it been ſaid, they would not, inſtead of, ye would not, it would only have furniſhed out a moſt ſad inſtance of the perverſeneſs of the will of man, which often oppoſes his temporal, as well as his ſpiritual good; and would rather ſhew it to be a ſlave to that which is evil, than free to that which is good; and would be a proof of this, not in a ſingle perſon only, but in a body of men. The oppoſition and reſiſtance to the will of Chriſt were not made by the people, but by their governors. The common people ſeemed inclined to attend his miniſtry, as appears from the vaſt crouds, which, at different times and places, followed him; but the chief-prieſts, and rulers, did all they could to hinder the collection of them to him, and their belief in him as the Meſſiah; by traducing his character, miracles, and doctrines, and by menacing the people with curſes, and excommunications, making a law, that whoever confeſſed him ſhould be turned out of the ſynagogue. So that the plain meaning of the text is the ſame with that of ver. 13. and conſequently is no proof of mens reſiſting the operations of the ſpirit and grace of God; but only ſhews what obſtructions and diſcouragements were thrown in the way of attendance on the external miniſtry of the word. In order to ſet aſide, and overthrow the doctrine of grace, in election, and particular redemption, and effectual calling, it ſhould be proved that Chriſt, as God, would have gathered, not Jeruſalem, and the inhabitants of it only, but all mankind, even ſuch as are not eventually ſaved, and that in a ſpiritual, ſaving way and manner, to himſelf; of which there is not the leaſt intimation in this text: and in order to eſtabliſh the reſiſtibility of the grace of God, by the perverſe will of man, ſo as to become of no effect; it ſhould be ſhewn that Chriſt would have ſavingly converted perſons, and they would not be converted; and that he beſtowed the ſame grace upon them, he does beſtow on others who are converted: whereas the ſum of this paſſage lies in theſe few words, that Chriſt, as man, out of a compaſſionate regard for the people of the Jews, to whom he was ſent as the miniſter of the circumciſion, would have gathered them together under his miniſtry, and have inſtructed them in the knowledge of himſelf, as the Meſſiah; which if they had only notionally received, would have ſecured them, as chickens under the hen, from impending judgments, which afterwards fell upon them; but their governors, and not they, would not; that is, would not ſuffer them to receive him, and embrace him as the Meſſiah. So that from the whole it appears, that this paſſage of ſcripture, ſo much talked of by the Arminians, and ſo often cited by them, has nothing to do with the controverſy about the doctrines of election and reprobation, particular redemption, efficacious grace in converſion, and the power of man's free-will. This obſervation alone is ſufficient to deſtroy the argument, founded on this paſſage, in favour of free-will.

---

[k] R. Iſaac Arama in Gen. xlvii. apud Galatin. Arcan. Cath. ver. l. 3. c. 5.

[l] Jarchi in Iſ. i. 21.

[m] Zohar in Numb. fol. 106. 3. & Imre binah in ib.

[n] Tzeror Hammor, fol. 77. 4. & 115. 2. Vid. Targum in Ruth ii. 12. Zohar in Exod. fol. 28. 3. & 29. 2.

Ver. 38. Behold, your houſe is left unto you deſolate.] Signifying that the city in which they dwelt, where they had their cieled houſes, and ſtately palaces, would, in a little time, within the ſpace of forty years, be deſtroyed, and become a deſert; and the temple, formerly the houſe of God, but now only theirs, and in which they truſted, would be abandoned by God, he would grant his preſence no more in it; and the Meſſiah, the proprietor of it, and who was now in it, would then take his leave of it, and never more return to it; and that alſo ſhould ſhare the ſame fate as the city, and at the ſame time. Our Lord ſeems to have in view thoſe paſſages in Jer. xii. 7. and xxii. 5. and which the Jewiſh [o] writers underſtood of the temple. The author of the Apocryphal book of Eſdras 2. in ch. i. 33. has much ſuch an expreſſion as this: thus ſaith the almighty Lord, your houſe is deſolate, I will caſt you out as the wind doth ſtubble.

Ver. 39. For I ſay unto you, ye ſhall not ſee me henceforth, &c.] Meaning in a very little time after the paſſover, from the time of his crucifixion and death; otherwiſe they ſaw him many times after this, as in the palace of the high-prieſt, in Pilate's judgment-hall, and on the croſs; but not after his reſurrection. This ſhows the reaſon of their houſe being deſolate, and in what ſenſe it ſhould be ſo, and immediately became ſo; namely, by being then directly, and ever after, deſtitute of his preſence: and tho' they might afterwards ſeek for, and expect the Meſſiah in it, yet they would never be able to ſee him, nor throughout their long captivity: till ye ſhall ſay, bleſſed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord; that is, until the time comes, that the fulneſs of the Gentiles ſhall be brought in, and all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved, the Jews ſhall be converted, and ſeek the Lord their God, and David their king; when they ſhall readily and chearfully ſay theſe words to Chriſt, who will then appear in his glory; which they were now diſpleaſed at in the multitude that followed him, and the children in the temple. Tho' ſome think this is ſaid by way of threatening, ſince the reſt that is ſpoken to them by Chriſt is of that ſort, and regards the men of that generation; and is given as a reaſon of their houſe being left deſolate: and the ſenſe is, that they ſhould never ſee him with joy and pleaſure; ſince, though they would be obliged to confeſs that he was Lord and Chriſt, they would never ſay the above words to him in faith, and holy reverence of him. The Cambridge exemplar of Beza's, and the Perſic verſion, read, in the name of God.

CHAP. XXIV.

Ver. 1. AND Jeſus went out, and departed from the temple, &c.] He not only went out of it for that time, but took his final leave of it, never to return more to it; having foretold its deſolation, which he, in part, by ſo doing, immediately fulfilled: this the diſciples obſerving, and being intent on the outward ſplendor, and worldly grandeur of it, were concerned that ſo beautiful a ſtructure ſhould be deſerted; and almoſt thought it incredible, that ſo ſtrong, and firm a building could be deſtroyed. And his diſciples came unto him; as he went, and as ſoon as he was come out of the temple, and whilſt in view of it: for to ſhew him the buildings of the temple; the walls of it, and courts adjoining to it, how beautiful and firm they were: whether this was done by them to raiſe in him admiration or commiſeration, in hopes he might change the ſentence he had paſſed upon it, is not eaſy to ſay; or whether this did not expreſs their incredulity about the deſolation of it; which Chriſt's anſwer, in the next verſe, ſeems to imply. Mark ſays, it was one of the diſciples that obſerved theſe to him, who might be accompanied with the reſt, and in their name addreſs him; and who, probably, might be Peter, ſince he was generally their mouth; and that he ſhould ſpeak to him in this manner; maſter, ſee what manner of ſtones, and what buildings are here? Luke ſays, how it was adorned with goodly ſtones, and gifts. The Jews give very great encomiums of the ſecond temple, as repaired by Herod; and it was undoubtedly a very fine ſtructure. They ſay [p], that he built the houſe of the ſanctuary, an exceeding beautiful building; and that he repaired the temple, in beauty greatly exceeding that of Solomon's [q]. They moreover obſerve [r], that "he who has not ſeen the building of Herod, has never ſeen, בניין נאה, a beautiful building. With what is it built? ſays Rabbah, with ſtones of green and white marble. And there are others ſay, that it was built with ſtones of ſpotted green and white marble." Theſe, very likely, were the very ſtones the diſciples pointed to, and admired; and were of a prodigious ſize, as well as worth. Some of theſe ſtones were, as Joſephus [s] ſays, "forty-five cubits long, five high, and ſix broad." Others of them, as he elſewhere affirms [t], were "twenty-five cubits long, eight high, and twelve broad." And he alſo tells us, in the ſame place, that there were, "in the porches, four rows of pillars: the thickneſs of each pillar was as much as three men, with their arms ſtretched out, and joined together, could graſp; the length twenty-ſeven feet, and the number of them an hundred and ſixty-two, and beautiful to a miracle." At the bigneſs of thoſe ſtones, and the beauty of the work, 'tis ſaid [u], Titus was aſtoniſhed, when he deſtroyed the temple; at which time his ſoldiers plundered it, and took away the gifts, with which it is alſo ſaid to be adorned. Theſe were rich and valuable things which were dedicated to it, and either laid up in it, or hung upon the walls and pillars of it, as it was uſual in other temples [w]. Theſe may intend the golden table given by Pompey, and the ſpoils which Herod dedicated; and particularly the golden vine, which was a gift of his [x]; beſides multitudes of other valuable things, which were greatly enriching and ornamental to it. Now the diſciples ſuggeſt, by obſerving theſe, what a pity it was, ſuch a grand edifice ſhould be deſtroyed; or how unaccountable it was, that a place of ſo much ſtrength, could eaſily be demoliſhed.

---

[o] Targum & Kimchi in Jer. xii. 7.

[p] Juchaſin, fol. 139. 1.

[q] Ganz. Tzemach David, par. 1. fol. 24. 2.

[r] T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 4. 1. & Succa, fol. 51. 2.

[s] De Bello Jud. l. 5. c. 5.

[t] Antiq. Jud. l. 15. c. 14.

[u] Egeſippus, l. 5. c. 43.

[w] Vid. Ryckium de Capitol. Rom. c. 21, &c.

Ver. 2. And Jeſus ſaid unto them, ſee ye not all theſe things? &c.] Theſe great buildings, as in Mark; all theſe goodly ſtones, ſo beautiful and large, and ſo firmly put together: verily, I ſay unto you, there ſhall not be left here one ſtone upon another, that ſhall not be thrown down; or broken, as Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel reads it: which prediction had a full and remarkable accompliſhment; and which is not only atteſted by Joſephus [y], who relates, that both the city and temple were dug up, and laid level with the ground; but alſo by other Jewiſh writers; who tell us [z], that "on the ninth of Ab, a day prepared for puniſhments, Turnus Rufus the wicked, חרש את ההיכל, plowed up the temple, and all round about it, to fulfil what is ſaid, Zion ſhall be plowed as a field." Yes, and to fulfil what Chriſt here ſays too, that not one ſtone ſhould be left upon another, which a plough would not admit of.

Ver. 3. And as he ſat upon the mount of Olives, &c.] Which was on the eaſt of the city of Jeruſalem [a], over againſt the temple, as Mark ſays, and where he could ſit and take a full view of it; for the wall on the eaſt ſide was lower than any other, and that for this reaſon; that when the high-prieſt burnt the red heifer on this mount, as he did, and ſprinkled the blood, he might have a view of the gate of the temple. 'Tis ſaid [b], "all the walls which were there, were very high, except the eaſtern wall; for the high-prieſt, when he burned the heifer, ſtood on the top of the mount of Olives, and directed himſelf, and looked to the gate of the temple, at the time he ſprinkled the blood." This place, very probably, our Lord choſe to ſit in, that he might give his diſciples an occaſion to diſcourſe more largely with them on this ſubject; and that he might take the opportunity of acquainting them, with what would be the ſigns and forerunners of this deſolation, and ſo it proved: the diſciples came to him privately; theſe four at leaſt, Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew, as Mark relates; and that either ſeparately from the reſt of the diſciples, or from the multitude: it might not be thought ſo proper, to aſk the following queſtions before them, and they might ſuppoſe that Chriſt would not be ſo ready to give an anſwer to them plainly, before the common people; when they might hope to be indulged with one by him, in private: ſaying, tell us, when ſhall theſe things be? That this houſe will be left deſolate, theſe buildings will be deſtroyed, and not one ſtone left upon another? This firſt queſtion relates purely to the deſtruction of the temple, and to this Chriſt firſt anſwers, from ver. 4. to the 23d. And what ſhall be the ſign of thy coming, and of the end of the world? Which two are put together, as what they ſuppoſed would be at the ſame time, and immediately follow the deſtruction of the temple. That he was come in the fleſh, and was the true Meſſiah, they firmly believed: he was with them, and they expected he would continue with them, for they had no notion of his leaving them, and coming again. When he at any time ſpake of his dying and riſing from the dead, they ſeemed not to underſtand it: wherefore this coming of his, the ſign of which they enquire, is not to be underſtood of his coming a ſecond time to judge the world, at the laſt day; but of his coming in his kingdom and glory, which they had obſerved him ſome little time before to ſpeak of; declaring that ſome preſent ſhould not die, till they ſaw it: wherefore they wanted to be informed, by what ſign they might know, when he would ſet up his temporal kingdom; for ſince the temple was to be deſtroyed, they might hope a new one would be built, much more magnificent than this, and which is a Jewiſh notion; and that a new ſtate of things would commence; the preſent world, or age, would be at a period; and the world to come, they had ſo often heard of from the Jewiſh doctors, would take place; and therefore they aſk alſo, of the ſign of the end of the world, or preſent ſtate of things in the Jewiſh œconomy: to this Chriſt anſwers, in the latter part of this chapter, though not to the ſenſe in which they put the queſtions; yet in the true ſenſe of the coming of the Son of man, and the end of the world; and in ſuch a manner, as might be very inſtructive to them, and is to us.

Ver. 4. And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, &c.] Not to indulge their curioſity, but to inſtruct them in things uſeful to be known, and which might be cautions to them and others, againſt deceivers; confirm them in the faith of himſelf, when they ſhould ſee his predictions accompliſhed; and be directions to them, of what might ſhortly be expected. Take heed that no man deceive you: by pretending to come from God with a new revelation, ſetting himſelf up for the Meſſiah, after my departure; ſuggeſting himſelf to be the perſon deſigned by God, to be the deliverer of Iſrael, and to be ſent by him, to ſet up a temporal kingdom, in great worldly ſplendor and glory; promiſing great names, and high places of honour and truſt in it; things which Chriſt knew his diſciples were fond of, and were in danger of being enſnared by; and therefore gives them this ſuitable and ſeaſonable advice, and caution.

Ver. 5. For many ſhall come in my name, &c.] Not by his orders, or with delegated powers and authority from him; but ſhould aſſume the name of the Meſſiah, which was peculiarly his, to themſelves; and take upon them his office, and challenge the honour and dignity which belonged unto him: ſaying, I am Chriſt, and ſhall deceive many. This is the firſt ſign, preceding the deſtruction of the city and temple of Jeruſalem: as there was a general expectation among the Jews of a Meſſiah; that is, of one that ſhould ariſe and deliver them from the Roman yoke, which was the common idea tacked to that word; in this period of time, many ſet up themſelves to be deliverers and redeemers of the people of Iſrael; who had each of them their followers in great numbers, whom they impoſed upon, and brought to deſtruction. Of this ſort was Theudas, not he that Gamaliel ſpeaks of, Acts v. 36. for he was before this time; but one that was in the times of Claudius Cæſar, when Cuſpius Fadus was governor of Judæa; who perſuaded a great number to follow him to the river Jordan, which he promiſed to divide, by a word of command, and give them a paſſage over; and thereby, as the hiſtorian [c] obſerves, ϖολλȣς ηπατησεν, he deceived many; which is the very thing that is here predicted: but he and his company were routed by Fadus, and his head cut off. There was another called the Egyptian, mentioned in Acts xxi. 38. who made an uproar, and led four thouſand cut-throats into the wilderneſs; and this ſame man perſuaded thirty thouſand men to follow him to mount Olivet, promiſing a free paſſage into the city; but he being vanquiſhed by Felix, then governor of Judæa, fled, and many of his followers were killed and taken[d]: and beſides, there were many more magicians and impoſtors, that pretended to ſigns and wonders, and promiſed the people deliverance from their evils, by whom they were impoſed upon to their ruin. There were others alſo beſides theſe, that ſet up for deliverers, who called themſelves by the name of the Meſſiah. Among theſe, we may reckon Simon Magus, who gave out that he was ſome great one; yea, expreſly, that he was the word of God, and the ſon of God[e], which were known names of the Meſſiah; and Doſitheus the Samaritan, aſſerted himſelf to be Chriſt[f]; and alſo Menander affirmed, that no man could be ſaved, unleſs he was baptized in his name[g]: theſe are inſtances before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and confirm the prophecy here delivered.

---

[x] Joſeph. Antiqu. l, 15.
[y] De Bello Jud. l. 7. c. 7.
[z] Maimon. Hilch. Taaniot, c. 5. §. 3. T. Bab. Taanith, fol. 29. 1. & Gloſſ. in ib.
[a] Bartenora in Miſn. Middot, c. 1. §. 3.
[b] Miſn. ib. c. 2. §. 4.
[c] Joſeph. Antiqu. l. 20. c. 2.

Ver. 6. And ye ſhall hear of wars, and rumours of wars, &c.] This is the ſecond ſign of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem: it is obſervable that this, and ſome of the following ſigns, are given by the Jews, as ſigns of the Meſſiah's coming; whereas they were forerunners of their ruin, for the rejection of him who was already come. They ſuppoſe the Meſſiah will come in the ſeventh year, or the year of reſt and releaſe: "On the ſeventh year "they ſay[h], will be מלחמות, wars; and in the "going out, or at the cloſe of the ſeventh year, "the ſon of David will come." Which wars, the Gloſs ſays, will be between the nations of the world, and Iſraël. Here wars may mean the commotions, inſurrections, and ſeditions, againſt the Romans, and their governors; and the inteſtine ſlaughters committed among them, ſome time before the ſiege of Jeruſalem, and the deſtruction of it. Under Cumanus the Roman governor, a ſedition was raiſed on the day of the paſſover, in which twenty thouſand periſhed; after that, in another tumult, ten thouſand were deſtroyed by cut-throats: in Aſcalon two thouſand more, in Ptolemais two thouſand, at Alexandria fifty-thouſand, at Damaſcus ten thouſand, and elſewhere in great numbers[i]. The Jews were alſo put into great conſternation, upon hearing the deſign of the Roman Emperor, to put up his image in their temple: ſee that ye be not troubled; ſo as to leave the land of Judæa as yet, and quit the preaching of the Goſpel there, as if the final deſtruction was juſt at hand: for all theſe things muſt come to paſs; theſe wars, and the reports of them, and the pannic on account of them; theſe commotions and ſlaughters, and terrible devaſtations by the ſword, muſt be; being determined by God, predicted by Chriſt, and brought upon the Jews by their own wickedneſs; and ſuffered in righteous judgment, for their ſin: but the end is not yet; meaning not the end of the world, but the end of Jeruſalem, and the temple, the end of the Jewiſh ſtate; which were to continue, and did continue after theſe diſturbances in it.

Ver. 7. For nation ſhall riſe againſt nation, and kingdom againſt kingdom, &c.] This ſeems to be a diſtinct and third ſign, foreboding the general calamity of the Jews; that there ſhould be not only ſeditions and inteſtine wars, in the midſt of their country, but there ſhould be wars in other nations, one with another; and with the Jews, and the Jews with them: and this alſo is made a ſign of the Meſſiah's coming by them, for ſo they ſay[k]; "when thou "ſeeſt, מלכיות מתגרות אלו באלו, kingdoms ſtirred "up one againſt another, look for the feet of the "Meſſiah: know thou, that ſo it ſhall be; for ſo "it was in the days of Abraham: by the means of "kingdoms being ſtirred up one againſt another, "redemption came to Abraham." Poor blinded creatures! when theſe very things, were the forerunners of their deſtruction. And ſo it was, the Jewiſh nation roſe up againſt others, the Samaritans, Syrians, and Romans: there were great commotions in the Roman empire, between Otho and Vitellius, and Vitellius and Veſpaſian; and at length the Romans roſe up againſt the Jews, under the latter, and entirely deſtroyed them; compare 2 Eſdras xiii. 31. and xvi. 18. and ix. 3. And there ſhall be famines; a fourth ſign of the deſolation of the city and temple, and which the Jews alſo ſay, ſhall go before the coming of the Meſſiah: "in the ſecond "year (of the week of years) in which the ſon of "David comes, they ſay[l], there will be arrows of "famine ſent forth; and in the third year, "רעב גדול, a great famine; and men, women, "and children, and holy men, and men of buſi"neſs, ſhall die." But theſe have been already; they followed the Meſſiah, and preceded their deſtruction: one of theſe famines was in Claudius Cæſar's time, was foretold by Agabus, and is mentioned in Acts xi. 28. and moſt dreadful ones there were, whilſt Jeruſalem was beſieged, and before its utter ruin, related by Joſephus. And peſtilences: a peſtilence is deſcribed by the Jews after this manner[m]; "a city that produces a thouſand and five "hundred footmen, as Cephar Aco, and nine dead "men are carried out of it in three days, one after "another, lo! זה דבר, this is a peſtilence; but if "in one day, or in four days, it is no peſtilence; "and a city that produces five hundred footmen, "as Cephar Amiko, and three dead men are car"ried out of it in three days, one after another, "lo! this is a peſtilence." Theſe commonly attend famines, and are therefore mentioned together; and when the one was, the other may be ſuppoſed ſooner or later to be: and earthquakes in divers places of the world; as, at Crete[n], and in divers cities in Aſia[o], in the times of Nero: particularly the three cities of Phrygia, Laodicea, Hierapolis, and Coloſſe; which were near to each other, and are all ſaid to periſh this way, in his reign[p]; and Rome itſelf felt a tremor, in the reign of Galba[q]."

Ver. 8. All theſe are the beginning of ſorrows, &c.] They were only a prelude unto them, and forerunners of them; they were only ſome foretaſtes of what would be, and were far from being the worſt that ſhould be endured. Theſe were but light, in compariſon of what befel the Jews, in their dreadful deſtruction. The word here uſed, ſignifies the ſorrows and pains, of a woman in travail. The Jews expect great ſorrows and diſtreſſes in the times of the Meſſiah, and uſe a word to expreſs them by, which anſwers to this, and call them, חבלי המשיח, the ſorrows of the Meſſiah;

---

[d] Joſeph. Antiqu. l. 20. c. 6. [e] Jerom in loc. Iren. adv. Hæreſ. l. 1. c. 20. [f] Origen contr. Celſ. l. 1. p. 44. [g] Tertull. de preſcript. Hæret. c. 46. [h] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 97. 1. & Megilla, fol. 17. 2. Zohar in Exod. fol. 3. 3, 4. [i] Vid. Joſeph. Antiqu. l. 20. c. 6. & de Bello Jud. l. 2, &c. [k] Bereſhit Rabba, §. 42. fol. 37. 1. [l] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 97. 1. Miſn. Sota, c. 9. §. 15. [m] T. Bab. Taanith, fol. 21. 1. & 19. 1. Maimon. Hilch. Taaniot, c. 2. §. 5. [n] Philoſtrat. in vit. Apollon. l. 4. c. 11. [o] Sueton. in vit. Nero, c. 48. [p] Oroſius, l. 7. c. 7. [q] Sueton. in vit. Galba, c. 18.

חבלי, they ſay [r], ſignifies the ſorrows of a woman in travail; and the Syriac verſion uſes the ſame word here. Theſe they repreſent to be very great, and expreſs much concern to be delivered from them. They [s] aſk, "what ſhall a man do, to be " delivered from the ſorrows of the Meſſiah? He " muſt employ himſelf in the law, and in liberality. " And again [t], " he that obſerves the three " meals on the ſabbath-day, ſhall be delivered from " three puniſhments; from the ſorrows of the Meſſiah, from the judgment of hell, and from Gog " and Magog." But alas! there was no other way of eſcaping them, but by faith in the true Meſſiah, Jeſus; and it was for their diſbelief and rejection of him, that theſe came upon them.

Ver. 9. Then ſhall they deliver you up to be afflicted, &c.] Our Lord proceeds to acquaint his diſciples, what ſhould befall them in this interval; and quite contrary to their expectations, who were looking for a temporal kingdom, and worldly grandeur, aſſures them of afflictions, perſecutions, and death; that about theſe times, when theſe various ſigns ſhould appear, and this beginning of ſorrows take place; whilſt theſe will be fulfilling in Judæa, and other parts of the world; the Jews continuing in their obſtinacy and unbelief, would deliver them up to the civil magiſtrates, to be ſcourged and impriſoned by them; either to their own Sanhedrim, as were Peter and John; or to the Roman governors, Gallio, Feſtus, and Felix, as was the apoſtle Paul. And ſhall kill you; as the two James's, Peter, Paul, and even all the apoſtles, excepting John, who ſuffered martyrdom, and that before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem: and ye ſhall be hated of all nations for my name's ſake; as the apoſtles and firſt chriſtians were, both by Jews and Gentiles; the latter being ſtirred up againſt them by the former, wherever they came, and for no other reaſon, but becauſe they profeſſed and preached in the name of Chriſt, as the Acts of the apoſtles ſhew: and their hatred proceeded ſo far, as to charge all their calamities upon them; as war, famine, peſtilence, earthquakes, &c. as the apologies of the firſt chriſtians declare.

Ver. 10. And then ſhall many be offended, &c.] That is, many who had been hearers of the apoſtles, and profeſſors of the chriſtian religion; who were highly pleaſed with it, and were ſtrenuous advocates for it, whilſt things were tolerably quiet and eaſy; but when they ſaw the apoſtles, ſome of them beaten, and impriſoned, others put to death, and others forced to fly from place to place; and perſecutions and affliction, becauſe of Chriſt and his Goſpel, likely to befall themſelves, would be diſcouraged hereby, and ſtumble at the croſs; and fall off from the faith of the Goſpel, and the profeſſion of it: and ſhall betray one another; meaning, that the apoſtates, who would fall off from the chriſtian religion, would prove treacherous to true believers, and give in their names to the perſecutors, or inform them where they were, that they might take them, or deliver them into their hands themſelves: theſe are the falſe brethren, the apoſtle Paul was in perils among: and ſhall hate one another; not that the true chriſtians ſhould hate theſe falſe brethren, any more than betray them; for they are taught to love all men, even their enemies; but theſe apoſtates ſhould hate them, in whoſe communion they before were, and to whom they belonged; and even to a very great degree of hatred, as it often is ſeen, that ſuch who turn their backs on Chriſt, and his Goſpel, prove the moſt bitter enemies, and moſt violent perſecutors of its preachers and followers.

Ver. 11. And many falſe probets ſhall riſe, &c.] Out of, from among the churches of Chriſt; at leaſt under the name of chriſtians; for falſe teachers are here meant, men of heretical principles, pretending to a ſpirit of prophecy, and to new revelations, and a better underſtanding of the ſcriptures; ſuch as Simon Magus, Ebion, and Cerinthus, who denied the proper deity, and real humanity of Chriſt; Carpocrates, and the Gnoſticks his followers, the Nicolaitans, Hymeneus, Philetus, and others: and ſhall deceive many; as they all of them had their followers, and large numbers of them, whoſe faith was ſubverted by them; and who followed their pernicious ways, being impoſed upon and ſeduced by their fair words, ſpecious pretences, and licentious practices.

Ver. 12. And becauſe iniquity ſhall abound, &c.] Meaning either the malice and wickedneſs of outragious perſecutors, which ſhould greatly increaſe; or the treachery and hatred of the apoſtates; or the errors and hereſies of falſe teachers; or the wickedneſs that prevailed in the lives and converſations of ſome, that were called chriſtians; for each of theſe ſeem to be hinted at in the context, and may be all included, as making up the abounding iniquity here ſpoken of; the conſequence of which would be, the love of many ſhall wax cold. This would be the caſe of many, but not of all; for in the midſt of this abounding iniquity, there were ſome, the ardor of whoſe love to Chriſt, to his Goſpel, and to the ſaints, did not abate: but then there were many, whoſe zeal for Chriſt, through the violence of perſecution, was greatly damped; and through the treachery of falſe brethren, were ſhy of the ſaints themſelves, not knowing who to truſt; and through the principles of the falſe teachers, the power of godlineſs, and the vital heat of religion, were almoſt loſt; and through a love of the world, and of carnal eaſe and pleaſure, love to the ſaints was grown very chill, and greatly left; as the inſtances of Demas, and thoſe that forſook the apoſtle Paul, at his firſt anſwer before Nero, ſhew. This might be true of ſuch, who were real believers in Chriſt; who might fall under great decays, through the prevalence of iniquity; ſince it does not ſay their love ſhall be loſt, but wax cold.

Ver. 13. But he that ſhall endure to the end, &c.] In the profeſſion of faith in Chriſt, notwithſtanding the violent perſecutions of wicked men; and in the pure and incorupt doctrines of the Goſpel, whilſt many are deceived by the falſe teachers that ſhall ariſe; and in holineſs of life and converſation, amidſt all the impurities of the age; and ſhall patiently bear all afflictions, to the end of his life, or to the end of ſorrows, of which the abovementioned were the beginning: the ſame ſhall be ſaved; with a temporal ſalvation, when Jeruſalem, and the unbelieving inhabitants of it ſhall be deſtroyed: for thoſe that believed in Chriſt, many of them, through perſecution, were obliged to remove from thence; and others, by a voice from heaven, were bid to go out of it, as they did; and removed to Pella, a village a little beyond Jordan [u], and ſo were preſerved from the general calamity; and alſo with an everlaſting ſalvation, which is the caſe of all that perſevere to the end, as all true believers in Chriſt will.

---

[r] Gloſſ in T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 118. 2.

[s] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 98. 2.

[t] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 118. 2.

[u] Euſeb. Eccl. Hiſt. l. 3. c. 5.

Ver. 14. And this Goſpel of the kingdom, &c.] Which Chriſt himſelf preached, and which he called and ſent his apoſtles to preach, in all the cities of Judah; by which means men were brought into the kingdom of the Meſſiah, or Goſpel-diſpenſation; and which treated both of the kingdom of grace and glory, and pointed out the ſaints meetneſs for the kingdom of heaven, and their right unto it, and gives the beſt account of the glories of it: ſhall be preached in all the world; not only in Judæa, where it was now confined, and that by the expreſs orders of Chriſt himſelf; but in all the nations of the world, for which the apoſtles had their commiſſion enlarged, after our Lord's reſurrection; when they were bid to go into all the world, and preach the Goſpel to every creature; and when the Jews put away the Goſpel from them, they accordingly turned to the Gentiles; and before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, it was preached to all the nations under the heavens; and churches were planted in moſt places, through the miniſtry of it: for a witneſs unto all nations; meaning either for a witneſs againſt all ſuch in them, as ſhould reject it; or as a teſtimony of Chriſt and ſalvation, unto all ſuch as ſhould believe in him: and then ſhall the end come; not the end of the world, as the Ethiopic verſion reads it, and others underſtand it; but the end of the Jewiſh ſtate, the end of the city and temple: ſo that the univerſal preaching of the Goſpel all over the world, was the laſt criterion and ſign, of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; and the account of that itſelf next follows, with the diſmal circumſtances which attended it.

Ver. 15. When ye therefore ſhall ſee the abomination of deſolation, &c.] From ſigns, Chriſt proceeds to the immediate cauſe of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; which was, the abomination of deſolation, or the deſolating abomination; or that abominable thing, which threatened and brought deſolation upon the city, temple, and nation: by which is meant, not any ſtatue placed in the temple by the Romans, or their order; not the golden eagle which Herod ſet upon the temple gate, for that was before Chriſt ſaid theſe words; nor the image of Tiberius Cæſar, which Pilate is ſaid to bring into the temple; for this, if true, muſt be about this time; whereas Chriſt cannot be thought to refer to any thing ſo near at hand; much leſs the ſtatue of Adrian, ſet in the moſt holy place, which was an hundred and thirty years and upwards, after the deſtruction of the city and temple; nor the ſtatue of Titus, who deſtroyed both, which does not appear ever to be ſet up, or attempted; nor of Caligula, which, though ordered, was prevented being placed there: but the Roman army is deſigned; ſee Luke xxi. 20. which was the, כנף שקוצים משמם, the wing, or army of abominations making deſolate, Dan. ix. 27. Armies are called wings, Iſa. viii. 8. and the Roman armies were deſolating ones to the Jews, and to whom they were an abomination; not only becauſe they conſiſted of Heathen men, and uncircumciſed perſons, but chiefly becauſe of the images of their gods, which were upon their enſigns: for images and idols, were always an abomination to them; ſo the filthineſs which Hezekiah ordered to be carried out of the holy place, 2 Chron. xxix. 5. is by the Targum called, ריחוקא, an abomination; and this, by the Jewiſh writers [w], is ſaid to be an idol, which Ahaz had placed upon the altar; and ſuch was the abomination of deſolation, which Antiochus cauſed to be ſet upon the altar, 1 Maccab. i. 54. And ſo the Talmudic writers, by the abomination that makes deſolate, in Dan. xii. 11. and ix. 27. to which Chriſt here refers, underſtand an image, which they ſay [x] one Apoſtomus, a Grecian general, who burnt their law, ſet up in the temple. Now our Lord obſerves, that when they ſhould ſee the Roman armies encompaſſing Jeruſalem, with their enſigns flying, and theſe abominations on them, they might conclude its deſolation was near at hand; and he does not ſo much mean his apoſtles, who would be moſt of them dead, or in other countries, when this would come to paſs; but any of his diſciples and followers, or any perſons whatever, by whom ſhould be ſeen this deſolating abomination, ſpoken of by Daniel the prophet: not in Dan. xi. 31. which is ſpoken of the abomination in the times of Antiochus; but either in Dan. xii. 11. or rather in Dan. ix. 27. ſince this deſolating abomination is that, which ſhould follow the cutting off of the Meſſiah, and the ceaſing of the daily ſacrifice. It is to be obſerved, that Daniel is here called a prophet, contrary to what the Jewiſh writers ſay [y], who deny him to be one; though one of [z] no inconſiderable note among them affirms, that he attained to the end, הגבול הנבואי, of the prophetic border, or the ultimate degree of prophecy: when therefore this that Daniel, under a ſpirit of prophecy, ſpoke of ſhould be ſeen, ſtanding in the holy place; near the walls, and round about the holy city Jeruſalem, ſo called from the ſanctuary and worſhip of God in it; and which in proceſs of time, ſtood in the midſt of it, and in the holy temple, and deſtroyed both; then whoſo readeth, let him underſtand: that is, whoever then reads the prophecy of Daniel, will eaſily underſtand the meaning of it, and will ſee and know for certain, that now it is accompliſhed; and will conſider how to eſcape the deſolating judgment, unleſs he is given up to a judicial blindneſs and hardneſs of heart; which was the caſe of the greater part of the nation.

Ver. 16. Then let them which be in Judæa, &c.] When this ſignal is given, let it be taken notice of and obſerved; let them that are in the city of Jeruſalem, depart out of it; or who are in any other parts of Judæa, in any of the towns, or cities thereof; let them not betake themſelves to Jeruſalem, imagining they may be ſafe there, in ſo ſtrong and fortified a place, but let them flee elſewhere; ſee Luke xxi. 21. and accordingly 'tis obſerved, that many did flee about this time; and 'tis remarked by ſeveral interpreters, and which Joſephus [a] takes notice of with ſurprize, that Ceſtius Gallus having advanced with his army to Jeruſalem, and beſieged it, on a ſudden, without any cauſe, raiſed the ſiege, and withdrew his army, when the city might have been eaſily taken; by which means a ſignal was made, and an opportunity given to the chriſtians, to make their eſcape; which they accordingly did, and went over Jordan, as Euſebius ſays [b], to a place called Pella; ſo that when Titus came a few months after, there was not a chriſtian in the city, but they had fled as they are here bidden to flee into the mountains; or any places of ſhelter and refuge: theſe are mentioned particularly, becauſe they are uſually ſuch; and deſign either the mountains in Judæa, or in the adjacent countries. The Syriac and Perſic verſions read in the ſingular number, into the mountain; and it is reported that many of them did fly, particularly to mount Libanus [c].

---

[w] R. David Kimchi, & R. Sol. ben Melech, in 2 Chron. xxix. 5.

[x] T. Bab. Taanith, fol. 28. 2. & Gloſſ. in ib.

[y] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 94. 1. & Megilla, fol. 3. 1. & Tzeror Hammor, fol. 46. 4. Zohar in Num. fol. 61. 1.

[z] Jacchiades in Dan. i. 17.

[a] De Bello Jud. l. 2. c. 19. §. 7.

[b] Eccl. Hiſt. l. 3. c. 5. p. 75.

[c] Joſeph. ib.

Ver. 17. Let him which is on the houſe-top, &c.] Who ſhould be there either for his devotion or recreation; for the houſes of the Jews were built with flat roofs and battlements about them, which they made uſe of both for diverſion and pleaſure, and for private meditation and prayer, for ſocial converſation, and ſometimes for publick preaching; ſee Matt. x. 27. Acts x. 9. not come down to take any thing out of his houſe: that is, let him not come down in the inner way, but by the ſtairs, or ladder, on the outſide of the houſe, which was uſual. They had two ways of going out of, and into their houſes; the one they call [d], דרך פתחים, the way of the doors; the other, דרך גגין, the way of the roof: upon which the Gloſs is, "to go up on the outſide, "דרך סולם, by way, or means of a ladder, fixed "at the entrance of the door of the upper room, "and from thence he goes down into the houſe by "a ladder;" and in the ſame way they could come out; ſee Mark ii. 4. and let him not go into his houſe to take any of his goods, or money, or food along with him neceſſary for his ſuſtenance in his flight; leſt, whilſt he is buſy in taking care of theſe, he loſes his life, or, at leaſt, the opportunity of making his eſcape; ſo ſudden is this deſolation repreſented to be.

Ver. 18. Neither let him which is in the field, &c.] Ploughing, or ſowing, or employed in any other parts of huſbandry, or rural buſineſs, return back to take his clothes; for it was uſual to work in the fields without their clothes, as at ploughing and ſowing. Hence thoſe words of Virgil [e], upon which Servius obſerves, that in good weather, when the ſun warms the earth, men might plough and ſow without their clothes: and it is reported by the hiſtorian [f] of Lucius Quinctius Cincinnatus, that the meſſengers who were ſent to him, from Minutius the conſul, whom he had delivered from a ſiege, found him ploughing naked beyond the Tyber: not that he was entirely naked, but was ſtripp'd of his upper garments: and it is uſual for people that work in the fields to ſtrip themſelves to their ſhirts, and lay their clothes at the corner of the field, or at the land's end; and which we muſt ſuppoſe to be the caſe here: for our Lord's meaning is not, that the man working in the field, ſhould not return home to fetch his clothes, which were not left there; they were brought with him into the field, but put off, and laid aſide in ſome part of it while at work; but that as ſoon as he had the news of Jeruſalem being beſieged, he ſhould immediately make the beſt of his way, and flee to the mountains, as Lot was bid to do at the burning of Sodom; and he might not return to the corner of the field, or land's end, where his clothes lay, as Lot was not to look behind; tho' if his clothes lay in the way of his flight, he might take them up, but might not go back for them, ſo ſudden and ſwift ſhould be the deſolation. The Vulgate Latin reads, in the ſingular number, his coat; and ſo do the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions, and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel; and ſo it was read in four copies of Beza's, in three of Stephens's, and in others; and may deſign the upper coat or garment, which was put off whilſt at work.

Nudus ara, ſere nudus, hyems ignava colono.

Ver. 19. And wo unto them that are with child, &c.] Not that it ſhould be criminal for them to be with child; or a judgment on them; for it was always eſteemed a bleſſing to be fruitful, and bear children: but this expreſſes the miſerable circumſtances ſuch would be in, who, by reaſon of their heavy burdens, would not be able to make ſo ſpeedy a flight, as the caſe would require; or would be obliged to ſtay at home, and endure all the miſeries of the ſiege: ſo that theſe words, as the following are not expreſſive of ſin, or puniſhment, but of pity and concern for their miſery and diſtreſs: and to them that give ſuck in thoſe days; whoſe tender affection to their infants will not ſuffer them to leave them behind them; and yet ſuch their weakneſs, that they will not be able to carry them with them; at leaſt, they muſt be great hindrances to their ſpeedy flight. So that the caſe of theſe is much worſe than that of men on the houſe-top, or in the field, who could much more eaſily leave their goods and clothes, than theſe their children, as well as had more agility and ſtrength of body to flee. So עוברות ומיניקות, women with child, and that give ſuck, are mentioned together in the Jewiſh writings, as ſuch as were excuſed from certain faſts, tho' obliged to others [g].

